PREFACE

The typescript of the original copy of this book is somewhat faded in places, due to its age and the unevenness of the original printing. Although we have done our best to compensate for these flaws, there may be small areas of print that are still difficult to read. We apologize, but feel the importance of this information indicates that it should be reprinted and made available to researchers.

PREFACE.

This volume has been prepared in response to the prevailing and popular demand for the preservation of local history and biography. The method of preparation followed is the most successful and the most satisfactory yet devised—the most successful in the enormous number of volumes circulated, and the most satisfactory in the general preservation of personal biography and family record conjointly with local history. The number of volumes now being distributed seems fabulous. Careful estimates place the number circulated in Ohio at 50,000 volumes; Pennsylvania, 60,000; New York, 75,000; Indiana, 40,000; Illinois, 40,000; Iowa, 35,000; Missouri, 25,000; Kansas, 20,000; Tennessee, 20,000, and all the other States at the same proportionate rate. The entire State of Arkansas has as yet scarcely been touched by the historian, but is now being rapidly written.

To him who has not attempted the collection of historical data, the obstacles to be surmounted are unknown. Doubtful traditions, conflicting statements, imperfect records, inaccurate public and private correspondence, the bias or untruthfulness of informers, and the general obscurity which, more or less, envelops all passing events, combine to bewilder and mislead. The publishers of this volume, fully aware of their inability to furnish a perfect history, an accomplishment vouchsafed to the imagination only of the dreamer or the theorist, make no pretension of having prepared a work devoid of blemish. They feel assured that all thoughtful people, at present and in future, will recognize and appreciate the importance of their undertaking, and the great public benefit that has been accomplished.

In the preparation of this volume the publishers have met with nothing but courtesy and assistance from the public. The subscription list was much smaller than the publishers hoped and expected to receive; and although the margin of profit was thus cut down to the lowest limit, no curtailment or omission of matter was made from the original extensive design of the work. No subject promised is omitted, and many not promised are given. The publishers call special attention to the great quantity of fact crowded into the volume, to the excess of matter over their agreement, and to the binding, which is full morocco instead of half morocco as promised in the prospectus. Special care was employed and great expense incurred to make the volume accurate. In all cases the personal sketches have been submitted by mail, and in most instances have been corrected and approved by the subjects themselves. The publishers disclaim responsibility for the substance of the matter contained in the Biographical Appendix, as the material was wholly furnished by the subjects of the sketches. The publishers, as usual, stand ready to correct by errata sheet, which will be sent to all subscribers, the few errors or omissions which may appear in the volume, upon prompt notification of the same to the main office. With many thanks to our friends for the success of our difficult enterprise, we respectfully tender this fine volume to our patrons.

January, 1889.

HISTORY OF BENTON COUNTY.

LOCATION AND BOUNDARY.

THE county of Benton lies in the extreme northwestern corner of the State of Arkansas, and is bounded north by McDonald and Barry Counties in the State of Missouri, east by Carroll and Madison Counties in Arkansas, south by Washington County in the same State, and west by the Indian Territory. The meridian of longitude 94 west from Greenwich, England, or 17 west from Washington, passes through the eastern part of the county near the village of Garfield, and the parallel of latitude  $36^{\circ}$  and  $20'$  north, passes east and west through the county near its center. The boundary lines of the county are described as follows, to-wit: "Commencing on the State line between Missouri and Arkansas at the northeast corner of fractional Section 8, Township 21 north, Range 27 west; thence south to the southeast corner of Section 8, Township 18 north, Range 27 west; thence west eight miles to the southwest corner of Section 7, Township 18 north, Range 28 west; thence south two miles to the southeast corner of Section 24, Township 18 north, Range 29 west; thence west eighteen miles to the northeast corner of Section 25, Township 18 north, Range 32 west; thence south five miles to the southeast corner of Section 13, Township 17 north, Range 32 west; thence west three miles to the northeast corner of Section 21, in the same township and range; thence south three miles to the southeast corner of Section 33; thence west nine miles (more or less) to the southwest corner of the county at the corner, to Townships 16 and 17, and Ranges 33 and 34; thence north on the eastern boundary line of the Indian Territory, on a bearing of about 10° west, twenty-nine miles, more or less, to the northwest corner of the State; thence east on the State line to the place of beginning."

TOPOGRAPHY AND NATURAL HISTORY.

The site of Benton County is the plateau of the Ozark Mountains, the greatest unbroken portion of which in this State lies west of White River, in the counties of Benton and Washington. The elevation of the county above sea level averages from 1,400 to 1,600 feet, and the summit of Poor Mountain, in the northeastern part, is probably the highest point. With the exception of a strip of land about two miles wide, extending from Rogers to the southern boundary, the whole surface of the county lying east of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad is so broken and uneven that it is mostly unfit for cultivation, except in the valleys of the streams. In the north central portion of the county, extending several miles on both sides of Sugar Creek, is also a large tract of broken and hilly land. There is an elevated, broken and uneven ridge, or water shed, extending north and south through the county, mostly in Range 32 west, along the line of which much of the land is too rough for cultivation. With these exceptions, together with the steep hills or bluffs bordering on the streams, the balance of the county, and by far the greater portion thereof, consists of elevated plateaus of gently undulating or rolling prairie and timbered lands, all of which are susceptible of a high state of cultivation. These latter lands are classed as the table lands of the State, and are in fact the beginning of the prairie region which covers the southern part of the Indian Territory.

"The ascent from the level of White River, on the east, to the table lands, is 375 feet; the ascent from the level of Elk River, a tributary of the Grand River fork of the Arkansas, is 406 feet; and the ascent from the Illinois fork of the Arkansas is 394 feet. The area of the county is 900 square miles, or 576,000 acres. The proportion of unmodified prairie is, approximately, 86,000 acres; oak barrens or modified prairie, 175,000 acres; wooded mountain or ridge territory, 200,000 acres; and river and creek valley lands, 86,000 acres."

Streams, Springs, etc.—The southeastern and extreme northeastern portions of the county are drained by White River and its tributaries. This river enters the county on its southern boundary, near the line dividing Ranges 28 and 29, and flows thence in a northerly, northwesterly and northeasterly direction, and in fact toward all points of the compass, in its tortuous route, and finally leaves the county at its eastern boundary, from Section 5, in Township 20 north, Range 27 west. Its principal tributaries on the east are War Eagle and Little Clifty Creeks, and on the west are Spider, Indian, Prairie and Esculapia Creeks. White River, after crossing the northwest corner of Carroll County, enters the State of Missouri, in which it forms a bend, and then returns to Arkansas, and flows in a southerly direction, and empties into the Mississippi about twelve miles above the mouth of the Arkansas River. A portion of the extreme northeastern part of the county is drained by tributaries of Big Sugar Creek, flowing generally in a northwestern direction. The north central part of the county is drained by Little Sugar Creek and its numerous tributaries. This creek rises in the northeastern part of the county, and, after flowing in a general western direction about fifteen miles, it bears to the northwest, and enters the State of Missouri near the middle of Range 31 west, being also near the center of the north boundary line of the county. The south central and southwestern portions of the county are drained by the Osage fork of the Illinois River and its various tributaries, the main one of which has its source at the noted Osage Spring, at the home of Ezekiel Dickson, in Section 16, Township 19 north, Range 30 west. The Osage fork flows in a general west-southwest direction, and leaves the county near its southwest corner, where it enters the Indian Territory. The west central portion of the county is drained by Flint and Spavinaw Creeks and their tributaries. The former runs in a direction west of southwest, and crosses the western boundary line of the county in Section 23, Township 18 north, Range 34 west, and the latter runs in about the same direction, and leaves the county from Section 10, Township 19 north, Range 34 west. The extreme northwestern portion of the county is drained by creeks which flow mostly in a northwestern direction, and empty into the Neosho River. All the streams here mentioned, excepting White River and its tributaries, eventually flow into the Arkansas. On the larger streams, especially White River and War Eagle, excellent mill-sites abound, and a few have been improved, the most noted of which is at War Eagle Mills, on War Eagle Creek. This creek was named after an Indian chief called "War Eagle."

Benton County has the great advantage of having many springs from which flow pure, soft water, "as clear as crystal," and of a quality unsurpassed in any country. There are several groups or systems of springs distributed throughout the county, the most noted of which are White Sulphur Springs, in the northwestern part; Siloam Springs, in the southwestern part; Crystal Springs, near Bentonville, and the Electric and Esculapia groups, near Rogers. Some of the springs have medicinal qualities, mention of which will be made elsewhere in this work. There are also hundreds of individual springs, some of which produce a stream large enough to furnish good water-power, if properly utilized. Prominent among the individual springs is the one at Springtown, another one at the residence of Oliver I. Anderson, in Anderson Township, and the Osage Spring, before mentioned. According to tradition the latter derived its name from the following incident: An Indian belonging to the Osage tribe visited the spring to quench his thirst, and was shot and killed by one belonging to the Delaware tribe, who had concealed himself in a tree-top overlooking the spring, hence the name. These tribes are said to have then been at enmity. An abundance of good water on the uplands is obtained by digging or boring for it at various depths, ranging from fifteen to eighty feet, and much water is obtained from this source. Cistern water is also used to some extent by many who prefer it to any other water. Away from the streams stock water is frequently obtained from ponds of rain water kept in artificial excavations, the sub-soil or bottoms thereof being of such a nature as to hold the water and prevent its sinking. Upon the whole the supply of water is abundant, and its quality is first-class.

Timber.—The table lands and ridges of the county, where not improved, are mostly covered, and in some places densely covered, with the several varieties of the oak, the black, or "jack oak," predominating, and hickory. Some chestnut is also found on these lands. In the valleys and along the streams sycamore, hackberry, elm, black walnut, butternut, gum, ash, several kinds of oak, and other varieties of timber exist. Many trees of sycamore, hackberry and elm grow from two to five feet in diameter at the base, but all of them have a short, scrubby growth, so that but few trees will produce more than two saw-logs each. In the southeast corner of the county is a tract of land, six miles north and south by about eight miles east and west, covered with pine timber, much of which is large enough for lumber, and of it there is a seemingly inexhaustible supply. The best white oak timber is found in the gulches of the mountainous portion of the county, the ridges being covered with black oak of a short, scrubby growth. When the settlement of the county began (in the early part of the present century) all of the comparatively level upland was called prairie, while in truth there was but little real prairie. The timber was then very thin, the trees stood far apart, and the country which is now covered with a dense growth of young timber was then so open that the wild deer could be seen anywhere at a distance of several hundreds of yards. The entire surface of the earth was then covered with a rank growth of vegetation, consisting of the native grasses and wild flowers, which gave to the landscape, especially in the timbered lands, a more beautiful appearance than it now has. Annually, after this rank growth of vegetation became dead and dry, the Indians set fire to it, and burned it from the entire surface of the country. This they did to destroy the places of concealment for the wild game, the better to enable them to secure their prey. This burning of the decaying vegetation also destroyed the germs or sprouts, and thus prevented the growth of young timber. When this practice ceased the germs of underbrush and young timber began to grow, and the surface of the timbered lands, where they have not been cleared, are now covered with a dense growth of young timber and bushes. The supply of this young timber, all of which has grown in the present century, is so abundant that there is much more wood now in the county than when its settlement began. As yet not much of the young timber is large enough for lumber, but much of it can be made into rails.

Geological.—But little can be definitely said upon the subject of geology, as there never has been made a geological survey of the county. The surface, especially the broken portion thereof, is underlaid with limestone, sandstone, vermicular and cavernous rocks, and in many places in the bluffs along the streams the rock crops out and forms perpendicular walls of immense height. Where the rock is thus exposed many caves are found, and from many of them streams of pure, cold water are flowing. The surface of the ridges and broken lands is composed of earth intermixed with pieces of flint and chert rock about the size that rock is generally broken into for the making of macadamized roads. This rock is so abundant that it is only necessary to clear a highway and use it in order to have a road as good in quality as the best of macadamized roads. In the beds of the streams and along their margins a sufficient supply of this naturally prepared rock can be found to thoroughly macadamize all the roads in the county.

At a point on White River, about five and a half miles southeast of Rogers, there is a large deposit of rock composed of fine, white sand, which is believed to be of the best quality for the manufacture of glass. It has, however, not been tested. Minerals are believed to exist in considerable quantities at various places in the county. Lead has been taken out at Cherokee City and on Spavinaw Creek, and specimens have been found at other places in the county; but no measures have yet been taken to ascertain its quantity. Indications of the existence of copper and zinc have been discovered in the county. It is believed also that silver exists, but in such limited quantities that its mining cannot be made profitable. A controversy is at present going on between the State geologist and certain citizens of the State, in regard to the existence of silver in Arkansas. The former claims that with the possible exception of Silver City, there is not sufficient silver in the State to pay for its mining.

Soils.—"As due to geological origin and the local modification—the soils having been derived from the red and yellow upper strata of the sub-carboniferous group, and also from disintegration of magnesium and sub-carboniferous limestone—the following distinct bodies of land are found distributed throughout the county: A rich and strong barren soil, a gravelly and cherty ridge soil, a compact soil on a foundation of stiff clay; a fourth, a dark brown soil lying in the valleys adjacent to the streams; and a fifth, the best of all, a soil of brown color, upon a foundation of red clay, and with a timber growth of black and red oaks, sugar maple, locust, hickory and walnut. This is in the interior. In the marginal areas, as in the broken country forming the eastern and northern boundaries, the characteristic types of interior lands are lost to an extent in coarser soils of a pale brown, and of a darker color, more silicious or more compact, as the case may be, and imposed upon a subsoil of no greater depth above the bed rock, excepting, of course, from this classification, the alluvial valley lands of White River.”*

The soils of Benton County are well adapted to diversified agriculture, a system that has been adopted and practiced by the farmers. With proper cultivation, corn, oats, wheat, rye, potatoes and all kinds of vegetables can be produced in great abundance, and a large proportion of the soil produces the finest quality of tobacco. While the county is well adapted to diversified agriculture, its greatest advantage, perhaps, is its complete adaptability to horticulture. Apples, peaches, pears, plums, grapes and all manner of small fruits are grown in great abundance. The climate being mild and the atmosphere pure, all manner of fruits adapted to this latitude grow in Benton County to perfection. It has acquired the cognomen of “The apple orchard of America,” this fruit being so successfully and so extensively grown. Hereafter, in its proper place, more will be said about the agricultural and horticultural interests of the county. Comparative tables of the quantities produced, and the future prospects for obtaining wealth in Benton County will be mentioned.

Climate.—“Benton County is generally accepted to have a climate as that of the Piedmont region of Virginia, which is borne out in its annual mean temperature of approximately 60° F., and in the following approximate temperature: Spring, 60°; summer, 78°; autumn, 60°; winter, 40° F. The annual rainfall is from thirty-two to forty-four inches.”

SETTLEMENT.

The First.—While it is not positively known, it is believed that Adam Batie, who settled on the prairie that now bears his name, near the present site of Maysville, was the first settler in Benton County. The date of his settlement has not been ascertained, but it is presumed to have been prior to the year 1830. Batie Prairie and the creek that flows from it are both named in honor to this early and first settler. In 1830 John McPhail and his father settled on that prairie. Soon thereafter Martin Mays settled on the present town site of Maysville, and William Bird Keith settled near by. The above named five persons were the only residents on Batie Prairie in 1838. Soon thereafter Judge English, Robert Cooper, Lemuel Tynnon and several others followed, until the whole of the prairie was occupied.

One of the first settlers of the county was William Reddick, who settled early in the thirties or late in the twenties at the place since known as Elkhorn. He and his son-in-law, Samuel Burks, also an early settler, came from Illinois. Reddick was a politician and a prominent citizen. For many years he controlled the politics of the Sugar Creek settlement, and that settlement usually controlled the politics of the county. Jacob Roller, from Hawkins County, Tenn., settled where his son William now lives, on Roller's Ridge. This ridge lies northeast of Garfield, and is about four miles long, east and west. It is so called by reason of Roller's settlement thereon. Two improvements had been made on this ridge prior to Roller's settlement, one on the east and one on the west end. Mr. Roller erected and for a number of years kept a whisky distillery where he settled. He was thrice married and had twenty-four children. His third wife, who survived him, is still living. There were other settlers in that neighborhood by the name of Roller. James Jackson, from Overton County, Tenn., settled near the site of Garfield in 1829. Daniel Ash was a very early settler near the State line north of Garfield, and in 1849 Jacob R. Forgery, from Scott County, Va., settled in the same neighborhood. The Pascals were early settlers in the country southeast of the site of Garfield. Before the organization of the county Henning Pace, from Tennessee, the father of the first sheriff of the county, settled on Sugar Creek, a few miles north of Bentonville, and one or two of his sons settled lower down on the same creek. Chris. C. Pace, who is still living at a very advanced age, settled south of Bentonville. Henry Ford, and other Fords, were also among the early settlers on Sugar Creek.

Others.—Three miles east of Bentonville was the Woods' Settlement, where Samuel and William Woods, of Tennessee, located. They both raised large families, and lived there until their deaths. George P. Wallace, at whose house the county was organized, settled one mile and a half east of Bentonville. He was a large and powerful man, being nearly seven feet in height, and had several sons who were his equal in stature. He subsequently sold his first improvement and moved to another place in the county, a few miles further north. It is said that when he wanted to raise a house he did not invite his neighbors to assist, for he and his stalwart sons were always equal to the task. John B. Dickson, the first clerk of the county, settled on what is now Deming's Addition to the town of Bentonville. He subsequently settled at Osage Springs, where Ezekiel Dickson now lives, and afterward moved to Texas, where he died. He came to this county from Bedford County, Tenn. James Jackson and his sons, and Samuel Williams, his father-in-law, settled one mile west of Bentonville, and the locality was afterwards known as the "Jackson and Williams Settlement." Robert Dickson and his son Joseph settled one-half mile west of Bentonville, and Uncle Ezekiel Dickson, a brother to Robert, settled about eight miles west from Bentonville. The Dicksons all came from Bedford County, Tenn. James, Joseph and David McKissick settled from five to eight miles west of Bentonville, and Edward Cunningham settled at the Cunningham Springs, about six miles from Bentonville. About a mile south of these springs William Pelham settled. He subsequently became surveyor-general of the State. He was a brother-in-law of ex-Gov. Conway. Rev. James Harris, a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, and probably the first preacher in the county, settled about three-fourths of a mile west of Bentonville. In 1836 Col. Hugh A. Anderson brought his family from Kentucky, and settled where his son Oliver I. Anderson now resides, nine miles southwest of Bentonville. A large spring, heretofore mentioned, is at this place, and Col. Anderson used to keep a deer park so enclosed that the deer had access to the spring branch.

Phineas Holmes settled about five miles southwest of Bentonville, and John Kinchelve settled near the same place on Osage Creek. The latter took an active part in the organization of the county, and was for many years a justice of the peace for his township. A few miles southeast of Bentonville was the Graham settlement, where George and Joseph Graham located with their families. An early settler, still surviving, says "there were a host of the Grahams." Robert and James Cowan settled about eight miles south of Bentonville. A brother-in-law of the Cowans, by the name of Colville, settled in the same locality. Colville Township derives its name from the latter. Colville went to California in 1850, and on one occasion he left the camp of himself and comrades and went out prospecting, and was never afterward heard from. Robert Hubbard, the first representative of Benton County in the State Legislature, settled near the Cowans, and Benjamin and Jefferson Hubbard settled lower down on the Osage. The Maxwells also settled in the Cowan neighborhood. Isaac Horton, from Tennessee, settled near the site of Lowell, in 1830. All of the foregoing named individuals, whose date of settlement is not mentioned, were living at the places mentioned in 1838, when Judge Alfred B. Greenwood came from Georgia and settled in Bentonville. Many of them had settled several years prior to that time.

In 1833 Felix G. Lindsey came from Kentucky and settled about three miles west of Sulphur Springs. In 1835 Christopher C. Pace and his son J. H. Pace, also from Tennessee, settled about six miles east of Maysville. In 1840 Solomon Phillips and his son Pleasant, from Tennessee, settled about one and a half miles north of Maysville. Among the first children born in Benton County were John and Elijah Keith, who were born about three miles southeast of Maysville, the former in 1834 and the latter in 1836. Among the later settlers near Maysville was A. T. Hedges, from Indiana, who located one and a half miles southeast of that place in 1844. Henry R. Austin and his mother, Ellen Austin, came from Bedford County, Tenn., in 1845, and settled west of Nebo, where Elijah Austin, son of Henry R., now lives. Mrs. Ellen Austin has survived her son, and is now living with her grandson, at the advanced age of one hundred and one years, and is yet active and intelligent. She was well acquainted with Gen. Jackson and with President Polk, and is such a staunch Democrat that she declares that if she could control a thousand votes she would give them all to "Grover."

In 1839 Richard Burgess and his family, including W. W. Burgess, who now lives at Springtown, came from Bedford County, Tenn., and settled on Lick Branch, near the Osage, where Ed. Maxwell now lives. The same year Walter Thornberry and his son-in-law, David Brickey, came from Virginia, and John Edwards from Tennessee, and settled on the same branch. About the same time Joseph Neal and Charles Kincheloe settled on Brushy Creek. In the fall of 1840 Archey Wilson and his brother Samuel, also from Bedford County, Tenn., settled in the Burgess neighborhood. This made quite a colony of Tennesseans. David Brickey was a famous hunter, and on the first night after the arrival of the Burgesses he and W. W. Burgess went out and shot and killed six turkeys. Certainly the new comers were not "out of meat." The first settlers on Flint Creek, in the vicinity of Springtown, were as follows: Isaac and Hasting Dial, the latter settling about a mile east, where John Reynolds now resides. In 1850 Robert Duckworth, Matthew Vaughan, Perminter Morgan, Wiley Jones and Maj. Jack Russell all came from Georgia, and settled in that vicinity. The following year Robert Hall and his sons, Jesse and Young, Rolly Hood, Joseph Thomas and his son Joseph, also from Georgia, Hiram Thomason and his sons, John and Sanford, and several others, settled on Flint Creek, and William Addington settled in "Coon Hollow."

Simon Sager, a German, after whom Sager's Creek was named, is believed to have been the first settler in the Hico-Siloam vicinity. He settled on the creek where John De Armon now lives, near Siloam. About the year 1844 Dr. Henry Powell settled with his family on Flint Creek, four miles north of the site of Siloam. His widow, Mrs. Anna Powell, still resides on the place. About the same time James Riddle also settled on Flint Creek, in that vicinity. John Quinton was the first settler of the place now occupied by Col. D. Gunter, at Hico. The latter came from Tennessee in 1844, and settled where he now resides. Daniel Copeland was also a very early settler near Hico.

P. M. Phillips, of Bedford County, Tenn., came to Benton County in 1838, and in 1847 settled on Round Prairie. Col. Henry Hastings came from Tennessee in 1836, and settled seven miles west of Bentonville. He subsequently located at Corner Spring (Decatur), where he lived until his death. Thomas Quarles, from Georgia, settled on the northeast part of Round Prairie about the year 1840, and in 1844 Col. John Phagan, from North Carolina, settled at the Double Springs, on the Line Road. In 1846 David Chandler, also from North Carolina, settled on the farm which he still owns, one and a fourth miles southwest of Bloomfield. He now resides in Bloomfield. Rev. John Givens, a Baptist minister from Tennessee, was an early settler on Butler Creek. About the year 1845 Z. M. Winnery, from Tennessee, settled on the site of the village of Sulphur Springs. Near the same time Frank Lauderdale, James Thomason and Daniel Tittle, all from Tennessee, settled in that neighborhood.

The first settlement on War Eagle Creek, in Benton County, was made by two brothers known as bear hunters, their names being Isaac and Levi Borne. They came from Illinois early in the spring of 1832, and settled above the present War Eagle Mills, and each one raised three acres of corn that year. The following fall Absalom Thomas, Henry Taber, Lewis Russell, Robert Taber, William Brazeel and a Mr. Nelson all settled with their families in that neighborhood, and in December of that year Sylvanus Blackburn, Josiah Blackburn, Julius Kirk and Matthew Brewer with their families, all from Hickman County, Tenn., settled in the same neighborhood. The latter party came by way of Springfield, Mo., and, crossing what is now the line between Missouri and Arkansas, on the old State road passing north and south, they reached the cabin of John Fitzgerald, then living near the present village of Lowell, and stayed there over night. The next day, leaving their families at Fitzgerald's, they prospect ed for and selected their respective locations, and then moved the con. Sylvanus Blackburn located on the place, at the present War Eagle Mills, where he and his estimable wife, who then accompanied him, are still residing, he being in his eightieth year at this time, and she being about the same age. Julius Kirk settled on the creek about half a mile below the mill site and Matthew Brewer about three-fourths of a mile above it. Mr. Blackburn and his wife are the only survivors of these settlers. The next year John, David and Abram Stanley, James Borne, James Matthews and Daniel Flannery settled in that neighborhood, and soon after George Crabaugh and his son-in-law, Oliver Miller. About the same time two famous hunters, Stephen Coose and John Scennett, settled on White River. The former, in order to illustrate the crookedness of this river, once related that he traveled one entire night on the river in his canoe from a point near his residence, and on landing in the morning found that he had gained so little distance that he walked home to get breakfast.

The first death that occurred in the War Eagle settlement was that of a little daughter of David Stanley, and hers was the first grave in the Austin graveyard, about four miles above War Eagle Mills. The second death was that of John B. Kirk, son of Julius Kirk, and he was buried in the first grave in the Blackburn graveyard, near War Eagle Mills. Among the first marriages that took place in that neighborhood were those of John Highland and Rachael Borne, James Blackburn and Sarah Crabaugh, Joseph Stanley and Millie Blalock, Oliver Miller and Miss Blalock, the latter being a sister to Millie.

Later Settlers.—About 1848 William Wells, from Washington County, Ark., settled one mile south of Sulphur Springs. In 1851 G. W. Mitchell, from Tennessee, settled on the site of the present village of Bloomfield, and H. T. Gillespie, from North Carolina, settled where he now lives on the Line Road, two miles south of Cherokee City. About the year 1855 James Ingle settled two and a half miles northeast of Bloomfield. In 1855 Jesse Benton settled where he now lives on Honey Creek, eight miles west of Sulphur Springs. He came from Georgia. Prior to 1853 the following persons settled in the upper Pea Ridge neighborhood, near the famous battle-field, to-wit: Enoch Trott, from Tennessee; James Wardlaw, from Illinois; Mat. Cavaness, George Miser, from Tennessee; Lewis Pratt, Rev. Jasper Dunagin, Wash. Ford, John and Samuel Reddick, Wiley Foster and his two brothers, and Granville Medlin. J. Wade Sikes and his father and family, from Tennessee, settled there in 1853. H. H. Patterson and his two brothers, William Marsh, John Lee and the Morgans were also early settlers in the Pea Ridge vicinity. In 1851 Young Abercombie and his sons, James, William, John, Samuel, Hiram, La Fayette and Floyd, settled on Round Prairie.

For other early settlers the reader is referred to the biographical department of this work. It must also be borne in mind that many other persons hereinafter mentioned in connection with the organization of Benton County were early settlers thereof.

Nativity and Character of the Settlers.—By far the greater portion of the first citizens of Benton County came from Tennessee. Many came from Georgia and North Carolina, and a goodly number came from Virginia and Kentucky, with here and there a man from the free States. Many were descendants of the first settlers of the States from whence they came, and were thoroughly acquainted with pioneer life, and thus well qualified to open the country and establish new homes on the wild western frontier. Nearly all were farmers and hunters, without much education or polish, and with moderate ambitions and wants easily satisfied. To establish a home on a farm of greater or less extent, to live plainly, frugally and honestly, to enjoy comfort and not to work too hard seems to have been their chief desires. The majority were poor and they never became wealthy. As is the case everywhere the few only became rich. Of cultured, scholarly, enterprising and ambitious men there were a few. Many brought some money, slaves and other property to the county, established themselves comfortably from the first, and soon or eventually reached conditions of affluence. Some of the merchants and other business men were shrewd and successful. The doctors and lawyers were fair representatives of their professions. There were no gentlemen of leisure, all had duties to perform, and though they were a little rough, uncouth and unpolished, they were free an d hearty, generous and hospitable, and on the whole just the rig ht kind of people to brave the storms, "subdue the wilderness " and press forward the line of civilization.

Some pe ople sigh for a return of "the good old times," but there was no more morality in the first decade of the county's existence than in the one just past; and on looking over the first indictmen ts in the courts one would conclude that there was not so much. There were not then so many churches, schools and school books in proportion to the population as at present. Indeed, some of the "noble old pioneers" were a little "tough."
One of the first enterprises was the establishing of whisky distilleries, and in those "good old days," when the intoxicating fluid was cheap, and free from government gaugers and revenue collectors, nearly everybody drank it. And notwithstanding the declaration that some are disposed to make, that intemperance is on the increase, the truth is just the opposite, as there is not nearly as much whisky consumed now, in proportion to population, as there was then. It is customary to indulge in a great deal of extravagance in extolling the virtues of the first settlers of any country. Their good qualities are extolled immoderately, while it is seldom, or ever, hinted that they had any vices. Our first settlers were men and women, with all of the virtues and graces, and all of the vices and frailties possessed by their ancestors, and retained by their descendants. They were hospitable and generous, as a rule, and their successors practice the same virtues.

The Pioneer's Cabin.—Log cabins were the domiciles of the pioneer settlers, and the building of one was a notable event.
The first two or three settlers had to erect their own, with the assistance of their families. Later, the pioneer, upon arrival into the country intended for his future operations, would stop and camp at the house of some former settler, and leaving his family there would, under the guidance of the former settler, set out and hunt and select a place to his liking, usually at a spring or some creek, and then return and move his family thereto.
The next thing to be considered was a cabin in which to dwell.
A day for its erection would be appointed, and the former settler would mount a steed and ride far and near to the habitations of the few scattered settlers and notify them when and where the "raising" was to take place. They would come from within a radii of fifteen to thirty miles, and on the day appointed the cabin would go up; meanwhile the newcomer would clear the spot for the new house, and live with his family in the "covered wagon." Axes, with which to cut and prepare the logs, froes, with which to rive the clapboards, and augers, with which to bore holes for pins and to prepare the wooden hinges for the doors, were all the tools required. If there were enough helpers, the logs would be hewed, otherwise put up round. Ridge poles would be placed in order, and the clapboards placed thereon and weighted down with poles, and thus the cabin would be covered. A huge fireplace cribbed with logs at one end of the building, lined with stone and mud, and topped out with a stick and mud chimney, constituted the heating apparatus. The floor and door would be made of puncheons, and the door hung with wooden hinges. Thus the pioneer's cabin would be completed. With the use of the ax and auger bedsteads were made of small poles in the corners of the building. In such humble houses the pioneers dwelt, wore plain apparel and fed on humble fare—lived comfortably, happily and well. They did not sport fine clothes, but had plenty of comfortable and durable linsey and jeans and homespun cotton, much better suited to their rough-and-tumble life.

Population.—The increase in the population of Benton County, since its settlement, was very gradual until since the year 1880. In 1860 it was 9,285; in 1870, 13,782; in 1880, 20,255, and now it is 31,000; an increase of 10,745 since 1880. This unusual increase is due mostly to the large influx of immigrants that have come into the county since the completion of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad through it, and since the fact has been advertised that this region is unexcelled in the United States for the growing of all kinds of fruit. The population of Benton County, by race, for the dates here given, is as follows: For 1860, white, 8,905; negro, 385; Indians, 16. For 1870, white, 13,640; negro, 182; Indians, 9. For 1880, white, 20,167; negro, 128; Indians, 33. Of the present population the number belonging to each race cannot be accurately given. By a comparison of these figures it will be noticed that while the white population is rapidly increasing, that of the colored is decreasing, there being only one-third as many of the latter in 1880 as there were in 1860, and more than three times as many whites as there were then. It will also be noticed that the small Indian population doubled in the same period of time.

Wild Animals, Game, etc.—The wild animals that originally inhabited the territory of Benton County were buffaloes, bears, wolves, wild cats, catamounts, panthers, elk, deer, foxes, raccoons, opossums, rabbits, squirrels, etc. The buffaloes fled in advance of the approach of the white man, and but few lingered after his coming. Sylvanus Blackburn remembers having seen two soon after he settled, in 1832. Probably these were the last ones seen in the county, or, at least, among the last. Unlike other wild animals, they did not remain to annoy or be annoyed by the settlers, but sought new pastures farther toward the setting sun. The bears, not willing to abandon their native haunts, lingered and struggled with their exterminators. Many were killed by the "bear hunters," who loved the dangerous sport. In the open country they have become extinct, but occasionally one is yet found in the mountain fastnesses. They were very annoying to the early settlers, and destroyed many of their hogs. The wolves were very numerous and troublesome, and destructive to sheep, pigs and young cattle. Sylvanus Blackburn relates that they killed nine of his sheep for two successive nights.

The bears would kill the largest hogs, and the wolves would generally take the pigs. The bears were hunted and killed for their meat and skins, and for their extermination. Many were killed simply to gratify the love of the adventure. The wolves being unfit for food, and their skins being of no value, were hunted and killed with a view of their extermination. They are not wholly exterminated, but are no longer troublesome. A few yet remained in the broken country distant from the settlements. The wild cats, catamounts and panthers, once very numerous and annoying, have become so nearly extinct as to cease to be troublesome. The elk became extinct many years ago. The deer were numerous but not annoying. They were hunted and killed for food. Their skins were also valuable. Josiah Blackburn, son of Sylvanus Blackburn, was a great hunter. He killed forty deer one winter on one "hunting snow." The old gentleman, though not a professional hunter, sometimes killed as high as three deer per day. Many of the surviving old settlers say that they often went out and killed a deer before breakfast. Many a deer lost its life by approaching too near the "clearings" of the old settlers, who always had their trusty rifles near at hand. The other animals mentioned above, though not so numerous as they formerly were, still abound in considerable numbers.

Wild fowl, of various kinds, especially turkeys, were numerous. The turkeys, like the deer, were easy of acquisition, and were extensively used by the early settlers for food. The wild fowl still exist, but in very limited numbers. The varieties are those common to all parts of America in this latitude. In the hollow trees of the forests wild bees and their honey were found in great abundance by the early settlers. Had there been a market near at hand, the quantity of honey that could have been gathered from the forests would have been a considerable source of revenue, but, as it was, it was only gathered for home consumption. When a bee tree was found, the next thing to be done was to kill a deer and skin it. Then the deer skin, by true pioneer ingenuity, was formed, and tied up so as to form a sack that would hold about two bushels. Into this deer skin sack the honey would be placed and carried home, the sack hung up in a safe place, and left hanging until the honey was consumed. The reader may think this was a novel vessel in which to put the honey, and so it was. In those days the people were not close to market where they could purchase earthen and wooden vessels to suit their conveniences, and consequently were obliged to improvise many things that we would not think of using at the present day. Sylvanus Blackburn and other surviving pioneers can testify to the truth of the foregoing concerning the wild bees and their honey.

Hardships, Advantages, Disadvantages, etc.—The first settlers labored under great inconvenience from the want of grist and saw-mills, post-offices, blacksmith and other mechanical shops, there being none within convenient distance. The pioneer, before entering the extreme frontier, would provide himself with a supply of meal, which would last for a short time after making his settlement, then a new supply had to be obtained. Then came the test of pioneer life—some corn had to be obtained by making a long trip to some point back from the frontier, or to some distant settler, who had “made” a crop and had a few surplus bushels. Mr. Sylvanus Blackburn, of War Eagle, and those that settled with him, went to Richland, about twenty-five miles distant, to get their corn. Many others had to go a greater distance. The corn being obtained the next thing to be done was to reduce it to meal, and in the absence of mills how was it to be done. The following is the method as related by the old settlers, who of necessity had to use it: First a large tree was felled, so as to leave a stump with a level surface, then a fire was kindled and kept burning on the center of the top of the stump, while the outer portion or rim thereof was kept wet to prevent its burning. In this way a hole would be burned into the stump, and when it was of sufficient depth to form a good bowl, the fire would be taken out and the hole cleaned, the coals adhering to the wood would be scraped out with some edged instrument, and a bowl thus formed sufficient to hold a quantity of corn. Then a pole with one end hinged to a forked post set near the stump, and extended horizontally over the stump, and a pedestal or maul suspended to the pole over the bowl in the stump, completed the pioneers’ grist-mill. The corn would then be placed in the bowl, and one or two persons (often the settler and his good wife) would take hold of the loose end of the pole or “sweep” and move it up and down, thus causing the pedestal to pound the corn into meal. Such were the pioneer grist-mills on which the corn was ground for the hardy settler, his wife and little children. The first few grindings would be considerably mixed with the black, burned wood of the stump, and the meal would be of a dark color. Bread or “hoe-cakes,” made of such meal, together with wild meat, of which they had a great abundance, and a little coffee and sugar—the two latter articles being very inconveniently obtained—usually constituted the diet of the pioneers for the first year and until they could raise a crop.

Clothing.—Their clothing consisted of what they brought with them, which they subsequently made out of cloth manufactured at home with the spinning wheel and loom; and while it was not the finest in quality or of the most fashionable style, it was withal very comfortable. Until stores were opened on the frontier, it was very inconvenient for the settlers to obtain such goods as they could not manufacture. Another great inconvenience was the absence of post-offices. It took as many months, or more, as it now takes days for the news of the East to reach the settlers on the frontier. Many were the inconveniences, too numerous to mention here, which they were compelled to endure. Children should remember with gratitude the parents who endured these hardships and deprivations for their benefit.

Later Mills.—The stump and pedestal mills were superseded by "horse mills," and these by small water mills. Among the first of the latter kind erected was one put up by John E. Turner, on War Eagle Creek, about six miles below the present War Eagle Mills. This was probably in what is now Washington County. There is no mill there now. The first mills at War Eagle were put up in 1848. The early settlers in the western part of the county went to the Elk Mills, in Missouri, to get their grinding done. Subsequently the Hilterbrandt Mills were erected on Flint Creek, in the Indian Territory, about twelve miles southwest of the present village of Bloomfield. For many years these mills were patronized by the people of the western part of the county. Finally the Hico, the Bloomfield and other mills were erected within the county, and now it is well supplied with both saw and grist-mills. Several of the flouring mills are supplied with the latest improved machinery and apparatus for making the roller process flour. The most noted ones are mentioned in the history of the towns in which they are located.

Although the early settlers had to endure many hardships and privations, they certainly had many of the sweets of life along with the bitter. After having raised and gathered a crop, and thus secured a supply of breadstuffs and vegetables for their families, they lived on the fat of the land, which was then "flowing with milk and honey." The milk was supplied by the cows that fed upon the luxuriant wild grasses, and the honey was procured from the hollow trees, where the busy little bees had stored it in great quantities, the latter costing nothing but the labor of securing it, and, perhaps, an occasional sting. Yes, with plenty of bread and vegetables, wild honey, venison, turkey and other wild game to suit their tastes, they could certainly prepare meals such as kings and potentates, in the midst of magnificent splendor, never dreamed of enjoying.

Pioneer Weddings.—The courting of the young people, in the frontier settlements, was attended with some inconveniences. For the want of house room it was often difficult to visit and woo a young lady except in the presence of her parents. No costly parlors furnished with upholstered chairs, into which the young couple might retire to tell of their loves and expectations, then existed, and it was seldom that a young man had the pleasure of escorting his lady love to church or to Sunday-school. But there were "frolics" and dances on the puncheon floors, and in spite of the many inconveniences the young people enjoyed themselves. The climate being mild, there is no doubt but that the native forests were often utilized by young lovers for pleasure walks, and that on such occasions, underneath some beautiful shade tree, the question was asked and the answer given that forever bound their hearts together. A pioneer wedding could not compare, in point of elegance and finish, with one of these days, for there were lacking the paraphernalia of display, and the pomp and circumstances attendant, in this age, upon affairs of that character. In those days the wedding trousseau was not costly and elegant, but plain and simple. The bridal toilet was neither expensive, elaborate, fanciful or showy, but it was sensible, for it was sufficient and appropriate to the times, the manners and circumstances. Yet she was as well dressed as the groom with his coon-skin cap, his jeans coat, his linsey or cotton shirt, his jeans or coarse linen trousers, his feet in home tanned shoes, and without a glove to his hand or name. But for all the discomforts and disadvantages, the marriages were as fortunate and felicitous, and the weddings themselves as joyous, as any of those of modern times.

Early weddings were sometimes attended with some public amusement. A shooting match was sometimes common, and foot races and other athletic sports were frequently indulged in. At night a dance, in which all participated, was common. The wedding feast was well worthy the name. The champagne was good old whisky, manufactured at some local distillery, clear and pure as mountain dew. Then there were venison steaks and roasts, turkey and other wild meats, and other delicious edibles, sufficient to appease the appetites of the most fastidious guests. The particulars of the first marriage or marriages in Benton County cannot now be given, nor the names of the first parties married, unless they were some of those mentioned in connection with the War Eagle Settlement. If any public record of the early marriage was made, it has been lost or destroyed, as no such record can be found in the clerk's office prior to the year 1860.

The record was commenced in 1861, and records only three marriages for the year 1860, viz.: March 28, Thomas Wells and Miss Adaline Baker; August 30, James Riddle and Mrs. Emla* McWilliams; October 9, T. J. Holum, aged twenty-three years, and Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas, aged forty-one years, all being solemnized by Rev. H. Powell. Sixty marriages are recorded for the year 1861, and six in January, 1862, and then no more are recorded until July, 1865, after which forty-two are recorded for that year. The war suspended marriages, or else they were not recorded. For subsequent years the record shows the number of marriages in the county to have taken place as follows: For 1866, 108; for 1870, 133; for 1880, 142; for 1887, 243, and for the present year, up to August 7, 142.

INDIANS.

Tribes.—At the beginning of the settlement of the territory now embraced in this county, it was occupied by roving bands of the Osage and Delaware tribes of Indians, though it was not then and had not been the permanent location of these tribes. While the tribes were at enmity with each other, they were at peace with the whites, and friendly to the early settlers.

Removal.—The Indians were not numerous here, and did not remain long after the settlement by the whites began. In 1837 the removal of the Cherokee Indians from Georgia to the Indian Territory began. There were several thousand of them, and before the removal took place they were divided into two parties, under the respective leadership of two chiefs, named John Ross and John Ridge. They were accordingly designated as the "Ross Party" and the "Ridge Party." In treating for their removal, the Government recognized the Ridge Party, whereupon Ross and his party claimed that Ridge and his party had no authority to enter the treaty, and at first refused to be removed. But upon further negotiations Ross entered into a contract with Gen. Scott to remove his party, by which it cost the Government about $54 per head for their removal. In making the removal the Cherokees were divided into several detachments of about 1,000 each, and each detachment was properly officered with white men. A military escort and provisions were furnished by the Government.

They started on their journey in the fall of 1837, but, like Moses in the wilderness, they lingered by the way, and did not reach their "promised land" until the spring of 1838. They congregated at and started from Calhoun, on the Hiwassee River, in McMinn Co., Tenn. The detachments started at different times, and one of them, belonging to the Ridge party, traveled westward, and crossed the Mississippi at Memphis. The others came by way of Nashville, Tenn., crossed the Ohio River at Golconda, and the Mississippi at Green's Ferry, thence westward, passing through Benton County to their destination, some of them passing directly through Bentonville.

Judge A. B. Greenwood, now of Bentonville, then a young man, was appointed commissary for one of the detachments, and came with it as far as Nashville, then resigned, and returned to Georgia for his family, and moved directly to Bentonville, where he has ever since resided. He was here to witness the passing of the Indians on their way to the Territory.

For a number of years following the Indians would come out of the Territory and establish camps in Benton County from which to hunt game. Being unmolested they became bold and a little treacherous, and did not at all times confine themselves to the capture of wild game, but began to appropriate the hogs which the settlers had turned out to feed upon the mast. Being discovered in their thefts they were finally ordered by the citizens to retire from the county, and not return again for the purpose of hunting. The order was obeyed, and no further trouble was had. On one occasion, in 1840, a band of Indians encamped on Flint Creek, about a mile above the present site of Springtown. After committing some thefts a body of armed citizens met to drive them out, peaceably or otherwise. W. W. Burgess, now of Springtown, was in this party, and on their way he killed a deer, near the site of Springtown, and threw it into the big spring there to keep it cool until their return. Arriving near the Indian camp the citizens notified them to leave instant, which they did, and thus all further trouble on that occasion was avoided. Aside from killing a few hogs and committing some petty thefts the early settlers of Benton County were not molested by the Indians.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

First County Court.—Benton County was organized in accordance with an act of the General Assembly passed or approved September 30, 1836. In accordance with the act the first term of the county court, Judge George P. Wallace, presiding, was held in April, 1837, at the residence of said Wallace, one and a half miles east of the present site of Bentonville, when and where the organization of the county was completed. The first county officers were as follows: George P. Wallace, judge of the county court; John B. Dickson, county clerk; Gideon G. Pace, sheriff; Henry C. Hastings, treasurer; Henry Ford, coroner, and A. McKissick, surveyor.

The County Seat.—According to the act creating the county, an election was held for the selection of three commissioners to select and fix upon a site for the county seat. On counting the returns it was found that Robert Cowen, Robert Weaver and Thomas Swaggerty were elected as such commissioners. On the 7th of November, 1837, they filed with the county clerk a report of their proceedings in the words and figures following, to-wit:

We, the undersigned commissioners elected under an act of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, after having been duly qualified, and giving the notice required by law, and having duly examined the various situations, donations and conveniences, beg leave to report that we have selected a site, to-wit: The south half of the southeast quarter of Section 30, in Township 20 north, Range 30 west of the fifth principal meridian, as presenting to your commissioners, duly considering its situation, the donations offered, and its eligibility for a county seat, more advantages and conveniences than any other situation which was presented for the consideration of your commissioners. They have, after selecting the same, in accordance with the powers vested in them as commissioners, proceeded to lay off a town thereon, leaving a square and 136 lots, and have named and called said town Bentonville; all of which is respectfully submitted to the court.

[Signed.]

ROBERT COWEN.
ROBERT WEAVER.
THOMAS SWAGGERTY.

The report was addressed to the circuit court, to which tribunal the law required it to be made, and on the second day of the first term of that court, which was held in November, 1837, the report was presented to the judge thereof, and the following entry was ordered to be made of record, viz.:

And now on this day comes the commissioners elected to locate a county seat for the county of Benton, and present their report, which is approved by the court and ordered to be filed and recorded. And it appearing to the court here that a court-house will be prepared for the reception and use of the court by the next term thereof, it is therefore ordered by the court that the clerk of the Benton Circuit Court do move all the files, records and papers of his office to the town of Bentonville, the county seat so selected by said commissioners, or within one mile thereof, at least thirty days before the next term of this court. And that the town so selected be established as the seat of justice for said county, and be called and known by the name of Bentonville, in honor to the Hon. Thomas Hort Benton, and that all writs and process hereafter issued from this office, shall bear test and be made returnable at the court-house in the town of Bentonville, county of Benton.

In accordance with this order the books and papers of the court were moved to the court-house in Bentonville before May, 1838, in which month the second term of the court was held in the established county seat, which has ever since remained as such.

Lost Records.—The records of the proceedings of the county court from its organization to the year 1857, and again for a number of years including the war period, have been lost or destroyed. It is thought that many of them were destroyed by soldiers during the war. In consequence of the absence of the records some important items of the proceedings of the county court, that might otherwise appear, will necessarily have to be omitted.

The major part of the business of this court in the early history of the county consisted in the appointment of commissioners to lay out and establish public roads, and to accept and approve, or reject, their reports, to audit accounts, to make contracts for public improvements, to examine and approve the reports of guardians and administrators, to exercise jurisdiction over all county and probate business in general and to levy and superintend the collection of revenues for both county and State.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Court-houses.—The first court-house was a small hewed log building, which stood on the north side of the public square, in Bentonville. It was built in 1837. Being only a temporary “makeshift,” to be used only until a better building could be constructed, it stood only two or three years, or until the second court-house, a more permanent building, was completed. This was a two-story brick structure about fifty feet square, and stood upon the center of the public square, where the well is now located. The court room was in the first story, and the county offices and jury rooms in the second. John and William Walker were the contractors, who built it, as it is said, at a loss to themselves. This house stood until some time during the late Civil War, when it was destroyed by fire.

Immediately after the close of the war a temporary court-house was built on the lot near the old jail, it being on the north side of the street, a short distance east of the northeast corner of the public square. This was a two-story frame building, costing in the neighborhood of $1,000. It was used until the present court-house was erected, after which it was moved to and now stands on the county “poor farm.”

On Monday, January 4, 1870, the county court made the following entry on the record of its proceedings: “Whereas, there being no suitable court-house in the county of Benton in which to hold the courts of said county, and no jail for said county, therefore it is hereby ordered by the court that a court-house and jail be erected in the town of Bentonville, in said county of Benton, in the State of Arkansas.” William W. Reynolds was then appointed commissioner of public buildings within and for the county, "and there being no suitable ground belonging to the county on which to erect said buildings," the commissioner was ordered to select a proper piece of ground in the town of Bentonville for that purpose, and to purchase the same and take a good and sufficient deed of conveyance in fee simple therefor, and to make report of his proceedings to the court at his earliest convenience. Commissioner Reynolds accepted his appointment, and on the same day filed his report in the words and figures following:

Hon. County Court of the County of Benton, State of Arkansas:

The undersigned commissioner of public buildings, instructed by order of your honorable court to purchase a suitable lot of ground for the erection of a court-house and jail thereon, beg leave to submit the following report: That he has (subject to your approval) purchased, of Joseph R. Rutherford's estate, Lots Nos. 90, 91, 94 and 95 of the town of Bentonville, Benton Co., Ark. In arriving at the consideration for the property purchased, the kind of payment was considered, and from the fact that such payment would be made in county warrants, the sum of $1,250 was agreed upon as the consideration for said lots. These lots could have been purchased with greenbacks for the sum of $1,000. The deed for said lots to the county of Benton, in fee simple, is herewith submitted and asked to be taken as a part of this report. As a confirmation of the contract of your commissioner, he would ask your honorable court that county warrants to the amount of $1,250 be issued to the said Joseph R. Rutherford in consideration of said property. Most respectfully submitted.

[Signed.]

W. W. REYNOLDS,
Com. of Public Buildings.

The report was accepted and approved by the court, and county warrants to the amount of $1,250 were ordered to be drawn in favor of J. R. Rutherford in full payment for the lots named therein, the warrants to be issued in such sums as he might desire. The commissioner was then ordered to make out and submit to the court, at its next term, a plan or plans, with an estimate of the probable cost of a court-house and jail, to be erected on the grounds purchased for that purpose. At the next term of the court Commissioner Reynolds submitted plans and specifications for the proposed building, drawn by W. T. Ritter, architect, together with an estimate of its cost, at $35,000. The plans and specifications were adopted by the court, and spread in full length upon its records. ["A" pages 121 to 127 inclusive.]. The commissioner was then ordered to proceed to let the contract for the building of the court-house and jail combined to the lowest responsible bidder, after giving at least twenty days' notice of the time and place and terms of the letting, the commissioner to receive sealed bids from any and all parties until 12 o'clock of the first day of May, 1871, and to open all bids on that day in the presence of the Court. A sufficient amount of bonds, not exceeding $50,000, was then ordered to be issued for the purpose of raising funds for the construction of the proposed building, the first $10,000 to be made payable in one year after date, the second $10,000 in two years after date, and so on until the contract should be fully paid, or the $50,000 exhausted; all bonds to bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent.

On the first day of May following, the court being in session, the following entry was made upon its record of proceedings: "Now, on this day comes W. W. Reynolds, commissioner of public buildings of the county of Benton, and at 12 o'clock M. of this day, proceeded and did open, in the presence of this Court, the several bids for the erection of the court-house and jail, in accordance with the advertisement of the commissioner in this behalf. Whereupon the following bids were presented, to-wit: J. H. Neely and Samuel H. Kelton, of Bentonville, $33,000; A. H. Leady, of Springfield, Mo., $36,575; M. A. Rowles, of Illinois, $36,500; W. T. Ritter & Co., of Springfield, Mo., $34,735; J. Oliver, of Springfield, Mo., $31,910."

After an examination of the several bids, the contract was awarded to John H. Neely and Samuel H. Kelton, at $33,000, whereupon the contractors immediately filed their bond conditioned for the fulfillment of their part of the contract, in the sum of $66,000, with good and sufficient security to the satisfaction of the court. In June following Commissioner Reynolds reported to the court the progress of the work, and that the work done on the new court-house and jail, together with material purchased, amounted to $7,900. The next month he reported the sale of bonds made by him on the 24th day of June preceding, amounting to $7,669, with the following credits, to-wit: Receipt of Neely & Kelton, contractors, $6,115.51; receipt of R. & T. A. Ennis for printing bonds, $80; receipt of Cory & Cook and A. B. Cory, printing, $24; receipt of M. B. Maxwell for surveying, $6.25; total credits, $6,225.76.

On the 15th day of August, 1871, a petition signed by John A. Dickson, J. V. Lee, J. C. Woods and twenty-eight others was presented to the court, praying for the abandonment of the bond system. The petition reads as follows:

We, the undersigned tax payers of Benton County, would most respectfully represent to the Honorable County Court, that, whereas, they did, at the April term of said court, according to Act 66 of the Acts of the Assembly of 1871, authorizing them so to do, order the commissioner of public buildings to have $50,000 in interest-bearing bonds struck, $10,000 of which have already been sold; and whereas, said bonds cannot be cashed except at such rates as proves ruinous sacrifice to the people, we would therefore pray your honorable body to dispense with the use of the remaining Benton County Court House and Jail Bonds amounting to $40,000, and make such modification with the contractors as will be equitable and satisfactory to them and the court, for the erection of the building, levying cash tax according to the law for raising revenue for county expenses; provided you find you are authorized so to do by the law. Believing that you will save the public money on the balance of the bonds, and meet the approval of almost the entire population, who feel deeply aggrieved by the bond system. All of which is most respectfully submitted by your petitioners.

Then, in response to a citation issued to them, Messrs. Neely and Kelton came into court, as also did the petitioners by their attorney, and the Court took into consideration the matter of the petition. The contractors refused to accept any change from the bond system, showing that they could not use county scrip at all, and that the bonds would furnish them cash in hand, and further that they could not accept the payments from a direct tax in lieu of their contract, for the reason that it would take eight or ten years to realize the amount due them.

Then follows of record the following entry: "Therefore the Court, after due and respectful consideration, is of the opinion (as the petitioners have wholly failed to show any plan that is satisfactory to the contractors, by which one cent would be saved to the county, but on the contrary the plans submitted would cost the county a large amount in excess of the present system), that it would be unwise to change the present bond system." Upon request of the contractors, the court then ordered the second year's bonds, being for $10,000, to be offered for sale by the commissioner of public buildings, to the highest bidders for cash, at the door of the court-house, on Monday, September 4, 1881. In October following, Commissioner Reynolds reported a further sale of bonds, and that the whole amount then paid to the contractors was $14,569.25.

In January, 1872, the court (having undergone a change in its formation, being then composed of a board of supervisors) found that the contractors could not proceed with the building without additional aid, and that unless the bonds could be converted into money the enterprise would of necessity be retarded in its progress, and that the deplorable condition of the finances of the people of the county, as shown by the last effort of the commissioner to sell the bonds, satisfied the court that the policy of again offering the bonds for sale at public outcry would be attended with failure, as in the sale of the last installment. It further appeared to the court by written assurance of Denton D. Starke, a banker of Fayetteville, that he had negotiated with the contractors for the purchase of the bonds, at such price as to enable them to proceed with their work, and complete the building within the time specified, provided the court would issue the whole of the bonds remaining unsold, and turn them over to the contractors. To remove all obstacles and to secure the speedy completion of the building, the court ordered that the remaining $30,000 in bonds should be issued, and turned over to the contractors at 75 cents on the dollar, in full payment of their contract for the construction of the building, and that the commissioner should take their receipt in duplicate for the same, and file one with the clerk of the court and retain one in his possession. It was further ordered that before turning over said bonds the contractors should give bond to the court, in the sum of $30,000, conditioned for the delivery of the bonds to said Starke, as aforesaid, within fifteen days from date of the order. And it was further provided that the funds arising from the sale of the bonds should be drawn from said Starke, as follows: $500 on or before April 1, 1872, and $2,500 monthly thereafter, unless otherwise ordered by the court, until the whole amount of the proceeds of the sale should be exhausted, except the proceeds arising from the sale of the $7,500 of reserve fund, which was to remain in the bank subject to the special orders of the court. The contractors filed their bond as required, received the bonds for the $30,000, and turned them over to Starke, the banker, at Fayetteville, and filed his duplicate receipt for the deposit of the same, with the court, as directed.

In May following Commissioner Reynolds filed with the court the following report, to-wit: "To the Honorable County Court of Benton County: The commissioner of public buildings respectfully submits the following report, to wit: The amount paid contractors as per last report, $14,569.25. Amount of contingent fund, $175.75. Work done to this date: Excavation, $150.00; stone wall, $1,500.00; cut stone, $800.00; guion corners, $1,000.-00; door sills, $50.00; brick in wall, $8,500.00; cut stone window sills, $300.00; well and pump, $100.00; rods and anchors, $350.00; carpenter work, $1,700.00. Total, $14,450.00. Material ready for use, $500.00; cut stone ready, $600.00; cut post ready, $150.-00; iron cornice, $1,400.00; vault doors, $375.00; iron columns, $500.00; ceiling joists, $160.00; oils and paints, $300.00; 35,000 feet lumber, $1,050.00; 5,000 feet walnut, $160.00. Total, $5,195.00. Whole amount of work done and material ready for use, $19,645.00."

At this time the court found that the constructors had failed to negotiate with D. D. Starke for the sale of the $30,000 in bonds, or to realize any money from the bonds. The contractors then returned the bonds for that amount to the court and took up their receipt, whereupon the court rescinded its former order by which the bonds were issued, and they were burned by order of and in the presence of the court. The commissioner was then ordered to prepare three hundred interest-bearing bonds of the denomination of one hundred each, and to offer for sale a sufficient number of them to raise the sum of $5,075.75, less 15 per cent on said amount in currency. "That said bonds should bring five cents on the dollar, and should be sold one at a time at the court-house door of said county, for cash to the highest bidder, commencing on Saturday June 1, 1872, and to continue from day to day until the full amount required was sold," and it was further provided that if no sales were made, the commissioner should pay to the contractors the amount in bonds at 75 cents on the dollar. On the 3d of July following the commissioner reported that the bonds had been offered for sale as per order, and that one of them, No. 54, was sold to C. H. Davis for $75.05 and all the others were sold to the contractors for 75 cents on the dollar.

In January, 1873, the court found that the contractors, Neely & Kelton, had failed to finish and complete the court-house and jail by the 1st of September, 1872, according to contract, and called upon them to show why their said contract should not be declared forfeited. In response the contractors replied that they had nothing to say; whereupon the court declared and ordered the contract forfeited by the default of the contractors, Neely & Kelton. On the 15th day of February following the offered resignation of Commissioner Reynolds was accepted, and S. G. Elliott was appointed his successor. In April, 1873, the court ordered that forty-six one hundred-dollar interest-bearing bonds should be issued, and that the commissioner should proceed at once to negotiate their sale by private contracts to the best advantage of the county, provided that he should not sell any of them for less than 75 cents on the dollar, and if he could not thus dispose of them he was authorized to offer them for sale at public auction to the highest bidder for cash. He was also authorized, as soon as practicable, to contract with one or more responsible persons "for the completion of the walls, roof, windows, doors and second-story rooms of the court-house of said county." And if he failed to get money by the sale of the bonds, he was to pay the workmen with the bonds at such discount as in his judgment justice would be done the county.

In May, 1873, the county court, then consisting of a board of supervisors, ordered Commissioner Elliott to let out to the lowest bidders the contract for finishing the work on the court-house, the bids to be received June 2, 1873, and the work to be completed on or before the second Monday of September following. Accordingly, on the 3d of June, contracts were entered into as follows: To F. A. Johnson, Robert Anderson and P. Q. O. Rabb, the wood work remaining undone, for the sum of $800; to J. C. Alexander, the tin roofing, spouting and capping and covering cornice for $230; to James Haney, the brick, stone and plastering work remaining undone, for $830. In July following the court found the court-house completed as per the last aforesaid contracts.

In July, 1874, W. C. Lefors, the county treasurer, submitted the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Benton County, Ark.:

I hereby certify that all the court-house and jail bonds that has ever come into my hands as collector of revenue for 1871, and as treasurer for the years 1872 and 1873, amount to the sum of $37,570, and that I have paid out on 254 bonds.....$29,599 71
On court-house warrants and coupons..... 7,236 37

Total amount paid out less commission.....$36,836 08
Leaving in treasury July 22, 1874..... $124 18
All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed)

W. C. LEFORS, County Treasurer.

It is not known just what the court-house and jail actually cost the county, but it is estimated that on account of the interest and discount on the bonds actually issued and sold, and the depreciated county scrip, that it cost nearly $60,000. It is, according to the plans and specifications, a three-story brick building, 56x76 feet in size, set on a stone foundation. The first story, twelve feet in height, contains the county offices, halls and stairs; the second story, eighteen feet in height, the court-rooms, and the third story, twelve feet in height, the jail with cells, etc., for prisoners.

The County Jails.—The first jail for Benton County, which was erected immediately after its organization, stood on the north side of the east and west street, about sixty yards east of the northeast corner of the public square, in Bentonville. It was a small building, consisting of a double wall of squared logs, with a cavity of several inches space between the walls. In this cavity poles were stood upon end, thus making what might be called a third or interior wall.

In April, 1860, the county court made the following entry upon the record of its proceedings, to-wit:

This being the day heretofore appointed by this Honorable Court to take the vote whether a direct tax should be levied for the purpose of building a county jail, and the court being satisfied that notices have been put up in every township, as required by law, and there being a number of the justices of the peace of the county present, and they having unanimously voted for the levying of a direct tax * * * on all property now assessed for the year 1860, for county purposes, and also a poll tax of 25 cents per capput, which said tax can only be paid and received by the sheriff in gold or silver.

It is therefore ordered by the court that a county jail be built, and that a direct tax of twenty per cent* be levied on all property now assessed for the year 1860, for county purposes, and also that a poll tax of 25 cents per capput for the year 1860 be levied, and the sheriff is hereby ordered to receive and collect in discharge of both of said taxes only gold or silver.

At the July term following plans and specifications were adopted for the building of a jail, forty feet long by twenty-two feet wide, from outside to outside, the wall of the first story to be eighteen inches thick and nine feet high, with two partition walls thirteen inches thick across the building. The second story of the building was to be eleven feet high, and the whole was to be set upon a solid stone foundation. Full details for the construction of the building were given in the plans and specifications. At the following August term of the court the contract for the erection of the building was awarded to E. R. McKeen, the lowest bidder, for $3,475.

The political campaign of 1860 was now on, and probably the results which followed were foreseen or apprehended by the contractor, for nothing further was done with this jail, it never being built. The next county jail was the one constructed in the third story of the present court-house. Proceedings pertaining to the construction of the present jail were commenced in October, 1887, when Robert N. Corley was appointed commissioner, to let the contract or contracts for its construction, and to superintend the work. The contracts were let in January, 1888, to different parties, as follows: Stone mason work to H. G. McWhirter for $1,693; brick work to William D. Kelton for $475; carpenter work to Duffey & Fristoe for $475; iron work to Clapp, McGrunder & McAdams for $682; steel cages, etc., to the Paulling Jail Co. for $3,000; tin work (roofing, etc.), to Hobbs & Co. for $82; excavation to different parties, estimated at $50.

At this writing the building is not wholly completed; the painting, construction of sewerage, etc., remains to be done. It will cost when completed, according to the plans and specifications, including sewerage, about $7,500. It is located on the court-house grounds on the north side thereof. It is a one-story building, forty-two feet two inches by thirty-two feet two inches in size, outside measure. It contains a hall, which extends all around the building inside of the brick wall, and on the interior the place proper for the prisoners is a space thirteen feet square, containing two cells six and a half feet square, and a corridor six by thirteen feet. It is so arranged that the prisoners cannot have access to the outer wall. It sets about three feet below the level of the ground, and has an excavation of that depth, and about six feet wide, all around it. The roof of the building extends over this surrounding excavation. Upon the whole, it is a very substantial building, and so arranged that the jailor need never come in contact with the prisoners.

Poor-House.—In April, 1857, the county court, finding it necessary and expedient to establish a poor-house in the county of Benton, ordered that Samuel Woods, James Jackson and Dysert Woods be appointed to act as commissioners to select a proper site for such building. At the following October term of the court two of these commissioners, James Jackson and Samuel Woods, reported that they had not been able, as yet, to select such a place as in their judgment would be suitable for such purpose, and asked for further time, which was granted until the next regular term. The court then ordered its clerk to make or draw a warrant upon the treasurer of the county, in favor of the commissioners, for the sum of $1,200, provided they or a majority of them call for the same, to enable them to purchase a farm or site for a poor-house. It seems, however, that this order was not called for. In January, 1858, the commissioners, all joining, reported to the court that they had selected a site for the poor-house on forty acres of land lying north of Bentonville, owned by William Clements, together with five acres off of a tract owned by William McDaniel, including a spring or interest in the spring, and had made a contract, therefor, at the sum of $300. They further reported that there was a log house on the same without floor, ten acres in cultivation, and about four acres in wheat, and recommended the place as the most eligible site they had been able to select, and asked the adoption of their report.

The report was adopted, and a warrant for the $300 was ordered to be issued and paid to the said Clements upon his making, to the commissioners and their successors in office, a warrantee fee simple deed for the lands aforesaid. The court then authorized the commissioners to enter at the United States Land office at Fayetteville, forty acres of land lying due north of the forty-acre tract already purchased. Afterward, in April, 1858, Jacob Candill, county surveyor, in obedience to a former order issued to him, made to the court a survey of the poor-farm, showing that it embraced the east half of the southwest quarter, and four and a half acres out of the southeast corner of the southwest one-fourth of the southwest quarter of Section 20, in Township 20 north, Range 30 west, as surveyed by him February 26, 1858. As soon as the necessary buildings on the poor-farm were put in order, the paupers of the county were removed thereto and placed under the care of a superintendent engaged for that purpose. In November, 1875, the court appointed Zach. Baker commissioner to let the contract to the lowest responsible bidder, after giving ten days' notice, for the removal of the old frame court-house to the poor-farm, and for repairing the same so as to make it suitable for a poor asylum. In January following Commissioner Baker reported in full to the court, whereupon it was ordered that a county warrant for the sum of $330 should be issued, payable out of the public building fund, to William Stewart and J. V. Lee, for removing the old court-house to the poor-farm, and for materials for fitting it up and putting it in order; and that another warrant for the sum of $120.50 should be issued to James Haney for materials furnished and work and labor performed by him in fitting up the same building.

The pauper inmates of the poor-house average from eight to ten in number. The method of keeping them is by letting or renting the poor-farm to a superintendent, who takes care of them for a stipulated price. Temporary relief is also administered in a limited degree, to a few persons not confined in the poor-house, by small appropriations from the county treasury.

MUNICIPAL TOWNSHIPS.

Roller Township.—The loss of records prevents the formation and organization of the original municipal townships of Benton County from being satisfactorily ascertained and given. The first change appearing of record was made in January, 1857, when John Roller and sixty-one other citizens filed a petition with the county court asking for the formation of a new township in the northeast corner of the county, within the following boundary lines, to-wit: "Commencing at Henry Moor's on the line of Walnut Township, and running to Burks' tanyard; thence with the State road north to the Missouri line, including all the inhabitants on said road; thence east to the Madison County line; thence south with the Madison County line to the Walnut Township line; thence with said line to the beginning." The prayer of the petition was granted, and the territory included, with boundary lines described therein, was declared to be a new township by the name of Roller, and Jacob Roller, Samuel Burks and David Gunner were appointed judges of elections, with the election precinct at the house of William Herds. The name of the township has since become "Roller's Ridge."

Prairie Creek Township.—In April, 1859, John B. Putnam, with fifty other citizens of Sugar Creek, White River and Big Spring Townships, filed with the county court a petition for the formation of a new township taken from the above townships and bounded as follows, to wit: "Commencing at Henry Moor's; thence to the mouth of Prairie Creek; thence up White River to William Graham's farm; thence to George Callahan's on the State road; thence to and with Osage Township line to Sugar Creek; and thence up Sugar Creek, making the bed of said creek the line up to Blankenship's farm, and thence to Henry Moor's at the beginning." The prayer of the petitioners was granted, and the township was named Prairie Creek, and the voting place was established at Job R. Mona's mill.

Alterations.—No further proceedings pertaining to the municipal townships appear on record until March, 1873, when the following entry was made of the proceedings of the court:

Ordered, that the sixteen political townships or voting precincts as existed in 1860, in the county of Benton, be recognized and re-established as they stood in said year 1860, and that all elections hereafter held in said county be held at the original voting precincts in each original township, respectively, as they were in 1860; and that this order take effect from and after the tenth day of March, 1873.

Ten years later, at the October term, 1883, of the court, the following order was made:

Now, on this day it appearing to the court that the records of the county court have been destroyed, showing the true boundary lines between the townships of the county. It is therefore ordered by the court that the township lines as shown by the map of Benton County, Ark., issued by S. B. Robertson, in 1883, be, and the same are hereby declared to be the correct and true lines between said townships of Batie, Sulphur Springs, Dickson, Osage, Mount Vernon, Sugar Creek, Roller's Ridge, Walnut, War Eagle, Esculapia, Bright Water, Colville, Big Spring, Anderson, Wager, Ball, Flint, Hico, Round Prairie, Eldorado Springs and Wallace. That said townships be as they are hereby established and set forth, and designated in said map as published by said S. B. Robertson in 1883.

Decatur Township.—Following the above proceeding, a petition was filed for a new municipal township, to be called Decatur Township, whereupon the court, after due consideration of the matter, ordered that "the said new township, which is called Decatur, should be composed of and bounded as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of Section 34, in Township 20 north, Range 32 west, and running due south along the west boundary of Section 34, and on west side of Sections 3, 10, 15 and 22, Township 19 north, Range 32 west, to the southwest corner of Section 22, thence on south boundary of Sections 22, 23 and 24, Township 19 north, Range 32 west, and on south boundary of Sections 19, 20 and 21 to the southeast corner of Section 21, Township 19 north, Range 31 west; thence due north along the east line of Sections 21, 16, 9 and 4, Township 19 north, Range 31 west; thence west to southwest corner of Section 33, Township 20 north, Range 31 west; thence north to the northwest corner of Section 33, Township 20 north, Range 31 west; thence due west along the north line of Sections 31 and 32, Township 20 north, Range 31 west, and on the north side of Sections 36, 35 and 34, to the northwest corner of Section 34, Township 20 north, Range 32 west, to the place of beginning."

By clerical error the above description places Decatur Township just six miles east of where it is actually located. To correct the error, Township 31 west should read 32 west, and Township 32 west should read 33 west.

Garfield Township.—In July, 1884, A. J. Wilks, J. N. Ingram, J. B. Lamkins, J. C. Vandagriff and others filed with the court

a petition for the formation of a new township within the following boundary lines, to-wit: "Beginning at the northeast corner of Section 26, in Township 21 north, Range 28 west; thence west to the northeast corner of Section 29; thence north to the northeast corner of Section 20; thence west to the northwest corner of Section 19; thence south in Range 29 to the northeast corner of Section 25; thence west to the northwest corner of same; thence south to the township line between 20 and 21; thence east to the range line of 28 and 29; thence south to the southwest corner of Section 18, in Township 20 north; thence east to the southeast corner of Section 14; thence north to the beginning." The prayer of the petition was granted—the township being established as prayed for, and it was named Garfield, and the voting place for the township was established at Garfield Station, on the railroad.

Yell Township.—On the 29th day of April, 1886, A. Twiggs and others presented to the court a petition for the formation of a new township, to be composed from parts of Ball, Flint and Hico, and bounded as follows, to-wit: "Commencing at section corner between 15 and 16 and 21; thence north one mile and a half to center of sections 9 and 10; thence west on said half mile line to the line of Hico Township; thence north to the line of Flint Township; thence northwest with said line to the center or half-mile corner between Sections 15 and 22, Range 33; thence east on said section line to the present line between Flint and Ball; thence with the original line to the starting point." The prayer of the petition was granted—the township as thus described being established and named Yell.

Washington Township.—On the 1st day of May, 1886, J. C. Hopkins, B. C. Martin, Martin R. Walker and others presented to the court a petition for the formation of a new township within the following boundary lines, to-wit: "Beginning at the southwest corner of Section 22, in Township 18 north, Range 30 west, and running north to the northwest corner of Section 27, in Township 19 north, Range 30 west; thence east to the northeast corner of Section 30, in Township 19 north, Range 29 west; thence south to the Washington County line; thence west to the place of beginning." The prayer of the petitioners was granted, and the township organized as prayed for, and named Washington. The voting place was established at the village of Lowell.

The descriptions of the boundary lines of the civil townships, formed since the county map was published, in 1883, have been given in full, so that the reader can trace and mark them on the map if he so chooses. The names of all the civil or municipal townships in the county, beginning in the northeast corner and going west on the north tier to northwest corner, thence east and west successively, after the manner that sections are numbered in Congressional townships, are as follows, viz.: Roller's Ridge, Garfield, Sugar Creek, Mount Vernon, Dickson, Sulphur Springs, Batie, Eldorado, Wallace, Osage, Bright Water, Walnut, War Eagle, Esculapia, Anderson, Decatur, Round Prairie, Flint, Wager, Colville, Washington, Big Spring, Yell, Hico and Ball—twenty-five in all. Some of them are very irregular in shape.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS.

Line and State Roads.—There are two noted highways passing through Benton County, known as the "Line Road" and the "State Road." The former passes on or near the boundary line of Benton County and the Indian Territory, hence the name "Line Road." It is also known as the "Old Military Road," having been cut out and established by the general government from Fort Scott, in Kansas, to Fort Smith, in Arkansas, for the purpose of opening and establishing communications between those important points. In some places this road runs on the boundary line, especially at and for a few miles south of Maysville, but it lies mostly on the Benton County side. It passes through Maysville, Cherokee City and Silvan in Benton County. The State Road leading from Fort Smith, bearing a little to the east of north, passes through the eastern part of Benton County, along the general route of the "Frisco" Railroad, into the State of Missouri. Before transportation was provided by the railroads, this State Road was the great thoroughfare over which Texas cattle were driven in large droves to the north, and mules were driven southward. All along this road, at convenient points accessible to water, were formerly "taverns" or "stands," as they were called by the drovers. There were two such noted taverns in Benton County, one at Bright Water and one at Cross Hollows. Large yards for confining stock were always connected with these "stands." The remains of the old tavern at Cross Hollows are still standing.

Ferries.—The particulars concerning the laying out of the early highways cannot be given on account of the loss of the records. In January, 1857, a license was granted to Abner Jennings to establish and keep a ferry "across White River, at the crossing of the Blackburn mill road," and he was authorized to charge the following rates of ferriage: Each footman, 5 cents; man and horse, 10 cents; one-horse carriage, 20 cents; two-horse carriage, 25 cents; four-horse carriage or wagon, 35 cents; three yoke of oxen, or six-horse wagon, 50 cents; each head of loose stock of all kinds, 2 cents. It was ordered that the ferry should be known and called by the name of Jennings's Ferry, and that Mr. Jennings should pay for his license or privilege a county tax of $1 per annum.

The same year, in October, William Early was granted permission to establish and keep a ferry across White River, at or near the crossing of the Bentonville and Huntsville road, and the same was declared a public ferry. He was authorized to charge the following rates of ferriage: Footman, 5 cents; man and horse, 25 cents; wagon and two horses or oxen, 50 cents; wagon and four horses or oxen, $1; wagon and six horses or oxen, $1.50; each head of loose stock, 2½ cents. He was charged $1 per annum for his license.

Other Roads.—In 1857 a road was established "to commence on the State line near Shell's mill, at the termination of a road leading from Neosho, thence running to the Elkhorn tavern, to meet a road leading from said tavern on the road to Huntsville, in Madison County." At the same time Joseph Blackburn was appointed overseer of the Blackburn Mill road from the first crossing of Cleptny to where it intersects the War Eagle road. David Baylston was appointed overseer of the same road from the Poor Mountain to the crossing of White River. C. C. Squires was appointed overseer of the Smith Mill road down Sugar Creek, to commence at the first crossing of the creek, and terminating at the State line. John F. Jenkins was appointed overseer of "class No. 1, of the Springfield road, commencing at Bentonville on the line near James Woolsey's, thence to A. C. Young's; thence along a neighborhood road to near the corner of Mrs. Jefferson's field; thence along said road to where the same intersects the old Springfield road near Warren Wright's, or Sugar Creek road; thence along said old road to the first crossing of the river channel of Sugar Creek." John L. Booth was appointed overseer of the State road from Robert Sikes' place to the Cross Hollows district. The Sikes place is now the site of Rogers.

There are no macadamized roads in Benton County, but many of the ridge roads in the broken and mountainous portions are equally as good, the surface of the lands being so completely filled with small chert and flint rocks of the proper size, that all that is necessary to have a road macadamized by nature is to clear it and travel it. Of course this does not apply to the roads through the prairie and more level lands of the county, which form by far the greater portion. There is an abundance of this small chert and flint rock of proper size along the ridges and in the beds of the streams to thoroughly macadamize every mile of the public roads of the county without breaking a stone. Of course in some places it would have to be hauled a long way.

RAILROADS.

An effort to secure the building of a railroad through Benton was made prior to the breaking out of the Civil War, as will be seen by reading the following order of the county court, made at its July term in 1860: "Ordered by the court that the sum of $500 of the industrial improvement funds, so soon as that amount shall be accumulated in the hands of the commissioners of Benton County, be paid over by said commissioners into the hands of C. W. Rice, Sr., to be retained by him and disposed of in the manner following: "It is contemplated to have a survey made in order to determine the nearest and most practicable route for building a railroad from Van Buren, Crawford Co., Ark., through the counties of Crawford, Washington and Benton, to intersect at the most practicable point the southwest branch of the Missouri Pacific Railroad. Now, if the counties of Crawford and Washington, or the citizens of each in their individual capacity, shall appropriate and expend upon said survey an equal amount, then the said Rice shall, and is hereby authorized, to pay to the person or persons bearing the expenses of said survey the said sum of $500, he taking his or their receipts therefor, and filing the same in the clerk's office of Benton County, provided that the same shall be expended exclusively within the limits of Benton County upon said survey. The said Rice is required to retain said funds until it is certain that the same will be expended as last above directed. It is further ordered that the order heretofore made by this court for a similar purpose is annulled."

This was the effort made on the part of the county to secure a railroad; but for some reason, perhaps the apprehended danger of the trouble following the result of the political campaign of 1860, the proposed survey was not made, and, consequently, the $500 appropriated for that purpose was not expended.

The St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, which runs through the eastern part of Benton County, giving an outlet to the great States both north and south, was completed through the county in the summer of 1881. It has stations within the county at Garfield, Bright Water, Avoca, Rogers and Lowell. The railroad leading from Bentonville to Rogers was built by the Bentonville Railway Company, at a cost of about $42,000. It was completed in 1883.

PUBLIC LANDS AND THEIR SURVEYS.

The rectangular system of surveying the public lands now in use by the United States, and by which the lands in Benton County were surveyed, was inaugurated and adopted by Congress at or near the beginning of the present century. The first surveys made under the system, and before it was fully perfected, were made in what is now the State of Ohio. Under this system the lands are surveyed into strips six miles wide, running both east and west, and north and south, those running east and west are called "townships," while those running north and south are called "ranges." The squares—six miles each way—formed by the crossing of these strips, are called Congressional townships, each of which (if full) is subdivided into thirty-six sections, containing each 640 acres, more or less. The "townships" are numbered north and south from a given base line, and the "ranges" are numbered east and west from a named meridian, called a principal meridian. The "first principal meridian" is the State line between the States of Ohio and Indiana; the "second principal meridian" runs through the State of Indiana only, a few miles west of the city of Indianapolis; the "third principal meridian" runs through the central part of Illinois, a few miles west of Bloomington; the "fourth principal meridian" runs through the western part of Illinois, from a point near Bardstown, on the Illinois river, to the Mississippi on the north; the "fifth principal meridian," which in part governs the surveys of this county, passes through Arkansas near the ninety-first degree of west longitude from Greenwich, or the fourteenth degree from Washington. It extends northward through the States of Missouri and Iowa. The "base line," which, together with the last named principal meridian, governs the surveys of Arkansas and the States north of it, runs east and west through the central part of Arkansas, from a point on the Mississippi River near the mouth of St. Francois river, to the Indian Territory on the west, passing about five miles south of the city of Little Rock.

From this base line and the fifth principal meridian the lands of Benton County are found to embrace parts of Townships 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21 north of the base line, and Ranges 27 to 34, inclusive, west of the meridian. The public surveys in Benton County were made late in the thirties and early in the forties. Among the persons making them were Elias Conway, Robert W. Mecklin and Matthew McClellan. As soon as surveyed the public lands became subject to entry at the land office, then at Fayetteville. Scattering entries were made by the early settlers prior to 1858, and from that date to 1861 the entries for the greater bulk of the lands that have been taken up were made. Land entries still continue, and there still remains a large quantity of land subject to entry. The unentered lands are mostly broken and undesirable. They will probably become desirable on account of their timber, and their adaptability to growing fruits.

AGRICULTURE AND HORTICULTURE.

Farm Statistics.—Benton County has been mainly an agricultural county, other industries not having been, until recently, introduced. While the soil is not as rich as it is in some counties, it produces well, although but little scientific farming has ever been applied to it. The farm areas and farm values of the county, as ascertained by the census of 1880, were as follows: Number of farms, 2,725; acres of improved lands, 121,874; value of farms, including land, fences and buildings, $2,256,424; value of farming implements and machinery, $112,193; value of live stock, $580,425; cost of building and repairing fences, $30,621; cost of fertilizers purchased, $1,272; estimated value of all farm productions (sold, consumed or on hand) for 1879, $509,458. From the same census it is found that the principal vegetable productions of the county for the year 1879 were as follows: Barley, 200 bushels; buckwheat, 183 bushels; Indian corn, 1,119,834 bushels; oats, 245,382 bushels; rye, 1,300 bushels; wheat, 156,087 bushels; value of orchard products, $4,265; tons of hay, 2,376; cotton, 126 bales; Irish potatoes, 28,165 bushels; sweet potatoes, 14,058 bushels; tobacco, 395,982 pounds. Also from the census of 1880 the "live stock and its productions" of Benton County are found to have been as follows: Number of animals—Horses, 5,864; mules and asses, 2,233; working oxen, 69; milch cows, 5,397; other cattle, 6,307; sheep, 12,919; swine, 46,516; pounds of wool, 36,764; pounds of butter, 298,346; pounds of cheese, 700.

By comparing these statistics with like statistics of all other counties in the State, it is found that according to the census of 1880 Benton stood first in the production of oats, Irish potatoes, tobacco and butter, and second in the production of Indian corn and wheat (Washington being first), and in the number of horses, sheep and swine, and in the production of wool. Where Benton County stands second Washington generally stands first, and where Benton stands first Washington is second. Benton was pre-eminently first in the production of tobacco, as she produced more than ten times as much as any other county in the State. Boone was the next best tobacco producing county, and its product was 34,089 pounds. White with 28,184 pounds was next, and Washington with 26,357 pounds next. Benton County's large production of tobacco accounts for its being second in some other things.

The following quotations from the pen of Col. M. L. DeMalher, who has recently written up the resources of Benton County, show the increase and decrease of products since 1880: "Number of bushels of corn produced in 1887, 1,679,751; increase over the production of 1879, 559,917 bushels. Bushels of oats produced in 1887, 378,093; increase over 1879, 122,691. Bushels of wheat produced in 1887, 234,130; increase over 1879, 78,143. Bushels of rye produced in 1887, 2,040; increase over 1879, 680. Value of orchard products in 1887, $500,000; increase over value of orchard products in 1879, $496,735; number of tons of hay mown in 1887, 3,519; increase over 1879, 1,173 tons; pounds of tobacco raised in 1887, 400,000; pounds of wool clipped in 1887, 31,480; bushels of potatoes produced in 1887, 42,247; dozens of eggs marketed in 1887, 485,000, valued at $52,000."

The value of live stock in the county assessed for taxes is $639,065, divided as follows: Number of horses 7,774, value $298,854; number of mules 3,184, value $151,072; number of cattle 18,123, value $144,290; number of sheep 10,732, value $6,806; number of hogs 31,653, value $29,043. The abstract of the tax books also brings out the fact that the number of wagons in use in the county is 3,333.

Tobacco.—"Intimately related to the mixed farm pursuits and to the present and prospective total production, argued in the fact of the subdivision of its territory into small farms, is the production of tobacco. It is both the chief tobacco county of the State, and one of the few districts in which, together with other varieties, the famous White Burley attains perfection. But at the same time this is established, its agricultural conditions being flexible, and the farmer left free to avoid the pressure of the tobacco market, it transpires that from 1880 until the improvement last year in price, Benton County had almost lapsed in the production of tobacco. The industry was not killed, but so long as the farmer had to work against his interest, and recourse was had in other profitable crops, its production was lessened until the price of tobacco had improved, and indeed, that in its adaptable agriculture, which applies to tobacco, may be said to apply to every other production of the county. If, upon economic grounds, the production of one kind of crop does not pay, the pressure can be overcome by the production of another kind, for nothing is truer of Benton than its agricultural conditions, affording the farmer perfect freedom to adopt his methods, and his productions to varying states of the market.

"Of the area of the county it is accepted that 200,000 acres are adapted to the profitable growth of tobacco. The varieties grown are notably the White Burley, Virginia Golden Leaf, Yellow Pryor and Orinoco. The production of 1877 was the same as in 1880, approximately, 400,000 pounds. The relative proportion of types was as follows: Dark shipping leaf, 15 per cent; fillers, 25 per cent; bright wrappers, 10 per cent; non-descript, 35 per cent.

"In this connection it should be added that instead of going wholly abroad, much of the crop, the best at least, finds a market at home, the Arkansas Tobacco Company, of Bentonville, being large consumers of the superior product of the county. The company, dating from October, 1887, is a successor of Trotter & Wilkes, who had for the first time in the history of the county worked up the tobacco manufacture to the advantage offered in the superior production of the region. Flowing out of the experience of the old firm, and the acquisition of good manipulators and a superior equipment, they have already carried the business of the present year to twice the volume of 1887, with a prospect of a like result following during the remainder of the year. It is an incorporated stock company, backed with capital sufficient to the purchase of the production of the county, and hereafter in turn may be expected to control the tobacco crop of Benton County.

"The secretary and general manager of the company is J. W. Trotter, formerly of the firm of Trotter & Wilkes. Their superintendent has had a life-long experience in handling tobacco, acquired in Virginia. The president is W. B. Deming, a local capitalist, formerly of Abilene, Kan."

Fruit Growing.—Fruit growing has recently become one of the leading industries of Benton County, and the prospects are that with one or two more railroads to give sufficient transportation, it will become the leading industry, and will bring the greatest income. The completion of the "Frisco" Railroad through the county, giving it an outlet north and south, gave a great impetus to the business of growing fruit. A great surplus of fruit has long been grown in the county, but, until the completion of this railroad, there was substantially no way of getting it to market. Since an outlet has thus been obtained men have set out and are still setting out large orchards of various kinds of fruit, such as apples, peaches, pears, plums, etc. Many have also gone into the cultivation of small fruits, strawberries, raspberries and blackberries. Fruits grow here to great perfection, and the crop is always certain. The young apple orchards that have been set out consist of trees that have been grafted into the best varieties suitable for growing in this climate, and the same may be said of the peach orchards that have recently been set out by professional or skillful fruit growers. It seems, however, that before the fruit growing interest was opened up but little attention was paid to raising a good quality, especially of peaches. One will observe in passing through the county, that the great bulk of bearing peach trees are only seedlings, and many of them occupy the fence corners along the highways. At this writing (August), they are loaded with small and inferior fruit. It will soon be discovered that budded peach trees produce a superior and more profitable fruit than seedlings, and will take the place of the latter.

The climate and natural conditions are so superior for the production of fruit that this is destined to be a great fruit center. It is estimated that if all the orchards in Benton County now in cultivation were consolidated into one, it would cover a tract of land equal in size to a congressional township—six miles square. At the rate that new orchards are now being planted and established, the area now devoted to the raising of fruit will soon be doubled and tripled. Now is the time to purchase the lands and establish the orchards, so that they will come into bearing by the time the greater facilities for transportation are obtained.

Certainly there can be no place found in the States where fruit trees grow more thrifty, or with cleaner bark, or where a greater quantity can be grown, than in Northwestern Arkansas. In consequence of the large amount of fruit already produced, a number of evaporators, or drying factories, have been erected, and more are contemplated. A canning factory is also in full and successful operation, and more are projected. It is believed that enough of these factories will soon be established to dry or can all the surplus fruit that cannot be shipped to market in the natural state. The factories already running have established a home market for the fruits, and given employment to a large number of men and women. These factories will be mentioned individually in connection with the history of the towns where they are located.

Another important industry of Benton County is its fruit tree nurseries, the largest of which is located near Bentonville, and of which G. C. Davis is the proprietor. There is no need of sending abroad for trees, as all kinds best adapted to the place can be purchased at the home nurseries.

Benton County Horticultural, Agricultural and Mechanical Fair.—This fair association was organized in the summer of 1888 at Rogers, where its exhibitions will be held. The officers of the association are J. Huffman, president; W. R. Felker, treasurer; W. J. Todd, secretary. The directors, aside from the officers, are Charles Warbritton, W. A. Miller, J. A. C. Blackburn, J. S. Miser, J. W. Scroggs and G. F. Kennon. The association has secured several acres of land at Rogers for a fair ground, and have fitted it up with a race track and appropriate buildings, and have published their catalogues announcing premiums offered, and the dates of October 10, 11, 12 and 13, 1888, for the first annual fair. Very liberal premiums are offered.

BENTON COUNTY FINANCES.

The financial condition of Benton County is so good that but little pertaining to it has to be said. The following is the recapitulation of the taxable property of the county for the year 1887: Number of acres of land assessed, 349,940; assessed value of the lands, including town lots, $1,780,018; assessed value of personal property, $1,672,568; total value of real and personal property, $3,452,586. This is the assessed value of the property for the purpose of taxation, but by no means the true value. Property is not usually assessed for taxation at half of its real value; so in order to ascertain the true value of the taxable property of Benton County its assessed value must at least be multiplied by two. This would make the approximate real value stand at about $7,000,000 in round numbers.

The amount of revenue collected in 1887 for both State and county purposes was $37,733.30. To this should be added $10,279.93, special school tax collected, making the total amount collected $48,013.23. These taxes were divided as follows: State tax, $6,905.17; State sinking fund, $3,452.58; State school tax, $6,905.17; county tax, $15,191.37; poll tax, $5,279; special school tax, $10,279.93.

Benton County has no bonded indebtedness whatever. It has, however, a small indebtedness in the way of outstanding county scrip, which, according to the report for the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, amounted to $1,693.30. It may, therefore, be said to be substantially out of debt.

SOCIETIES.

Benton County Medical Society.—The Benton County Medical Society was organized in 1875, with only five members. It was organized auxiliary to the State Medical Society, and it now has seventeen members. All graduated physicians of the county, possessing other proper qualities, are eligible to membership. The present officers are Dr. Theo. A. Coffett, president; Dr. Thomas W. Hurley, secretary; Dr. W. R. Davis, treasurer. The society meets monthly, usually at the city of Bentonville.

Harmonial Vegetarian Society.—This society was organized in 1860, and on the 29th day of October, in that year, J. E. Spencer and Martha, his wife, for the consideration of $6,000, conveyed by warranty deed to A. D. Tenney, John Murphy and Milton Vale, trustees of the society, the following parcels or tracts of land, to-wit: The southwest quarter and the west half of the southeast quarter of Section 12, the northeast quarter and the east half of the northwest quarter of Section 13, Township 20 north, Range 34 west and the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 23, Township 21 north, Range 34 west, containing in all 520 acres more or less. These lands were conveyed, as expressed in the deed, "for the following uses and purposes, or trusts, and for no other purposes:

"First, in trust, to hold the same for the sole use and benefit of the said Harmonial Vegetarian Society, composed of the following named persons, to-wit: A. D. Tenney, Rachel S. Tenney, William Tenney, J. D. Potter, Irena Potter, John Murphy, Milton Vale, Mercy G. Vale, John M. Adams, Henry E. Dewey, Sarah J. Dewey, Benjamin F. Stites, Charles G. Foster, Ada M. Foster, Deborah Brackett, Phebe A. Rodgers and Angeline A. Dunn.

"Second, in trust for the use and occupancy of the said society, for agricultural, mechanical, mercantile and manufacturing purposes.

"Third, in trust, to convey said lands and premises in fee simple absolute, to such person or persons, and upon such terms, as the members of said society, or a majority of them, shall direct."

According to the rules of this society, "they had all things in common," and all married persons joining it had to renounce their marriage contracts, and contribute to the society all their property, so that there was no individual ownership thereof—all property being owned in common. While marriage was not recognized in the society, the members were allowed to choose or select their "mates," by lot, and it was intended that the children born of members were to be considered the offspring of the society rather than that of the parents. No meats or greasy substances therefrom were allowed to be used for food—the diet was strictly vegetable, as it was believed that a purely vegetable diet would prolong life.

Immediately after purchasing the lands the society took possession, and as soon as possible erected a large three-story building, containing from eighty to ninety rooms, for a home and hospital, a large bath house, machine shop, a spring house over the spring, a saw and grist-mill, blacksmith shop, and a building for a general store, also a printing office, and opened up and cultivated the large farm, and made everything prosperous. For about one year they published a paper called the Theocrat, in which they advocated the theory of living in societies, with all things in common, and upon a purely vegetable diet.

They lived exclusively to themselves in a social way, and had but little to do with the outside world except in a commercial capacity. They had their own physicians and teachers, and while marriage was not recognized, strict order and strict rules were enforced for their government. The society was in operation about four years, during which time they were not known to have a death. In case of sickness they would admit "outsiders" into the hospital, where they would treat them for a consideration. Water was pumped from the spring, by means of a hydraulic ram, to every room in the home and hospital. During the civil war the buildings of this society were used part of the time by the armies, and about the close of the war they were all burned. Soon thereafter the property was sold and the proceeds divided among the members, all of whom left the county except Henry E. Dewey, who remained and ran a grist-mill for a few years on Honey Creek. The male members of the society dressed in the Quaker style, and the females wore "bloomers." They were all active and industrious and had no drones.

ELECTIONS.

The first general election in Benton County was held in August, 1838, being for the election of governor, members of the Legislature and county officers. The whole number of votes cast in the county on that occasion was 272. Politically the county has always been strongly Democratic, and that party has always elected its officers with the exception of the period following the war, when Democrats who had participated in the Rebellion were disfranchised. During that period Republican officers were elected, and since that time up to the present year the Republicans of Benton County have not had a ticket in the field. The Democrats being so largely in the ascendancy, there is not now, and never has been, much political excitement in the county. On the 21st day of July, 1888, the Republicans met in convention in Bentonville and nominated a full county ticket. They had a fine procession, which marched entirely around the public square, led by a martial band. At the head of the procession Mr. C. G. Metheny, of Sulphur Springs, carried the "stars and stripes," and it was claimed that this was the first time for thirty years that the old flag had been carried around the public square of Bentonville by a political procession. Following this, on the Saturday prior to the late election, the Democrats met in convention in Bentonville and nominated a full county ticket, all of which was elected at the election following. On the day of their convention the Democrats raised a handsome pole and hoisted thereon the "stars and stripes," all now recognizing it as "the flag of our country."

At the late election the question of granting licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and also for the call of a convention to amend the State constitution, was submitted to the voters. The following are the returns of the election held in Benton County in September, 1888:

Total vote cast, 4,561.

Pittman, 1875–79; James H. Berry, 1879–83; J. M. Pittman, present judge, elected in 1882 and re-elected in 1886.

Circuit Court Clerks.—John B. Dickson, 1836–42; John Smith, 1842–48; Joseph D. Dickson, 1848–52; A. G. Williams, 1852–56; John Galbreath, 1856–58; R. S. Williams, 1858–60; J. R. Woods, 1860–64; Charles W. Rice, 1864–66; J. W. Sikes, 1866–68; J. R. Rutherford, 1868–72; Hugh A. Dinsmore, 1872–74; John Black, 1874–80; B. F. Dunn, 1880–86; C. C. Huffman, present incumbent, elected in 1886.

Sheriffs.—Gideon G. Pace, 1836–42; John H. Hammock, 1842–46; John Galbreath, 1846–56; H. Hammock, 1856–58; J. R. Wood, 1858–60; Joseph Henry, 1860–62; R. E. Doak, 1862; Alfred Dean, coroner, acting sheriff, 1865–66; J. W. Norwood, 1866–67; John W. Simmons, 1867–68; W. C. Lefors, 1868–72; William Isbell, 1872–74; John W. Simmons, 1874–78; J. H. McClinton, 1878–82; R. A. Hickman, 1882–84; F. P. Galbreath, 1884–86; W. H. Cloe, present incumbent, 1886–88.

County Court Judges.—George P. Wallace, 1836–38; Matthew English, 1838–40; T. M. Duckworth, 1840–42; David Mitchell, 1842–44; J. A. P. Carr, 1844–46; T. M. Duckworth, 1846 to September; James Jackson, from September, 1846, to 1848; J. M. Rogers, 1848-50; W. J. Howard, 1850-52; J. W. Cowan, 1852-54; William McDaniel, 1854-56; Enoch Trott, 1856-58; John Kincheloe, 1858, resigned, and J. W. Cowan filled the vacancy to 1860; H. Marley, 1860-64; D. Woods, 1864-68; J. McPherson, 1868-72; D. Woods, 1872-74; Harvey Marley, 1874-76; S. N. Elliott, 1876-82; T. D. Bates, 1882-86; S. A. Cordell, 1886-88.

County Court Clerks.—Prior to the year 1872 there was but one clerk for both the offices of circuit and county courts. During the years 1872-74 the law required a clerk for each office. In 1872 John Black was elected clerk of the county court, and Hugh A. Dinsmore was appointed by the governor as clerk of the circuit court. From 1874 to 1880 the law only required one clerk for the two offices. In 1880 the offices were permanently separated, and since that time the office of the county court clerk has been continuously in the hands of John Black, the present incumbent.

Treasurers.—Henry C. Hastings, 1836-46; S. Langston, 1846-48; William McDaniel, 1848-54; H. C. Hastings, 1854-58; E. W. Smith, 1858-60; S. Langston, 1860-62; E. W. Smith, 1862-64; S. Langston, 1864-68; Joseph Thomas, 1868-72; John Galbreath, 1872-74; Haley Jackson, 1874-76; B. F. Dunn, 1876-80; Thomas Wood, 1880-82; T. H. Wood, 1882-86; H. C. Smith, 1886-88.

Coroners.—Henry Ford, 1836-38; James Beaman, 1838-40; James Jackson, 1840-48; W. B. Covey, 1848-50; H. O. Gilbert, 1850-54; John Wilcox, 1854-56; Hardy Wilson, 1856-58; William Morgan, 1858-60; Alfred Dean, 1860-62; John Galbreath, 1862-64; Alfred Dean, 1864-66; I. S. Reynolds, 1866-68; J. C. January, 1868-72; J. E. Plummer, 1872-74; J. H. Hogan, 1874-76; J. W. Bland, 1876-78; P. H. Throne, 1878-80; R. W. Hansard, 1880-82; R. N. Corley, 1882-88.

Surveyors.—A. McKissick, 1836-38; W. H. McLean, 1838-40; James White, 1840-42; W. H. Woods, 1842-44; Dr. Hayden, 1844-46; D. Chandler, 1846-50; J. McBrown, 1850-52; * * * M. B. Maxwell, 1854-56; J. Candill, 1856-58; M. B. Maxwell, 1858-64; * * * M. B. Maxwell, 1866-72; S. Peak, 1872-74; M. B. Maxwell, 1874-82; D. W. German, 1882-84; M. B. Maxwell, 1884-86; S. B. Robertson, present incumbent, 1886-88.

Assessors.—J. N. Curtiss, 1868-72; W. L. Cowan, 1872-78; H. Higfill, 1878-80; A. G. Gamble, 1880-84; W. H. Haynes, 1884-88.

Representatives in Congress.—Following is a list of Representatives in Congress from the district of which Benton County has composed a part: Archibald Yell, 1836-39; Edward Cross, 1839-45; Archibald Yell, 1845-47; Robert W. Johnson, 1847-53; A. B. Greenwood, 1853-59 (three terms); Thomas C. Hindman, 1859-63 (the civil war prevented him from taking his seat in 1861); W. W. Wilshire (ousted by T. M. Gunter, contestant), 1873-75; T. M. Gunter, 1875-83 (four terms); Samuel W. Peel, the present Representative, was elected in 1882, and re-elected in 1884 and again in 1886, and has served continuously since entering Congress in 1883. Prior to 1847 the whole State had but one member of Congress. The State having been divided into two districts, there were two Congressmen elected in 1847. Subsequently other districts were formed, until the State became divided, as at present, into five Congressional Districts, this being the fifth, composed of the counties of Benton, Washington, Madison, Carroll, Boone, Newton, Searcy, Marion, Baxter, Fulton and Izard.

United States Senators from Arkansas.—A. H. Sevier (resigned), 1836 to 1849; Solon Borland (resigned), 1848 to 1855; R. W. Johnson, 1855 to 1861; Chas. B. Mitchell,* 1861; B. F. Rice, 1868 to 1873; S. W. Dorsey, 1873 to 1879; J. D. Walker, 1879 to 1885; J. K. Jones, 1885 to 1891; W. S. Fulton (died), 1836 to 1841; Chester Ashley (died), 1844 to 1848; W. K. Sebastian,† 1848 to 1865; ‡1865 to 1868; Alex McDonald, 1868 to 1871; Powell Clayton, 1871 to 1877; A. H. Garland, 1877 to 1889;§ J. H. Berry, 1885 to 1889.||

*Mitchell was elected for the term ending March 4, 1867, but did not occupy his seat after the secession of the State.

†Sebastian was expelled from the United States Senate on suspicion of sympathy with the rebellion of 1861. In 1878 the resolution of expulsion was reversed by the Senate. Sebastian was elected for the term ending March 4, 1865, but did not occupy his seat after the winter session of 1860-61.

‡Both seats were unoccupied or vacant for the remainder of the term of Sebastian and Mitchell after March 4, 1861.

§Appointed Attorney General of the United States.

|| Elected to fill Garland's unexpired term. During the first session of the (Murphy) Legislature

Senators of the Arkansas Legislature.—Following is a list of State Senators of the senatorial districts of which Benton County formed a part, from its organization to the present time, to-wit: Benton, Madison and Washington Counties, O. Evans and A. Whinnery, 1836–40; Benton and Madison, A. Whinnery, 1840; Benton and Madison, J. G. Walker, 1842–45; Benton and Madison, J. B. Dickson, 1846–49; Benton and Madison, J. Berry, 1850–55; Benton and Madison, I. Murphy, 1856–57; Benton and Madison, M. Douglas, 1859–62; Benton County, J. Dungan, 1862; Benton and Madison, E. D. Ham, 1864–65; Benton County, J. Dungan, 1864; Benton and Madison, J. Dungan, 1866–67; Seventh District, Benton and Washington, T. J. Hunt, 1868–69; A. Caraloff, 1871–73; J. Dunagin, 1874; Twenty-fourth District, Benton and Madison, C. J. Reagan, 1874–77; E. P. Watson, 1879–81; J. T. Walker, 1883–85.

Representatives in the Arkansas Legislature.—The following is a list of representatives sent from Benton County to the State Legislature, beginning with 1840: Robert Hubbard, 1840; Alfred B. of 1864 Elisha Baxter, on May 2, 1864, W. M. Fishback, on May 5, and W. D. Snow, on December 30, were respectively elected to the Senate for the terms ending March 4, 1865 and 1867. None of them were admitted. Charles B. Mitchell and Robert W. Johnson, in 1862, were elected Confederate State Senators, and served as such. Mitchell died September 18, 1864, and A. H. Garland was elected to his vacancy. Johnson and Garland served until the fall of the Confederacy. John T. Jones and Andrew Hunter were elected senators by the Legislature of 1866; Hunter resigned. Neither were admitted by the Senate.

Delegates to Constitutional Conventions.—The first constitutional convention of Arkansas was held January 4 to January 13, 1836. This was prior to the organization of Benton County. The next constitutional convention was held March 4 to 21, and May 6 to June 3, 1861, and the delegates in this convention from Benton County were A. W. Dinsmore and H. Jackson.

Another constitutional convention was held from January 4 to January 23, 1864, in which there were no delegates from Benton County. In the convention held January 7 to February 18, 1868, Benton County was represented by W. W. Reynolds. In the last constitutional convention, held July 14 to October 31, 1874, Benton County was represented by H. H. Patterson and A. M. Rodgers.

Notaries Public in Benton County—as per report of Secretary of State published in 1886, with dates of expiration of terms: Hugh Elliott, October 7, 1886; James S. Harris, January 18, 1887; G. P. Rogers, February 6, 1887; L. H. McGill, April 28, 1887; E. S. McDaniel, May 9, 1887; O. V. Wager, February 11, 1888; John F. Mitchell, April 28, 1888; W. D. Wasson, April 30, 1888; Charles R. Armitage, November 20, 1889; James F. Gillick, February 22, 1890.

THE COURTS.

County Court.—The origin of the county court of Benton County, and the time and place of holding its first term, has been given under the head of "Organization." For many years —up to 1873—the court was composed of a county judge and two associate justices. The judge was elected by the people, and the associate justices by the several justices of the peace, who met at the county seat in January each year for that purpose. In 1873, under a change in the law, the court was made to consist of a board of supervisors consisting of three persons, Dysert Woods, John W. Phagaen and B. F. Davis, who were appointed by the governor. The first term of the court thus organized was held in May, 1873, when the supervisors met and selected Dysert Woods as president of the board. The court continued thus organized until January, 1875, when, according to another law, it was composed of a single judge elected by the people, and so it has ever since remained.

The county court has always had, and still retains, jurisdiction over the levying and collection of revenues; the erection of public buildings; making of contracts for public improvements; laying out of highways; auditing all accounts against the county, and of all county business proper. It also had jurisdiction of all probate business from its original organization until 1873, at which time the probate business was, by law, transferred to the circuit court. The circuit court had jurisdiction of this branch of business one year, until 1874, and then the separate probate court was established, with full original jurisdiction over all probate business. The county court judge is also judge of the probate court. The county court meets in regular session four times a year, commencing the sessions on the first Mondays of January, April, July and October, and the probate court meets the same number of times, commencing the sessions on the third Mondays of the same months.

First Probate Business.—The first letters of administration granted in Benton County were granted April 17, 1837, to Mrs. Mary Blair, to administer on the estate of John C. Blair, deceased. Also to Elizabeth Johnston, to administer on the estate of Spencer B. Johnston, deceased. In September following letters of administration were issued to James McKissick, to administer on the estate of Madeline Catharine White, deceased.

The following is a copy of the first "will" on record in Benton County:

I, Samuel Tenan, of the County of Benton and State of Arkansas, being weak in body, but of strong mind and memory, thanks be to God for the same, do make and ordain this my last will and testament in the manner and form as follows:

First: I give my soul to God, who gave it to me, and my body to earth, to be decently buried by my executor hereafter named.

Second: I request that my negro boy, Jack, be sold, and that some of my connection buy him, and that the money be divided equally between my brother, L. Tenan, and my two sisters, Mary Allen and Zebe Yunt.

Third: I require my executors to take all my personal property, with notes and accounts, and pay all my just debts; and after all are paid, together with my funeral expenses, then the balance to be divided equally between my brother and sisters as before named. I do hereby appoint Abner Allen my executor, and also request that my executor take my negro boy, Jack, and attend to selling him.

Given under my hand and seal this twentieth day of August, 1837.

This will was probated January 15, 1838, and letters testamentary to Abraham Allen* as sole executor of the will were granted.

First Deed Recorded.—Though not belonging to probate business, the following, which is a copy of the first deed recorded in Benton County, will be read with interest, inasmuch as the property conveyed consisted of slaves, conveyed in manner and form the same as real estate, viz.:

Know all men by these presents, that for and in consideration of the sum of $400 to me in hand paid by James M. Dickson, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I, Ezekiel Dickson, of the County of Benton, in the State of Arkansas, do hereby bargain and sell unto the said James M. Dickson, a negro woman named Till, about forty-five years of age, also a negro boy child named Jack, about five or six years of age, which said negroes I hereby sell and convey as slaves for life. And I do hereby warrant and defend the title of said negroes to the said James M. Dickson, his heirs and assigns forever.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal this 7th day of February, 1837.

EZEKIEL DICKSON.

Witness, JAMES McKISSICK.

The next instrument found on record was dated January 26, 1837, and was for the conveyance by Phineas Holmes and Rachel, his wife, of Lucinda, Guilford, Andy and Clarisa, four slaves, to James H. Wallace, for the consideration of $3,000.

The first instrument on record for the transfer of real estate in Benton County is that of Samuel Whitehead and wife to *This name appears Abner Allen in the will, as recorded, and Abraham Allen in record of the probate.

Singleton Lankston, for the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 31, Township 20 north, Range 30 west, being now a portion of the site of Bentonville. It was dated February 27, 1838.

Circuit Court.—When the State of Arkansas was organized it was divided into but few circuits, each containing many counties, or at least much more territory than at present. As the population and business increased, the State was redistricted, or certain circuits were changed from time to time. Additional circuits were formed and the size of the old ones reduced. Prior to the last change, the fourth judicial circuit, of which Benton County composes a part, embraced Marion, Boone, Searcy, Newton, Madison, Carroll, Benton and Washington. In 1887 the General Assembly reduced it in size, and made it to contain, as it is now organized, only the counties of Benton, Carroll, Madison and Washington. Only two sessions of this court are held during the year, and the sessions in Benton County commence on the first Mondays of January and July. For a list of the names of the judges who have presided over the Benton Circuit Court, see "County and District Officers."

Following is a copy of the caption of the record of the proceedings of the first session of the circuit court held in Benton County:

"At a circuit court begun and held at the house of George P. Wallace (the temporary seat of justice of Benton County), for the county of Benton, State of Arkansas, on the second Monday after the fourth Monday in October, A. D. 1837. Present, the Hon. Joseph M. Hoge, judge of said court."

First Grand Jury.—The court being convened, the sheriff returned the following "panel of good and lawful men" to serve as the first grand jury, to-wit: Joseph McKissick, foreman; Philip Dumas, William Reddock, William Ford, Christopher S. Pace, George Graham, Joseph Dickson, Robert Cooper, John B. Robinson, Jonathan Duff, Samuel P. Woods, Dioclesian Jackson, Ezekiel M. Dickson, Ambrose G. Williams and Henry Ford, who, being duly sworn and charged, retired to consult of their duties. Being selected as grand jurors, it follows that these were representative pioneers of Benton County. All are now dead excepting Christopher S. Pace and Ambrose G. Williams, who are still living in the county.

First Petit Jury.—The first petit jury was selected on the same day to try a civil case between Samuel Vaughan and John Rose. Their names were James Anderson, Robert Hubbard, John Maxwell, George W. Ford, Samuel B. McLean, Ezekiel J. A. Dickson, Henry Hastings, John Hammock, Nathan Coughman, Samuel Black, David Woods and Samuel Woods. The only survivor of these twelve old pioneers of Benton County is Ezekiel J. A. Dickson, who now lives at Osage Springs, a few miles southeast of Bentonville.

Important Trials.—The first case before the Circuit Court was that of the State against Samuel Vaughan, George W. Vaughan, Abram Hamilton, Price McMurty, John Meeks and Reese Butler for committing a "riot." The indictment not having been preserved, the full particulars of the matter cannot be given. Some of the defendants did not live in Benton County, neither was the riot committed in this county. On being arraigned for trial the defendants moved to quash the indictment, and after hearing the arguments of counsel on the motion, the court ruled that the indictment was not sufficient in law to maintain the action, and thereupon discharged the prisoners. They were immediately re-arrested and held under bonds for their appearance at the next term of court. Hon. L. D. Evans was then the prosecuting attorney. The next day a new indictment was returned by the grand jury against these defendants for the same offense. At the next term of the court, which was held at the new court-house in Bentonville, beginning May 7, 1838, the defendants were tried, and four of them, Samuel Vaughan, George W. Vaughan, William Vaughan and John Meeks, were found guilty as charged, and Samuel Vaughan was fined $85, George W. Vaughan $75, and the other two $50 each. The defendants' attorneys then made a motion for arrest of judgment and reduction of fines, whereupon the judge reduced the fine of Samuel Vaughan to $25, and that of the others to $20 each. At this trial John Rose was fined $1 for contempt of court, it being for using profanity when deposing as a witness.

The first civil suit in the Benton Circuit Court was that of Parnell, Lamont & Co. vs. J. and J. M. Holmes on attachment. On being called the plaintiffs' attorney dismissed the case, and the costs were assessed to plaintiffs. The next civil case was that of Robert Weaver against Socrates Stone on an appeal from a justice of the peace. The parties appeared and submitted their case to the judge, who gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $15. This was the first actual trial in the Benton Circuit Court, though not the first on the docket. The first jury trial was that of Samuel Vaughan vs. John Rose, which was tried by the first petit jury heretofore named on the first day of the court at its first term. The jury disagreed and the case was continued. At the same term an indictment was found against Edward Cunningham for assault and battery, and another was found against John Rose for forgery. This ended the business of the first term of the court.

State of Arkansas vs. Mary Ridinghour and William Spencer: At the third term of the court, commencing November 3, 1838, these defendants were indicted for adultery, it being the first prosecution in the county for that misdemeanor. Mary was arrested, but Spencer escaped. On being arraigned she plead "not guilty." The trial was by jury, and the verdict was "guilty as charged in the indictment," and her fine was fixed at $40. Judgment was rendered accordingly, and she was to stand committed until the fine and costs were paid. Thereupon she appeared in court and made oath that she had no effects out of which to pay the fine and costs assessed against her, whereupon she was discharged from custody, and thus freed from further punishment. It seems that her accomplice, Spencer, remained away, and was never apprehended.

First Trial for Murder.—State of Arkansas vs. Edward Welch: The first trial in Benton County for murder took place at the May term of the court in 1841. The prisoner, Edward Welch, was arraigned on an indictment for murder, and plead not guilty. He was then tried by the following jury, to wit: Thomas Carle, William Hammock, Warren Wright, Daniel Mayes, John B. Walker, David McKissick, Joseph McKissick, James M. Pope, Alfred M. Wallace, Nicholas Skillern, Hampton Clark and Benjamin Hubbard. The verdict of the jury was, "We, the jury, do find the within named Edward Welch not guilty of murder, but guilty of manslaughter, in manner and form as charged in the within bill of indictment, and do say that he be punished by imprisonment for the term of seven years, and that he be fined the sum of $10,000," Thomas Carle, foreman.

The court then passed the following sentence, to wit: "It is therefore considered, adjudged and sentenced by the court here, that the said Edward Welch do pay unto the State of Arkansas the sum of $10,000 as assessed, and that he be imprisoned in the common jail of the county of Benton and State of Arkansas for the term of seven years next ensuing, and that this day be computed as one day thereof, and that he stand committed until the fine aforesaid and costs of this prosecution be fully satisfied and discharged." This trial was on a change of venue from some other county, consequently the crime was not committed in this county.

State of Arkansas vs. Harrison Oliver: The first prosecution in Benton County for retailing liquors without license was that of Harrison Oliver, who was tried for that offense in November, 1841. The trial was by jury, the verdict was "guilty as charged," and he was fined $1, and sentenced accordingly.

State vs. John B. Dickson: At the same term of court John B. Dickson was indicted for shooting at some one with whom he had some difficulty. He was tried before a jury, which found him guilty, and assessed his fine at $50 and his imprisonment at one minute. He was sentenced accordingly. Mr. Dickson was then clerk of the court.

State vs. Edward Brown et al.: Also at the same term of court Edward Brown, John Moore and Joseph Kear were indicted for murder. On being arraigned for trial the defendants plead "not guilty." They were tried and acquitted.

State vs. Wat Foreman: At the November term, 1842, Wat Foreman, a Cherokee Indian, was indicted for the murder of another Indian. On being arraigned he plead not guilty, and the case was continued to next term, when he was tried and found guilty of murder in the first degree. The following is a copy of the sentence of the Court. "It is therefore considered adjudged and sentenced by the Court here that the said Wat Foreman, the defendant, on Friday, the 16th day of June, 1843, between the hours of 11 o'clock in the forenoon and 2 o'clock in the afternoon, be hung by the neck on the public gallows, in the county of Benton, in the State of Arkansas, until he is dead. And it is further ordered by the Court that the clerk make out a warrant directed to the sheriff of Benton County requiring him to execute the foregoing sentence." For some reason the sentence was not executed at the time specified, and in May, 1844, the prisoner was taken before the judge of the circuit court on a writ of habeas corpus. The Court finding that the prisoner could give no sufficient reason why the foregoing sentence should not be executed, ordered that the sentence should be executed between the hours of 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. on the 14th day of June following. Defendant then appeared by his attorney and filed his reasons why the sentence of death should not be carried into execution. The Court did not consider the reasons sufficient in law, and overruled them. Defendant excepted and filed his bill of exceptions, which was signed, sealed and made part of the record. On appeal to the supreme court the judgment of the lower court was confirmed, and the defendant was executed according to the foregoing sentence.

State vs. Robert Armstrong. In May, 1845, the defendant, Robert Armstrong, was indicted and tried for the crime of murder, and acquitted. The offense was committed in another county.

State vs. Charles G. Duncan. In May, 1847, Charles G. Duncan was indicted for the crime of murder, and on being arraigned for trial plead not guilty. He was tried and acquitted.

State vs. Henry Miser. Some time prior to April, 1851, Henry Miser and Joseph Hardwick had a fight in a church near Miser's Springs. Hardwick was stabbed, the wound causing his death. In April, 1851, Miser, the defendant, was indicted for the murder of Hardwick, and in October following he was tried and acquitted. The State failed to prove to the satisfaction of the jury that the defendant did the stabbing.

State vs. Doghead Glory. In April, 1852, Doghead Glory, a Cherokee Indian, was indicted for the murder of another Indian named David Scoutie. In October following he was tried for the offense, and the following is the verdict of the jury: "We, the jury, find the within named defendant, Doghead Glory, guilty of the murder of the within named David Scoutie in the first degree, in manner and form as charged in the within indictment in this behalf. (Signed) WILLIAM WHITE, Foreman."

A bill of exceptions was filed and made part of the record. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and a } second bill of exceptions was filed and made part of the record. The prisoner was then sentenced as follows: "It is considered, sentenced and adjudged by the Court, that you, Doghead Glory, be remanded to the common jail of Benton County, from whence you came, there to remain until the nineteenth day of November, 1852; from thence you will be taken on said day by the sheriff of said county to the place of execution, and between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and three o'clock in the afternoon of said day, there be hanged by the neck until you be dead! dead!! dead!!! And may the Lord have mercy on your soul." An order followed to the sheriff to execute the sentence. The defendant then prayed an appeal to the supreme court, which was granted, and the Court then ordered the appeal to operate as a stay to all proceedings in the cause, until the 4th day of February, 1853, when, between the hours of 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 3 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, aforesaid sentence should be executed. The supreme court confirmed the judgment of the lower court, and the unfortunate wretch was hanged accordingly.

State vs. Cow-sa-low-a. In April, 1852, Cow-sa-low-a, an Indian, was indicted for the murder of another Indian. In April, 1853, he was tried and found "not guilty as charged in the indictment."

On account of the loss of all the trial papers of the circuit court, before the Civil War, it has not been possible to give the names of the killed or murdered, for whom the aforesaid defendants were prosecuted.

State vs. Franklin Saunders and William King. At the March term, 1871, of the circuit court, Franklin Saunders and William King were indicted for the murder of James M. Lefors. The indictment charged that on the 25th day of January, 1871, at Mitchell's Mill, in Benton County, Franklin Saunders, with a club, struck and killed Lefors, and that William King was present, aiding and abetting. Both were charged as principals. King was arrested and arraigned for trial in September, following. The case was continued until March, 1872, when he was tried and acquitted. Saunders ran off and has never been apprehended.

State vs. Girsham P. Hoytt and Cornelius Hammon. In October, 1875, these defendants were indicted for the murder of Columbus Hancock, which took place in White's Hollow, near White River, in Benton County, on the 4th day of August, 1875. The murder was committed in Section 16, Township 19, Range 28. On being arraigned, the prisoners plead "not guilty." Hoytt asked for a separate trial, which was granted, and upon application he was granted a change of venue to Washington County, where he was afterward tried and found not guilty. Hammon was put upon trial, and from the evidence it appeared that on the occasion of the murder he and Hancock, in company with a lewd woman, went to White's Hollow, where the dead body of Hancock was found. The verdict of the jury was as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant, Cornelius Hammon, guilty of murder in the first degree, as charged in the second count of the indictment. Signed—John W. Floyd, foreman." A motion for a new trial was made by the defendant, and overruled by court. On application an appeal to the supreme court was granted. The next day the prisoner appeared before the court and was addressed as follows:

Cornelius Hammon, you have been indicted by the grand jury of Benton County, State of Arkansas, at the present term of this court, for the murder in the first degree in killing Columbus Hancock. On this indictment you were arraigned, and interposed thereto your plea of not guilty. Upon that issue you were tried by a jury of said county, selected and chosen by yourself, and they have found you guilty of murder in the first degree. You have had at each step of the progress of the trial the advice and assistance of able counsel, appointed by the Court to defend you. They have been zealous and untiring in their efforts in your behalf; nothing within their power has been left undone by them that would in the slightest degree tend to show your innocence or extenuate your offence. Now have you any legal cause to show why the judgment of the court should not be pronounced upon you?" To this the defendant answered: "No other except what has already been interposed." The Court then proceeded:

The judgment which the law provides for murder in the first degree is death by hanging, and it now becomes the painful duty of the Court to pronounce that sentence upon you. For the short time which the law in its mercy extends you for a preparation of soul to meet the Almighty Judge of mankind,

I earnestly exhort you that you betake yourself to that earnest work. I can hold out for you no hope on earth, and your only hope is in the mercy of the Giver of all life. The judgment and sentence of this court is that you be taken hence to the jail of this county, thence on the 14th day of January, 1876, to be taken by the sheriff of Benton County, Ark., to some point to be selected by him, within two miles of the court-house of said county, and to a gallows to be by him erected, and there, between the hours of ten o'clock in the morning and two o'clock in the evening of said day, to be by him hanged by the neck until you are dead! And may God have mercy upon your soul!

He was executed accordingly. Hoytt was tried at Fayetteville and acquitted.

State vs. Jesse Thompson. In April, 1884, Jesse Thompson was indicted for the murder of his wife, Annie Thompson, which was alleged to have been committed on the first day of that month. The case was continued until the fall term, when, upon application, the defendant was granted a change of venue to Washington County, where he was afterward tried and acquitted.

State vs. S. J. Yantis and her children. In October, 1884, a party consisting of F. M. Yantis and his alleged wife, S. J. Yantis, and their children, William, Oliver and Ida, were moving through the county toward the Indian Territory, and camped over night near Siloam. On this occasion F. M. Yantis was killed. Afterward the woman, S. J. Yantis, and the children were indicted for the murder. In April, 1885, the children were tried separately from their mother and were acquitted. The mother was tried, and from the evidence it appeared that she killed her husband in self-defense, and thereupon was acquitted. The killing was alleged to have been done with an ax.

State vs. Jack Gates. In October, 1885, Jack Gates was indicted for the murder of Ferdinand Cherry, which took place on the tenth day of the preceding August. In March following he was tried and found guilty of manslaughter, and his punishment was assessed at two years' service in the penitentiary. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and his sentence was pronounced in accordance with the verdict of the jury.

State vs. R. O. Chambers. On the 1st day of October, 1886, R. O. Chambers was indicted for murder in the second degree. The indictment charged him with the killing of a man named Ellis, a few miles west of Bentonville. He was tried April 21, 1887, and found by the jury "not guilty."

Benton County Bar.—The first attorney of the Benton County bar was A. B. Greenwood, now familiarly called "Judge" Greenwood. He settled at Bentonville the year the county was organized, and except when absent on official business has resided here ever since. For the first four years of the existence of the county he constituted the whole bar, being the only resident attorney. Attorneys from abroad, however, came here to practice. At a ripe old age the Judge is vigorous and active. He has had much to do in making the history of this county, and has imparted much information to the compiler of this work. [See his biography.]

Judge Joseph M. Hoge, the first judge of the Benton Circuit Court, resided in this county from about 1840 to 1845, and then went to Texas. Until recently the bar of Benton County was small, but now it has grown to be large. The following is a list of the names of the members of the bar at this writing, to wit: Judge A. B. Greenwood, E. P. Watson, James A. Rice, E. S. McDaniel, L. H. McGill, W. D. Mauck, A. Nicodemus, J. M. Peel, S. W. Peel, D. H. Hammons, W. S. Floyd, S. E. Davis, S. N. Elliott, S. A. Cordel, E. R. Morgan, F. H. Foster, C. M. Rice, A. T. Rose, E. D. Fenno. All of these reside within the county.

WAR RECORD.

A company of soldiers was raised in Benton County, by Capt. Henry L. Smith, for the Mexican War. They went as far as Fort Smith, but the quota having been filled they were not accepted. A portion of them, however, then joined the company of Capt. Wells, a company that was accepted but not yet full. In this company they went forward, and served in that war. On the approach of the late Civil War, when the question of "secession" was being agitated, the people of Benton County, in general, were opposed to that measure, and did not wish to sever their connection with the Federal Union. They were, however, almost unanimously in favor of the Southern cause, and when it became evident that nothing but war would suffice to settle the difficulties between the opposing sections of the country, they cast their lot with their friends of the South, and went into the conflict with a determination to fight to the end of the struggle to secure what they believed to be their rights, and how well they did this the sequel will show.

In the spring of 1861, after the "dogs of war" had been let loose, Capt. T. T. Hays raised an infantry company on Pea Ridge, in Benton County, and Capt. Dan. McKissick raised a cavalry company, mostly from the southern part of the county, both of which companies joined the State service, and remained therein until a short time after the battle of Wilson's Creek was fought, and were then disbanded. These companies did not happen to be engaged in any fights. Nearly all the men composing these companies afterward joined other companies, and went into the Confederate service.

The Fifteenth Regiment Arkansas Infantry.—The first company that went into the Confederate army from Benton County was Company A, of the Fifteenth Arkansas Regiment. It was raised in midsummer of 1861, by Capt. J. H. Hobbs. Soon thereafter Companies F and G of the same regiment were raised in Benton County. The former went out under Capt. William Thompson, and the latter under Capt. J. M. Richards. The regiment was organized in a camp near Cross Hollows, in this county, in the fall of 1861, served to the close of the war, and surrendered at Marshall, Tex., in May, 1865. Its first colonel was D. McRea, and afterward Capt. Hobbs, of Company A, became the colonel, and he finally resigned on account of ill health. Among the important battles in which this regiment was engaged were Pea Ridge, in Benton County, Ark.; Iuka Springs and Corinth, in Mississippi; Fort Gibson, Baker's Creek, defense of Vicksburg during the siege thereof, Prairie De Ann, Mark's Mill and Jenkins' Ferry. After the surrender at Vicksburg the regiment went into a parole camp at Washington, Ark., where it remained until after it was exchanged. Its loss during the war was somewhat heavy.

The Thirty-fourth Regiment Arkansas Infantry.—Company F, of this regiment, was raised in Benton County, in July, 1862, and went out under Capt. C. L. Pickins. The regiment was organized at Mount Comfort, in Washington County. The more important battles in which it was engaged were Prairie Grove, Helena and Jenkins' Ferry. It also surrendered at Marshall, Tex., in May, 1865. Company F, of Col. King's Arkansas Regiment, was raised in Benton County, and went out under Capt. John Miser, of Pea Ridge. This regiment was organized at Mulberry, in Franklin County, was brigaded with the Thirty-fourth Arkansas, and participated in the same battles and surrendered at the same time and place.

Capt. Tom Jefferson raised a company of cavalry in Benton County, for Col. Carl's regiment of Arkansas cavalry. This regiment served through the war, mostly in Missouri and Arkansas. Capt. Hugh Tinnin, of Maysville, and Capt. W. H. Hendren, each raised a company in the western part of Benton County, both of which served during the war in the Indian Territory. Capt. James Ingram raised a company of cavalry in the eastern part of Benton County, and it served in Northwestern Arkansas until October, 1863, when it went south, dismounted, joined and became a part of the Thirty-fourth Arkansas Infantry. Capt. "Bill Buck" Brown raised a company of cavalry in the southern part of Benton County, which served in Northwestern Arkansas during the continuance of the war. The captain was killed in a skirmish in the winter of 1864-65. Capt. James Cooper also raised an independent company of cavalry, which served in Northwestern Arkansas.

This gives eleven companies which were raised in Benton County for the Confederate army, all of which averaged 100 men each, thus making 1,100 men that served in the Confederate army from this county, besides several hundred who went into the service as recruits. No Federal troops were organized in this county for actual service in the war. A few months before the close of the war two or three companies of militia were organized, under the provision of the Federal Government, for the purpose of protecting the citizens from the depredations of the thieving and marauding parties not belonging to either army, that were prowling around through the country plundering, murdering and robbing the citizens.

Skirmish on Dunagin's Farm.—In February, 1862, when Gen. Price retreated from Missouri to join McCulloch in Arkansas, he was pursued through Benton County by the Federal forces under Gen. Curtis. His rear guard, under command of Gen. James S. Rains, was annoyed considerably by the Federal advance, and to get rid of this Rains halted on the farm of Rev. J. Dunagin, at or near the present station of Avoca, on the St. L. & S. F. Railroad, and planted a battery in a seemingly unprotected position, at the same time having it well protected by troops concealed along the side of the approach to it. Not discovering the support to this battery, the Federal advance (cavalry) charged it, and received the cross fire of the concealed troops of the enemy. Twenty Federal soldiers and sixty horses, and two or three Confederate soldiers, were killed at once. This, of course, repulsed the Federal advance, and checked their pursuit. This was the first fight and the first reception of Federal troops in Benton County, and on this occasion the residence of Rev. J. Dunagin was set on fire and burned by the Federals, it being the first house burned in Benton in the war period. This house stood one-half mile east of the present village of Avoca. It was probably the 18th day of February, 1862, when this skirmish took place. The facts concerning it were furnished the compiler by Rev. Dunagin, who is well known to the people of Benton County.

Battle of Pea Ridge.—This great battle, having been fought in Benton County, deserves a prominent place in its history. On the 18th day of February, 1862, the Federal army, commanded by Maj.-Gen. Samuel B. Curtis, crossed the State line from Missouri and went into camp on Sugar Creek, near Brightwater, in Benton County, Ark. "The Third and Fourth Divisions advanced from this position twelve miles farther south to Cross Hollows, where also the headquarters of Gen. Curtis were established, and the First and Second to Bentonville, twelve miles to the southwest, while a strong cavalry force, under Gen. Asboth, went to Osage Springs. On the 23d Gen. Asboth made a dash into Fayetteville, twenty miles in advance, found the city evacuated, and planted the Union flag on the court-house." On March 1, Col. Jeff. C. Davis' division withdrew from Cross Hollows and he took his position immediately behind Little Sugar Creek, covering the Fayetteville and Springfield road, and fortified his position in anticipation of an attack from the south. On the 2d of March the First and Second Divisions, under Gen. Sigel, moved to McKissick's farm, four and a half miles west of Bentonville. Col. Schaefer, with the Second Missouri Infantry and a detachment of cavalry, was sent to Osage Mills, six miles south by a little east of McKissick's farm, as a post of observation toward Elm Springs, and for the purpose of running the mill to grind flour for the troops.

Another detachment of cavalry was sent to Osage Springs, five miles southeast of Bentonville, to hold connection with the division at Cross Hollows. On the 5th a detachment under Maj. Conrad was sent from McKissick's farm to Maysville, on the State line, twenty-one miles west of Bentonville; and another detachment under Maj. Mezaros went to Pineville, twenty-five miles northwest, while a detachment under Col. Vandever had been sent to Huntsville, in Madison County. Meanwhile the Confederate army, commanded by Maj.-Gen. Earl Van Dorn, concentrated in the Boston Mountains south of Fayetteville, and on the 3rd it was on the march to Fayetteville and Elm Springs, its advance arriving at the latter place on the evening of the 5th. On this march Price's troops in the lead were followed by McCulloch's division, while Gen. Pike with a brigade of Indian troops brought up the rear. The Federal officers did not learn of this movement until the 5th, when the Confederates were only a day's march from Sigel's position at McKissick's farm. It was the intention of the Confederate commander to move early on the 6th, and if possible cut off and capture Sigel's two divisions before they could prepare for defense or effect their retreat. Sigel, however, was advised of the advance of the enemy in time to prevent this disaster. Col. Schaefer's outposts were attacked on the evening of the 5th, and during that night he fell back, under instructions from Gen Sigel, to Bentonville. "At 2 o'clock A. M. of the 6th Gen. Asboth's division left McKissick's farm with the whole train, followed by the division of Osterhaus. They passed through Bentonville from 4 to 8 o'clock A. M., and arrived at the camp behind Sugar Creek at 2 P. M., where the Union army was to concentrate."

For the purpose of defending the main column on its retreat, and to make observations regarding the Confederates' advance, Gen. Sigel remained at Bentonville, with about 600 men and a battery of six pieces, after all the troops had left the place. At 10 A. M. he discovered that the Confederates were forming a battle line about a mile south of the village. With all possible haste and caution he then set out with his rear guard to follow his main army. The Confederate troops quickly followed, and skirmished with his command until they gained a point on Sugar Creek, about seven miles northeast of Bentonville. Here Sigel went up the creek toward Brightwater, where he joined the main army under Curtis. Van Dorn, the Confederate commander, left his wagon train at the crossing of Sugar Creek, and posted Green's division there to protect it, and to prevent the Federals from retreating down the valley in case of their defeat. He then advanced his army on the Bentonville and Keetsville road, passing the right of the Federal army as it was then in position facing southward, and passing north of Big Mountain, until, with Price's command, he reached the Fayetteville and Springfield road at a point north of the Elkhorn Tavern, and in the rear of the Federal army. He expected to reach this point before daylight on the morning of the 7th, but, on account of obstructions placed in the road by Col. Dodge's Iowa regiment, he did not reach it until nearly 10 A. M. of that day. During the night, while passing along the north side of Big Mountain, McCulloch's command countermarched, and returned to the west end of Big Mountain, taking position immediately west and south thereof, with his lines facing south and southwestwardly. During the night of the 6th the Federal army rested in line of battle, facing southward from behind Sugar Creek. Gen. Asboth's division held the extreme right, Col. Osterhaus was on his left, Col. Davis next, and Col. Carr, with his division, on the extreme left. The extreme right was so retired as to face southwest. Curtis expected to be attacked from the south, and had made preparations accordingly, but early on the morning of the 7th he learned that his enemy was in his rear instead of the front; and, after consultation with his division commanders at Pratt's store, he faced about and directed Col. Carr to take position at Elkhorn Tavern, while Col. Bussey was directed, with the cavalry of the different commands (except the Third Illinois) and with three pieces of Elbert's battery, to move by Leetown against the enemy supposed to be advancing in that direction. A brigade of infantry and another battery from Sigel's command were sent to support the cavalry, and Col. Osterhaus was also directed to accompany Col. Bussey for the purpose of taking control of the movement. Davis' division then moved to the support of Osterhaus on the left to contend with the Confederate forces under McCulloch, while Asboth moved to the support and assistance of Carr's division on the right to contend with Price's command. The lines of the latter faced south, southwest and west, forming a sort of semi-circle, the left of which overlapped the right of the Federal lines.

As the lines of the respective armies were formed on the morning of the 7th, before the engagement began, Price's command of the Confederate army, under the immediate control of the commanding general, Van Dorn, lay east of Big Mountain, while McCulloch's forces lay west and southwest thereof, and thus all immediate communication between the two portions of the Confederate army was cut off. The Federal army was also divided, as before stated, in order to contend with the divided forces of the Confederates, but Gen. Curtis established his headquarters near Pratt's store, and kept up communication between the two portions of his army. When the battle opened on the morning of the 7th the Federal cavalry sent out from Sigel's command to meet McCulloch's advance was repulsed, and in turn the Confederates were checked in their onslaught by the command of Osterhaus. "At this point," says Gen. Sigel, "the speedy arrival of Col. Jeff. C. Davis' division on the right of Osterhaus, and its energetic advance, turned a very critical moment into a decisive victory of our arms. McCulloch and McIntosh fell while leading their troops in a furious attack against Osterhaus and Davis. Hebert and a number of his officers and men were captured by the pickets of the Thirty-sixth Illinois (cavalry), under Capt. Smith, and of the Forty-fourth Illinois Infantry, under Capt. Russell. Thus the whole of McCulloch's column, deprived of its leaders and without unity of command, was thrown into confusion and beaten back. Though a great advantage was gained on our side by the death and capture of those leaders, the principal cause of our success was rather the quick rallying and excellent maneuvering of Osterhaus' and Davis' forces, as well as the coolness and bravery of their infantry, supported by Welfley's, Hoffman's and Davidson's batteries. Osterhaus changed his front twice, under the fire of the enemy, to meet the dangerous flank attack and pressure of Hebert's Louisiana and Arkansas infantry, while the brigades of Davis, by striking the left of McCulloch's advancing column, threw it into disorder and forced it to retreat."

During the day the left wing of the Confederate army, under Van Dorn and Price, was eminently successful, as conceded by Gen. Sigel, who says: "In spite of the heroic resistance of the two brigades of Dodge and Vandever, and the re-enforcements sent them during the afternoon, they were forced back from position to position until Elkhorn Tavern was taken by the enemy, and our crippled forces, almost without ammunition, their artillery reduced by losses of guns, men and horses, their infantry greatly reduced, had to seek a last shelter in the woods and behind the fences, separated from the enemy's position by open fields, but not farther than a mile from our trains. They formed a contracted and curved line, determined to resist, not disheartened, but awaiting with some apprehension another attack. Fortunately the enemy did not follow up his success, and night fell in, closing this terrible conflict."

Of the Indian forces in McCulloch's column Col. Drew with his Cherokee regiment retreated to the southwest toward Bentonville, while Col. Greer, who succeeded McCulloch in command of the wing, moved with the remainder of the force during the night and joined Van Dorn, taking position on his extreme left the next morning. Col. Stand Waitie, with his Cherokee regiment, retreated to Bentonville during the second day of the fight. It is said that the hardest fighting in this battle took place between the forces of the Confederate left and the Federal right. When the battle opened the position held by the Federal right was stoutly maintained, and it was with a fearful struggle and heavy loss to both sides that they were dislodged and compelled to fall back. With repeated attacks on the Federal line it was compelled to fall back, so that when the day's engagement closed the left of the right wing rested near the foot of Big Mountain and the right a short distance east of Pratt's store. This was confronted by the advanced line of the Confederates, who had captured Elkhorn Tavern, and formed their line west and south thereof, with their right resting at the foot of the mountain. The withdrawal of the Confederates' right wing from in front of the Federal left enabled Sigel to move eastward, with the division of Osterhaus along the south side of the mountain, to the relief and support of the right wing, which had been sorely pressed during the day. During the night of the 7th the division of Col. Davis was called in from Leetown, and this brought the Federal army all together.

On the first day of the fight, while Van Dorn and Price were so vigorously pushing their columns forward with marked success, they hoped that the right wing under McCulloch was equally successful. But learning of his death, and that of McIntosh, the repulse of the right wing, and the state of affairs in general, Van Dorn concluded to retreat, and during the night Green's division, that had been left back on Sugar Creek to guard the wagon train, was ordered to fall back and secure the train from exposure to capture. Early on the morning of the 8th the Federal line was re-formed, with the division of Asboth on the left (near the mountain), Osterhaus' division in the center, and that of Davis on the right, with Carr's division in a retired position to the rear of Davis' right, and immediately in front of Pratt's store, the whole facing generally to the east, and confronting the Confederate line. The latter, as formed on the morning of the 8th (Saturday), was as follows: Little on the right, next to the mountain and directly in front of the Federal forces under Asboth and Osterhaus; Frost next on the left; Greer and Hill next, with Gates' cavalry on the extreme left. Gen. Curtis opened the battle on the second morning with cannonading, and having selected a good position he moved on to the Confederate forces, who seemed to fight more on the defensive than on the offensive, as they had the day before. "However, opposite the left of the Federal line, near Elkhorn Tavern, Van Dorn made a determined effort to hold the spur of hills, the top of which was crowned and protected by rocks and boulders. Some of Price's infantry had already taken possession of it, and a battery was being placed in position, when Hoffmann's and El-bert's batteries were ordered to direct their fire against them, chiefly with solid shot. Not more than fifteen minutes elapsed before the enemy evacuated this last stronghold." [Sigel.] About the same time two Federal regiments advanced from the center and right into the woods, engaged the Confederate infantry and drove it back, and another Federal regiment (the Twelfth Missouri) captured the Dallas battery. At this juncture the Federal right advanced on to the Confederate left, the latter yielding, and the general retreat of the Confederate army now began. It fell back over the same ground it had gained the day before, and the main army, which remained in order, retreated to the southeast on the Van Winkle road. Some detachments cut off from the main army retreated in other directions, being followed by Federal forces toward Keetsville, in Missouri, and to a point beyond Bentonville, in Arkansas.

It is claimed by those who served in the Confederate army that Van Dorn's only object in maintaining the fight on the second day was to enable his trains and forces to make a successful retreat. The retreat took place before noon. The Federal army remained on the field, having won the victory which the Confederates felt confident of winning during the first day of the fight. The plan of attack adopted by Gen. Van Dorn was a wise one, and could he have reached the vicinity of Elkhorn Tavern by daylight on the morning of the 7th, as he expected to, he would have found the Federal army unprepared to receive his attack, and would in all probability have won the victory. Again, as it was, if the column of McCulloch had been properly handled, the Confederates might have gained the day. But be that as it may, it was a great victory to the Union cause, inasmuch as to a great extent it kept the war out of Missouri for the next two years, and completely defeated Van Dorn's contemplated project of capturing St. Louis and extending the war into Illinois. It is the province of this work, however, only to give the history, and not to make extended comments on what "might have been."

On the second day of the Pea Ridge battle Brig.-Gen. William Y. Slack, commanding a force under Gen. Price, was mortally wounded in a charge made on a part of the Federal line. His home was in Chillicothe, Mo. He was a lawyer by profession; was a captain in the Mexican War under Sterling Price, who was then a colonel.

Composition, strength and losses of the contending armies at Pea Ridge:

Federal Army: Brig.-Gen. Samuel R. Curtis, commander.

First and Second Divisions, Brig.-Gen. Franz Sigel.

First Division, consisting of two brigades of infantry and two batteries of artillery, commanded by Col. Peter J. Osterhaus.

Second Division, consisting of the First Brigade, some unattached troops, and two batteries: Brig.-Gen. Alexander Asboth.

Third Division, consisting of two brigades, one battery and some cavalry: Col. Jeff. C. Davis.

Fourth Division, consisting of two brigades, one battery and some unattached cavalry and infantry: Col. Eugene A. Carr.

Effective force of Union army, 10,500 infantry and cavalry, with forty-nine pieces of artillery. [See "Official Records" VIII, page 196.]

Total loss of Union army: 203 killed, 980 wounded, and 201 captured or missing. Total 1,384.

Confederate Army: Maj.-Gen. Earl VanDorn, commander.

Missouri State Guards: Maj.-Gen. Sterling Price.

Confederate Volunteers: Various commands.

State Troops: Second, Third, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth Divisions.

McCulloch's Division (various commands): Brig.-Gen. Ben. McCulloch.

Pike's command, consisting of Indians and a squadron of Texas cavalry: Brig.-Gen. Albert Pike. Other troops not included in the foregoing.

Effective force of Confederate army: Price's command, 6,818, with eight batteries of artillery [Official Records, VIII, page 305]; McCulloch's command, 8,384, with four batteries of eighteen pieces [Official Records, VIII, page 763]; Pike's command, 1,000 [Official Records, VIII, page 288]; aggregate, 16,202 infantry and cavalry. This, of course, includes the number left back with Green to guard the trains. The Confederate loss has been reported at 800 to 1,000 killed and wounded, and between 200 and 300 prisoners, which, if correct, would make the loss about equal to that of the Federal army.

Elkhorn Tavern.—The site of this famous tavern was settled in 1832 by James Hannors, of Illinois, who, in 1834, sold it to William Redick, also from Illinois. The latter built the house known as the "Elkhorn Tavern." It was an ordinary two-story frame, with a front porch to each story, and a brick chimney on the outside at each end, and was adorned on top with a huge pair of elk-horns taken from an animal killed by Mr. Casedy, who settled the site of Pratt's store, which still remains on the Pea Ridge battle-field. During the battle of Pea Ridge Mr. Cox, who lived in the tavern, was obliged, with his mother and his young wife, to seek protection in the cellar. The Federals took the elk-horns from the building, and sent them finally to New York, and during the latter part of the war the house was burned. In 1886 Mr. J. C. Cox, who still owns the property, rebuilt the tavern upon the original plan and on the original site. Then, through the assistance of Col. Hunt P. Wilson, of St. Louis, who, with the Confederate army, participated in the battle, he procured the return of the elk-horns and placed them upon the new building, where they are now gazed upon by the many who visit that historic place.

Devastations of War.—From the date of the battle of Pea Ridge to the close of the war Benton County was alternately possessed, overrun and devastated by the opposing armies. Provisions, crops and other property was appropriated for the use of the troops; houses were pillaged and burned, and the fences on many farms, especially in the vicinity of the soldiers' camps, were entirely consumed for fuel. Good, dry rails burned so much easier than green wood, made better fires, and saved the labor of chopping. However, the soldiers only took the "top rails," but it was understood that after these were taken off the next ones in turn became "top rails," and so on down to the bottom. Many citizens were wantonly killed, some for their money, and others for no cause whatever. Some were even tortured with fire to compel them to give up their money, or tell where it was concealed. The taking of provisions, horses and other animals for the use of the armies, and the burning of rails for fuel, was authorized by the officers of both; but the burning of buildings, with but few exceptions, if any, the killing of defenseless citizens, and the torturing of others for the purposes of robbery, were not authorized by the officers unless by some inferior subordinates of either army.

War gives an excellent opportunity for thieves and robbers to practice their fiendish profession, and on the occasion of the late war this class of men armed themselves and organized as bandits, and scoured the country, stealing, plundering, burning and murdering as they went. To them and the bushwhackers the greatest atrocities were chargeable. Of the depredations generally authorized by the "usages of war," the Federal army is undoubtedly chargeable with the greater portion in Benton County, as the citizens were not generally in sympathy with it, while they were in sympathy with the Confederate army, hence the reason. There were bad men in both armies, who committed many misdeeds, for which neither could be held responsible. War is a terrible thing, and it is hoped and fully believed that the people of the United States now living will never see any more of it, especially among themselves. The many individual incidents that occurred in Benton County during the late struggle, if related, would fill a volume in themselves, and consequently cannot be inserted in this work.

Confederate Reunion at Pea Ridge.—On the first day of September, 1887, over twenty-five years after the battle of Pea Ridge was fought, the people, with the surviving veteran soldiers, met on that famous field to commemorate the event, and to witness the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Gens. McCulloch, McIntosh and Slack, and other brave Confederates who fell on that occasion. The camp-ground for the reunion was established one mile southwest of Elkhorn Tavern, near a fine gushing spring in a densely shaded grove. Here thousands of people, including many veterans, assembled to enjoy the occasion. From this lovely spot in plain view lay the high point where once stood Sigel's battery, and off to the southwest of him was the Round Mountain, where stood the Confederate battery. The points where McCulloch and McIntosh lost their lives were still a mile or so further west and southwest of Sigel's battery.

About 100 yards southwest of the old tavern stands the monument built by the people of Benton County to the memory of their fallen heroes. The square pedestal that rises from the base has an inscription on each side, as follows: On the north, "Gen. W. Y. Slack, of Missouri;" on the west, "Gen. Ben McCulloch, of Texas;" on the south, "Gen. James McIntosh, of Arkansas," and on the east, "The brave Confederate dead, who fell on this field March 7 and 8, 1862." It is a plain, unpretentious shaft of marble that does credit to the donors. Below the pedestal and above the sandstone base is a marble block, upon which the following verses are inscribed:

Oh give me a land where the rains are spread,
And the living tread light on the hearts of the dead;
Yes, give me a land that is blest by the dust
And bright with the deeds of the downtrodden just.

O give me the land with a grave in each spot,
And names in the graves that shall not be forgot.
Yes, give me the land of the wreck and the tomb;
There's a grandeur in graves, there's a glory in gloom.

The graves of our dead, with green overgrown,
May yet form the footstool of liberty's throne,
And each single wreck in the war-path of might,
Shall yet be a rock in the temple of right.

A few yards from the spot where the monument is erected stood Capt. Bledsoe's battery, which included the famous cannon, "Old Sacramento," which had seen service through the Mexican War.

The address of welcome was delivered by Col. S. W. Peel, member of Congress from that district, and the response thereto was made by Judge C. A. DeFrance. The latter drew a contrast between the welcome extended to the large number of Federal soldiers who were present, and the terrible reception given them on the spot twenty-five years before. They were then welcomed with bloody hands to gory graves, and now they were welcomed as friends and neighbors, and were happy to accept and extend hospitalities.

Ex-Gov. Lubbock, of Texas, delivered the general address, concluding it by commending both the "Blue and the Grey" for their bravery, and by exhorting his hearers "to stand by the old constitution as it now is, and be a loyal and conservative people." He was followed by Senator Berry, Judge DeFrance, Col. T. J. Patton and others, who made appropriate short speeches.

In compiling the history of the battle of Pea Ridge the writer acknowledges assistance from Hon. D. H. Hammons and others, who participated in the battle on the Confederate side, as well as from a few Union soldiers who participated therein, and also from the Benton County Journal, which contains a brief sketch of the battle. Acknowledgments are also due to the Journal for the account of the Confederate Reunion on the occasion of unveiling the monument to Gen. McCulloch and others.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

AVOCA.

This little village is prettily located on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, five miles north of Rogers. It was laid out in 1881 by Albert Peel, who built the first house and opened the first store in the place. It now contains the railroad depot, two stores, kept, respectively, by Albert Peel and J. R. Dunagin, a blacksmith shop and grain warehouse, also a district school-house. Grain, railroad ties, fence posts and fruits, especially small fruits, are extensively shipped from this station.

BRIGHTWATER.

Brightwater is a station on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, two miles northeast of Avoca. As a village it was established about the year 1840, by an old pioneer settler, Enoch Trott, who kept a tavern or "stand" and a grocery, principally for the use of the drovers and other travelers on the old State road. A leading article sold at the grocery was in liquid form. It was called "Trott's Stand." At the breaking out of the war Judge Long kept the only store in the place. This store-house and the few other buildings there were burned on the occasion of the battle of Pea Ridge. The first improvement there, after the war, was made by Albert Peel (now of Avoca), who bought the land and put up a dwelling-house and a store-house. It now consists of the general store of Joe Dickson & Son, the drug store of Drs. T. M. & R. S. Rice, the grocery store of Hill & Lynch, a blacksmith shop and a fruit evaporator, the latter by Kimmons & Son. The capacity of the fruit evaporator is about 200 bushels per day, and when operated the proprietors employ about twenty-five hands. The place has a district school-house, but no church edifice. The only organized church there is the Christian, and the members thereof worship in the school-house. Pea Ridge Lodge No. 119, A. F. & A. M., is located at Brightwater. In amount of shipments the place compares well with other stations on the road.

BENTONVILLE.

The origin and location of Bentonville, the county seat of Benton County, has been given in connection with the organization of the county. Being established in 1837, the first store opened in the place was managed by Dr. Nicholas Spring, under the firm name of Blythe & Spring, and the next one was opened by two brothers, John G. and William T. Walker. Blythe & Spring had a pretty fair stock of goods, but the Walkers had a broken stock, worth only about $800. In 1840 or 1841 another store was opened by some parties from Fayetteville, and in 1850 the town had about five business houses and a few mechanics' shops. Being so far inland, and in a new country, the settlement of which was slow, the growth of the town was also slow and gradual. In 1860, just before the outbreak of the Civil War, it contained five general stores, kept respectively by A. W. Dinsmore, James Woolsey, Greenwood & Hobbs, J. M. Vestal and James A. Dickson; the furniture store of Henry Baumeister, the saddle and harness-shop of J. W. Clark, the Clark Hotel by J. W. Clark, the Vestal Hotel by W. R. Vestal, and three or four mechanics' shops. It also contained the county public buildings, and two churches, Cumberland Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal, South, and the building of the Masonic lodge and school-house, and had a population of about 500. Of professional men there were four physicians—Drs. C. D. Talliaferro, D. H. Hobbs, William Wilson and John Gray. There were also a few attorneys and local officers, together with the county officers. In addition to the foregoing there were one or more "dram-shops" or saloons in the town.

Bentonville, especially, suffered terribly from the ravages of war. In February, 1862, when a portion of Federal troops belonging to Gen. Curtis' army passed through the town, a soldier lingered behind, either with or without authority, and was killed by one in sympathy with the Southern cause. Some of the Federal soldiers returned to the town next day, and on learning of the fate of their comrade became exasperated, applied the torch in revenge, and on this occasion thirty-six buildings were consumed by fire. In justice to the commander of these troops, who were then encamped a few miles southwest of the town, it must be said that as soon as he learned the state of affairs he sent orders back to stop the burning of the town. Afterward, from time to time, buildings continued to be burned in the town, and in the country surrounding it, by both Federal and Confederate soldiers, and some were burned by thieves and plunderers belonging to neither army. Both contending parties now claim that the court-house was burned by the other. According to best authority, the two churches, the Masonic hall and school building, and the jail, were burned to prevent their being used by the Union armies. After the first burning, scouting parties of either army, passing through and finding houses standing, would imagine that they were left because their owners were in sympathy with the other army, and would therefore burn them. This work of burning property was carried on to such an extent that when the war closed only about a dozen houses were left standing in Bentonville.

At the close of the war the county was devastated and the towns likewise, but the people were inured to hardships, and were determined if possible to retrieve their lost fortunes. With but little capital they applied themselves to the work, and the following directory and sketch of the present business and institutions of Bentonville will show how well they have succeeded in their efforts. It is true, however, that much of the success of Bentonville is due to its immigration from other States.

Bentonville was incorporated by the county court at its January adjourned term in 1873. At the present writing (1888) its officers are Hon. W. D. Mauck, mayor; Henry Cowan, recorder; W. S. Black, treasurer; councilmen, Dr. John Smartt, Dr. J. M. Thompson, N. S. Henry, Robert Brashear, George P.

Jackson; W. T. Woolsey, marshal. The town contains several large brick business blocks, besides many frame business houses, and many beautiful residences. The latter are mostly surrounded with large lawns well filled with shade and fruit trees. Though the oldest town in the county, it is yet a young town, having been nearly all built since the close of the late war, and mostly within the last ten years. Its population is between 2,500 and 3,000.

Total, exclusive of banking and loans, $396,000.

Bentonville Railroad Company.—Length of railroad in miles,  $5\frac{1}{4}$ ; cost of construction, \$12,000. Passengers carried west, 5,077; passengers carried east, 4,182; total tickets sold in 1887, 9,259. Tons of freight received, 2,833; tons of freight forwarded, 5,477; total tons of freight handled in 1887, 8,310. Tons agricultural products handled, 661; tons animal or live stock, 260; vegetable foods and products, tons, 738; manufactured articles, tons, 168; merchandise, tons, 2,838; products of forest, tons, 3,450; eggs, 195. Total tons handled, 8,310.

Officers Bentonville Railroad.—President, John Smartt; vice-president, J. H. McClinton; general manager, N. S. Henry; traffic manager, D. H. Woods; conductor, C. M. Robinson.

The Benton County Bank was organized in May, 1885, by John Black, president; J. A. Rice, vice-president; S. F. Stahl, cashier; Jesse Motter, assistant cashier, and J. G. McAndrews, with a paid-up capital of $20,000. In May, 1887, the bank was reorganized, and the capital stock was increased to $50,000, all paid up. The present officers are W. A. Terry, president; A. J. Bates, vice-president; S. F. Stahl, cashier; N. B. Cotton, assistant cashier; J. A. Rice, attorney. Other stockholders aside from the officers named are J. W. Langford, John Black and J. G. McAndrews. The bank is located in the Terry Block, opposite the People's Bank, at the southwest corner of the public square. This fine brick block is three stories high, and is the most attractive and imposing structure in the city. The lower story contains the banking room on the corner and a large store-room, with one front on the north side of the bank facing eastward, and another front west of the bank facing southward.

The People's Bank was organized and began business in June, 1888, with a capital stock of $50,000. Its first and present officers are John Smartt, president; I. B. Gilmore, vice-president; F. E. Gilmore, cashier; A. W. Dinsmore, assistant cashier. Board of directors: John Smartt, J. A. C. Blackburn, I. B. Gilmore, A. W. Dinsmore, W. R. Davis, I. R. Hall, W. H. Fry. Stockholders: John Smartt, J. A. C. Blackburn, A. W. Dinsmore, D. H. Woods, I. B. Gilmore, George T. Lincoln, E. S. McDaniel, C. A. Blanck, W. R. Davis, James Haney, F. E. Gilmore, J. B. Mayo, W. H. Fry, Leonard West, G. Ambrose, T. A. Woods, I. R. Hall, F. M. Bates, B. F. Dunn, A. W. Taylor, G. H. Moore.

Bentonville Mercantile Company.—This is a joint stock company, with a paid-up capital of $30,000, the stockholders being W. A. Terry, R. E. Brashear, Alex. Hall, B. F. Burks and J. W. and Asa E. Langford. This company keeps a wholesale and retail general store in the Terry Block, occupying all the stories and all the space in the entire building, aside from the banking room, with their goods.

The Eagle Mills were erected in 1881, and have since been equipped with the roller process apparatus. The capacity is sixty barrels per day. The business is so pressing that the mills are being run both day and night.

The Bentonville Canning and Evaporating Company is of recent origin, and its officers are I. B. Gilmore, president; W. B. Lyon, secretary, and F. E. Gilmore, treasurer. The capital stock of the company is $20,000; cost of plant, $10,000, of which $5,000 was for machinery. Their main building is 30x80 feet, and three stories high. It was built in February, 1888, by Plummer & Son, of Leavenworth, Kas., and is equipped with the Plummer process for evaporating fruit. Its capacity is 800 bushels of apples per day, and from fifty to sixty hands are employed. The contemplated canning factory is not yet erected. W. L. Plummer & Son have received for their process of evaporating fruit the medals from five world's fairs: Centennial, in 1876; Paris, in 1878; New Orleans; Melbourne, Australia, and Chili, South America.

The Arkansas Tobacco Company, dating from October, 1887, is a succession of Trotter & Wilkes. The secretary and general manager of the company is J. W. Trotter, of the former firm. The president is W. B. Deming, original proprietor of "Deming's Additions" to Bentonville, formerly of Kansas. They manufacture several brands of plug and smoking tobacco, and do an extensive business.

The Bentonville Mills, located on the spring branch below town, were erected in 1869 by T. K. Blake and J. Claypool. John Curtis has been proprietor since April, 1884. It is supplied with two run of buhr stones, with a capacity of 100 bushels of wheat and 200 bushels of corn per day. A carding machine is run in connection with the mills.

Societies.—Bentonville Lodge No. 56, A. F. & A. M., was chartered November 4, 1852, with J. D. Dickson, W. M.; J. H. Hobbs, S. W., and James M. Rogers, J. W. The present membership of this lodge is about sixty-five, and the present officers are R. J. Laughlin, W. M.; T. T. Blake, S. W.; C. W. Clapp, J. W.; C. R. Bruce, Secretary; S. F. Stahl, Treasurer; Josephus Huffman, Tyler. This lodge is in a good financial condition, and dispenses all its surplus for charitable purposes.

The Benton Chapter, R. A. M., was chartered October 23, 1874, on petition of R. S. Armstrong, John Black, W. B. Roper, S. H. Kelton, Josephus Huffman, Thomas J. Webster, H. W. Glover and others. It was reorganized under its first charter in June, 1887. The present officers are R. J. Laughlin, H. P.; J. M. Thompson, King; J. H. Burns, Scribe; R. N. Corley, C. H.; T. J. Reynolds, P. S.; P. Gotcher, R. A. C.; G. T. Lincoln, T.

T. Blake and Isaac Cook, G. M. S.; J. P. Burns, Treasurer; J. W. Taliaferro, Secretary; Josephus Huffman, Tyler. The chapter has twenty-seven members and applications for several more. Its financial condition is good, and it dispenses charity with a liberal hand.

Bentonville Lodge No. 37, K. of P., was organized in June, 1887, with sixteen members. Its present officers are F. E. Gilmore, P. C.; E. H. Looney, C. C.; J. W. Taliaferro, V. C.; C. C. Huffman, Prelate; S. H. Claypool, K. of R. S.; T. T. Blake, M. F.; W. B. Deming, M. E.; J. D. Bryan, M. A.; present membership about thirty.

Benton Lodge No. 33, I. O. O. F., was organized under a warrant or dispensation dated November 25, 1870, granted to H. S. Coleman, T. K. Blake, Leonard West, J. O. Alexander and J. W. Simmons. The present officers are R. B. Lawson, N. G.; G. W. Hurley, V. G.; Lewis M. Dailey, Secretary; George M. Bates, Treasurer. The membership of the lodge is about fifty, and its financial condition is good, having money at interest. Nearly three-fourths of its membership have been acquired within the last year.

Burnside Post No. 4, G. A. R., was organized in June, 1887. B. F. Hobbs was the first Post Commander, and still holds that office. The other officers are M. Starbuck, S. V.; A. H. Gingrich, J. V.; George Bill, Adjutant. This post has about thirty-five members now in good standing.

The Masonic Hall and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a large two-story brick building erected in 1869, was built conjointly by the church and the Masons, the church occupying the first and the Masons the second story. The building cost $3,000. All of the above mentioned societies except the G. A. R. meet in the Masonic hall.

The Bentonville Press.—The Advance, a Democratic newspaper, was established early in the seventies, and was published for a number of years, frequently changing hands, and was finally sold to the founder of the Bentonian, and consolidated therewith.

The Bentonian, also a Democratic paper, was established in the fall of 1881 by S. D. McReynolds, with S. M. Wamack as editor. McReynolds continued its publication until October, 1885, when he sold it to J. B. Thompson. The latter then changed the name of the paper to the Benton County Journal. Soon thereafter W. M. Bumbarger bought a half interest, and in the fall of 1886 became sole proprietor of the paper, and in July, 1887, he sold it to S. M. Dailey, who still continues its publication. The Journal is an eight-column folio, well printed and ably edited in the interest of Benton County. In politics it is staunchly Democratic.

The Benton County Democrat was established in January, 1885, by John W. Corley, who continued its publication about one year, and then sold it to J. B. Thompson, who published it about the same length of time, and then sold it to H. A. Cook. The latter published it a few months, and until July, 1888, when he sold it Hurley & Stevenson, two young and energetic men, who are now publishing it. It is located in the new Peoples Bank building, and has one of the most convenient and commodious offices in the State. It is also neatly printed and well edited, and is Democratic in politics. Both of the Bentonville papers have a large circulation, and both do a good business.

BLOOMFIELD.

The village of Bloomfield lies on Round Prairie, six miles north of Siloam Springs. It was surveyed and platted by David Chandler for G. W. Mitchell, its original proprietor. It contains a large public square surrounded with lots. Dr. J. H. Neagle built the first house in the village. It stands at the northeast corner of the public square. R. B. Mitchell opened the first store, and has continued in business ever since. The post-office was established the next year after the town was laid out, and R. B. Wilson was made postmaster, and still holds the office. Following Wilson, several parties opened stores, but soon left. Following is the present business of the village: General stores, R. B. Wilson, W. L. Richardson; drugs and groceries, Mitchell & Bro.; hotel, David Chandler; blacksmith, J. Johnson; woodwork, J. E. Stewart; physician, J. R. Floyd. The Masonic hall building was put up in 1871 by the Masons. The lodge hall is in the second story, and the lower room is used by all religious demonstrations that choose to have it. The Rogers Academy is a fine two-story brick building, with seating capacity for 150 pupils. Prof. A. B. Marbury is principal of this school. He teaches all branches ordinarily taught in high-schools, and also the public school in connection with his school.

Bloomfield Lodge No. 243, A. F. & A. M., was chartered in 1871, and William Kellum was the first W. M. The present membership of the lodge is from forty-five to fifty, and the officers are Z. T. Mitchell, W. M.; William Parker, S. W.; James Peek, J. W. This has always been a prosperous lodge. It is out of debt and has money on hand.

The Bloomfield Steam Roller Mills are located three-fourths of a mile south of the village. These mills have just undergone repairs, have had the roller process apparatus put in, and are thus prepared to make the best of flour.

ELDORADO.

This town was extensively laid out early in the eighties, occupying nearly all of the southeast quarter of Section 31, Town 20 north, Range 33 west, being seventeen miles west of Bentonville on a straight line. There being good springs there, it was established for a watering place or summer resort, and for a short time it had a business boom, but now it contains only one small country store.

CHEROKEE CITY.

The village of Cherokee City is situated in Section 26, Town 19, Range 34, about three-fourths of a mile from the Indian Territory line. It was surveyed by David Chandler in 1880, for himself, James Ingle and M. D. Cunningham, the original proprietors. Before the war there was a place kept on the opposite side of the branch at Cherokee City, called "Hog Eye," where whisky was kept to sell to the Indians. Cherokee City was built up in 1881 and 1882, by a "boom" it acquired as a summer resort. Like several other places, it has some excellent springs of good water. It was built in a great hurry, to accommodate its guests who resorted there in 1881 and 1882, consequently the houses are small and of a temporary character. W. D. Cunningham opened the first general store in the place. The directory of business at present is as follows: General stores, J. M.

Tucker, Crawford Bros; drugs, J. M. Norris, Eurial Farmin; furniture, Mr. Baxter; blacksmiths, A. E. Funk, — Cook; hotel, Cherokee House, by Samuel Haag; physician, Dr. O. M. Dodson; churches, Baptist, Christian, Methodist Episcopal, South, Congregational. The population of the place is about 200. T. A. Fleener has an orchard of 2,200 apple trees and many other kinds of fruit, adjoining the village.

CITY OF ROGERS.

The original town of Rogers was surveyed and laid out in March, 1881, by John P. Hely, a land surveyor and civil engineer, for Benjamin F. Sikes, the original proprietor. It comprises parts of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 12, Town 19, Range 30, and the west half of the west half of Section 7, Town 19, Range 29. The bearings and courses of the town were surveyed on a magnetic variation of seven degrees east. The plat contains fifteen blocks, with twelve lots each, one tier of blocks being east of the railroad, and two west thereof. The lots are fifty feet north and south, by 140 feet east and west, and all streets are eighty feet wide except Arkansas and Douglas, which are fifty feet each. The town is situated on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, at the junction of the Bentonville Railway. The first addition to Rogers was laid out the same year by the original proprietor, and it comprises tracts of land adjoining the first plat on every side thereof. This addition contains in all nineteen blocks, subdivided into lots. It was surveyed by D. W. German.

J. Wade Sikes' Park Addition to Rogers, embracing the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 12, Town 19, Range 30, was surveyed and laid out the same year. It lies southwest of the original plat, and contains sixteen blocks, subdivided into large residence lots, some being 150x238 feet, some 150 feet square, and some 150x245 feet. It contains the most desirable residence lots.

Reuben Wallace's Addition to Rogers was laid out in 1882. It lies northeast of the old plat, and contains seven blocks of twelve lots each, and two blocks of six lots each, all lots being 50x140 feet in size.

The Electric Springs Plat, adjoining Wallace's Addition on the northeast, was laid out in September, 1881. It contains forty-five blocks surrounding the springs, all being laid out in the most ornamental style, for residence lots.

Rogers' Cemetery, containing five acres, was laid out in November, 1882.

Enough land at Rogers has been surveyed into town lots to make a large city.

Rogers was incorporated on the 28th day of May, 1881, and in June following an election was held for town officials." In evidence of the fact that the people have always been fortunate in the selection of their officers, Rogers is entirely out of debt, and its paper is at par and has been from the first year. But few young towns can say as much.

When the site of Rogers was chosen, in 1881, it contained nothing but a dilapidated pole cabin. When the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway was making its way through the county, a number of farmers, with a view to their future interests, secured the amount demanded by the company's right of way agent, some $600, and secured the location of the depot where it now stands. The parties who contributed this amount may truly be called the founders of Rogers. Their names are H. B. Horsley, George E. Wilson, Clark Brixey, Ben T. Oakley, N. S. Horsley, J. R. Swafford, Maj. S. S. Horsley, W. B. Horsley and, possibly, others. B. F. Sikes donated to the railroad company one-half of sixty acres in the original town, and the depot grounds and the right of way. He lived on the land first platted, and was therefore the first resident of the town. The first house built after the town was projected was put up by John Cox, and a saloon was opened therein. The next house was erected by Lowry and Scroggins, and a grocery and the post-office were located therein. Then followed the "Rogers House," and a number of business houses and dwellings too numerous to mention in detail. The town was named in honor of Capt. C. W. Rogers, who was at that time general manager of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway, and a good friend of the town. The natural advantages of the place attracted the attention of enterprising men, and before the trains actually got to running there were several business houses in successful operation.

The following is a directory of the first business of Rogers, as it existed a short time after the town was established: C. C. Davis, clothing; George Raupp, furniture; J. L. Merritt, restaurant; W. A. Miller, dry goods; Huffman & Wade, hotel; H. L. & S. T. Stokes, livery stable; Pratt & Gibbs and J. H. Rack-erby, hardware; John Cox, A. Greenstreet, Capt. Blue, saloons; Scroggins & Lowry, Stokes and Bowman, groceries; Van Winkle & Blackburn, wholesale lumber merchants; Huffman & Williams, McCubbins & Peck, produce and commission merchants; J. W. Brite, Berryhill & Durham, Mitchell & Dunagin, J. Beasley, general merchandise.

The following, pertaining to the period before the railroad was completed to Rogers, but after it was decided that a depot would be erected there, is an extract from the pen of Maj. A. J. Allen, who wrote a history of the town when it was a year old: "The months of March and April were extremely cold and stormy, as the winter months preceding them had been. We had no railroad and no telegraph line. The wagon roads, most of the time, were entirely impassable. It was impossible to get lumber, and all building operations were delayed in consequence of bad roads. But few people were here then, and they took hotel lodgings in the forest during the night, and kept themselves busy during the day by foraging for subsistence and building huge fires by which to keep warm.

"One man, who had waited patiently and long for good weather and lumber, opened up a business house in the top of an oak tree. The huge oak had been felled to the ground, and he took his wagon body off the wheels, and placed it lengthwise on the trunk of the tree. He then, like a good Southern man with Yankee principles, stuck up a sign with six letters, and spread out his goods for sale; and, judging from the number of people who daily gathered about his place of business, we conclude that he did a good thriving business. He said he would open the first business house in Rogers, and he kept his word."

During the seven years of the existence of Rogers it has grown to be a thriving and prosperous little city of from 1,500 to 1,800 inhabitants. The following is its present business directory, to wit: Bank of Rogers, W. R. Felker, banker; dry goods, clothing and notions, Finch Brothers, C. A. Nelson, W. A. Miller, H. L. Stroud; groceries, Caywood & Son, J. A. Smith, W. L. Watkins, W. R. Cady, Nance & Oakley, C. Livesay, Williams & Saunders, Osborn & Garnett, Z. H. McCubbins, Kimble Bros.; hardware, C. L. Gibbs, Dyer Brothers; drugs, I. V. Davis, C. L. Alexander, J. E. Applegate, Dr. R. D. Cogswell; restaurants, L. J. Merritt, William Story, W. W. Reynolds; confectioner, A. Bucklin; furniture, George Raupp, W. H. Dwyer; millinery, Miss Alice M. Roberts, Mrs. L. Horsley, Mrs. C. A. Wickes; harness and saddles, Morgan & Stewart; general second-hand store, Joseph Milligan; livery, James M. Vandover, Oakley & McSpadden; bakery, B. F. Woodruff; butchers, C. Juhne, S. Fleek; barbers, K. T. Heflin, W. A. Patterson; hotels, Brown House, Rogers Hotel; boot and shoe maker, F. Duval; watch-makers and jewelers, W. H. Dwyer, J. E. Applegate; painters, James Neal, Charles Clark; blacksmiths and wheel-wrights, Jeffreys & Duff, Robertson & Duff; steam roller mills, Rogers Milling Company; fruit evaporator, D. Wing & Brother; canning and packing factory, Rogers Canning and Packing Company; Arkansas Lime Works, C. A. Wickes; cider and jelly plant.

Lumber yards, J. A. C. Blackburn, W. H. Fowler; mineral waters, ginger ale, etc., King & Co.; water supply works, Rogers Lime & Water Works Company; contractors and builders, W. H. Fowler, R. C. Copp, H. Nelson, J. B. Mills; attorneys, E. R. Morgan, Ed. Finch; insurance agents, Duckworth & Bixler, J. W. Price, Z. H. McCubbin; real estate agents, Duckworth & Bixler, J. W. Price; physicians, H. Weems, R. D. Cogswell, P. C. Pennington, J. C. Freeland, E. N. Stearns; dentists, — Reynolds, R. F. Stringer; churches, Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, South, Baptist, Cumberland Presbyterian, Christian; Rogers Academy, principal, J. W. Scroggs; Miss Mary G. Webb, J. R. Williams, Elta Scroggs, Hettie C. Tryon, assistants. This was the faculty for the school year closed. Societies, Rogers Lodge No. 460, A. F. & A. M., Rogers Lodge No. 89, I. O. O. F., Rogers Encampment No. 14, George H. Thomas Post No. 29, G. A. R.

The manufacturing industries of Rogers deserve especial mention. It is claimed that the Rogers Flouring Mills are the best and most extensive in the State of Arkansas, and that they are doing an extensive business, running both day and night. D. Wing & Bro.'s evaporating plant was the first one established in the State. Their lead in the industry dates from 1882. The capacity is 450 bushels of apples, or 250 bushels of peaches, per day. The evaporator used by them is the Alden patent, and their parer the Wizard machine. During the working months they employ an average of sixty hands, many of whom are women. The canning and packing company was organized with a capital stock of $12,000, and next to the milling company its business is probably the most valuable single enterprise in Rogers. It has extensive buildings, and has the advantage of a long season for operations, as it cans all kinds of fruits (small fruits included) as well as vegetables. It employs a great many hands.

Business Transactions in 1887.—Four dry goods, clothing and notions, $60,000; seven groceriers, $46,000; two hardware and implements, $23,000; three drugs and medicine, $15,000; one harness and saddlery, $2,000; one newspaper and job printing, $4,100; two butchers, $3,400; one variety store, $3,000; three millinery and ladies' furnishing, $4,000; one furniture and undertaking, $5,000; two hotels, $5,500; one barber, $1,500; one lumber, sash, doors, etc., $16,000; contracting and building, $28,000; produce, hides and furs, $45,000; grain and grain products, $123,300; live stock, $44,500; 374 carloads ties, $18,000; 11,125 barrels apples shipped, $22,500; 15,000 bushels potatoes shipped, $6,000; evaporated fruit transactions, $60,000; miscellaneous, $20,000—total, $565,600. Bank transactions and loans, $663,872. Grand total, $1,239,472.

Carload Shipments.—Total carloads forwarded, 737, divided as follows: flour, 123; wheat, 13; potatoes, 15; apples, 51; dried fruit, 13; eggs, 10; live stock, 89; ties, 374; miscellaneous, 49.

The Press.—The Rogers New Era was established in the fall of 1881, and has ever since been controlled by its present proprietors, Graham & Mason. It is a six-column quarto, neatly printed and well edited. It is Democratic in politics, and is the oldest paper now being published in the county. The publishers of this work are under obligations to it for much of the history of Rogers.

The Rogers Republican, a five-column quarto, was established in April, 1888, the first number being published on the 26th day of that month, by its present proprietors, Warner & Honeywell. It is also a neatly printed paper and well edited. In politics it is Republican, and has done much to organize the Republican party in Benton County.

The Rogers papers are both well patronized by local advertisers, which speaks well for the town.

GARFIELD.

This is a station on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, in Section 32, Township 21 north, Range 28 west, containing about 200 inhabitants. The first store existing at this place was opened in 1881 by A. Blansett, and the next year another was opened by A. Peel. Following this a drug store was opened by Thomas R. Marshall. In July, 1883, the village was surveyed into lots and named Garfield. Following is a directory of its present business: General stores, A. Peel, G. P. Rogers & Son, J. A. Wilks; hardware, L. Ellison & Co.; groceries, J. W. Cundiff; confectionery, H. Wilks; post-office, jewelry, etc., A. J. Wilks; hotel, J. N. Wilks; drugs and jewelry, M. J. Walters. Also two blacksmith shops, a barber shop, the Arkansas Lime Works, the fruit evaporator of D. D. Ames and the lumber yard of A. L. Ricketts. The Arkansas Lime Works Company manufacture 200 barrels of lime per day, make their own barrels and employ about seventy-five men. The fruit evaporator has capacity for from 100 to 150 bushels of apples per day, and when running the proprietor employs about fifteen hands. Garfield has a frame school-house and Masonic hall combined, the school-room being in the lower story and the hall in the upper, built recently, costing $800. Fruits, timber, railroad ties and fence posts are shipped in great quantities from this place. There are no church buildings. Baptists and Christians worship alternately in the school-room.

LOWELL.

Lowell is a station on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, located six miles south of Rogers. It was laid out in 1881 by J. R. McClure. J. W. Main built the first house in the place, and opened the first business—a grocery. Next, M. B. Hathaway erected the building now occupied by J. W. Williams, and opened a general store therein. The business at this writing consists of two general stores, kept respectively by J. W. Williams and F. H. Rizer; a drug and grocery store, by Green Bros.; a grocery, by R. H. Odell; confections, by J. Plummer, and a blacksmith shop, by Daniel Wann. Also J. W. Williams and F. H. Rizer each have a fruit evaporator and grain warehouse. Grains, fruits, poultry, timber and railroad ties are extensively shipped from this place. The village contains a brick school-house and Masonic hall combined, and built conjointly by the Masons and public school board, the school-room being in the first story and the hall in the second. This building was erected in 1885.

Lowell Lodge No. 424, A. F. & A. M., was chartered in 1886, and it has now thirty-two members. The principal officers are J. F. Archer, W. M.; J. N. Tuttle, S. W., and J. W. Packer, J. W.

The Missionary Baptists, Methodists, South, and Christians worship in the school-room.

MAYSVILLE.

The village of Maysville, one of the oldest in the county, is situated on the State and Indian Territory line, twenty-one miles west and one and a-half miles north of Bentonville. An Englishman by the name of Tigret opened the first store in Maysville, in 1839. His most profitable trade was selling whisky to the Indians. He continued in business about ten years, and then returned to his native country, where he died. The second merchant in the place was a Jew, who did business about three years. Early in the forties Maysville contained six or seven stores, all of which did a thriving business, getting much of their trade from the Indians. The place continued to have this number of stores most of the time until the Civil War broke out. Then business was nearly wholly suspended or destroyed, and it has never regained its former magnitude. The Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, built through the Indian Nation, has cut off much of the trade formerly given to Maysville. It is claimed by old settlers that in 1846 Maysville was larger than Bentonville. The village lies entirely on the east side of the line, and all the business houses face toward the "Nation." The "line" is the main street, with the business on one side of it only.

Northwestern Lodge No. 36, A. F. & A. M., was organized at Maysville about the year 1850, prospered for many years, and suspended about ten years ago.

Directory of Maysville.—Dry goods, Freeman & Dumas, Henry Coats, Mrs. E. J. Tinnin (these also kept groceries); groceries and hardware, Thomas Keith; groceries, Samuel Ward, M. Harmon; harness and saddler, Isaac Harrouff; hotel, Line House, by Alex. McDonald; grist-mill, Spencer & Taylor; post-office, Mrs. Mary Linch; physicians, C. F. Baker, E. N. Freeman, J. L. Larue, A. B. Bills. The town has a Union Church and a public school-house. Maysville is surrounded with a good country, and should it get a railroad, as contemplated, it will make an important trading point.

NEBO.

This is a small village, containing two or three business houses, located on the line between Sections 12 and 13, in Township 20 north, Range 33 west. A post of the G. A. R., No. 62, was organized at this place August 29, 1888, with Robert Green as commander, and M. J. Anderson, adjutant.

SPRINGTOWN.

This beautiful village is located on Flint Creek, eighteen miles southwest from Bentonville. It derives its name from its famous spring, which flows from the foot of a bank in the valley not more than fifteen feet high. The village lies just west of the spring, at the foot of the southern bluff of Flint Creek Valley. The hills beyond the valley, covered with their native forests, present cheerful scenery. Charles Kincheloe built the first house where Springtown is located, about the year 1841, and Isaac Dial built the next one close by the spring, and it is still standing. Soon thereafter a Mr. Yarberry built the next house, it being where Frank Wasson now lives. No business, however, was established at Springtown until 1868, when Manning Richardson opened the first store in the place, and built the first house in the town proper. Marion Seaburn was the next merchant, and Thomason & Northcut the next, neither of whom remain. The town was surveyed and laid out in lots in 1871. It lies in the southeast corner of Section 6, Township 18, Range 32, and is laid out on a bearing of south  $59\frac{1}{2}$  degrees west.

The following is its present business directory: General merchandise, W. D. Wasson, McGaugh Bros.; hardware, drugs and groceries, W. Collins & Co.; drugs, Sewell & Enterkine; hotel, J. L. Allen; steam grist and saw-mill, Mitchell & Loy; blacksmiths, Collins & Holland, Collins & Brown; boot and shoemakers, R. D. Morland, A. T. Moodey; post and telephone office, William J. Collins; physicians, N. Sewell, James Hall, T. H. Roughton; churches, Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, South. The Methodist Episcopal society has not as yet erected a church building. The village also contains a school-house and lodge hall combined, the school-room being in the first story and the hall in the second.

Societies.—Springtown Lodge No. 222, A. F. & A. M., was chartered about the year 1868, and has now about thirty-five members. The principal officers are W. E. Garrett, W. M.; J. T. Chastine, S. W.; R. J. McGaugh, J. W.

Springtown Chapter No. 70, R. A. Masons, was chartered about the year 1873, and has now thirty members. This was the first chapter organized in Benton County. The present officers are J. F. Mitchell, High Priest; J. T. Chastine, King; Isaac January, Scribe. Both of these societies are in good financial condition, and both prosper in the work laid down on the Masonic trestle-board

SILAM CITY.

This city is situated on Sager's Creek, in Hico Township, twenty-eight miles southwest from Bentonville, and has a population of about 1,500. It is within two miles of the western and six miles of the southern line of the county. Hico, which may be properly called a residence suburb of Silam City, is a very old place for this country. Col. D. Gunter settled where he now resides, in Hico, in 1844, before the place had even become a village. About that time, or perhaps a little later, a post-office named Hico was established at a point about two miles from the present Hico. This office was soon thereafter moved to the village that now bears its name, and Hico became a trading point, especially for the Indians, who patronized it to a considerable extent. It continued to be the leading place in that corner of the county until Silam City was established, which drew away nearly all of its business except that of its flouring mills, and left it only a residence suburb.

That which led to the origin of Siloam City is its natural springs of pure, health-giving waters. In 1879 it was discovered that these waters contained medicinal qualities, and preparations were at once begun for the establishment of a summer resort. On the 24th of June, 1880, the first anniversary of the place was celebrated by a large and interesting meeting of the citizens of that vicinity. In March, 1880, J. V. Hargroves laid out the original plat of Siloam City, embracing parts of the northeast quarter and of the northwest of Section 6, in Township 17 north, Range 33 west. The following November East Siloam was laid out by Logan Teague. This addition contains the "college grounds and park," and a large number of lots. Couches' addition was the next one laid out, and in April, 1881, the additions of J. H. Beauchamp, T. R. Carles and William C. Tate were laid out. Johnson's addition was surveyed and laid out in November following. In January, 1882, "C. D. Gunter's Addition No. 1 to the town of Hico" and "S. G. Rogers' Addition to Hico and East Siloam" were laid out. At the same time, or soon thereafter, Gunter's second addition to Hico was laid out. By the foregoing it will be seen that the real estate owners in that vicinity intended to be ready at all times to accommodate persons desiring to purchase lots.

As soon as the first plat of Siloam City was surveyed buildings began to be erected and the town began a rapid growth. John D. Hargrove opened the first business, a general store, on Main Street. The place rapidly gained a reputation as a summer resort, and that fact, coupled with the prospects of the early completion of a railroad through it, induced many people to immigrate thereto. In 1880, the first year of its existence as a town, it was incorporated as such, and the influx of immigrants was so rapid that in 1881 it had acquired a population of over 3,000. It was then incorporated as a city of the second class. During the rapid increase of population it was impossible to build houses fast enough to supply the demand, consequently for a time many of the new-comers had to camp out in their wagons or in tents. To supply the demand for houses "the sound of the hammer" was heard both day and night, and the whole town as it now stands, with the exception of a few buildings, was built in the first two or three years of its existence. After the "boom" ceased many who had gone there for the purpose of going into business discovered that the place was overdone, that the prospect for a railroad was not encouraging, and consequently moved away. Those also who went there in the summer of 1881, to get relief from the excessive heat and drouth of that year, returned to their respective homes, and the large population (being chiefly transient), on which the city obtained its charter, has dwindled away until it is now only about one-half of what it then was. Fortunately, however, Siloam City is situated in the midst of a good agricultural country, which will sustain it as a good, substantial trading place, even though it remains deprived of railroad facilities. The citizens still have hopes for a railroad, and when these hopes are realized, if ever, Siloam City will make a large and flourishing town, with a large and permanent population. The exceedingly pure water of its many springs, and the magnificent natural scenery surrounding it, and its healthy location, make it a most desirable place to live.

This place is commonly called "Siloam Springs," but the name given it on its first recorded plat is "Siloam City."

Siloam City is in fair financial condition, having a debt of only about $700. The city officers are D. R. Hammer, mayor; William H. Cravens, recorder, and Charles E. Copeland, marshal. The city is divided into three wards, and has two aldermen in each.

Sales Transactions in 1887.—Seven general merchants, $76,000; three grocers, $22,500; two hardware, $8,500; three druggists, $7,100; two furniture, $8,500; one saddlery and harness, $8,000; two lumber dealers, $6,500; two newspapers and job printing, $2,900; two milliners and dressmakers, $1,400; one bed spring and mattress factory, $1,600; two watch-makers and jewelers, $1,600; three wheel-wrights and blacksmiths, $4,200; grain products, $18,000; live stock, $15,500; hides and furs, $2,100; 18,000 pounds wool, $3,600; 31,000 pounds dried fruit, $2,170; 53,000 dozen eggs, $5,300; 1,000 dozen quails, $2,000; 17,000 dozen pigeons, $6,800; deer, turkey and ducks, $930; hotels, $2,900; butcher, $4,000; livery and transfer, $6,500; miscellaneous, $2,500—total, $220,100.

Present Directory of Siloam City.—Bank of Siloam, R. S. Morris, cashier; Z. T. Conley, assistant cashier.—General merchandise, Ewing & Gilbreath, Jacob Nathan, Crane Bros., R. S. Gibson, W. W. Brown, C. W. Hinds & Co., J. H. Chitty, R. G. Ravenscraft; groceries, Parker & Mason, R. D. Jordan, J. V. Tracy, Morris & Graves, C. B. Randall, Mrs. A. Bottoms; drugs, R. B. Pegues & Co., D. W. Atkinson & Co., W. F. Brooks & Co.; hardware, R. E. Henry, W. A. Griffin, Wyatt & Bartell; furniture, M. O. Hicks; harness and saddles, J. P. Carl; watch-makers and jewelers, N. L. Lindsay, H. J. Hancock; photograph gallery, B. M. Rakestraw; boot and shoemakers, A. H. Budd, P. R. Stanfield, J. F. Nethery, J. Eslinger; wheel-wrights, E. B. Rosson, Paul Williams; cabinet-maker, L. L. Goacher; carpenters, H. Jack, C. B. Randall, H. Mark, W. M. Jones, W. H. Hancock, O. C. Davis; blacksmiths, McNair Bros., Bruner & Daniels, H. M. Martin; Hico Roller Mills, Gunter & Late; evaporating factory, W. O. Morris; wool carding mills, J. H. Chitty; furniture factory, Chamberlain & Woodmansee; bed spring and mattress factory, L. M. Prowse; Distillery No. 129, C. E. Noyes; steam saw and planing mills, Hinds, Wisner & Ragsdale, Suttle & Bruner; physicians, J. T. Clegg, J. F. Runyan, G. W. Jackson; dentist, J. A. Doss; attorneys, A. T. Rose, E. D. Feno, J. H. Trader; real estate, D. Shafer, Z. Abernathy, Rose & Davis; hotels, Ewing House, J. M. Ewing, proprietor; Fountain House, A. J. Davis, proprietor; butchers, Tolbert & Spencer; livery, Breedlove & Cresswell, M. N. Donaldson, I. S. Davis; churches, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal, South, Cumberland Presbyterian, Congregational, Missionary Baptist, Society of Friends, Christian; high-school—faculty last school year, principal, H. J. Blake; assistants, Misses Annie Egy and Gertie Backus, E. S. Gibbs.

Societies.—Key Lodge No. 7, A. F. & A. M., at Hico, was chartered long before the Civil War. At the beginning of the war its charter was taken to Texas, and kept by a lady who returned it after the war closed. The present principal officers are Felix Miller, W. M.; Dr. J. F. Clegg, S. W.; Frank Carl, J. W. It has a small membership.

Advance Lodge No. 435, A. F. & A. M., was chartered in 1887. Present officers, E. T. Smith, W. M.; G. W. Mead, S. W.; Rev. E. S. Gibbs, J. W. It has about thirty-five members, and is prospering. Among its charter members were W. H. Hancock, D. R. Hammer, G. W. Mead, A. J. Norris, J. H. Walker, D. B. Swallow, Levi Davis, J. J. Preece and R. P. Pegues.

Calumet Lodge No. 5, American Protective League, was chartered in the spring of 1886, with ten members. It now has thirty-seven members in good standing. Its officers are F. M. Reager, ruler; J. Van Butler, financial secretary; T. T. Chamberlain, recording secretary; S. A. Broyles, treasurer. It is progressing satisfactorily.

Agricultural Wheel, No. 984, was chartered in the fall of 1885, and has now about thirty members.

Streeter Union Labor Club was organized August 3, 1888, with thirty members. John H. Chitty, president; C. B. Randall, vice-president; A. J. Egy, secretary; J. B. Newbury, treasurer.

Siloam Springs Lodge No. 91, I. O. O. F., was chartered in 1882, with C. B. Randall, A. J. Egy, John H. Chitty, T. J. Patton, J. B. Newbury, John A. Denny and others as charter members. Present officers, A. G. Wilkinson, N. G.; C. B. Randall, V. G.; A. J. Egy, Sec.; W. F. Brooks, Treas. It has from thirty to forty members, and is in a prosperous condition.

Curtis Post No. 9, G. A. R., named after Gen. Curtis, of Pea Ridge fame, was chartered in 1884, and has had since its organization 109 members. Lewis Simmons is Post Commander, and E. D. Feno, Post Adjutant.

The Siloam Press.—The first paper published in Siloam City was the Sun, established in 1880, by Thomas Gallagher. In 1881 it was changed to the Dispatch, continued about a year, and then suspended. The Globe was established in 1881, by D. O. Bell, who published it about one year only. The Arkansas Herald, an eight-column folio, was established in 1882, by S. Abernathy, who published it two years, and then transferred it to Messrs. Grammer & Dameron, who published it one year, and then J. B. Dameron became sole manager of the paper, and continues to publish it. It has a good circulation, and is Democratic in politics. The Locomotive, a six-column quarto, was established in December, 1886, at Springdale, Ark., by H. Milton Butler and J. Van Butler, and was moved by the latter to Siloam Springs in August, 1887, where it continues to be published; J. Van Butler is sole proprietor. The paper is independent in politics, and has also a good circulation. The Siloam papers are well printed and edited, and receive liberal support from local advertisers.

SULPHUR SPRINGS.

This delightful summer resort is beautifully situated in the vale of Butler Creek, on Section 23, Township 21 north, Range 33 west, and on the line of the survey of the Kansas City, Fort Smith & Southern Railroad, now graded to Split-Log, in Missouri. It was surveyed and laid out in December, 1885, by S. B. Robertson, for the proprietors, Hibler & Cox. Lyons' addition thereto was laid out in May, 1887, and the whole village was re-surveyed in July of that year, by Mr. Robertson, for Charles Hibler and John Black. The group of springs at this place "includes one white sulphur, one potash sulphur, one magnesia, one chalybeate, one nitre, and one intermittent freestone spring, and is distant by highway northwest from Bentonville eighteen miles; from Split-Log, Mo., sixteen miles; from the Missouri State line, one and one-half miles, and from the line of the Indian Territory, eight and one-half miles." The village, surrounding the main group of springs, lies on a gently inclining plane, with a gravelly soil, and the natural scenery in every direction is "romantic and wild," like that usually seen from the valleys of a mountainous country. The village is in the heart of a region of cavernous limestone caves, there being fifteen caves within the radius of five miles. An elevated site, just south of the village and springs and overlooking the same, has been selected for the erection of a commodious hotel. The promenade grounds reserved around the springs contain several acres, beautifully ornamented and shaded with natural forest trees, some of which are gigantic in size. Of the five vales, which form a junction at this place, three of them open toward the southward, and the place is protected from the chilling winds of winter by a semi-circular mountain ridge rising high above it. .

The flow of the mineral springs is sufficient to supply 10,000 people. The supply of water for domestic use, the source of which are springs near at hand, is collectively 700,000 gallons per day. The largest of the springs producing this supply is about one and a half miles southeast of the village, and over 100 feet above it. A good hotel, with adjacent cottages for the accommodation of guests, is now in operation, under the able management of Mr. Charles Hibler and his lady. An excellent bath-house has just been completed. A first-class livery stable stands near the pleasure grounds, the proprietors of which are always ready to furnish rigs for pleasure drives.

The village also contains a post-office, stores, a school-house, and a number of residences, and deserves especial mention as being the neatest and most cleanly kept village or town in Benton County. The approaches to the village are by hack line from Bentonville; by same from Southwest City, Mo., ten miles; and from Split-Log, Mo., sixteen miles, and it is confidently expected that this will soon be improved by railroad communication north and south.

There is no doubt about the waters at Sulphur Springs containing medicinal qualities, as every person that has used them can readily testify. The white sulphur spring is the most noted, and contains the greatest amount of curative qualities. With or without a railroad, this place is bound to remain a favorite resort for invalids and pleasure seekers.

The Benton County Bulletin, published at Sulphur Springs, was established at Bentonville in July, 1888, by its present editor and proprietor, John R. Huffman, and was moved to Sulphur Springs early in September following. It is a four-column quarto, is neatly printed, and labors in the interest of Republican principles.

VANWINKLE MILLS.

This very lively place is situated on Section 22, Township 19 north, Range 28 west, and is worthy of especial mention on account of its being the headquarters of the native lumber industry of Benton and other counties. Peter Vanwinkle erected the first saw-mill at this place in 1858, and ran it until some time during the war, when it was burned, it is said, by Confederate bushwhackers to prevent its being used by the Federal armies. It was rebuilt in 1866 and run until 1882, when it passed into the hands of J. A. C. Blackburn, son-in-law of its original proprietor. Mr. Blackburn has made some improvements, and continues the business on an extensive scale. The mills are inclosed in a building 70x90 feet in size, two stories high, and all covered with an iron roof. The power consists of a 150-horse power engine, with a 22x30 inch cylinder, and a balance wheel twenty feet in diameter and weighing 20,000 pounds. The steam capacity, equal to 200-horse power, consists of three boilers twenty-four feet in length and forty-two inches in diameter, with four twelve inch flues in each. The smoke stack is five feet in diameter and sixty feet high. The machinery consists of one circular saw, two planers, three cut-off saws, two rip saws, one resawing machine for making bevel siding, one shingle machine, one scroll saw, two moulding machines, one tenanting machine, one mortising machine, one automatic emory wheel for grinding planer bits, one lathe for turning iron and one for turning wood.

Mr. Blackburn has also another mill at Rock House, in Madison County; capacity, 20,000 feet per day, with all machinery for preparing the lumber ready for the builder's use. He also has in his employ two portable mills, one in Madison County and one in Benton County, four miles east of the home mill, cutting lumber for him by the thousand feet. The capital invested in this enterprise, including mills, machinery, teams, wagons, lands, etc., is about $60,000. The immense amount of lumber manufactured by Mr. Blackburn is all sold in home markets—in Benton, Madison and Washington Counties. He employs fifty hands, about twenty in Madison and thirty in Benton County, and he owns 17,000 acres of land, principally in these counties, 16,500 of it being timbered and the balance being farm land.

WAR EAGLE MILLS.

This little village, consisting of the War Eagle Roller Mills, a large general store, blacksmith shop, and other industries, together with a small number of residences, is located in the beautiful and romantic valley of War Eagle Creek, in the southeast part of Benton County. Sylvanus Blackburn built the first mills at this place, consisting of a saw-mill and grist-mill, in 1848. These mills were used for a number of years, and until a second grist-mill, four stories high, was erected. This mill was burned during the war by order of a Confederate general, as claimed by Mr. Blackburn. The present mills were built about 1872. They are now operated by James K. P. Stringfield, who does an extensive business. This is one of the best water powers in Arkansas.

There are a few post hamlets, containing a post-office and store, etc., in the county not herein named. There is a telephone line extending from Rogers via Bentonville and Springtown to Siloam Springs.

EDUCATION AND LITERATURE.

For many years after the formation of the State of Arkansas her educational facilities were of the most meager kind, and although many improvements have been made in the past, it may truthfully be said that in this respect she is still far behind many of her sister States, though perhaps fully on a par with those having had the same opportunities. But few of the children of the early settlers of Benton County enjoyed the benefit of schools, even of the poorest class, while the great majority of them were, on account of the very few schools and the great distance to them, almost entirely deprived of educational facilities. The only schools taught in those days were subscription schools, and those were taught only in neighborhoods sufficiently settled to maintain them. With but few exceptions the early teachers were very illiterate, being able only to read, write and "cipher." And frequently they would contract to teach "'rithmetic" only to the "rule of three." Subsequently, when villages became established, or neighborhoods became thickly settled, a few select schools or academies were established therein by men well qualified to teach, but, on account of the tuition necessarily charged, none but the more wealthy classes could avail themselves of these privileges, so upon the whole the children of the poor had to be reared with but little education farther than what could be imparted to them by their parents.

The pioneer schools were always taught in the old-fashioned log cabin school-house, with its puncheon floor and stone fireplace, with stick and mud chimney, and with seats made of split logs, the flat side being hewed smooth with an ax or broad-ax. The early school-teachers who taught in the War Eagle neighborhood were James Martin, Moses Dutton, Alfred Laws, Holland Hines and Thomas Macon. The latter is said to have been well educated, while the education of the others was not up to the standard required of teachers at the present. In 1840 a school was taught in a log school-house in the neighborhood of the settlement of Walter Thornberry, in the southern part of the county, by a young man who also professed to be a Christian minister. W. W. Burgess, now of Springtown, was one of his pupils, and he relates the following rather ridiculous incident. He did not like his teacher, and did not believe that he was what he professed to be, a Christian man, and while he (Burgess) behaved at school, and respected the young man as a teacher, he did not feel constrained to respect him as a preacher. So, on one Sunday when the young man was to preach in the school-house, young Burgess saddled an ox and rode it to church, at the same time wearing upon his head a raw coon-skin for a cap. After service he again mounted the ox and escorted a young lady to her home—she having attended the service on horseback—and took dinner with her. Mr. Burgess delights to relate this incident, but declines to give the lady's name for publication.

About the year 1842 a Mr. Holsten, or Holstein, taught the first school in the vicinity of the present town of Siloam Springs. He taught in "a little cabin," and some white children from the Indian Territory attended his school. Among these may be mentioned Mrs. Cal. D. Gunter, of Hico. In 1844 or 1845 a school and church combined was built in Maysville, that being then the largest town in the county. This house is not standing now. The Shelton Academy, at Pea Ridge, was erected about the year 1851, and Prof. Lockhart taught the first school therein. He was succeeded by other teachers, and the academy was kept up until about the year 1858, when it was abandoned, and the building turned into a store-room. In 1853 and 1854 J. Wade Sikes, now one of the proprietors of Rogers, taught school near Ben-tonville. His patrons boarded him and paid him $15 per month for his services. After this he taught the Shelton Academy at Pea Ridge for two years, where he had about forty pupils in attendance. Upon the approach of the Civil War the few schools that were being taught in Benton County were closed, and none were opened again until some time after the war.

The Free School System.—In the constitution of 1836, under which the State of Arkansas was admitted into the Union, under Article VII, is found the following general provision pertaining to education, viz :

“ Knowledge and learning, generally diffused through a community, being essential to the preservation of a free government, and diffusing the opportunities and advantages of education through the various parts of the State being highly conducive to this end, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to provide by law for the improvement of such lands as are or hereafter may be granted by the United States to this State for the use of schools, and to apply any funds which may be raised from such lands, or from any other source, to the establishment of the object for which they are or may be intended. The General Assembly shall from time to time pass such laws as shall be calculated to encourage intellectual, scientific and agricultural improvement, by allowing rewards and immunities for the promotion and improvement of arts, science, commerce, manufactures and natural history, countenance and encourage the principles of humanity, industry and morality.”

This reads well, but it makes no provision for a system of free schools wherein the children of the poor can be educated along with those of the rich. It was the ruling opinion in Arkansas, as it was in all slave States, that every man should educate his own children, and that no man should be taxed to educate another's children; consequently the framers of the first constitution of the State did not provide for the inauguration of a system of free schools, and following it the General Assembly did not “ from time to time pass such laws as should be calculated to encourage intellectual, scientific and agricultural improvement,” etc. But with the abolition of slavery the way was opened for the subsequent inauguration of a method or system whereby "knowledge and learning, * * * being essential to the preservation of a free government," might be generally diffused throughout the State.

The constitution of Arkansas, made in 1864, during the continuance of the late war, contains under Article VIII an exact copy of the aforesaid provision pertaining to education found in the constitution of 1836. It also contains a few other general provisions which may be considered to be in the general line of education, but says not a word about "free schools." Passing on to the constitution of Arkansas made and adopted in 1868, under Article IX is found nine sections pertaining to education, the first and seventh of which reads as follows, to-wit:

SECTION 1. A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence among all classes being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the general assembly shall establish and maintain a system of free schools for the gratuitous instruction of all persons in this State between the ages of five and twenty-one years, and the funds appropriated for the support of common schools shall be distributed to the several counties, in proportion to the number of children and youths therein between the ages of five and twenty-one years, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law, but no religious or other sect or sects shall ever have any exclusive right to, or control of, any part of the school funds of this State. * * *

SECTION 7. In case the public school fund shall be insufficient to sustain a free school at least three months in every year in each school district in this State, the general assembly shall provide by law for raising such deficiency by levying such tax upon all taxable property in each county, township or school district, as may be deemed proper.

The other seven sections of the ninth article of this constitution defined what should constitute the common-school fund, and how the income therefrom should be distributed, and how taxes should be levied and collected for the building of school-houses, etc., etc. Here, then, is found, under the constitution of 1868, the first provisions for the inauguration of the free school system of the State of Arkansas. In accordance therewith laws were subsequently passed creating the system. Much prejudice existed throughout the State against this constitution and the party in power that adopted it. Education for the masses, however, having obtained a foothold, will itself in the course of time remove all prejudice from it, at least all that can be of injury to

it. In evidence of the removal of this prejudice the XIVth article of the present constitution of the State of Arkansas, made and adopted in 1874 by the political party that was then and has ever since been in power, is here inserted in full:

SECTION 1. Intelligence and virtue being the safeguards of liberty and the bulwark of a free and good government, the State shall ever maintain a general, suitable and efficient system of free schools whereby all persons in the State between the ages of six and twenty-one years may receive gratuitous instruction.*

SECTION. 2. No money or property belonging to the public school fund, or this State for the benefit of schools or universities, shall ever be used for any other than for the respective purposes to which it belongs.

SECTION 3. The general assembly shall provide by general laws for the support of common schools by taxes, which shall never exceed, in any one year, two mills on the dollar, on the taxable property of the State, and by an annual per capita tax of one dollar, to be assessed on every male inhabitant of this State, over the age of twenty-one years. Provided, the general assembly may, by general law, authorize school districts to levy, by a vote of the qualified electors of such district, a tax not to exceed five mills on the dollar in any one year for school purposes. Provided, further, that no such tax shall be appropriated to any other purpose, nor to any other district than that for which it was levied.

SECTION 4. The supervision of public schools, and the execution of the laws regulating the same, shall be vested in and confided to such officers as may be provided for by the general assembly.

Two mills on the dollar, the authorized State levy, equals 20 cents on the hundred dollars, and five mills on the dollar, the authorized school district levy, equals 50 cents on each $100; consequently the maximum authorized levy for school purposes is 70 cents on each $100 of taxable property. It must be conceded that this is a liberal provision for the support of the schools, and under the wise and liberal provisions of the constitution, laws have been passed fully providing for the operation and enforcement of a system of free schools for the masses, both white and black.

In the county of Benton the territory has been subdivided into 126 common and four special school districts, making 130 in all. Under the law, schools have to be maintained, where maintained at all, not less than three months in the year, and as much longer as the funds arising from the amount of tax levied will sustain them. In some districts in Benton County the people levy only a two-mill tax, in others more, and in some the full

According to the late circular report of the State superintendent of public instruction, showing the amount of school funds in the State treasury ready for distribution on the 13th of August of the present year (1888), there were for the whole State the amount of $287,714.10, and of this amount Benton County gets as her distributive share the sum of $8,380.51. Now to this amount must be added the aggregate amount derived from the local levies made in each separate school district within the county.

The Sixteenth Sections.—When the State of Arkansas was organized Congress donated to it the sixteenth section of land in each Congressional township for the support of common schools, providing that these lands should be sold or leased, and that the annual income from the leased lands or from the amount of principal for which such lands were sold should accrue to and belong to the inhabitants of the township in which the lands were located. Afterward the State enacted laws to carry out the provisions of the donation. The county court was authorized to lease these lands, when in its judgment it was best to do so, and to collect the annual income. Provision was also made for the sale of the school lands. Under these provisions the most of these lands in Benton County were sold, and the money received for them was loaned in small sums to individual borrowers. But from the public records of Benton County it cannot be ascertained how much money was received from the sale of these lands, nor what has become of the amount of money that was received. It is known that much of the school funds belonging to and controlled by the several counties of the State was lost during and on account of the Civil War. A subsequent law required the balance not lost in each county to be paid over to a State board of school fund commissioners, by whom it is now controlled. The county of Benton has no school funds under its control at interest. It, however, gets its share of the annual income derived from the permanent school funds managed by the State officers. There is only one colored school in Benton County, and that is located at Bentonville, the colored population being insufficient in number to compose a school at any other place in the county.

Pea Ridge Academy.—This institution of learning was established in 1874 by Prof. J. R. Roberts. Its first session was opened in Buttram's Chapel, two and one-half miles east of the present academy buildings, and there the school was continued five years. Then, after a cessation of one year, the school was reopened at its present location, where the first academy building was erected in 1880. This building was 24x40 feet in size and two stories in height, with a school room and cloak room in each story. The school was chartered as an academy with a full course of instruction in 1884. In 1887 and 1888 an additional building, 50x60 feet in size and two stories in height, was added to the former, making the whole building as it now stands contain seven school rooms and a sufficient number of cloak rooms, the whole having a capacity for the comfortable seating of 250 students. The building is constructed of brick, and in its construction convenience, safety and ventilation were studied, rather than showy architecture. The academy is located on Pea Ridge, an elevated plateau of country nine miles northeast from Bentonville, in Benton County, Ark., and five miles northwest from Avoca, a station on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad. From the latter place it has a daily mail, and a tri-weekly one from Neosho, Mo. The healthfulness of the location is unexcelled, while the morals of the community are proverbial. There are in close proximity two dry goods stores and one drug store; five churches within two miles of the school, and two Sunday-schools within 100 yards of it. Eleven graduates have gone out into the world to testify of the character of the school since it was chartered as an academy. A good library of valuable books is connected with it.

Board of Trustees: J. R. Roberts, president; J. A. Steward, secretary; S. B. Smith, Dr. H. H. Patterson, John Hall and P. W. Roberts, of Pea Ridge, Ark.; also George T. Lincoln and R. J. Laughlin, of Bentonville, Ark.; J. D. James, of Alma, Ark., and W. B. Dean, of Wills Point, Tex.

Faculty: J. R. Roberts, A. M., principal; J. A. Steward, principal intermediate department; Miss Nannie Roberts, principal primary department; J. W. Osborn and P. S. Jones, assistants; Miss Lillie Dale, instruction in instrumental music; T. A. Coffelt, M. D., lectures on anatomy, etc.

Benton County may well be proud of this institution, with its successful operation, and eminent satisfaction given.

Bentonville Public and High School.—The public school building of Bentonville is located in a beautiful grove of natural forest trees, about one-half mile southwest of the court-house. It is a large two-story brick building, containing seven school-rooms, besides the necessary halls and cloak-rooms. It was constructed in 1872, but was afterward burned down, and was rebuilt in 1881. The first session of the present school year commenced September 3, and at this writing, September 10, 1888, 326 pupils have been enrolled in attendance, and more are yet expected to come in. The faculty consists of Prof. William Stephens, principal; Prof. J. D. Partelow, Miss Laura Schwab, Miss Lou Taliaferro, Miss Flora Cotton, Miss Georgia Nesbit and Miss Ida Trotter. The number of pupils already enrolled is exceedingly large for such a small corps of teachers.

The Rogers Academy.—This is a handsome structure, three stories high, built of brick, and would be a credit to any country. It was erected in 1884-85 by the American Home Missionary Society and the people of Rogers, and has generally been and is now under the control of the Congregational Church and the citizens of Rogers, the former having five trustees and the latter four on the school board. The public free school is taught in connection with the academy. The first session of the present school year began September 5. Following is the faculty: Principal, J. W. Scroggs, academic department; grammar school department, Miss Mary G. Webb; intermediate department, Mr. J. R. Williams; primary department, Miss Ella W. Scroggs; music and drawing, Mrs. F. W. Hormon.

The Arkansas Traveler.—Who has not read and been greatly amused with the account of the "Arkansas Travelers?" Perhaps but few people are aware that some one in Benton County was connected with the authorship and preparation of that funny and interesting article. The reputed author of the "Arkansas Traveler" was Col. Sandy Faulkner, of Little Rock, and the individual who drew the illustrations which accompanied and formed a part of the article was Edward Washburn, a son of Rev. Cephas Washburn, a Presbyterian minister, who lived in Benton County, about six miles southwest of Bentonville, on the farm now occupied by L. B. Mallory. It is related by good authority that the author of that article in his travels actually met with and saw such a scene as he therein describes, the old backwoodsman with his fiddle, the rude log cabin, the wife and untutored children, etc. That article has been read throughout America, and perhaps in foreign countries, and many people believe that it has been a great injury to the State of Arkansas by creating the impression abroad that the family therein described was a fair sample of the people generally, which of course was not the case.

CHRISTIANITY.

The real pioneer settlers of a new country, those who select a wild and lonely spot away out on the frontier, and erect a rude habitation thereon, where they intend to make their future home, and where they do in fact remain and endure the privations incident to the settlement of a new country, and subdue the forest and prepare the soil for cultivation, and thus open up and make way for others to follow, are, as a rule, God-fearing and Christian men. The first real and permanent settlers of Benton County were no exception to this rule. Coeval with the first settlements the voice of the Christian minister was heard, pointing out to the pioneers the way to eternal life. And, as was the case in nearly all the settlements west of the Mississippi near this latitude, the Methodist Episcopal, Cumberland Presbyterians and Baptists were the pioneer churches in this county. The early ministers of these and other denominations preached in the cabin dwellings of the early settlers before any church edifices were erected, and members of all denominations then met together to worship. The settlers being so scattered there were not enough at any one place of the same denomination to form an organization until several years after the settlement of the county began. The services were generally conducted by ministers who traveled great distances to perform their labors, and who generally worked in the capacity of missionaries, receiving for their support the small contributions that the people were able to give them.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—In a very early day, probably early in the thirties, Rev. James Mayfield organized a church of this denomination in the vicinity of War Eagle Mills. Prior to 1839 Rev. Walter Thornberry organized a Methodist church at his residence in the southern part of the county, in the vicinity of Wager's Mills. Rev. Swaggerty was a pioneer minister of this denomination in Benton County, laboring during the thirties, and perhaps later. Martin and Walter, sons of Walter Thornberry, Sr., both became Methodist preachers. Other Methodist churches were established in the county in an early day, and when the separation took place, in 1844-45, nearly all the members thereof united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, thus leaving the original church without an organization in the county, and so it remained until 1882, when Rev. O. R. Brant, formerly of Eureka Springs, organized a society under a brush arbor at Rogers, with seven members, three or four of whom belonged to his own family. About the same time an organization of the church was effected at Siloam Springs. Since that time all the societies of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the county have been organized, and all belong to the Rogers District of the Arkansas Conference, with Elder Mattox presiding. The county is divided into stations and circuits as follows: Rogers' station includes one monthly appointment at Springdale in Washington County; Rev. H. H. Scroggs, who lives at Rogers, is the station preacher. The Bentonville station includes one monthly appointment at Cave Springs, and Rev. William Buck, residing at Bentonville, is the station minister. The Siloam Springs station includes only the city of Siloam Springs, and the present station minister is Rev. J. M. Jackson. The Mason Valley circuit consists of appointments at the following places: Springtown, Harmony, Moler's Chapel and Dripping Springs; Rev. John Welch is the preacher on this circuit. War Eagle Mills circuit consists of War Eagle Mills, Hickory Creek and Silver Springs; Rev. La Fayette Mason is the minister on this circuit. The Wheeler circuit, in Washington County, has one or two appointments in Benton County.

After organizing the church at Rogers, Rev. Brant remained and preached three years, and was succeeded by Rev. Mattox, who also preached three years. The church edifice at this place was erected in 1884, and the one at Bentonville in 1887-88. The church at Bentonville was organized in June, 1887. The aggregate membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Benton County is about 370.

Cumberland Presbyterian Church.—The first organization of this denomination in Benton County was formed about the year 1830, near the present site of Bentonville, being some distance east thereof. The second one was organized at Pea Ridge, and about the same time or a little later one was organized at Maysville. Revs. Andrew and John Buchanan, ministers of this denomination, were pioneer preachers in Benton County during the thirties, and are claimed to have been the first religious workers in the territory of the county. They were great workers in the cause of Christianity. Up to the time of the outbreak of the Civil War Rev. John Buchanan had preached in every county of Arkansas then organized. Following are the names of the several churches of this denomination now existing in Benton County, together with the names of the pastors thereof: Bentonville, Rev. F. T. Charlton; Woods, two miles east of Bentonville, Pea Ridge and Rogers, Rev. Peter Carnahan; Maysville, Rev. Johns; Siloam, Rev. J. D. Rush. The aggregate membership of these churches is about 500 or upward. Outside of these organizations there is a number of members of this denomination within the county.

Baptist Church.—The first Baptist society organized in Benton County was the one known now as "Twelve Corners." It was organized in 1842, in the log cabin residence of William Reddick, at the place where the famous Elkhorn tavern now stands. It was organized by Elders J. F. Mitchell and Charles B. Whiteley, the latter of whom resided in what is now Carroll County. Several years before that time Elder Whiteley had organized a church on War Eagle Creek, a short distance south of the Benton County line. He, like many other men, had certain peculiarities, one of which was a desire to preach his own funeral sermon. About a year before he died he announced to the public that if he lived to reach the age of fifty years he would then preach his own funeral sermon; and if he did not reach that age he had a man selected to preach the sermon at his death. He lived to the desired age and preached his own funeral sermon in Prairie Township, in Carroll County, near where he lived. After the sermon he gave a public dinner at his house, to which he invited all his friends. Many partook of his hospitality, and joined in the exercises of this pleasant and joyful occasion.

As time passed and settlements increased more Baptist churches were organized throughout the county. The Mount Zion Baptist Association was organized in Carroll County in 1840, and when churches of this denomination were organized in Benton County they joined the association. In 1886 the churches of Benton County, formerly belonging to this association, formed the Benton County Baptist Association. The first session of this association was held at Corner Springs Baptist Church, in the western part of the county; the second session at Pleasant Hill Baptist Church, near Rogers, and the third and last one was held in the Baptist Church at Siloam Springs, in September of the present year (1888). This church has become very strong, and in numbers is the strongest one in the county. According to the published minutes of the second session of the Benton County Baptist Association (those of the third session not being published yet), there were the following named churches of that denomination in Benton County, with pastors' names annexed, and a total membership of 1,971, to wit: Bentonville, I. R. Hall and J. B. Stark; Bloomington, W. F. Green; Butler Creek, G. W. Setser; Bethesda, I. R. Hall; Corner Springs, Joseph Setser; Elm Springs, J. C. Robertson; Flint Creek, Joseph Setser; Honey Creek, E. J. Hogan; Illinois, E. S. Gibbs; Mount Pleasant, G. W. Setser; Mount Enterprise, same; Mason Valley, L. Hine; Maysville, — Nelson; New Prospect, G. P. Rodgers; Pleasant Grove, I. R. Hall; Pleasant Site, A. J. Maxwell; Pleasant Hill, J. Dunagin; Pea Ridge, A. J. Maxwell; Rogers, J. Dunagin; Siloam, A. J. Estes; Southern Grove, S. S. Graham; Spring Creek, J. C. Robertson; Springtown, same; Spavinaw, — ; Sulphur Springs, J. W. West; Temperance Hill, I. R. Hall; Twelve Corners, W. R. Mahuren; Wager's Mill, J. C. Robertson; Walnut Hill, — ; Cherokee City, L. Hine; Lone Valley, S. B. Ford; thirty-one in all.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South.—This church, after its organization in 1844-45, continued to grow in strength, and now it has twenty-four separate organizations, and a membership of 1,600 in the county of Benton. The several organizations form an integral part of the Fayetteville District of the Arkansas Conference, of which Rev. James A. Peebles is the present presiding elder. The church of this denomination at Bentonville has been made a "station," and Rev. T. J. Reynolds is the present station minister. Another "station" is composed of the churches at Rogers, in Benton County, and Springdale, in Washington County, and Rev. B. C. Matthews, of Springdale, the station minister, preaches alternately at these places. The Bentonville Circuit lies northeast of the city of Bentonville, comprising the Pea Ridge country. It consists of Tuck's, Buttram's, Hileman's and Post Oak chapels; Rev. W. M. Baldwin is the rider on this circuit. The Clifton Mission lies east of the Bentonville Circuit and east of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad; Rev. R. P. Hardcastle is the minister of this mission. The Center Point Circuit lies south of Bentonville, and consists of the churches known as Center Point, Oakley's Chapel and Hebron; Alex. Matthis is the circuit preacher. The Siloam Circuit lies in the southwestern part of Benton County, and is composed of the church at Siloam Springs, and at Cincinnati, in Washington County, and other country churches; Rev. J. H. Meyers is the circuit minister. The Bloomfield Circuit lies in the west central portion of the county, and consists of the churches at Bloomfield and Maysville and some country churches. Between this and the Bentonville Circuit is a large tract of country not included in any circuit, but in which the church does missionary work. The value of the church property belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Benton County, is reported at $10,500. There are twenty-one local preachers of this denomination in the county. The number of Sunday-schools is sixteen, with 960 scholars belonging to them. The church has occasionally held camp-meetings at Buttram's Chapel, and is making arrangements to hold annual camp-meetings there hereafter. The membership of this church is fairly increasing, and the several organizations are doing good work.

Christian Church.—Elder Larkin Scott, now of Bentonville, settled near the Osage Springs in 1856, and upon inquiry found only one organization of the Christian Church in Benton County; and that one was located on Spavinaw Creek, about sixteen miles west of Bentonville. The preacher in charge was Elder Goodnight. The following year, upon solicitation, this elder organized a society of the Christian denomination at the house of Mr. Scott, where they continued to worship until the outbreak of the Civil War. Up to this time no other organizations of this church existed in Benton County, and the first one organized after the war closed was the one at Bentonville, which was organized in the fall of 1865, principally through the instrumentality of Larkin

Scott, who was elected as elder thereof, and preached his first discourse in February following. Since that time a large number of organizations of the Christian Church has been formed in the county, of which the following is a list of their names or localities, together with the names of the elders preaching at each, so far as they are supplied: Bentonville, E. T. Russell; Maysville, S. R. Beaman; Rogers, Lowell and Wire Springs, Larkin Scott; Pea Ridge, Prof. J. R. Roberts; Oak Grove and Antioch, W. S. Herman; Nebo, J. C. Lawson; Gordon Hollow, Bloomfield and Cherokee City, no regular preacher; Robinson, John Leonard; Siloam Springs, — Marshall; Mason Valley, Dr. G. W. Robinson; Brightwater, John Nantz; Roller's Ridge, no regular preacher; church north of Pea Ridge Academy, M. L. Banks; head of Sugar Creek, Elder Inman. This makes nineteen church organizations of this denomination within the county, all of which have been organized since the Civil War closed. Estimating the average membership of all of these organizations at forty-five, the aggregate would be 855 members, which is believed to be a fair estimate.

In May, 1887, Elder Larkin Scott, at the age of seventy, baptized and took into church fellowship "Uncle Dick" Bennett, whose age, according to best information, was one hundred and nine years. Mr. Bennett had never made a profession of religion, and at the age of one hundred and nine years he concluded that it was time to prepare for death. He voted the Democratic ticket at the last election (September, 1888), and still lives at this writing.

Presbyterian Church.—Of this denomination there never has been but one organization in Benton County. It was organized about 1844-45 at the head waters of the Osage, six miles southwest of Bentonville, by Rev. Cephas Washburn, who resided there, and was missionary, by appointment, for the Cherokee Indians. He preached there about six years, until the church was discontinued at that place. It was reorganized at Bentonville about 1852 by Rev. Joshua F. Green, of Little Rock, and Rev. W. K. Marshall, of Van Buren, Ark., and Rev. A. W. Morrison, of Bentonville. The latter served as pastor of the church until he was killed, during the war, while returning from mill.

On February 5, 1870, the church was again reorganized, this time by Rev. C. M. Richards, an evangelist under the Arkansas Presbytery, assisted by Rev. W. A. Sample. Rev. Richards remained and preached until his death, which occurred August 27, 1872. The congregation was without a pastor until July 1, 1873, when Rev. D. C. Boggs took charge as stated supply, and still stands in that relation to it. The present membership of the church numbers fifty-eight, and they are scattered throughout the county. The Sabbath-school has a fair average attendance, and is kept up throughout the year. A. W. Dinsmore is the superintendent. The fine brick edifice of this denomination was erected in 1877.

The Congregationalists have a church at Rogers, and also at Siloam Springs, and the Society of Friends have a church at the latter place. There may be a few organizations of other denominations, not herein mentioned, in the county.

The churches of all denominations in the towns and villages sustain Sunday-schools throughout the year, while most of them in the country have their Sunday-schools during the summer months.

HISTORY OF WASHINGTON COUNTY.

TOPOGRAPHY, GEOLOGY, ETC.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, next to Benton County on the north, is in the northwest corner of Arkansas, lying against the Indian Territory on the west, and bounded on the east and south by Madison and Crawford Counties, respectively. It embraces twenty-seven townships and an area of 569,600 acres, divided almost equally into valleys, plateaux and inclined surfaces or terraces. An idea of the general surface may be gained by considering the county to have once been a rolling plateau with for its southern, eastern and western margins the Boston Mountains and their several branches; then allowing Fayetteville's region to be the highest point, with gentle slopes of the county to the northwest and northeast, you have the White River on the east and the Illinois River on the west, both with a bewildering network of tributaries washing out among the plateaus, the terraces and valleys, giving a somewhat "islanded" appearance. What is known as East Heights at Fayetteville has an altitude of 1,731 feet above sea level, while some valleys are probably not more than 1,000 feet above the sea. The Illinois River, with its main branches, Clear Creek, the Evansville, Ballard and Barren Forks, drain probably the largest part of the county, while the White River, and its Main, Middle and Southwest Forks cover the remainder excepting that part below the Boston Mountain ridge, which is drained chiefly by the tributaries of Frog Bayou and Lee's Creek. The drainage is even, and the streams are fed almost entirely from splendid springs which burst from the mountain ledges, in some cases affording excellent water power at their source.

In geology few regions show the diversity observed in Washington County. Almost every geological period is represented, from the protruding ancient sandstones to the quarternary formation, which is most prevalent. According to David Dale Owen's report the base rock of the county is the cherty barren limestone, although some of the deepest cuts on White River in the northeast exhibit black shale below that. The following lists show the superposition of rocks in various parts of the county, according to Prof. Owen's approximation. In Townships 17 and 18, Range 29 west: (1) White, yellow and brown sandstone, some of cellular structure, 200 feet; (2) ferruginous and dark shales, 40 feet; (3) chert, 40 feet; (4) cherty limestone, 35 feet; (5) black cherty shale, 40 feet. In the ridge southeast of Fayetteville: (1) Sandstones of the mill grit series with peculiar fossils, 100 feet; (2) calcareous bands; (3) sandstone of the millstone grit series, cellular and carbonaceous, 125 feet; (4) shales, including eight inches of coal and fire clay, 40 feet; (5) sandstone, 6 feet; (6) penitential limestone, 4 feet; (7) shales, including an inch or two of coal, in the cut below Cato's Spring; (8) Archimedes limestone, 30 feet; (9) shales, calcareous bands with pyrites, gypiferous shale, black shale with carbonate of iron, 40 feet. In Township 15, Range 29 west, on Wood's branch, Middle Fork of White River: (1) Brown sandstone with amygdaloidal cavities; (2) (space concealed with shales); (3) Archimedes cavernous limestone; (4) grey and black shales, with perhaps some interstratified sandstone, and including, near its base, a band of dark fossiliferous, pyritiferous limestone, and segregations of carbonate of iron. Another section on the Middle Fork of White River: (1) Sandstone, probably underlaid with shale, 50 to 100 feet; (2) Archimedes, cavernous and concretionary limestone, 40 to 60 feet; (3) grey shale, pyritiferous limestone shale. In the ridge at the point where the road crosses East Fork of the Illinois River: (1) Soft brown sandstone, a few feet of limestone followed by sandstone, 80 feet; (2) ferruginous, sandy shales, 30 feet; (3) Archimedes limestone, 70 feet. The succession at Cane Hill: (1) Fine grained sandstone, 15 to 20 feet; (2) limestone, a few feet; (3) coarse yellow sandstone, 40 feet; (4) greenish grindstone grit, 45 to 70 feet; (5) Archimedes limestone, 60 feet; (6) marly shales in the bed of the branch. Superposition from Cane College Hill to Barren Fork of the Illinois River: (1) Shistose sandstone of College Hill, Archimedes limestone over Boonesboro Spring, 45 feet; (2) dark shales, 10 to 15 feet; (3) freestone or building stone; (4) shale; (5) chert; (6) fossiliferous limestone; (7) sandstone; (8) chert and cherty limestone of the Barren Fork of Illinois River; (9) black shale. In Vineyard Township the succession is: (1) Fine grained silicious rock, approaching the texture of white stone in its character; (2) limestone; (3) shale; (4) yellow, coarse sandstone; (5) finer grained shistose sandstone of the character of grindstone grit; (6) Archimedes and other limestones; (7) dark shale rocks; (8) brown freestone; (9) shale; (10) fossiliferous chert; (11) fossiliferous limestone with marly and shaly partings; (12) chert; (13) cherty limestone; (14) black shale.

Although near Fayetteville the strata in places dip to a considerable degree, so that elevations occasionally may be due to that cause, the greater number of them are probably due to their composition of less easily eroded rock. The limestones have, through the action of water, become cavernous in many places, and this is no doubt the prevailing source of springs. The great variety of rock formation, from which the soils are formed by erosion and decomposition, gives rise to a marvelous variety of soils, which are so continually renewed that they seem inexhaustible.

The great variety of mineral resources are probably due to the results of the igneous disturbances farther south, which gives to the strata of Washington County its occasional dips. Prof. F. L. Harvey has given a remarkable list of minerals and rocks found in the State, and this county includes a large proportion of them.

It is estimated that 60 per cent of the whole area of the county is timber land, the leading varieties of wood being white oak, hickory, red oak, post oak, walnut, ash, elder, elm, dog-wood and locust. The timber is so important a feature and of so excellent a quality that the St. Paul branch of the "Frisco Railway" was built especially for making the timber accessible to supply several railways. At Fayetteville natural gas has been found in three different places, at the depths of 225, 140 and ninety feet. Its coal has not been developed, although there are evidences of a fair supply. The agricultural products are corn, wheat, grasses and clovers, oats, Irish and sweet potatoes, sorghum and tobacco, particularly; the sorghum cane is peculiarly suited to Washington County surroundings, and is rapidly acquiring importance. But little cotton is grown. The horticultural phase of the county is especially striking; its apples are first premium fruits wherever exhibited; peaches, grapes, pears, plums, cherries, berries and other small fruits follow, in excellence and abundance not far behind the apples. These, heretofore raised for home consumption, have, since the advent of the Frisco Railway, been raised almost exclusively for commercial purposes, and become famous throughout the country. Irish potatoes, onions, cabbage and turnips have increased manyfold in quality and abundance, and are shipped to Little Rock, Fort Smith, Springfield and other places.

The stock embraces hogs, chiefly Berkshire; large horses for city purposes are bred; mules for the Southern market; cattle, sheep and poultry are also raised, and in all branches new breeds are constantly being introduced. "The egg shipment is nearly double in value that of the wheat crop," says Dr. J. F. Simonds, an authority on Washington County produce. The value of live stock in the county (assessed) is $747,784; number of horses, 8,007; mules, 3,703; cattle, 21,242; hogs, 31,655; sheep, 13,021; number of acres of public land in the county, 150,477, 80,000 of this being United States land, and the rest State land; number of acres taxed, 419,123; assessed value of all lands taxed, $2,436,-316.80; assessed value of personal property, $1,662,309.42; total assessed value of real and personal property, $4,098,626.22; total revenue collected in the county for 1887, $78,029.16.

SETTLEMENT AND EARLY SCENES.

The Indian occupation of Northwestern Arkansas presents few points of interest. This territory was first claimed by the Osages, and was frequently visited by them in their hunting tours, but it is not probable that they had any established villages in this region. As early as 1806 some of the Cherokees settled above Point Remove, on the Arkansas River, and by a treaty made July 17, 1817, acquired title to all the country west of a line from the mouth of Point Remove, on the Arkansas, to a point on White River, three miles above Batesville, thence up White River to where Dubuque now is; thence west of south to the mouth of Frog Bayou. To this country a large number of Cherokees were transferred from the country east of the Mississippi. Bands of Shawnees and Delawares also established themselves in this region, and had quite a large village near the present town of Yellville, in Marion County. Hunting parties frequently came into what is now Washington County, where they found an abundance of game. It is said that they usually encamped on the elevation south of Fayetteville, which was then destitute of trees. This isolated hill commands a view of the surrounding country for several miles, and they were there protected from any unexpected attack from their old enemies, the Osages.

By the treaty of 1828 the Cherokees exchanged the territory occupied by them, between White River and the Arkansas, for that west of the present State line, to which they were removed. This country embraced the greater part of Lovely County, which was by force of treaty abolished, and the citizens of the country removed east of the western boundary line of the State. They were indemnified from such loss, by reason of such removal, by a grant of 320 acres of land to the head of each family, to be located within the limits of the State.

The first regular explorer of this portion of the State was Frank Pierce, who, about 1819, came up White River trapping and hunting. On reaching the mouth of West Fork, he ascended that stream to within two miles of Fayetteville, where he discovered a herd of buffalo. In attempting to kill one of them to get some meat for his supper, he saw a band of Indians. He lowered his gun without firing, dropped under the bank and retired for the night under the friendly shelter of a large elm. The next day he struck the waters of the Illinois, and followed that beautiful stream to its mouth, then down the Arkansas to where Lewisburgh now is, thence across to Batesville. About the year 1828 he came back and settled near the place where nine years before he had spent the night in hiding from the Indians.

The following facts concerning the settlement of Washington County are from the pen of the late Rev. John Buchanan:

"In the year 1826, before the treaty was made giving white people the right of settling in what is now Washington County, six families, to wit, John Alexander, two McGarrahs, two Simpsons and one Shannon, moved there. Their settlement being a trespass, a command of soldiers was sent from Fort Gibson to move them off. This was done in August, 1826. The settlers each had a small field of corn, which the soldiers cut down with their swords. After the soldiers returned to the fort the families shocked up their corn, and remained at their homes.

"In 1828 the treaty was made with the Cherokees, giving the right of settlement to the whites, and fixing the line which now divides the country from the Indian Territory. The immigration into and settlement of the country by the white people was rapid. Among the first were the Billingsleys, Pyeatts, Carnahans, Blairs, Simpsons, Marrs, Shannons and others, from Kentucky, and the Buchanans, Beans, Woodys, Parks, Evanses, Weddingtons and others, from Tennessee—the latter from South Carolina, and others from different States too numerous to mention. * * * *

"The first resident ministers of the Gospel were Revs. Fisher, Poston and Holcomb, of the Baptist; Sexton, Covington and Harrell, of the Methodist, and Carnahan, Blair and Buchanan, of the Cumberland Presbyterian. The first Sabbath-school was organized at the house of James Buchanan, on Cane Hill, in October, 1828, by Rev. John Carnahan, with thirteen scholars. This school has been kept up, with slight intermissions, for fifty years. Samuel Carnahan, the son of the founder, was its superintendent for twenty years, during which time he was absent only two Sabbaths. Rev. John Carnahan preached his first sermon at Crystal Hill, near the mouth of Palarm, fifteen miles above Little Rock, in the year 1812, which was perhaps the first Protestant sermon ever preached in Arkansas."

The western, northwestern and central part of Washington County was the first settled. The settlements began at Evansville and Cane Hill, and extended in the same direction to Fayetteville. The Cane Hill country presented the greatest attraction to immigrants, and that section was quite compactly settled before some other parts of the county contained a single habitation. This region was one of the most fertile spots in the State. For a distance of four or five miles hill and dale were covered with a heavy growth of sycamore, walnut and linden, intertwined with grape-vines, and underneath and between the trees was an almost impenetrable cane-brake. So thick was the cane, and so luxuriant the vines, that horses and cattle of the settlers frequently became entangled in them, and perished of hunger and thirst before their owners could find them.

The settlements here began in 1828. As mentioned by Mr. Buchanan, the Pyeatts were among the first to arrive. James and Jacob Pyeatt, as early as 1811, set out from Northern Alabama, in company with James and Samuel Carnahan, sons of Rev. John Carnahan. They embarked in flat-boats, and floated down the Tennessee, Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to the mouth of the Arkansas, then worked their way up the Arkansas to Crystal Hill, fifteen miles above Little Rock, where they were subsequently joined by several relatives and friends. All were natives of Kentucky, but had removed to Alabama to locate upon certain Indian lands, which, upon their arrival there, they found were not yet open for settlement.

As soon as Washington County was formed Crystal Hill community removed to Cane Hill, and they and their descendants have since been among the best people in Northwestern Arkansas.

The Buchanans were from Tennessee, and were among the most influential of the pioneers. There were six brothers of them: John, Andrew, Robert, James, Alexander and Isaac. Andrew and John Buchanan were ministers in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The former, familiarly known as "Uncle Buck," located at Prairie Grove, where his step-son, Col. James P. Neal, now lives. He died in 1857. James Buchanan located near the site of the White Church, where he passed the remainder of his life. Rev. John Buchanan was "Uncle John" to every one. For forty years or more he was one of the leaders of his church in Arkansas, and died at a ripe old age, beloved by every one who knew him.

The Billingsleys, together with Charles Adams and Samuel

Williams, came from Tennessee to Arkansas Post in 1814, and in 1816 located on Big Mulberry. Two years later they removed to near Fort Smith, and in 1828 or 1829 came to Washington County.

Mark Bean was a well-to-do and influential pioneer of the Cane Hill country. He was a native of Tennessee, and had come to "Lovely's Purchase" among the first immigrants. He was there engaged in the manufacture of salt. When driven out he went to Crawford County, where in 1829 he was elected to the Territorial Legislature. Soon after he came to Washington County, where he remained until his death. He is said to have been originally a Democrat, but having quarreled with A. H. Sevier, he allied himself with the Whigs, and became one of the leaders of the party in Washington County.

Of the Parks there were three brothers, Robert, Aaron and Joel, who lived on the Fayetteville road not far from the White Church. Robert was a farmer and Aaron and Joel kept a store. Afterward Joel went to Texas, and Aaron located on White River. The first stores on Cane Hill were opened by William Dugan and S. D. Lowell.

In 1830 James Coulter came from East Tennessee and settled on the place where Joseph Moore now lives. The next year James B. Russell, his son-in-law, with other relatives followed. Mr. Russell is still living. After living one year near Rhea's Mills, he removed to near where Boonsboro now is, and has since been identified with that community. In 1832 a school-house was built near Boonsboro, and Maurice Wright, a brother-in-law of Mr. Russell, was the first teacher. The next year Mr. Russell himself taught the school. Here attended the youth for the whole Cane Hill neighborhood, but not long after two schools were established, one at the White Church and the other at Elm Spring or Salem Church.

Among the pioneers of the Cane Hill region, besides those already mentioned, there were Thomas Pogue, who located on the site of Boonsboro; William Woody, at one time a judge of the county court; William Rhode and Hay Crawford, William Maxwell, Henry E. Campbell, William Wright, Isaac Spencer, Levi Richards, James Mitchell, A. Whinnery, Charles McClellan, Joseph and Benjamin Garvin.

The settlements in the vicinity of Evansville were made at a slightly earlier date than those on Cane Hill. Mr. Buchanan's recollection of them has been given. Other pioneers of this part of the county may be mentioned as follows: Samuel and Daniel Vaughn, William Reed, Coleman Cox, George Gibson, Thomas Tennant, Jesse Goddard, Charles J. Sievers, Thomas Ballard, George Morrow, John Morrow, John Ish, John Williams, Lewis Evans, S. F. Gray, Henderson Bates, D. C. Edmiston, John Cole and William Oliver. Coleman Cox came from Warren County, Ky., with his family in 1821, and lived in Sebastian County until 1828, when he removed to Washington County, and located on the head of Barren Fork, four miles south of Boonsboro. He had three sons, Edmiston, Samuel and Burwell, and two daughters, one of whom married Peter Pyeatt. Rev. Thomas Tennant came to Arkansas in 1819, and lived in Pulaski County until 1829, when he took up his residence in Washington County. He died near Evansville in 1885, at the extraordinary age of one hundred and fourteen years. He was a minister in the Methodist Church for ninety years. Thomas Ballard, George Morrow, S. F. Gray and Henderson Bates are still living. D. C. Edmiston, who was a native of Tennessee, came to the State when thirteen years of age. He lived in Clark County until 1835, when he removed to Washington County, and resided four miles south of Cane Hill until his death. In 1831 Lu C. Blakemore, the father of Dr. F. Blakemore, of Greenwood, Ark., came from Sumner County, Tenn., and after living a year or two in Fayetteville located eight miles east of Boonsboro. Other pioneers in the latter vicinity were Claiborne Lewis, Stephen Talkington, Elisha Dyer, John Billingsley and his father, James Billingsley, John Rutherford, William Stirman, Benjamin and William Strickler and James and David McWilliams.

Among the first settlers in the neighborhood of Walnut Grove were John Conner, Josiah Trent, David Reese, Ralph Skelton, Henry Tollett, G. A. Pettigrew, William Bonham, Joseph Lewis, John Pierce, Robert Anderson, Abel Johnson, George Lawrence, Samuel Woolsey, John Hart and Hugh, Abram and William Allen. John Conner was a Georgian by birth, but had been reared in Kentucky and Indiana, and had lived for a time in Illinois. In 1827, in partnership with several other families, he built a keel-boat, and set out for Arkansas. He remained one year in the vicinity of Evansville, where he found John Alexander, James Simpson, Hugh Shannon and John and William McGarroh. He made a permanent location near the present village of Farmington, and his daughter, who married A. W. Arrington, is still living in the neighborhood, an intelligent chronicler of pioneer days.

Josiah Trent was also a Georgian by birth. He first located in the southern part of the State, but in February, 1829, came to Washington County, and pitched his tent on the place where his son now lives. There he remained until his death, in 1877. For many years he was a local preacher in the Methodist Church. He was the son-in-law of Samuel Woolsey, who came to the county at about the same time.

George A. Pettigrew was a North Carolinian by birth, but had lived in Georgia, Kentucky and Missouri. From the latter State he came to Arkansas in 1825, and after a residence of five years in Hempstead County removed to Washington County. He lived one year on Cane Hill, and then made a permanent location seven miles west of Fayetteville. He was a prominent Whig, and in 1840 was elected to the Legislature. He was the father of Col. James R. Pettigrew and Z. M. Pettigrew.

The Allens were brothers, and old bachelors, and lived together for many years. Anderson, Click and Pierce all lived on the Illinois River. Among the first school-teachers in this neighborhood were Pleasant Tackett, Stephen Strickland and Alfred W. Arrington.

Of the first settlers in the Mount Comfort neighborhood may be mentioned Solomon Tuttle, William Cunningham, Isaac Murphy, W. A. and James McCurdy and Hezekiah Appleby. Tuttle and Cunningham were both men of wealth and substance, and had grown-up families. Murphy located here, and taught school before he began the practice of law. This was an intelligent and progressive community, and the first school of more than local reputation was established here. It was called "Far West Seminary," and was presided over by Robert Mecklin, the founder of Ozark Institute. The seminary was opened about 1835, in the brick church erected at this point by the Cumberland Presbyterians.

It has been mentioned that Rev. Andrew Buchanan made a settlement in Prairie Grove Valley in 1829, but a settlement had been made by Isaac Marrs nearly two years earlier, on the creek which bears his name. This was, doubtless, the first settlement in Prairie Grove Valley. The next year, his brother, James Marrs, settled what is now known as the Patton place. Both reared large families, and several of the prominent citizens of the county are numbered among their descendants. They came to Arkansas from Logan County, Ky., as early as 1817. Alexander Marrs, a member of another family, was also a pioneer of the county.

About 1830 James Crawford came from Tennessee and located near Viney Grove. He reared a large family of sons and daughters. The former numbered five—William, James, John, Mack and Robert, and the latter, four. Among his sons-in-law were John Moore, William Morton and James West.

One of the first settlers of the county was Eli Bloyed, who located on West Fork, several miles south of Fayetteville, and for the first year lived upon the flesh of wild animals alone. Among others of the pioneers in this portion of the county were John and Christy Horness, Samuel Mayes, P. and J. H. Estes, Jacob Coats, Alexander Rutherford and George Reed.

Among the early residents of the White River country, and that part of the county east of Fayetteville, were Dr. James Boone, Robert McCarny, Peter Mankins, Cortez Hitchcock, Rial Williams, Thomas Smith, Robert Marshall, James West, Daniel Ritter and Jacob Sheay. McCarny was from Alabama. He was the first county judge of Washington County; was elected to the Territorial Council in 1831; to the Constitutional Convention in 1836, and to the State Senate in 1836, in 1844 and 1848, retiring from the office in 1852.

Dr. Boone came to the county in 1830, and remained until his death, in 1856. He was a Whig in politics, and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1836. He also served one term in the House of Representatives.

Peter Mankins came to the county from Illinois in 1832, and although then past sixty years of age, he lived an ordinary lifetime after his arrival here. He was born on September 19, 1770, in Maryland, and died in 1881 at the age of over one hundred and eleven years.

The settlements in the north part of the county, in the vicinities of Springdale and Elm Springs, are mentioned in connection with those villages.

To "Uncle An" Fitzgerald, of Springdale, this chapter is indebted for some of the following notes on early "Arkansaw" life, so variously pictured by our humorists, and none give them with greater gusto and humor than "Uncle An" himself. Bear, deer, elk, buffalo, wolf, panther and wildcat were their next door neighbors in those days, and in true cannibal fashion these neighbors mutually preyed on each other. Cornmeal hoe-cakes being so prominent a feature of their eatables, their ingenuity hit upon the following unique form of perpetual motion: choosing a spring with a high opening, a forked stick was fastened before it, and balanced in the fork a pole, on one end of which was placed an inclined water trough, which, when filled by the flowing spring, would drop, raising the heavy pestle hung to the other end of the pole; the water at once being spilled, the trough would resume its position, and down went the pestle into the wooden mortar below, pounding whatever the mortar contained into fine powder. A half bushel or more of corn placed in the mortar at night would be transformed into palatable meal by sunrise. Home-made clothes of cotton, flax and wool were common; the husband and wife seeding enough cotton by the light of a pine knot or "tallow dip" to keep the busy wife with spinning material for the next day. Wild honey supplied the place of sugar, and when the first coffee appeared, "we tried to bite it like ye do beans, ye know," said "Uncle An." Letters were seldom received, but the advent of a missive was the signal for the neighborhood to gather round the 'Squire, whose learning enabled him to read to them news from the hieroglyphics; and when a like document was to be written, the 'Squire sharpened his goose-quill and, dipping it into the oak-ball ink, became amanuensis for the neighborhood. Card-playing was an amusement, and the settlers knew where Troy Gordon's "still" was, but "Uncle An" and his gray-haired compeers affirm that none of the well-known evils of to-day were attached to them then. "Hoe-downs" and reels—"none o' yer huggin' dances"—were tripped lightly, and with jollity, to the tune of "Roarin' River," etc., which some deft musicians drew from the gourd "fiddle" with its horse-hair strings and bow, and the gourd banjo with its squirrel-skin head and horse-hairs. "We had debatin' sasieties too—bony-fide (bona fide) debatin'," said "Uncle An." "Pursuit and Possession," "Art and Nature," and "Which would a man go futher fur—money 'er his best gurl?" were passed upon, and when it came time to walk home with some bright-eyed lass, "we walked a leetle ways off," said "Uncle An," "we didn't clevis arms uz they do now!"

The physical features of Washington County have undergone a very decided change in the last sixty years. When the pioneers first made it their home there were large areas of prairie which are now covered with a more or less dense growth of timber. The site of Fayetteville and several of the surrounding elevations, as well as the intervening valleys, were bare of timber, and were covered with a luxuriant growth of grasses, which afforded excellent pasturage for buffaloes and other herbivorous animals.

For the following account of the wild animals of Prairie Grove Valley this chapter is indebted to Col. James P. Neal. With little modification it applies to the whole county. He says: "My first acquaintance with the valley was in 1829. The buffalo had then receded some fifteen or twenty miles to the northwest. Their paths were still numerous, leading mainly from one lick to another. Their heads were scattered all over the prairies, one perhaps to every three acres of land. These licks were depressions in the earth, filled with water a little brackish in wet weather. In summer, when dry, they were the resorts of buffalo for the salt with which the earth was saturated, and were known as buffalo licks. They afforded salt for stock for many years after the country was settled, and even yet when not enclosed. In an early day hunters often captured and brought in buffalo calves, and tried to domesticate them, but they invariably died in one or two years. In that day buffalo skins were used for carpets, door mats, hearth rugs, mattresses, bed covers, saddle blankets and numerous other things. It is said that Thomas Wagnon, an old timer, while out hunting, wrapped himself, arms, hands and all, from shoe-top to chin, in a green buffalo hide at night. In the morning it was frozen and would not enroll, and when found he was well nigh dead. This same man burned out the first stump in which to pound corn into meal at this place, which was the only evidence of civilization when we first camped here. This we used until mills were built.

"There never were many panthers here. Capt. Mark Bean, who resided in the valley a few years in an early day, often related his panther experiences. He was on the snow looking for deer when he came across panther tracks. He followed the trail for an hour or more, when, passing under a large post-oak tree, he looked up and saw the panther crouched on a limb about twelve feet above his head, intently watching him. It was with an effort that he suppressed a scream. His hair stood straight up on his head. He walked on some steps, adjusted his hunting knife, turned and fired. The panther made a leap, screamed and fell to the ground dead.

"Bear were never numerous in this valley, the smooth open country not suiting them.

"The wolf, the great depredator on small stock, comes next in the scale of importance, and their name was legion, the black and gray. About dark in the evening they began to howl in four or five directions. At first their howls were piteous and doleful, making the most cheery household lonely. One or two at the different points at first, then others would join in until the packs would increase seemingly to forty or fifty, and as they joined in the howl became more earnest, increasing until it became an indescribable medley of whining, yelping, yelling, howling, discordant sounds that would make the hair rise on one's head. Then they would hold up five or ten minutes, after which a repetition of the performance would occur, the whole lasting from one to two hours. At about the hour the wolves opened, each family would begin to blow a horn. Some had two or more. This would put the dogs to howling, and was thought to keep the wolves near their hiding places. The hour of horn-blowing soon became of much interest to the settlers. It was a sort of evening roll-call, and if any family had failed to join messengers would have soon been at their doors inquiring the cause."

Up to the year 1838 the peaceful settlements of Northwestern Arkansas were rarely disturbed by serious crimes or acts of violence. It was almost Arcadian in its virtue and simplicity. Rarely were the courts called upon to investigate anything more serious than some trivial misdemeanor, and frequently the grand jury reported that there was no business before them. In 1838 the Cherokee Indians were brought from Tennessee and Georgia, and located on the territory since known as the Cherokee Nation. This immigration brought with it a cloud of those doubtful characters that have always been found upon the extreme frontiers of our civilized settlements. They were attracted here in unusual numbers by the fact that the Indians had been paid a large sum of money for the improvements upon their old reservation, and all were flush with gold and silver. They came to sell them whisky, to gamble and to trade with them.

"Runaways from every State in the Union were collected along the Cherokee line, and preyed alike upon the whites and the Indians. For the especial benefit of these desperadoes, as it seems, groceries were erected immediately upon the line, one-half the house being in Washington County and the other in the Cherokee Nation, so that when a crime was committed in one part of the grocery, the offender had but to step across a plank in the floor, and, lo! he was in another jurisdiction, beyond the reach of legal process issued by the court on the side he had left."*

With the advent of these desperadoes peace and quiet were at an end. Murders, robberies and other outrages were of almost monthly occurrence, but what was still worse these crimes went unpunished. Numerous suspected persons were arrested, indicted and tried, but convictions did not follow. The culprit had only to summon a few of his friends, prove an alibi, and be discharged. This state of things existed until law-abiding citizens lost confidence in the courts, and declared that they were in league with the assassin and the robber. The culmination was reached on both sides of the State line in 1839. On the Indian side the rival parties of Ross and Ridge had continued the deadly quarrel begun in their native country. On the night of June 20, 1839, the leaders of the Ridge party, Maj. Ridge, his brother, Elias Boudinot and his son John Ridge were assassinated by members of the Ross party. John Ridge was taken from his bed by a band of men, and in the presence of his family stabbed to death. Maj. Ridge had started for Van Buren, and was way-laid and shot from a bluff near the road, about seven or eight miles from Evansville. Boudinot was killed near his home at Park Hill, within about a mile of John Ross' house. Others of the Ridge party fled to escape a similar fate. These disturbances in the Cherokee Nation enabled the white desperadoes to commit crimes along the borders, and to cast the suspicion upon their savage neighbors, which proved a most convenient cloak to cover their evil deeds. On the night of June 15, 1839, the people living in the vicinity of Boonsboro, on Cane Hill, were aroused by the burning of the house of William Wright, and the cries for help from his terror-stricken wife and children. A neighbor was awakened by Mrs. Wright, who informed him in accents of indescribable terror that the Indians were upon them, that they had killed her husband and children and burned the house, and that they would all be massacred if they did not flee for their lives. In a few minutes the scattered neighbors were aroused, and many of them, taking their families upon horses, in buggies or on foot, set out to seek refuge from the savage hordes that were swooping down upon them. They spread the news of the Indian invasion, and soon the entire country was aroused. Others of the Boonsboro people, more courageous, decided to hold their ground until the danger became more imminent, and finally two young men, that had previously lived with Esquire James B. Russell, who resided a short distance from the Wright family, observing that he had not put in an appearance, resolved to reconnoitre his house and ascertain whether he had been killed. They did so, and found Mr. Russell unharmed and asleep in his bed. He was aroused, and the fear of the Indians having somewhat subsided, a party was made up to visit the scene of the murder at Wright's. There a harrowing sight met their eyes. In the yard and close to the burning house lay the body of Wright, pierced with a half dozen dagger thrusts and burned to a crisp; beside it was the body of his second daughter, a girl fourteen or fifteen years of age, with a bullet hole in the forehead. At a little distance was an infant, its brains dashed out. Upon the bed in the burning dwelling could be seen the forms of two little girls interlocked in each other's arms, as they lay when the revolvers and the bowie knives of the assassins began their bloody work. Upon further search two little boys, aged about six and ten years, respectively, were found at some distance from the house administering as best they could to their elder brother, a youth of some eighteen years, whose skull had been fractured. Another child, a little toddling thing, was found uninjured in a cornfield near by. The eldest daughter had also made her escape.

A jury was impaneled, and, in the absence of the coroner, an inquest was held by Esquire Russell, when the following facts were ascertained: Mr. Wright, who was a hard-working, honest farmer, and one of the first settlers on Cane Hill, had the previous autumn purchased a large number of hogs, which he converted into bacon, and during this spring had been selling it to the newly arrived Indians. From this source he had received a considerable sum of money, a part of which he had deposited with his brother, a merchant at Boonsboro, and a part he kept in his house. On the night of the murder the family retired early, but about 10 o'clock Mrs. Wright arose to get a drink of water for one of the children. While in a back room she heard a noise at the gate, and, peering out at a crevice between the logs, she saw three men approaching. A sudden pang of fear and suspicion seized her, and she crouched down where she stood. The next instant a knock was heard at the door, and her husband arose and opened it. Instantly three gleaming bowie knives were sheathed in his bosom, and he was dragged, dying, out of the door. His daughter, awakened by the disturbance, sprang to his assistance, only to receive a bullet in the forehead from the revolver of an assassin, who was so near that the powder burned her face. Mrs. Wright saw no more, but fled from the back door, and escaped to a neighbor's. The two older children, aroused by the confusion, attempted to make their escape; the girl was successful, but the boy was stretched upon the floor by a blow from the butt of a pistol, which fractured his skull. The two little girls were shot as they lay in bed, and the butchery was made as atrocious as possible to give color to the suspicions against the Indians. Two little boys were sleeping in a trundle-bed, under the one occupied by the parents, and were not noticed by the assassins. They did not awake until after the departure of the robbers, when the heat from the burning house aroused them. They arose, and with wonderful presence of mind succeeded in rescuing the wounded elder brother from the flames.

By daylight on the morning after the murder people from the surrounding country began to come in, and by noon hundreds, perhaps a thousand, had assembled. That night a council of old citizens was held, and the question of public safety was discussed in all its phases. The powerless condition of the courts was recognized, and after a long debate it was decided to take the matter into their own hands. A committee of thirty-six discreet and reliable citizens was selected to direct investigations and to punish the criminals should they be apprehended. The names of the members of the committee, as given by Col. James P. Neal, are as follows: Mark Bean, Rev. Andrew Buchanan, James Coulter, Levi Richards, Rev. Samuel Harris, Robert Bedford, John R. Pyeatt, Lewis Evans, John D. Moore, Rev. B. H. Pierson, William Oliver, Garvin Dunn, Leander Burnham, James Buchanan, James Hamilton, Aaron Parks, Robert Parks, T. C. Wilson, James Mitchell, William D. Crawford, Samuel Carnahan, James Crawford, Sr., Henry E. Campbell, John Tilly, Sr., Thomas Tiner, Rev. Thomas W. Norwood, William Crawford, Richard Bean, M. W. McClennan, Robert Buchanan, Isaac P. Spencer, William Munkress, Samuel Marrs, John Campbell, Henry E. Campbell and John Latta. Rev. Samuel Harris was chosen president of the committee. One hundred able and energetic men were selected as a company of light horse. They were sent in tens over the county, with instructions to arrest and bring before the committee all suspicious persons, gamblers, idlers and stragglers. Meantime the committee was engaged in trying to get some clue. Suspicion finally rested on James Barnes, William Bailey, Taylor S. Barnes, John Asbury and Alexander Richmond and Ellery Turner, all of whom were taken into custody and brought before the committee. Witnesses both for and against the prisoners were summoned before the committee, and several days were consumed in the trial. One by one they succeeded in establishing plausible alibis, and it became evident that all must be discharged. Bailey was a gambler and a stranger in the country, and was looked upon with greater suspicion and dislike than any of the others. The circumstantial evidence was much stronger against him, although he had proven as good an alibi. While the guards were conveying him to Boonsboro, where the committee was in session, he threw away a letter, which was recovered. It was written to his father, and stated that he had killed a man, and was about to leave for Texas. Also a shirt, sprinkled with blood, was found in his saddle-bags. For these he had a plausible excuse, and his alibi was good, but some of the citizens were not satisfied of his innocence. The night before the men were to be released they took him from the guards, and taking him to a neighboring mountain, endeavored to extort a confession from him by whipping him, but failing in this they turned him loose, and he disappeared from the neighborhood.

All of the suspected men lived near the Cherokee line. John and Alexander Richmond were small farmers, and Turner a farm laborer, who lived with his mother and sister. James Barnes was much superior to the others in education and intelligence. He had come from Howard County, Mo., a few years previous, and had lived in the family of Rev. Andrew Buchanan at Prairie Grove, where he attended school. He came of a highly respectable family, and is said to have been a man of unusually fine appearance. At this time he was married, and was keeping a grocery on the Cherokee line.

After the discharge of these prisoners the people returned to their homes and the excitement abated, but the light horse continued to ride, and the committee came together whenever circumstances rendered it necessary. About ten days or two weeks later Asbury Richmond was at his brother John's, and being intoxicated became angry with his brothers, John and

Alexander. A Mr. Hornage lived some sixty or eighty steps from John Richmond's, and he, his wife and daughter, and a young man who was boarding with him, heard Asbury Richmond accuse his brothers of several acts of stealing, and at last say: "You, you d—d rascal, helped to murder that family on Cane Hill, and I was taken up for it and disgraced in consequence." This was communicated to the committee, who had Asbury Richmond brought before them. He there made a statement in substance as follows: He said that his brother, John Richmond, James Barnes and William Bailey once proposed to him to go into an arrangement to get some money, but that he did not join them; that on Sunday after the murder John Richmond told him that they had done the business on Cane Hill, and that in a few days he would be able to pay the money he owed him. Upon his testimony John Richmond, James Barnes and Ellery Turner were arrested and taken before the committee. William Bailey had fled the country, but a search for him was instituted. As at the former trial witnesses were summoned for both the prosecution and the defense. James Barnes produced several witnesses to prove an alibi. Nathan Wofford testified that Barnes was at his grocery until about sunset, and that at dark they ate supper. After supper himself and one McCrackin went to the grocery and slept there, leaving at the house James Barnes and his wife, Taylor S. Barnes and Jacob and Patsy O'Bryant. Jacob O'Bryant, who was an honest and highly respectable young man, testified that he and his sister, having been belated on a journey, had slept for the night at Barnes'; that he had slept in the same room with Barnes; that from this room the only means of egress was by a door, and the night being warm he had placed his pallet immediately in front of the door, so that Barnes could not have left the house except by passing over him. This testimony was corroborated by the others present.

Against Barnes was introduced the testimony of Mrs. Wright, who swore that he had been at their house for bacon two or three times; that on the day before the murder Wright's wagons, loaded with bacon, had passed Barnes' grocery on the way to the Nation, yet during that day Barnes had called at Wright's for bacon, and while waiting for Wright to come from the field had asked many questions concerning the amount of bacon he had sold, the money received, etc.; that Wright had asked Barnes why he did not get his bacon from the wagons, and that he replied, he had not seen the wagons when they passed.

James Shelby, the driver of one of the wagons, was then called, and testified that he had stopped and talked with Barnes at his grocery on the morning referred to. This constituted the case against Barnes, outside of the confession by John Richmond.

In behalf of Turner, William Hunter, his brother-in-law, Mrs. Turner, his mother, and Mrs. Hunter, his niece, all testified that he, accompanied by William Bailey, had come home on the fatal night from a ball play, a short time after dark, and that they were at home at the hour at which the murder was committed. John Raymond, when brought before the committee, denied the charges that had been made by his brother Asbury, and refused to answer the questions of the committee. Finally, watching an opportunity, he broke from his guards, and made a dash for liberty, but being weighed down by chains he was quickly recaptured. After sitting speechless for a time, under pressure from the committee he at last agreed to make a full confession. He stated that the murder and robbery had been planned and committed by himself, Jack Nicholson, a resident of the Cherokee Nation, who was never captured, James Barnes, William Bailey, Ellery Turner and another man whose name has been forgotten. He related all the harrowing details of the horrible butchery, stating that their object had been to do the murder in Indian style.

After this confession Barnes and Turner still denied all knowledge of the affair, and demanded to know if they had not proved good alibis. The prisoners were remanded to the guard-house, an old log building formerly used as a school-house. After some deliberation, the committee took a vote upon the question: "Shall these men suffer death?" and it is said that but one vote was cast in the negative. The condemned men were then once more brought before the committee, and were sentenced to be hung on the following Monday, July 29, 1839. On the morning of that day about a 1,000 people assembled at the scene of the execution, just south of the present town of Boonsboro, near the residence of Thomas Pogue. By 10 o'clock, the hour appointed for the execution, the gallows was surrounded by a surging mass of humanity, white, black and red, all impatient for the exciting event, and fearful lest it be postponed. At last the wagon bearing the victims appeared. Each sat on his coffin, Richmond wearing a shroud, and Turner and Barnes in their accustomed dress. Arrived at the scaffold, they were given a few minutes in which to take leave of their relatives and friends. The confession of Richmond and the evidence produced at the trial was then read from the stand, after which the prisoners were ordered to stand up, facing the people. The chairman of the committee arose and requested all who sustained the action of the committee to raise their hands. About ninety-nine out of every 100 pairs of hands went up. The ropes were then adjusted, the victims standing on the rear of the wagon. A fervent prayer was offered by the Rev. Andrew Buchanan, the order to move on was given to the driver, and the next instant three writhing forms hung swaying to and fro beneath the gallows tree. Thus ended the first chapter in one of the most remarkable incidents in the whole history of lynch law. A second was to follow. William Bailey, whom more than any of the others was thought to have deserved punishment, had escaped, but the committee had been tracing his footsteps. He had gone from Cane Hill to Van Buren; thence to Shreveport, and from there to his father's home on the Hiwassee River, in East Tennessee, where all trace of him was lost. About the middle of December following a message was received on Cane Hill from Rev. Guilford Pylant, who lived a few miles south, that Bailey was at his house in charge of Creed Taylor and "Bill" Mussett, who had captured him in Pulaski County. A guard was sent down to bring him to Cane Hill, and the committee of thirty-six was again convened. The trial began the next morning, and, before the close of the day, the sentence of death was passed upon William Bailey. The execution was fixed for the next day but one, and at the appointed time he was hung in the same way, and at the same place, as his alleged confederates, David Donaldson acting as hangman. It had been thought that at the last moment he would confess the crime, but he died protesting his innocence.

After the excitement attendant upon these executions had somewhat subsided, a reaction naturally set in, and it began to be asserted that the men who had been hung were innocent, and the severest censures were placed upon the committee. In time there grew up two distinct parties in the county, the one upholding the action of the committee and the other condemning it, and to this day a reference to the "Cane Hill" tragedy arouses the gray haired pioneer, and you are soon made aware to which party he belonged. Some seven or eight years after the occurrence of these events A. W. Arrington, the talented preacher and lawyer mentioned in another chapter, wrote a highly imaginative account of the Cane Hill affair, which was published in a pamphlet entitled "The Desperadoes of the Southwest." It very unfairly reviewed the trial, and was filled with abuse of some of the leading members of the committee, and was justly denounced by those persons and their friends as an infamous slander. The members of the committee of thirty-six were men of high character, in fact it embraced some of the ablest Christian men in the county. The work they did they thought to be necessary, and they performed it deliberately and conscientiously. If they erred in their judgment it was an awful thing, but it was an error of the head and not of the heart.

In the year 1840 the committee officiated at another execution. This time a slave-girl, Caroline, was hung for the murder of her mistress, the wife of Andrew A. Crawford. Mr. Crawford lived at what is now known as the Neil place. He was subsequently a judge of the county court, and died at Corinth during the war. After the chores about the house had been done, it was customary for Caroline to assist her master on the farm, which was some half mile from the house. One morning upon reaching the field she informed her master that a tramp had called at the house just before she left, and she feared that he had some evil intentions upon her mistress. Mr. Crawford paid but little attention to this, but when he reached the house at noon he was horrified to find the bleeding and mangled body of his wife lying upon the floor near the fire, with wood piled around it as though the intention had been to burn it. He quickly gave the alarm, and the surrounding country was searched for the tramp who had committed the foul deed, but no such individual could be found. Caroline, however, by peculiar actions, attracted attention, and suspicion was turned upon her. She was examined and blood was found upon her clothes. She was tried by a committee of citizens, and made a full confession of the crime. A gallows was made by putting a pole in the forks of two dogwood trees standing about fifteen feet apart. The girl was placed in the hind end of a wagon, and the rope adjusted. All was in readiness for the fatal movement of the wagon, when the wretched creature appealed for one more drink of water. There was none at hand, and she was somewhat roughly denied this last request. With the cry of "water" upon her lips, she was swung off. When life was pronounced extinct, they cut her body down, and buried it at the foot of the gallows tree.

From this time matters quieted down, and although occasional crimes were committed, society resumed the even tenor of its way. In 1849 the "gold fever" reached the county, and many of the citizens became infected with it. From a letter written in April, 1849, to the Van Buren Intelligencer, the following facts concerning the Washington County company which went to California are gleaned.

The company met on April 21, and elected the following officers: Lewis Evans, of Evansville, captain; Thomas Tyner, first lieutenant; P. Mankin, second lieutenant; James S. Vaun, secretary, and Martin Scrimpsheer, of the Cherokee Nation, commissary. The company left the rendezvous on April 24, and five days later they had reached Grand Prairie. The company consisted of nearly ninety members from Washington County, thirteen from Madison, nine from Benton and fourteen from the Cherokee Nation. Those from Washington County were as follows: Lewis Evans, Hiram Davis, A. G. Evans, Leonard Shuler, Gus A. Shuler, William Hoge, Enos Slover, Isaac Hale and wife, James Blake, William Wilson, William Goddard, John Van Hoose, George Lewis, Wiley Cosby, Peter Mankins, James Dickinson, Jacob Strickler, Nathan Lewis, John Lewis, Nathan Thorp, John Ingram, John Powers, W. F. Woodruff, John Sanders, James L. Cartwright, J. R. Cline, George C. North, Edward Freyschlag, H. J. McRoy, Samuel McCulloh, James L. McCulloh, George McKey, James Carter, George McClure, K. Crumley, Thomas Creamer, James Morrow, Hugh Morrow, A. B. Crawford, J. M. Mathews, J. P. Kellum, A. B. T. Pyatt, Squire B. Marrs, James Carnahan, John Carnahan, James Pierce, John Carter, Cane Hill, Thomas and Aaron Tyner, William and Hiram Shores, Thomas Marwell, John Newman, B. Whitley, Christian Freyschlag, Henry Freyschlag, Joseph Chew, William Mallett, W. R. Cunningham, Fred P. Sime, James Ingram, William Crawford, Holy and James Hand, Misses Barbara and Mira Freyschlag, James Cartwright, Isaac Murphy, E. W. Aavid, James and William Irvin, Jacob Meyers, John M. Wham, James Divin, Mathew A. Divin, J. T. Edmondson, A. E. Edmondson, J. S. Crawford, A. A. Crawford, Robert Epperson, C. H. Holmes, J. J. Bean, Oscar Bean and Benjamin Sanders.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

The territory now embraced in the State of Arkansas was included in the purchase made from France in 1803. It belonged to what was denominated Upper Louisiana, which was formally transferred to the United States in March, 1804, and by Congress was placed under the jurisdiction of the Territory of Indiana, of which William Henry Harrison was governor. Soon after the transfer Congress passed an act for the organization of two Territories, Orleans and Louisiana, the boundary between which was the thirty-third parallel of north latitude. The latter Territory was divided into five districts, one of which, New Madrid, included the present State of Arkansas. In 1806 the district of Arkansas was created, but it was abolished the following year, and remained a part of New Madrid until after the organization of Missouri Territory. On December 31, 1813, the Territorial Assembly passed an act creating the county of Arkansas, and the following year Lawrence County was organized. The latter embraced all of the present State north of the mouth of Little Red River. On December 15, 1818, the southwestern part of the county of Arkansas was divided into three separate counties, Pulaski, Clark and Hempstead. By an act of Congress approved March 2, 1819, the Territory of Arkansas was established, and on August 3, of the same year, it was organized. The first session of the Territorial Assembly was held at the post of Arkansas in 1820, and during the session two new counties, Miller and Phillips, were organized. Upon the reassembling of the Legislature in October of the same year, Pulaski County was divided and Crawford County was formed. At the same time Independence County was erected from a portion of Lawrence County. In 1823 Chicot County was organized from a part of Arkansas County, and two years later the counties of Crittenden and Izard were established. During the session which convened in October, 1827, the counties of St. Francois, LaFayette and Lovely were created. The last named county included the western part of what is now Washington County, and also extended into the Cherokee Nation. It was formed by an act approved on October 13, 1827, and was in existence but one year. To understand its organization and abolition it is necessary to refer to some of the Indian treaties. The first treaty was made and concluded on November 10, 1808, between Pierre Choteau, agent for the Osages, and the chiefs and warriors of the Big and Little Osages at Fort Clark, on the Missouri River, in the then Territory of Louisiana. The Osages agreed that the boundary line between them and the United States should begin at Fort Clark, and run thence south to the Arkansas River. They did not claim below the Arkansas, and all the territory north of the Arkansas and east of the above line were by this treaty relinquished to the United States. Later, by treaties in 1818 and 1825, the Osages gave up their title to the greater portion of the land lying west of the line. The treaty of 1825 was made at St. Louis between Gov. William Clark and a deputation of chiefs and warriors of the Great and Little Osages. By it the title to the following territory was relinquished: "Beginning at Arkansas River at where the Osage boundary line strikes it at the mouth of Frog Bayou, thence up the Arkansas and Verdigris to the falls of the Verdigris, thence eastwardly to the said Osage line at a point twenty leagues north from the Arkansas River, and thence to the place of beginning." This tract was known as "Lovely's purchase," and afterward constituted Lovely County.

By a treaty between the United States and the Cherokees, who had been located in Arkansas, made on May 6, 1828, the western boundary of the State was defined as follows: "A line shall be run commencing on Red River at a point where the eastern Choctaw line strikes said river, and runs due north with said line to the river Arkansas, thence in a direct line to the southwest corner of Missouri." This cut off the greater part of Lovely County, and October 17, 1828, the Legislature passed an act extinguishing the county and establishing the county of Washington with the following boundaries: "Beginning at a point where the western boundary line of the territory strikes the northern boundary line of Township 12 north; thence east with the northern boundary line of Township 12 north to the western boundary line of Range 25 west; thence north with said line to the south boundary line of the State of Missouri; thence with said boundary line to the southwest corner of the State of Missouri; thence south with the western boundary line of the Territory of Arkansas to the beginning." By reference to a map it will be seen that Washington County at that time embraced all of its present territory, all of what is now Benton County, a little more than one-half of Madison County, and about one-fourth of the present county of Carroll.

The first court for the county was held in March, 1829. The following is a transcript of the record of the first day's proceedings :

At a circuit court in and for the county of Washington and Territory of Arkansas, on Monday, the 2d day of March, 1829, present: The Hon. James Woodson Bates, circuit judge, Lewis Evans, sheriff, returned into court list of grand jurors to serve as a body for the county at this term of the court, viz.: James Buchanan, foreman; James Billingsley, John Billingsley, John Conner, David Conner, James Simpson, Hugh Shannon, William L. Weddington, John Woody, William B. Woody, Benjamin Garvin, Daniel Vaughn, Alexander Buchanan and R. G. Crisp, who were sworn, received their charge and withdrew to deliberate. Lewis Evans, sheriff, was sworn into office and gave bond and security for faithful performance of his duties as sheriff of Washington County, which is approved by the court.

Ordered, That Larkin Newton, John Billingsley and Nathan Caughin be appointed a committee to view and work a road leading from the county seat to the southern boundary of the county at or near Cove Creek.

Ordered, That all that part of the county south of a line commencing at a point where the western boundary of the county crosses Matthew's Mountain, thence easterly with the boundary of said county until it strikes the Barren Fork, thence up the same to the forks, thence eastwardly through the prairie, so as to leave John Ish to the south of said line 100 yards, thence direct to a point 100 yards north of Coleman Cook's, thence due east to the eastern boundary line of the county, be established as a separate and distinct township, to be known as Vineyard Township.

Ordered, That that part of the county north of Vineyard Township and south of a line commencing where the western boundary of the county crosses Illinois River, thence up said river to the mouth of Marrs' Creek, thence up said creek to the forks near the Widow Edwards', thence up the left hand fork of said creek to its source, thence due south until it strikes Vineyard Township, be established a separate and distinct township, to be known and called by the name of Cane Hill Township.

Ordered, That all that part of the county lying north of Vineyard and Cane Hill Townships, and west of a line commencing where White River leaves the county, thence up said river to the mouth of Friend's Fork, thence with the dividing ridge between Friend's Fork and the middle fork of said river until it strikes Vineyard Township, be established a separate township, to be known and called Prairie Township.

Ordered, That all that part of the county north of Vineyard Township and east of Prairie Township be established a separate and distinct township, to be known and called by the name of Richland Township.

It is ordered by the court that John Woody, James Simpson and James Buchanan be appointed as commissioners to view and blaze out a road leading from the town of Franklin to George McInturff's mill, thence to the south boundary of the county toward Damon's Lick on Lee's Creek.

On motion, ordered that Thomas Wilson be appointed constable of Prairie Township, and that the clerk take bond and security of said Wilson in the sum of $400.

James Simpson is appointed constable of Cane Hill Township with the same bond.

Benjamin Garvin is appointed constable of Cane Hill Township.

Samuel Vaughn is appointed constable of Richland Township, bond and security $400.

John Wilson is appointed county surveyor of Washington County.

Ordered, That court now adjourn until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

On the following day the grand jury returned an indictment against Hiram Johnson for larceny, and reported their business completed. They were discharged, and court adjourned until court in course.

At the July term following Judge Benjamin Johnson presided. Thomas Garvin acted as foreman of the grand jury, which body, after one day's investigation, reported no business before it. Up to this time the courts were held in the dwelling house of John McGarrah. McGarrah had built two log cabins, one of which had a floor of puncheons, while the other was without a floor. The courts were held in the former; the latter was used as a dining room. At this term of the court the sum of $49.75 was appropriated for the purpose of building a courthouse. The contract was awarded to Samuel Marrs, and was completed before the next term. The building was made of logs, and a fire-place occupied an entire end of the house.

At the July term, 1829, a new township, called Illinois, was formed, with the following boundaries: "Beginning on the western boundary of the county, and running eastwardly with the north boundary of Vine Township to the forks of Barren Fork Creek, a little west of John Ish's; thence up the left hand fork near Pyeatt's mill, so as to leave all the present settlers on said creek east of said line; thence northwardly to the top of the dividing ridge between the Barren Fork and May's Creek; thence on said ridge with its meanders to Marrs' Creek; thence due north to the northern boundary of the county."

At this time, also, judges of election were appointed for the various townships, as follows: Illinois, elections to be held at the house of Joseph St. Clair, Richard Price, Job Ratliff and William Bowers; Richland, elections to be held at the house of Robert McCarny, Rial Williams, Stephen Holmesly and Robert Fletcher; Cane Hill, elections to be held at the house of William B. Woody, John Dodson, James Buchanan and Thomas Kiser; Vineyard, elections to be held at the school-house near Hugh Marrs', Jonathan Allen, Hugh Shannon and John Ish; Prairie, elections to be held at the court-house, Larkin Newton, John Wilson, Jr., and Christopher Harness.

In 1830 a county court was established, and Robert McCarny appointed county judge. No record of this court, prior to 1835, could be found. Meantime several new townships were formed, as is indicated by the following list of judges of election appointed for August, 1836: Prairie Township, Solomon Tuttle, James Byrnside, W. S. Wallace; Osage Township, J. B. Dixon, George Wallace and David Woods; Benton Township, Samuel Tiner, John McPhail and John McLaughlin; Clear Creek Township, Joseph Sinclair, William Clary and Isaac Cate; Illinois Township, Thomas Wagner, John Odle and A. Smith; Vineyard Township, Jacob Chandler, William Hunter and Jesse Goddard; Cane Hill Township, Henry E. Campbell, James Mitchell and H. Crawford; Mountain Township, John Ferguson, Samuel Stevenson and William Stirman; Helburn Township, William Ake, Ambrose H. Helburn and J. P. Cross; Bowen Township, William Cantwell, John Bowen and Henry McElhany; War Eagle Township, John Long, William Gage and Isaac Crow; Brush Creek Township, Abram Buck, Nathaniel Henderson and John Harp; Richland Township, Ryal Williams, John Slover and Thomas M. Duckworth; Sugar Creek Township, William Reddick, William Ford and Stephen Case.

The first Legislature created the counties of Madison and Benton, and the townships of War Eagle, Bowen, Osage, Sugar Creek, Clear Creek, Benton and Helburn, and parts of Richland and Brush Creek were cut off. In January, 1837, the court re-established Brush Creek and Richland Townships, and at the following April term made an order creating White River Township, which included all the territory south of White River, and the northern boundary of Township 15, and west of the range line between Ranges 29 and 30. In 1839 Mountain Township was divided, and the eastern portion was erected into a new township by the name of West Fork. Three years later Mountain Township was again divided, and the part south of the dividing ridge, between the waters of the Illinois River and Cove Creek and Lee's Creek, was erected into a new township, called Cove Creek. Prior to this time, however, in July, 1841, Clear Creek Township was re-established, and in 1852 it was divided, and Elm Springs Township created. From that time until the close of the war there were no further changes in the municipal townships.

The first county court after the organization of the State government was begun and held on January 9, 1837. There were present the following magistrates: John Cureton, John G. Stout, James Owens, Booker Smith, John T. Edmiston, L. C. Blakemore, Thomas Wilson, John Robinson, Lorenzo D. Pollock, Nathaniel Burdire, Samuel Wilson, John Campbell and John D. Moore. John Cureton was elected judge; B. H. Smithson, clerk, and Lucius C. Pleasants, sheriff.

At about this time a new court-house was completed by the contractor, William M. Kincaid, at a cost of over $5,000. It was a brick structure, and was a very creditable building for a new county. In October, 1839, the county court made an order for the erection of a new jail, and appropriated $5,000 for the purpose. Archibald Yell was appointed to superintend its construction. It was to be built of stone, and was to be 42x22 feet, two stories high. In the lower story were to be the dungeon and the debtors' room, and in the upper story the jailor's residence. The walls of the dungeon were to be forty-two inches thick, constructed of rock in two layers, with upright sawed timber or round locust poles, six inches thick, between them. The contract was let to Mathew Leeper for $4,460, and the building was erected in accordance with the above specifications.

In January, 1852, James P. Neal, William M. Bowers and A. W. Brownlee were appointed to select and purchase a poor farm. At the April term they reported that they had purchased the farm of Elias Muncie in Township 17, Range 29 west, containing eighty acres. It was then ordered that two log buildings be erected for the accommodation of the paupers, and John R. Glazebrook was appointed poor-house commissioner. Here the poor of the county have since been cared for. The present superintendent is John A. Beckett. In June, 1854, James H. Stirman, Alfred M. Wilson and Jonas M. Tibbetts were appointed to let the contract for a new court-house, which was accordingly done. George D. Baker bid $6,900, and received the contract. He completed the building and turned it over to the county in October, 1855. This building was burned during the late war, and in April, 1868, the county court appointed James H. Van Hoose and Thomas J. Pollard, commissioners to superintend the erection of a new court-house. The contract was let to Alexander Hendry for $22,500, and was completed about two years later.

Within the past ten years a large number of new municipal townships have been formed. On July 5, 1878, Goshen Township was erected from portions of Richland and Brush Creek, and in October of that year a part of West Fork Township was constituted Crawford Township, with the voting place at Crawford school-house. In 1880 three new townships were established as follows: Lee's Creek, from parts of Crawford and Cove Creek; Reed, from a part of White River, and Center, from portions of Prairie and Marrs' Hill. In July, 1884, the townships of Durham, Price, Star Hill and Winslow were formed, and since that time three others have been added: Dutch Mills, in January, 1885; Wheeler, in July, 1885, and Weddington, in July, 1886.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

ELECTIONS.

Washington County has always been strongly Democratic in politics. In its early history the Whig party had some very able leaders, and through their superior ability were frequently able to secure an election to some legislative or judicial office. In 1836, and again in 1838, the Democrats elected solid delegations to the Legislature, but in 1840 David Walker, a Whig leader, was elected to the Senate, and two of the representatives, W. D. Reagan and G. A. Pettigrew, were Whigs. In 1842 the failure of the State Bank still farther strengthened the Whigs, and Mark Bean, another Whig leader, was elected to the Senate, while David Walker held over. At this election there were also two Whigs chosen representatives. Two years later the Democrats regained their lost ground, and held it until the opening of the Civil War.

The first election statistics that could be obtained were for the year 1860. The September election resulted as follows:

Governor, R. H. Johnson, 969; H. M. Rector, 1,305. Representative in Congress, J. N. Cypert, 662; T. C. Hindman, 1,606. Circuit judge, J. M. Wilson, 718; J. J. Greene, 1,440. Representatives in the Legislature, R. West, 1,132; John Crawford, 1,530; W. Hulse, 1,044; L. M. Bell, 1,293; G. W. Tate, 505; B. F. Boone, 1,194; D. C. Smithson, 407; James Mitchell, 1,297; T. J. Kelly, 354; Dr. Cansler, 282. Prosecuting attorney, John R. Cox, 744; Lafayette Gregg, 1,534. Clerk of the courts, Z. M. Pettigrew, 946; P. R. Smith, 1,424. Sheriff, W. P. Taylor, 557; George Gibson, 1,688. County judge, Jonathan Newman, 944; A. A. Crawford, 1,225. Treasurer, Joseph Holcomb, 833; W. A. Watson, 978. Surveyor, H. P. Ross, 1,703. Coroner, A. Beattie, 476; H. Fincher, 829. School commissioner, F. Smiley, 739; P. P. Van Hoose, 1,375.

In 1866 the Union party nominated the following county ticket: Representatives in the Legislature, Thomas J. Hunt, Jacob Yoes, W. H. H. Nott and Wilson Rizley; county judge, W. E. Graham; sheriff, J. W. Carney; circuit court clerk, George W. M. Reed; treasurer, Thomas Carlisle; coroner, J. J. Hutchinson; surveyor, G. M. Cline. This ticket was defeated by the Conservative Democrats, but by what majority could not be ascertained. In 1868, at the election to vote upon the adoption of the new constitution, the majority against adoption was 550, but it was adopted by the State as a whole, and under its provisions the Radical party easily maintained its ascendancy.

The campaign of 1872 marks the beginning of the end of "carpet-bag" rule in Arkansas. The Radical party became divided within itself, and two tickets were placed in the field. One was headed by Elisha Baxter and supported by Gov. Clayton, and the other by Joseph Brooks, a "carpet-bagger" from Ohio, supported by those who opposed the administration, which included the Democratic minority. The result of the election in Washington county was as follows: For governor, Joseph Brooks, 1,178; Elisha Baxter, 738; for lieutenant-governor, Daniel J. Smith, 1,216; V. V. Smith, 710; for secretary of state, Edward A. Fulton, 807; James M. Johnson, 712; for auditor, James R. Berry, 1,232; Stephen Wheeler, 696; for treasurer, Thomas J. Hunt, 1,024; Henry Page, 715; for attorney-general, Benjamin T. DuVal, 1,211; T. D. W. Yonley, 702; for congressman-at-large, William J. Hyne, 1,227; John M. Bradley, 696; for congressman third district, T. M. Gunter, 1,218; W. W. Wilshire, 701; for representatives to the Legislature, David Bridenthal, (Dem.), 1,216; T. W. Thomason (Dem.), 1,183; James H. Berry (Dem.), 805; David Chandler (Dem.), 824; W. E. Gould (Dem.), 254; — McGaugh (Dem.), 273; H. S. Coleman (Rad.), 608; J. F. Johnson (Rad.), 393; — Rutherford (Rad.), 433; for sheriff, Z. M. Pettigrew (Dem.), 1,060; William Mayes (Lib.), 304; W. J. Gilliland (Rad.), 497; for circuit clerk, J. H. Van Hoose (Dem.), 529; Joseph Holcomb (Dem.), 663; J. Q. Benbrook (Rad.), 652; for county clerk, P. R. Smith (Dem.), 1,082; R. Putnam (Lib.), 214; G. W. M. Reed (Rad.), 536; for treasurer, A. B. Lewis (Dem.), 1,061; John A. Pearson (Rad.), 769; for assessor, — Moore (Dem.), 1,127; — Reed (Rad.), 445; for county judge, E. T. Stirman, 665; A. J. Hale, 603; for coroner, W. D. Holland, 998; — Cate, 431; for surveyor, L. A. Buchanan, 1,089; W. L. Alexander, 376.

In 1874, at the first election after the adoption of the present constitution, there was no Republican State ticket, and B. F. Walker was elected to the State Senate without opposition. For circuit judge J. M. Pittman received 1,994 votes, and J. H. Huckleberry, 242. For prosecuting attorney the vote was: Peel, 1,247; Cullom, 482; Dougherty, 192. Two county conventions were held. The first met at Prairie Grove, and nominated what was termed the farmers' and laborers' ticket, which was elected by a large majority. A week or two later a second convention was held at Mt. Comfort, and an "Independent" ticket placed in the field. The result was as follows:

Representatives in the Legislature: J. S. Williams, 1,731; W. F. Dowell, 1,721; T. J. Patton, 1,430; William Alexander, 660; J. B. Russell, 570; John Enyart, 127. Sheriff, Z. M. Pettigrew, 1,376; J. D. Henry, 977. County clerk, P. R. Smith, 1,952; J. P. Pyeatt, 201. Circuit clerk, Joseph Holcomb, 1,517; Dr. Putnam, 855. County judge, Hiram Davis, 1,403; George Gibson, 99; A. J. Hall, 643. Assessor, William Mitchell, 1,699; "Sid" Williams, 455. Treasurer, Lafayette Boone, 1,429; John Mayes, 858. Surveyor, A. Buchanan, 1,706; Mark Cline, 714. Coroner, W. D. Holland, 1,859; — Arnett, 450.

In 1876 the Republicans met in convention and decided to nominate no county ticket, but to give their support to the best men announced as candidates. The result was the distribution of the votes among a large number of candidates. The following was the vote:

Representatives in the Legislature: W. E. Braly, 1,576; T. W. Thompson, 1,342; C. W. Walker, 1,327; W. C. Roberts, 1,250; D. M. Fields, 945; John Billingsley, 577; Thomas Wainwright, 305; John Enyart, 289; S. T. Kennedy, 292. County judge, Hiram Davis, 1,888; W. W. Brownlee, 749. Sheriff, Z. M. Pettigrew, 1,755; J. D. Henry, 1,216. Circuit clerk, A. S. Gregg, 1,409; R. H. Smith, 1,228. County clerk, P. R. Smith, 1,964; C. C. Conner, 1,069. Assessor, William Mitchell, 1,113;

The election of 1878 resulted as follows: Circuit judge, J. H. Berry, 1,872; J. M. Pittman, 1,406. Prosecuting attorney, H. A. Dinsmore, 1,799; E. I. Stirman, 1,562. Representative, W. C. Braly, 2,191; Thomas Mullins, 1,272; E. B. Moore, 2,071; Thomas D. Boles, 1,060; W. T. Walker, 2,128; Trueman Niman, 1,054. Sheriff, Z. M. Pettigrew, 1,761; John Garrett, 943; William Mitchell, 934. County clerk, P. R. Smith, 2,236; John Mayes, 1,202. Circuit clerk, A. S. Gregg, 2,481; Thomas Wainwright, 876. Treasurer, Lafayette Boone, 1,280; John Pearson, 901; T. H. Cartner, 291. County judge, Hiram Davis, 1,980; Harris, 1,150. Assessor, J. W. M. Trent, 2,120; A. B. Lewis, 204; J. R. Beaman, 1,030. Surveyor, — Hale, 1,648; J. A. Buchanan, 1,362. Coroner, J. J. Mount, 1,855; Hanna, 226; — West, 228.

The Republicans nominated no State ticket this year, but at the November election there were three candidates for Congress, and the vote was as follows: T. M. Gunter (D), 1,253; James F. Cunningham (I), 405; Byrd Smith (G), 79.

In 1880 there were two county tickets, the straight Democratic ticket and an Independent ticket, supported by the Republicans and Greenbackers, with the following result:

Representatives: E. B. Moore (D), 1,884; Trueman Niman (I), 1,416; S. E. Marrs (D), 2,107; R. B. Fallen (I), 1,495; T. W. Thomason (D), 2,118. County judge, A. S. Vandeventer (D), 1,381; Thomas Mullins (I), 2,343. Sheriff, G. H. Pettigrew (D), 1,264; C. M. Henry (I), 2,466. Circuit clerk, A. S.

WASHINGTON COUNTY FINANCES.

The financial condition of Washington County is excellent. It is true it has a considerable bonded indebtedness, but it is no greater than can be sustained without placing unusual burdens of taxation upon the people. The following is the last report of the clerk of the county court, giving a statement of the financial condition of the county for the year ending July 14, 1888:

Total amount outstanding warrants, including allowances of record July 14, 1888.....	$4,074 09
By amount cash in treasury July 14, 1888, belonging to general county fund.....	597 02
Total indebtedness other than bonded indebtedness July 14, 1888.....	3,477 07

A. I. U. Bonded Indebtedness.—This amount includes 8 per cent bonds issued December 1871, due January, 1903, $100,000. The interest on these bonds has been paid up to July 1, 1888, leaving a balance in the county treasury on account of interest of $688.57.

The above bonds are credited with $16,000 refunded by the State to the county on account of two years' interest erroneously collected on said bonds, which amount is in State 6 per cent bonds, the interest on which is payable semi-annually. Also by $10,708.41 collected and paid into county treasury as an A. I. U. sinking fund, of which amount $5,620 is invested in four bonds of the State drawing 6 per cent interest per annum, dated 1869 and 1870, and due thirty years from date. Balance in county treasury, cash uninvested July 14, 1888, $5,006.47.

Amount and Sources of Revenue collected for the year ending July 14, 1888, to wit:

Total current expenses.....	$19,728 12

RAILROADS.

The subject of railroad communication early engaged the attention of the people of Washington County, and it was almost constantly agitated for more than a quarter of a century before any tangible result was secured. One of the first schemes was for the construction of a grand trans-continental line, on or near the thirty-fifth parallel. This engaged the attention of the whole country, and a survey of the land was made, but nothing resulted from it. Other schemes, however, were not wanting. Early in the fifties the Legislature of Missouri chartered a road to be built from St. Louis to Springfield, and work upon it was soon after begun. It was thought that by proper effort an extension into Northwestern Arkansas could be obtained, as witness the following order of the county court of Washington County, made in 1855: "In view of the growing population, and the great success of our agricultural and commercial interests, it becomes imperative on us to use every reasonable exertion for the purpose of securing for ourselves a cheaper and more speedy means of transportation. The State of Missouri, having by an extension of her credit, and her congressional donation of the public domain, put in operation the construction of a railroad to run from St. Louis to Springfield, putting it in our power, by proper exertion being used, to have like facilities, by a continuation of said road to this place, it is ordered by the court that the clerk of the county be, and hereby is, ordered and instructed to prepare two additional columns on the poll books of an election to be held in August next, for a representative to Congress. In these columns he shall place the words 'For Railroad Tax' and 'Against Railroad Tax,' and all persons voting are requested to record their votes in one or the other columns." The result of the vote could not be ascertained, but it was doubtless in favor of the proposition. The road, however, with all the aid extended to it by the State of Missouri, had only reached Rolla when the war put an end to the work.

In 1868 two proposed railroads were presented for the consideration of the people of Northwestern Arkansas. One was for a railway to be built across the State from east to west, and a company known as the Pacific & Great Eastern Railway Company was organized, with James H. Van Hoose as president. No work was done beyond a partial survey of the line. During the same year an act was passed granting the usual State aid of $15,000 per mile, to the Northwestern Border Railroad Company, upon the completion of a road from Van Buren to the Missouri State line, by the way of Fayetteville and Bentonville. From this time forth numerous conventions were held, and many plans for the building of various proposed lines were presented, but the railroads were as far away as before. At last the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company decided to extend their line into Texas, by the way of Fort Smith. Two lines were surveyed, one to pass through Prairie Grove Valley, and the other by the way of Fayetteville. To secure its construction over the latter the business men of Fayetteville purchased the right of way from the Missouri State line to Fayetteville, at a cost of over $8,000, and also donated $2,500 for the building of a depot. The first train over this road reached the town on June 8, 1881, amidst great rejoicing. A celebration was held, and appropriate addresses delivered by Col. T. M. Gunter, E. C. Boudinot, John O'Day and others.

In 1884 the Pacific & Great Eastern Railway Company was revived, or rather a new company was formed with the same objects as the old company of that name. It was incorporated on October 23, 1884, with an authorized capital stock of $8,877,000, by the following citizens of Fayetteville: B. R. Davidson, J. W. Stirman, C. A. Mulholland, J. D. Van Winkle, Maurice Coffey, P. F. Davidson and J. H. Van Hoose. During 1885 eight miles of road were constructed from Fayetteville eastward, but no further work has been attempted. Regular trains are run, however, and negotiations are now pending for the further building of the road. Should the line be completed it will open up a fine mineral and timber region, hitherto undeveloped. The present officers of the company are B. R. Davidson, president; P. F. Davidson, secretary; H. H. Dorsey, treasurer, and George S. Albright, superintendent.

In 1886 H. F. McDaniel, a tie contractor, surveyed a line of railroad from Fayetteville to St. Paul, in Madison, and procured the right of way. He then interested the St. Louis & San Francisco Company in the proposed new road, and they undertook its construction. It has been completed to St. Paul, with the intention of continuing it to Little Rock.

SOCIETIES.

The organization of an agricultural and mechanical association early engaged the attention of some of the most progressive citizens of the county. Such a society was organized in 1856, and the first fair was held in that year. The court yard was used as a fair ground, and the agricultural and mechanical productions were exhibited in the court-house. A track was around the outer edge of the yard, and here several races were run. Capt. S. P. Pittman rode the winning horse, which belonged to Maj. W. D. Reagan. This fair was declared a success, and the next Legislature granted a charter to the association. Five acres of land were donated by Judge David Walker, and grounds, several acres in extent, were inclosed and improved. These grounds lay south of town, and there in October, 1857, the second fair was held. The third was held at the same place a year later. At each of these fairs from $150 to $200 were awarded as premiums. The first list of officers that could be found are for 1858. T. B. Van Horne was then president; J. W. Washbourne and John Enyart, vice-presidents; P. P. Van Hoose, secretary, and J. L. Dickson, treasurer. The last fair held by this association was in September, 1859.

In 1869 it was determined to revive the society, or rather to organize a new one. A meeting was held in Fayetteville on May 1, and preliminary arrangements made. After the matter had been thoroughly discussed throughout the county a permanent organization was effected, with Thomas Wilson as president; H. C. Botefuhr and T. J. Patton, vice-presidents; C. R. Buckner, recording secretary; James P. Neal, corresponding secretary, and J. D. Henry, treasurer. Fourteen acres of land lying west of Fayetteville were purchased, and the first fair was given, beginning on November 1, 1869. This was fairly successful, and a second fair was held the following year. The interest in it then failed, and the society was disbanded.

In 1872 the Prairie Grove Valley Agricultural and Mechanical Association was organized; held a fair in Prairie Grove Valley on October 17 and 18 of that year. The officers of the association were Samuel P. Pittman, president; Robert J. West and M. F. Lake, vice-presidents; J. J. Baggett, secretary, and B. F. Totten, treasurer. These fairs were continued for three or four years, but it was found that the interest in them was not general enough to justify the stockholders in maintaining.

In 1877 the Washington County Agricultural and Mechanical Society was once more revived, and this time existed for four years. Recently attempts have been made to organize a new society, and the prospects of success are much better than ever before.

The Washington County Medical Society was organized July 2, 1872, at the office of that veteran among Arkansas physicians, Dr. T. J. Pollard, of Fayetteville. Those who signed the constitution of the society on that day are as follows: Drs. T. J. Pollard, W. B. Welch, S. F. Paddock, R. J. Carroll, George W. Holcomb, E. F. Brodie, H. D. Wood, F. N. Littlejohn, John M. Lacy and John C. Grace. They elected as president, Dr. T. J. Pollard; vice-president, Dr. W. B. Welch; recording secretary, Dr. R. J. Carroll; correspondent, Dr. J. C. Grace, and treasurer, Dr. G. W. Holcomb. Drs. Littlejohn, Carroll and Holcomb comprised the credential committee, and those on publication were Drs. Paddock, Wood and Brodie. The society has a membership of seventeen at present, and always sends delegates to both State and national associations. Dr. T. W. Blackburn, of Boonsboro, Dr. O. L. Wilson and Dr. A. S. Gregg, respectively, fill the office of president, vice-president, and secretary and treasurer (combined).

The Western Arkansas Fruit Growers' and Shippers' Co-operative Association is composed largely of Washington County men, and has its headquarters at Springdale. It was organized June 30, 1888, at the latter place, with for its first officers the following: President, S. B. Wing; vice-president, G. W. Umbaugh; secretary, John B. Gill; corresponding secretary, W. G. Vincenheller, and treasurer, J. W. Kimmons. The following committees were also appointed: On transportation, J. L. Rea, of Van Buren; on commission merchants, D. D. Ames, of Avoca; on claims, E. Arkebauer, of Van Buren, and on handling fruits, John W. Phillips, of Springdale. The officers and committees show the scope of the association's intentions, and it is thought that it will be a powerful agent in the development of the fruit growing of the whole region. It has seventeen members.

The Northwest Arkansas Horticultural Society, having its present headquarters at Springdale, was organized at that place in December, 1886, with sixteen members, representing Washington, Benton, Carroll and Madison Counties. Its first officers were: President, E. Arkebauer, of Van Buren; vice-president, George F. Kennan, of Rogers; secretary, John B. Gill, and treasurer, C. Petros, both of Springdale. The president and vice-president have since been succeeded by W. J. Todd, of Rogers, and I. D. Raders, of Springdale, respectively. The society is in a prosperous condition, and has a membership of about twenty persons. A successful fair was held by this society at Rogers in 1887, and at Springdale in 1888.

The Washington County Horticultural Society was organized at Fayetteville August 6, 1887. The first officers elected were Hon. W. J. Patton, president, and Dr. J. F. Simonds, secretary, and at the annual election in January, 1888, these gentlemen were retained for the coming year. Meetings for the discussion of subjects pertaining to horticulture are held on the last Saturday of each month.

POPULATION.

In 1830 Washington County, which then embraced an area almost three times as great as at the present time, had a population of 2,007 whites, 5 free colored and 170 slaves. In 1840, with the county reduced to its present limits, its population was 6,246 whites, 19 free colored and 883 slaves. The following table shows the population by townships at the end of each decade, beginning with 1850:

COURTS AND CRIME.

The organization of the circuit court in 1829 has already been noticed. Washington County then constituted a part of the Second Judicial Circuit, of which Benjamin Johnson was judge. There was much interchanging of circuits, however, and the court at Fayetteville was presided over successively by Thomas P. Eskridge, Edward Cross and S. S. Hall, and from 1833 to 1837 by Archibald Yell. During that time no very notable or curious cases were tried. At the June term of 1833 Samuel Wackard was called upon to answer the charge of stealing a steer, valued at $12, from one John Musick. The jury decided that he was guilty, and that he should pay to the owner of the steer $24, pay a fine of $24, receive five lashes upon his bare back and stand in the pillory fifteen minutes.

At the December term of 1835 Ellis Gregg was tried upon an indictment for murder, and the jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of manslaughter, and sess the fine to $1 and one hour's imprisonment."

The first circuit court held after the organization of the State government was begun on April 15, 1837. The county then formed a part of the Fourth Judicial District, of which J. M. Hoge was judge until 1844.

The first conviction for murder occurred at the September term, in 1838, when Spencer Asbury was tried for the killing of Enoch Chandler, of Illinois Township, on August 1, 1838. A verdict of murder in the first degree was found, and he was sentenced to be hung on September 28, but before the day of execution arrived he made his escape and was never recaptured.

At the May term, 1839, Willis S. Wallace was tried upon the charge of manslaughter, for the killing of a Cherokee named Orr. The jury, composed of James Campbell, Jefferson Cabe, Wilson Chapman, Jacob Coats, James R. Wilson, Bailey Marshall, James C. Gilliland, Ralph Skelton, A. H. Bryant, George A. Pettigrew, Jesse Pruett and Daniel Rose, returned a verdict of "not guilty." At the time the killing occurred the Cherokees were on their way from Tennessee and Georgia to the Indian Territory, and were passing through Fayetteville. It had been their custom on reaching small towns to imbibe freely of "fire water," then to take possession of the town and terrorize the inhabitants. Fayetteville was made no exception to the rule. The following account of the affair here, by Alfred W. Arrington, is said to be very correct: "It was a beautiful Sunday in mid-summer that a band of 1,000 Cherokee emigrants, from their homes east of the Mississippi, passed through Fayetteville to the country provided for them by the Government in the distant west. The scene of their passage through the principal streets of the village was picturesque in the extreme. Long lines of wagons rolled slowly forward, creaking with a dull sound under their heavy loads. Then followed the troops of pedestrians of all ages and conditions; hunters with their rifles and tomahawks; barefoot squaws with their babes tied on their shoulders; little Indian boys leading their lean, wolf-like dogs by long strings fastened around their necks, and half-naked girls driving herds of cattle before them. Next came lines of those on horseback (these belonged to the middle class), and these too were of every variety of description: sober and sedate members of the church; half-breed braves in the wild costume of the desperado; white gamblers, who had married Indian women; and beautiful quadroons, with whose dark and fascinating eyes and raven ringlets, still more bewitching, if possible, floating in the wind around their fine graceful shoulders. After these followed the families of wealth—the Cherokee aristocracy—in their splendid carriages, many of which were equal to the most brilliant that rattle along Broadway. And next, and last of all, came hundreds of African slaves on foot, and weary and worn down by the heavy burdens they were compelled to carry.

“It was earnestly hoped by the citizens of Fayetteville that no grocery would be opened on that day to afford the many Indian vagabonds and desperadoes an opportunity of becoming intoxicated, which would very likely result in some serious mischief. But the Wallaces could not let pass so excellent a chance of making a few dollars. Accordingly their door was thrown open and dusky-faced crowds flocked in thick as honey bees to their evening hive. The door was literally blocked up with the dense throng of savage bacchanals, and more than 100 were compelled to remain outside, who passed into the liquor shop their money from hand to hand and received in the same manner large quart and gallon measures of old, rich-beaded whisky, which they gulped down eagerly as if it had been nectar newly drawn from Paradise. But this was found to be too slow a method of satisfying their fiery thirst, and, accordingly, they made up a pony purse, as it is called in the backwoods, bought a whole barrel of brandy at a four-fold price, rolled it out before the grocery door, knocked in the head and commenced dipping and drinking with those little tin cups and gourds, one of which every Indian carries about his person. Men, women, and even children, joined in the spree, and in an incredibly short time were sufficiently drunk to commence yelling and shouting as if a whole army of fiends had just arrived in town from the infernal regions. As yet all went on peaceably; all was fun and frolic; music not over musical, and dancing which, from the verticose motion of the dancers, might be literally termed a reel. The main body, comprising the most respectable portion of the emigrants, had gone on through the village without making any halt, and camped about two miles beyond on a little creek, there to spend the night.

“It was growing late in the evening, the sun being about an hour high, when an event took place to change the boisterous mirth that reigned about the grocery into madness.

"A brutal loafer, citizen of Fayetteville, who was busy in the wassail, offered a gross insult to a Cherokee woman. A half-breed desperado, by the name of Nelson Orr, avenged her by knocking down the ruffian on the sill of the grocery door. He did not stop with this, but jumped on his foe, and commenced choking and gouging him at his leisure.

"Riley Wallace, who was standing near, thinking the chastisement sufficient, pulled Orr off his prostrate enemy, though in as gentle a manner as possible to effect the object. Orr immediately turned his wrath against Wallace, drew his bowie knife and made a bold cut at his breast. The latter retreated into his grocery pursued by his foe, furious with rage and bent on slaughter. Willis S. Wallace, seeing the peril of his brother, sprang over the counter, unsheathed his knife, and plunged it up to the hilt in Orr's side, who reeled and fell on the floor. A deafening outcry was raised by the Indians, who sought to lay hands on Wallace, and prevent his egress from the room. Five or six caught him by different parts of his clothing, but he cut them loose with his bloody knife-blade, and made his escape to his own dwelling, where he armed himself more effectually with gun and pistols.

"The rumor of the affray was speedily carried to the Indian encampment for the night, which, as we have said, was two miles west of Fayetteville, and in a short time hundreds of Indians with their guns were seen approaching the town. About a quarter of a mile ahead of the main body rode, at swift gallop, a company of twenty horsemen under the command of William Coody, a quadroon brave. These dashed up the principal street, and into the public square, with the silver handles of their bowie knives and pistols gleaming in the beams of the setting sun.

"As soon as Coody got sufficiently near the whites, who had armed themselves, and gathered in a crowd around Wallace, he addressed them in hurried accents, informing them that he had come to prevent bloodshed, and that for that purpose it was necessary for Wallace to leave town immediately, for several hundred furious Cherokees would be there in a few minutes, and that if they found their enemy a scene of slaughter would certainly ensue, and if resistance were offered they would not hesitate to burn down the village! He had scarcely finished the sentence, when a hideous war-whoop was heard in the distance. Coody and his troop of horse then rode rapidly back, to stay if possible the advance of the furious savages.

"Wallace was at first unwilling to retreat, swearing that it should never be said that he fled before the face of mortal man. His friends, however, conjured him by every consideration of principle and policy, for the safety of the village and of innocent blood. At length, moved by the urgent entreaties of all present, in company with several friends, he rode off and disappeared in the adjacent forest. The utmost exertions of Coody and the more rational leaders of the Cherokees were barely sufficient to persuade the remainder that Wallace had made his escape, and thus induce them to return without committing any serious outrage.

"Orr lingered several days in excruciating torture, and expired as he had lived, a fearless desperado to the last."

This case had scarcely been disposed of when Willis Wallace killed another man. On one Sunday morning L. D. Pollock, Thomas Wagnon and one Curry, his brother-in-law J. Wagnon, all fairly respectable citizens of the county, came to Fayetteville, and became engaged in a game of cards. This was reported to some of the citizens, and Willis Wallace, his brother, Riley and two or three others, resolved to put a stop to the game. They went to where the men were playing, and threatened them with arrest. This very naturally enraged them and a quarrel ensued. Wallace and his party were getting the better of the card players, and Wagnon started to run away. He ran across the public square, and passed out on the other side of town. All the party followed, and Willis Wallace attempted to take Curry's horse from the rack on the square to pursue Wagnon. At this Curry pulled a pistol from his saddle-bags, but Wallace was too quick for him, and without waiting for further demonstrations drew his own revolver and shot Curry dead.

As he fired, Pollock, who was close by, threw a stone, striking Wallace upon the head and knocking him down, whereupon Riley Wallace, in a similar manner, struck down Pollock. He remained unconscious for several seconds. Meantime Willis Wallace regained his feet, and going up to Pollock plunged a bowie knife through his body, pinning him to the ground. It was at first thought that he was killed, but Dr. P. J. Pollard, who had witnessed the fight from his window, had him at once removed to the hotel, dressed his wounds, and by his skill in a few weeks restored him to health. Two or three years later Pollock and Riley Wallace met at a saloon in Fayetteville. Both instantly recognized that it was "kill or be killed." Wallace drew first, but his pistol missed fire. Pollock was either too nervous or too drunk to take advantage of this accident, and before he could fire Wallace drew a bowie knife and plunged it into his heart, killing him instantly. He then fled the country, and was never captured.

Willis Wallace gave himself up to the authorities, but was released upon bail. After the Cane Hill murder occurred the public mind became agitated about Wallace's being at large. This feeling was encouraged by A. W. Arrington, until finally a mob gathered in Fayetteville, and placed itself under his leadership for the arrest of Wallace. The latter had in his possession a cannon or two, and some small arms and ammunition, which had been placed under his care by the State, and with a party of his friends he fortified himself in his store-house on the west side of the public square, where the arms were stored. Arrington and his party occupied the court-house. The excitement became intense, and bloodshed seemed inevitable. Families within range of the guns took refuge in cellars, and all waited in breathless anxiety for the battle to begin. It did not take place, however. The party in the court-house did not venture an attack, and finally dispersed. At the next term of the circuit court Wallace was tried upon an indictment for manslaughter, and was acquitted. He soon after moved to Texas.

In 1846 one of those brutal murders, of which there had been so many, was committed on the Cherokee line. This time the victim was George Harnage, and the motive as usual was robbery. John Work, a desperado living in the west part of the county, was suspected, and anticipating capture he disappeared. The grand jury found an indictment against him, and a warrant was placed in the hands of the sheriff for his arrest, but he could not be found. Some time after Sheriff Elijah O'Brien and a posse were hastily summoned by Jacob Funkhouser, of Cane Hill, to his residence. There it was learned that Work was in hiding in the vicinity, and could be captured. It appeared that before the murder of Harnage, Work had become intimate with a black man belonging to Funkhouser, and had planned to go with him to the free States or to Canada. This made the slave his fast friend, and after the murder he sought the negro, and induced him to supply him with food. He told the negro that he wished to kill his master, Jacob Funkhouser, against whom he had a grudge, and would then flee the country with him. The negro supplied him with food, answered the questions concerning the movements of his master, and did his bidding for some time. But Work could find no opportunity to accomplish the murder, and chafing under his involuntary seclusion became as ferocious as a caged tiger. He became more outrageous in his demands upon his slave friend, and finally began to use threats against him. This frightened the negro, who in reality did not wish to see his master murdered, and at last he decided to make a clean breast of it and make known the hiding place of Work. He related the whole matter to his master, who quietly summoned the sheriff, and instructed the negro to keep up his relations with the murderer as though nothing had occurred. It was decided that the negro should inform Work that the time for him to act had come, that at a certain hour that evening he would find Funkhouser in his field, and that he, the negro, would have a horse ready for him to make his escape. The sheriff and his posse then stationed themselves near the spot where Work and the negro had been in the habit of meeting, and the remainder of the program was carried out as arranged. The negro met the murderer and gave him his instructions, and as the latter started for the spot where he was to meet his victim the officers fired upon him, mortally wounding him. He instantly recognized that he had been betrayed, and drawing a bowie-knife sprang at the negro, but fell dead when just beyond reach of him.

Work was about thirty-five years of age, and a Hercules in size and courage. Ordinarily he was social and pleasant, but belonged to that class denominated "dangerous." Of the posse who accompanied Sheriff O'Brien two are still living. They are Thomas Ballard and W. B. Taylor.

In 1845 occurred the first legal executions in Washington County. In the autumn of that year Crawford Burnett, his wife Lavinia, and his son John, were hung for the murder of Jonathan Selby. Selby was a bachelor living some few miles from Fayetteville, and was murdered for the money he was supposed to keep in his house. Much excitement was aroused, and suspicion fell upon the Burnetts. They were taken into custody, and a daughter, a young girl about fifteen years of age, confessed that her parents had planned the murder, and that her brother, John, had executed it. Before the arrests the latter had gone to Missouri, and only Burnett and his wife were taken into custody. They were tried at a special term in October, 1845. A. B. Greenwood was prosecuting attorney, and the judge assigned Isaac Strain and James P. Neal to defend the prisoners. Isaac Murphy also volunteered his services for the defense. The defendants were tried separately, and a verdict of guilty returned in each case. The trials were short, the principal witness being the daughter that had confessed to the guilt of the parents. They were sentenced to be hung on November 8, 1845, less than thirty days after the trial. At the appointed time a gallows was erected on the hill south of town, not far from the National Cemetery, and there in the presence of almost the entire county Crawford and Lavinia Burnett were landed into eternity. Soon after their execution John Burnett was arrested, and returned to the county. He was indicted, and after a brief trial found guilty, and on December 4, 1845, was sentenced to be hung on the 26th of the same month. His attorneys were Isaac Murphy and A. M. Wilson. They believed their client innocent of the crime, and did all in their power to save him, but, in the face of the two prior convictions and the testimony of the sister, that was but little; he was hanged on the day named, on the same scaffold where his parents had met their deaths less than two months before.

In 1856 Dr. James Boone, an old and prominent citizen living about five miles from Fayetteville, was brutally murdered by three slaves, two of whom belonged to him, and one was the property of a neighbor. The negroes conspired to kill him, and going to his house at night they created sufficient disturbance to bring him to his door, when they felled him to the ground with a blow from a bludgeon, and continued to beat him until he was dead. When accused they confessed to the crime, and a band of men, led by the sons of Dr. Boone, took the two negroes that had belonged to him from jail and hung them. The third one was tried at the next term of the circuit court, and was also hung.

In 1860 an old man named Mullis, living in Mountain Township, was murdered in his house at night by a negro man belonging to him. Mullis, a man beyond middle life, had come from Indiana a few years before, bringing with him a young woman whom he called his wife. It was rumored, however, that he had been a well-to-do farmer in Indiana, and that he had left a wife and several children, and eloped with a servant girl. After coming to Arkansas Mullis purchased a negro man, and between his so-called wife and this negro there grew up a criminal intimacy. It was this that led to the murder. After his arrest the negro confessed to the killing, but plead self-defense. He was lodged in the jail at Fayetteville, but was not allowed to remain there long. A mob, raised in the neighborhood where the crime was committed, came to Fayetteville, and hung him. The woman, his guilty partner, was in the town at the time, and it was only through the intervention of citizens that she was saved from the same fate.

During the war, and immediately after, numerous homicides were committed in Washington County, but these were incident to the demoralized state of society. Under normal conditions there is no more peaceable and quiet community.

In 1868 a deadly feud arose between the Shannons and Fishers and their friends, in which several persons on each side lost their lives. All the parties at the time lived at or near Evansville and were considered desperate characters. The trouble grew out of a gambling transaction. Maj. Fisher won a horse from M. K. Shannon, but the latter's father claimed $30 of the value of the horse, and Fisher paid it. About a week later he met M. K. Shannon in a saloon in Evansville, and asked him to make good the amount he had paid his father. While they were parleying F. M. Shannon, a brother of M. K. Shannon, entered the saloon and shot Fisher through the head, killing him instantly. Shannon was tried before a justice of the peace, and released. Soon after

John Fisher, a brother of the murdered man, and Calvin Carter returned from southern Arkansas, where they had been attending races, and had Shannon re-arrested, taken to Fayetteville, and again tried, with the same result as before. They returned to Evansville, resolved to kill Shannon, but he remained away. Dr. J. C. McKinney, the father-in-law of Shannon, took an active part in his defense, and attempted to raise a mob to drive Fisher and Carter from the country. One morning in February, 1869, he entered G. W. McClure's store to make some purchases, and was followed by John Fisher, who without many words shot him through the heart. He then went to Mrs. Alberty's, where he re-enforced himself with Calvin Carter and Charles Bush. All mounted horses, and armed with guns and pistols passed several times up and down the streets of Evansville. Some half hour later they rode out of town into the Nation. In a short time F. M. Shannon, with John Finley, W. M. Finley, J. W. Bell, M. K. Shannon and John Brotherton, arrived in Evansville and started in pursuit. After going some eight or ten miles the party separated, and taking a circuitous route returned to Evansville. Bell, Brotherton, W. M. Finley and M. K. Shannon arrived first, and dismounted at the store where McKinney had been killed. Fisher and his party, who in the meantime had returned and were at Gillett's grocery, fired upon them, wounding Sam Alberty, an old citizen, in the hip, and breaking the leg of a horse.

F. M. Shannon and John Finley arrived at this juncture, and a large number of shots were fired by both parties, but no serious damage was done. Matters then quieted down for several weeks, but each party watched the other, hoping to take them at a disadvantage. Meantime the Fisher party was re-enforced by Scott Reed, and one who was thought to have been Frank James. Not long after this party gave a dance in Evansville, and the Shannons, together with the sheriff, Benjamin Little, and a posse, in all about thirty men, attempted to capture John Fisher, for whom Gov. Clayton had offered a reward. They made the attack, and killed Scott Reed at the first fire, but Fisher rallied his men, and drove the Shannons into an old stable near by. He then took refuge in the house where his sisters lived. The two parties maintained their respective positions, firing occasional shots back and forth all day. When night came on Fisher and his men escaped into the Territory, and the sheriff took Fisher's horses and left. The sheriff then took a posse, and went to Texas in search of the outlaws, and upon his return reported that Fisher had been killed. Fisher's sisters brought suit for the horses taken by the sheriff, and gained the suit, but it is said, that the Shannons, as soon as the judgment was rendered, went to the stable and shot one of the horses, a fine race mare. Soon after this occurrence the Fisher sisters removed into the Cherokee Nation, where they joined their brother and his party. On June 2, 1869, John Fisher, Cal Carter, Charles Bush, James Reed and John Coleman entered Evansville, and waylaid and killed two of the Shannon faction, Noah Fitzwaters and Newton C. Stout. They then returned to the Nation, and the Governor offered a reward for their arrest. Capt. Anderson, of Crawford County, with a posse, went in pursuit, and succeeded in killing two of the party, Edmondson and Coleman, in Benton County. By this time the law-abiding citizens had become weary at these continued outrages, and A. G. Lewis, William Littlejohn, Capt. Adair and several others organized themselves into a company, and forced both parties to leave the country.

Two or three years after the above occurrences two young men from Kansas passed through Evansville, with a drove of some twenty-five horses, on their way South. They had been gone but a short time when a printed circular was received at the Evansville post-office, offering half of the horses to any one arresting the men, who, it was stated, had stolen them. John and Jack Richmond, Lafayette Shultz and Bud Morris, residents of the vicinity of Evansville, started in pursuit. A. G. Lewis, deputy sheriff of Washington County, wished to accompany them, but they refused him. They overtook the horsemen below Van Buren, and started back with them, but when they reached Lee's Creek Mountain they took them into a ravine near the road, shot them, and went on to Evansville with the horses. A man by the name of Dodge came from Ellsworth, Kas., rewarded the captors with half of the horses, and returned. Subsequent investigation showed that the circular referred to was the only one sent out, and that the Richmonds called for it as soon as it reached the office. John Richmond was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Lewis, and was tried. The jury failed to agree, and pending another trial he made his escape. The others of his party had fled, as soon as suspicion fell upon them, but about seven years later Bud Morris was arrested and brought back, and while out on bond again made his escape.

The demoralizing effects of the war were slow in dying out. In Washington County, before the war, there lived three brothers, all natives of the county, John, George and James Reed, sons of Richard A. Reed, who was himself born in the county. All were known as industrious young men, and were well respected. John entered the Federal army, and at the close of hostilities returned home, and engaged in farming on White River. He was a resolute but quiet man when sober, but quarrelsome and disposed to play the bully when intoxicated, and his character had not been improved by his war experience. He was a Republican in politics, and while this had nothing to do with his death, it doubtless involved him in difficulties which would not otherwise have arisen. He had more than once defied the authorities of Fayetteville, and had come to be looked upon by them as a "bad man." In February, 1879, Deputy Sheriff John R. Serrell arrested John Rutherford, a friend of the Reeds, for an assault, and, as he failed to furnish the required bond, was proceeding to put him in jail, when John Reed arrived and demanded his release. For some reason he refused to bail his friend, and when the jailer, J. B. Moore, opened the cell door to put the prisoner in, Reed struck him on the head with a bottle filled with brandy, felling him to the floor. Two shots were instantly fired, and Reed fell mortally wounded. Deputy Sheriff Serrell was arrested, charged with the homicide, but upon trial was discharged. George Reed swore revenge, but it was generally believed that he did not have sufficient courage to put his threats into execution. He was apparently afraid of Marshal Stirman, and once begged him not to shoot him if he ever had any trouble with him. The officer would not promise, and soon after the conversation Reed, while mounted, drew a revolver on the marshal, who quickly sprang under the horse's neck and pulled Reed to the ground, punishing him quite severely. Not long after Stir-man resigned, and William Patton was appointed to succeed him. George Reed at once told his friends that he was going into town to try the new marshal. This intention he carried into effect. He entered the town and, having got into a quarrel with the officer, was attempting to draw his revolver, when the marshal shot him from his horse, killing him instantly. This occurred on June 4, 1881. Patton was tried and honorably acquitted, but the friends of Reed were not satisfied, and swore to avenge his death, and from that time Patton lived in constant fear of assassination. He took every precaution to save his life, but fate was against him. About 9 o'clock on Saturday night, July 2, 1881, while Patton and Deputy Sheriff and Night Watchman John Mount were conversing on the public square, they were fired upon by unknown parties, and both instantly killed. Patton was shot three times and Mount twice. No clue was ever obtained to the assassins, but they were, without doubt, the friends of Reed.

THE BAR.

The bar of Fayetteville has always been one of eminent ability, and has numbered among its members some of the most brilliant legal lights in the State. One of the first lawyers to locate here was Judge David Walker, who came to Arkansas in 1830, and, after standing an examination by Judges Cross and Johnson, was admitted to the bar, and located in Fayetteville. He was born in what is now Todd County, Ky., in 1806, and had but meager opportunities for securing an education. He, however, had an indomitable will, that enabled him to rise above adverse circumstances, and he soon became a leader in the profession which he chose. In September, 1833, he was elected prosecuting attorney, and at the expiration of his term was re-elected. He was chosen a member of the convention which framed the first State constitution, and took an important part in the deliberations of that body. In 1836 he was a presidential elector for Hugh L. White, and in 1840 was elected to the State Senate. He was a strong supporter of the Whig party, and in 1844 made a canvass for Congress against Archibald Yell, who was doubtless the only man that could have defeated him. In 1848 he was elected by a Democratic Legislature to a seat in the Supreme Court, where he served until 1855, when he resigned. In the campaign of 1860 he supported the Bell and Everett ticket, and in 1861 was elected to the Constitutional Convention, of which body he was chosen president. During the war he served in the military court of Price's army, and in 1866 was elected chief justice of the Supreme Court. He continued in that position until ousted by the reconstruction acts. In 1874 he was again elected to the Supreme Court, from which he resigned in 1878. He died in 1879. He was a man of uncompromising integrity, indomitable energy and strong native ability, and he has had few equals in Arkansas, either as an advocate or as a jurist.

Soon after Judge Walker's arrival in Fayetteville, Archibald Yell located in the suburbs of the town on a place now owned by Col. T. J. Hunt, which he called "Waxhaws." Gov. Yell was born in North Carolina in 1797 of poor parentage, and received a limited education in his youth. In 1812 he volunteered in a Tennessee regiment, having previously removed to that State, and by his gallant service attracted the attention of Gen. Jackson, by whom he was attached to the company that constituted his life-guards. When the war was over Yell returned to Middle Tennessee, and after studying law engaged in the practice of his profession at Fayetteville, in Lincoln County. About 1833 Gen. Jackson, then President, appointed him a judge in the Territory of Arkansas. Upon the admission of Arkansas into the Union, he wished to be the first Governor, but it was discovered that he was ineligible, and he was elected to Congress. He was re-elected in 1838, and in 1840 was elected Governor. He continued in that office until 1844, when, at the request of the Democratic party, he resigned and entered upon a canvass for Congress. He was elected, and in 1846 was re-elected, but soon after resigned his seat, returned to Arkansas, organized a regiment for service in the Mexican War, and was killed at the battle of Buena Vista. His remains were returned to Arkansas, and buried with Masonic and military honors at Fayetteville. In 1872 his remains were removed by Washington Lodge from their first resting place, and deposited in Evergreen Cemetery.

While Gov. Yell was not the equal, perhaps, of some other Arkansans in either native intellect or education, he possessed, in a remarkable degree, that indefinable quality called personal magnetism, and as a politician, in the best sense of that term, he was without a peer.

Among the other early attorneys in Fayetteville were Stephen G. Sneed, W. McK. Ball, W. S. Oldham, L. D. Evans, R. T. Wheeler, Isaac Murphy, Jonas M. Tibbetts, A. W. Arrington, John B. Costa, Mathew Leeper, W. D. Reagan and A. M. Wilson. Stephen G. Sneed came to Arkansas from Missouri sometime about 1830, and subsequently removed to Austin, Tex., where he died in 1883. In 1831 he was elected prosecuting attorney of his circuit, and was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated. In 1844 he was elected judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, and remained upon the bench for four years. He was not highly educated, and had but a limited acquaintance with the text books of his profession, yet he was a very successful advocate, and a powerful adversary before a jury. He was a man of fine physique, was thoroughly versed in human nature, and during his residence here was one of the most conspicuous figures before the bar in Northwest Arkansas.

Williamson S. Oldham was a native of Tennessee, who came to Arkansas in 1835. He had previously been admitted to the bar, and in 1837 was made attorney for the Fayetteville Branch of the State Bank. In 1838 he was elected to the Legislature, and six years later was again elected. In 1845 he was elected to a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, but the duties of that office were distasteful to him, and he soon resigned. In 1846 he was a candidate for Congress, but was defeated by Robert W. Johnson, and soon after removed to Texas, which State he represented in the Confederate States Senate.

William McK. Ball was one of the most popular lawyer politicians of Washington County during the "thirties." It was a popular saying at that time, referring to politics, "As goes McK. Ball, so goes Washington County, and as goes Washington County, so goes Arkansas." His influence secured for him the position of cashier of the Branch Bank at Fayetteville, and the failure of that institution cost him his prestige. He was accused of having appropriated some of the funds to his own use. He soon after removed to Texas.

L. D. Evans came to Arkansas from Tennessee, and, after several years residence in Fayetteville, removed to Texas, where he became a judge of the supreme court. He was not a good speaker, but was a close student, and was a fairly successful lawyer. Physically he was a large, fine looking man, and possessed a strong intellect.

R. T. Wheeler came to Fayetteville from Kentucky, but did not remain long. He married a sister of Judge David Walker, and removed to Texas, where he was elected a judge of the supreme court. He was a highly educated and polished gentleman, and a lawyer of fine ability.

Jonas M. Tibbetts was a native of New Hampshire. He came to Fayetteville in the "thirties," and remained until the beginning of the Civil War, when he returned to the North. In 1844 he was elected prosecuting attorney, and in 1850 became a member of the Legislature. Subsequently, as attorney for the State Bank, he accumulated a goodly fortune.

Mathew Leeper came to Fayetteville from Tennessee, under an appointment by President Jackson, as receiver of the land office, and was never actively engaged in the practice of his profession. He was an ardent Democrat and a man of some influence in political circles. Soon after his arrival in Fayetteville he was challenged to a duel by Judge Jesse Turner, who considered himself insulted by some remarks of Leeper. The latter accepted the challenge, and chose Judge S. G. Sneed as his second, while B. H. Martin acted as second for Turner. The parties met at some point across the line in the Cherokee Nation, but when all was in readiness for the principals to take their position, Mr. Leeper made an apology and the duel was declared off, much to the disgust of the many Indians that had gathered to witness the affair. Mr. Leeper subsequently removed to Texas, where he is still living.

Judge J. M. Hoge was born in Tennessee in 1806. In early youth he attracted the attention of Felix Grundy, and became a sort of protege of that distinguished gentleman. After graduating in the Nashville University, he studied law with Judge Grundy, and in 1827 was admitted to the bar. Soon after he came to Washington County, and for the first two years lived in a cabin on the farm of Rev. Andrew Buchanan, where he engaged in teaching school. He then removed to Fayetteville, and opened a law office. In 1836 he was elected a judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, and in 1840 was re-elected. Near the close of his second term he removed to Bentonville, and just before the opening of the Civil War he went to California, where he acted as correspondent for various newspapers. He died in Colorado in 1874. He was an able jurist, and wielded a facile pen, but he was not a ready debater.

Isaac Murphy was a Tennessean who came to Fayetteville about 1840, and subsequently removed to Huntsville, in Madison County. In 1856 he was elected to represent Madison and Benton Counties in the State Senate, and in 1861 was chosen a member of the constitutional convention, which passed the ordinance of secession. He was a Union man and voted against the ordinance and when the Federal Army secured control of the State in 1864, he was made governor, serving in that capacity for four years. He was a quiet, unobtrusive man, somewhat visionary in his ideas, but always thoroughly honest.

Alfred W. Arrington was one of the most unique characters ever at the bar in Northwestern Arkansas. He came to the State some time in the "thirties" from Missouri, and for a time was a school teacher and Methodist circuit rider. He finally turned his attention to the law, and soon became noted for the brilliancy of his imagination and the success which attended his practice in the courts. He was of a poetic temperament and possessed much dramatic power, and as a reporter of remarkable trials he became even more celebrated. Among his most famous reports is the imaginative account of a trial in Conway County, in which Rev. John Taylor and an Indian maiden were the chief characters. In a collection of similar sketches, which were published in a pamphlet entitled "The Regulators of the South and Southwest," he gave an account of the hanging of the supposed murderers of the Wright family at Cane Hill, which gave great offense to those engaged in the affair, and their friends. In 1842 he was elected to the Legislature on the Whig ticket, and soon after the expiration of his term he went to Texas; subsequently he removed to Chicago, where, after attaining a high reputation as a lawyer and orator, he died early in the "seventies." He was very erratic in his manner of living, and lacked mental balance. He frequently indulged in fits of dissipation, and did many things to destroy the confidence of the public in him.

John B. Costa was an Italian by birth. He studied law under Judge Sneed, and became his son-in-law. He went to Texas with him, and died there a few years later.

Of those pioneer lawyers of Washington County, but two, W. D. Reagan and A. M. Wilson, are now living. The former has now retired from practice, but both for nearly half a century have been among the most able and honored members of the Fayetteville bar. Mr. Wilson came to the county in 1837, and almost before he considered himself a lawyer he was appointed prosecuting attorney of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, then embracing ten counties. He served in that capacity for four years, and subsequently he was appointed attorney to wind up the business of the Branch State Bank of Fayetteville. In 1848 he was elected to the Legislature, and in 1852 was appointed by President Pierce United States District Attorney for the western district of Arkansas. He was re-appointed in 1856, and completed a second term. He espoused the cause of the Southern Confederacy, after the efforts to secure a peaceable settlement of the difficulties had failed, and during the war his property was nearly all swept away. He has since held no official position except that of State Senator, but he has exercised a very considerable influence in the Democratic party of Arkansas, and was an important factor in delivering the State from the rule of the "carpet-baggers."

Wilbur D. Reagan came from Tennessee in 1830, and located in what is now Carroll County. He followed school teaching for two or three years, and then began the study of law under Judge S. G. Sneed. In 1835 he was admitted to the bar, and the next year was elected to the Legislature. In 1838 he removed to Fayetteville, and with the exception of some eight or ten years in Texas, has been a resident of that town. As a practitioner he was industrious and energetic, and highly successful. He was excessively aggressive, and was wont to rely for success upon sarcasm and invective, and his ability to browbeat witnesses and overawe juries, rather than upon a knowledge of the law and a skillful presentation of his case.

Among the lawyers that began practice at Fayetteville, at a little later date than those mentioned above, were Gen. H. F. Thomason, Col. James P. Neal, P. V. Van Hoose, Hiram Davis, Senator J. D. Walker, Lafayette Gregg and J. R. Pettigrew. Out of this number only two, Senator Walker and Judge Gregg, are now members of the Fayetteville bar.

Gen. Thomason came to Washington County with his father in 1829, and in 1846 began the study of law with W. D. Reagan. He was admitted to the bar in 1847, and in 1851 was elected prosecuting attorney, which office he filled for two terms. In 1856 he was a candidate for Congress upon the Know-nothing ticket, and in 1860 was a presidential elector on the Bell and Everett ticket. In 1857 he removed to Van Buren, and has since been identified with the interests of Crawford County.

James P. Neal also came to Washington County in 1829. He was a stepson of Andrew Buchanan, and remained with him until 1840, when he removed to Fayetteville, and entered the clerk's office. A year or two later he entered the office of W. D. Reagan, and began to prepare himself for the practice of law. In 1844 he was admitted to the bar, and remained at Fayetteville until 1854, with the exception of one year spent in fighting the Mexicans. In 1854 he removed to Texas, where he was engaged in the practice of his profession until about 1870. He has since resided upon the farm settled by his stepfather, where he founded the pleasant village of Prairie Grove.

J. R. Pettigrew was a native Arkansan, having been born in Hempstead County in 1829. He was educated at Ozark Institute and Arkansas College, and about 1850 entered upon the study of law with Maj. Reagan. Two years later he was admitted to the bar and soon after formed a partnership with his preceptor, whose son-in-law he became. During the war he served in the Confederate Army, and in 1866 he was elected to the Legislature. In 1879 he was elected journal clerk of the United States Senate, and in 1882 President Arthur appointed him the Democratic member of the Utah commission, which position he held at his death in 1886. Col. Pettigrew possessed a good degree of natural ability, and in manner was modest and retiring, but pleasant and companionable. His connection with journalism is mentioned elsewhere.

Hiram Davis was a native of Missouri. He came to Washington County in 1832 or 1833, and shortly afterward married and removed to Carroll County. Upon the election of B. H. Pierson to the office of clerk of Washington County, he returned and assisted him in the office. At the end of the term he became a law student under Judge David Walker, and subsequently was a partner with him. He was a thorough lawyer and a good counselor, but was not a fluent speaker. In 1874 he was elected county judge, and filled the office from that time until his death in 1879.

P. P. Van Hoose, a brother of Mayor J. H. Van Hoose, was educated at Ozark Institute, in which he subsequently became a professor. He was a thorough scholar, and lawyer of high ability, but was cut off by death in the prime of life.

The present bar of Fayetteville is composed of the following members: A. M. Wilson, J. D. Walker, Lafayette Gregg, T. M. Hunter, B. R. Davidson, J. W. Walker, J. V. Walker, C. W. Walker, William L. Gregg, R. J. Wilson, C. R. Buckner, S. H. West, I. M. Partridge, S. E. Marra, E. B. Wall, George W. M. Reed, Jr., J. W. L. Stuckey, D. M. West and R. W. Carter.

The present bar of Fayetteville is composed of the following members: A. M. Wilson, Lafayette Gregg, J. D. Walker, T. M. Gunter, B. R. Davidson, J. W. Walker, E. B. Wall, G. W. M. Reed, Jr., C. W. Walker, J. V. Walker, William L. Gregg, R. J. Wilson, J. W. L. Stuckey, S. H. West, C. R. Buckner, S. H. West, D. M. West, S. E. Marra, I. M. Partridge and R. W. Carter.

WAR RECORD.

One company of mounted volunteers was raised in Washington County for service in the Mexican War. It consisted of 110 men, and was organized in the spring of 1846, with Stephen B. Enyart as captain, James P. Neal, first lieutenant; Mack O'Brien, second lieutenant; J. F. Rieff, ensign, and Mark Cline, orderly sergeant. The company marched to Washington, Hemp-stead County, but were too late to be received. They returned to their homes, and held themselves in readiness for the next call for troops. This came about the 1st of March, 1847, and the company marched to Fort Smith, the mustering place, near the middle of that month. About the 1st of April they left for Mexico by the way of San Antonio. They marched to Monterey, and were employed in the country between that city and the Rio Grande, in guarding wagon trains and doing scout duty, until the close of the war. They participated in several skirmishes, but took part in no pitched battle. The company was never assigned to any regiment. It was mustered out at Carmorigo in June, 1848, and returned home by way of New Orleans.

The position of Washington County on all the questions which led up to the Civil War was similar to that of the State as a whole. She was reliably Democratic, and at the presidential election of 1860 gave Breckenridge a majority of 149 votes; her interests and sympathies were all with the South, but there was a decided feeling against disunion until the war had actually begun.

On January 24, 1861, the Legislature passed a bill providing for an election to vote upon the calling of the State Convention, and also to select delegates to the convention, provided it were called. A call was at once issued for a mass meeting, to be held at Fayetteville on February 2, and at the appointed time some 400 or 500 persons assembled. B. F. Boone was called to the chair, and the convention was addressed by R. W. Mecklin. Dr. T. J. Pollard then read a series of resolutions, that had been adopted by a convention at Boonsboro on January 26, 1861. The principal clause was as follows: "Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that if the efforts of the border States, to wit: Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri, shall fail to adjust the present political troubles of our country, that the interests of Arkansas being common with theirs, she shall take such action as those of the older and more powerful slave States shall indicate for themselves." The resolutions also declared in favor of J. B. Russell, David Walker, C. W. Dean and James H. Stirman for delegates to the convention. After the reading of these resolutions Dr. G. W.

Thos. J. Hunt

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

Taylor moved that a committee of fifteen be appointed to draft a report expressive of the sense of the meeting, whereupon Stephen Bedford took the floor, and charged that the chairman had been selected a week before, that the resolutions to be reported by the committee were already prepared, and that the secretaries [J. H. Van Hoose and M. C. Duke] were secessionists. These charges threw the meeting into the greatest confusion, and it adjourned sine die. No further attempt was made to formally nominate delegates. The election took place on February 18, and the Arkansian announced the result in the following: "The election on Monday passed off, under all circumstances, as quietly as our elections generally do, without bloodshed or angry feeling, and the Union is doing as well as could be expected. The following is the result: Convention, 569; no convention, 1,541; for delegates, J. H. Stirman, 1,924; T. H. Gunter, 1,780; David Walker, 1,777; J. P. A. Parks, 1,713; C. W. Dean, 410; John Billingsley, 364; W. T. Neal, 353; scattering, 42.

"From Benton, Madison, Crawford and Sebastian Counties we learn that the Southern Rights men have been defeated by as heavy majorities, in proportion to the number of votes polled, as in the county."

On the 5th of March a meeting was held in the court-house "to take the sense of the people on the inauguration of A. Lincoln." Judge B. J. H. Gaines was called to the chair. He explained the object of the meeting, and stated that although he had before been a Union man, he was now for secession. The inaugural address was taken up, and read by M. C. Duke, and a committee of five was appointed to report resolutions upon it. C. W. Deane, J. P. Doss, James D. Walker, Robert Buchanan and John Crawford were appointed the committee, but Mr. Walker declined to serve, and Dr. S. R. Bell was substituted. The committee reported the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The inaugural address of Mr. Lincoln clearly indicates his intention to retake the forts and arsenals of the seceded States, and, also, to collect the revenue in said States, and,

WHEREAS, Virginia, Kentucky and other border States have declared that such an attempt would be coercion. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That in our opinion, the inhabitants of Arkansas being inseparably connected with the Southern States, she should immediately take such steps as would guarantee her safety.

This expression of opinion was, of course, taken to influence the convention which had met at Little Rock the day before, but the great mass of the people were even yet loth to give up the Union, and it was not until after the fall of Fort Sumter, and the call for troops by President Lincoln, that the convention decided to pass the ordinance of secession.

The events that led to that ordinance are, briefly, as follows: The convention deliberated from March 4 until the 21st, when it adjourned to meet at the call of Hon. David Walker, its presiding officer. In the meantime union and non-union addresses were issued to the people of the State; one, entitled "Union Address to the People of Arkansas," was signed by the union members of the convention, among the first of whom were David Walker, J. H. Stirman, J. A. P. Parks, and T. M. Gunter, of Washington County. The object of this address was explanation of their action and the urgency of a popular election to vote on the question: "Shall Arkansas co-operate with the border, or unseceded slave States, in efforts to secure a permanent and satisfactory adjustment of sectional controversies disturbing the country, or immediately secede?" Says an extract from the address: "Thus, it will be seen, that while Arkansas is not committed to the doctrine of secession, she condemns coercion by the Federal Government, and recommends the removal of causes that might lead to a collision; and the adoption of constitutional means to restore peace and fraternal relations between the sections, and happiness and prosperity to our once united, but now distracted, country." The remainder of the address was an appeal for union.

Before the May meeting of the convention its chairman, the Hon. David Walker, issued the following address:

To the People of Washington County:

Under existing circumstances, I feel it to be my duty to take your advice upon some important questions which will, in all probability, arise for the consideration and action of the convention, now shortly to be convened. Your delegates were elected under a pledge to co-operate with the border slave States in an effort to settle our difficulties with the Northern States upon honorable and just terms, and under no circumstance to vote for an ordinance of secession, unless the same was referred back to you for your rejection or approval. The majority received by myself and colleague was very large, so great as to leave no doubt but that you heartily approved our position. You will see by reference to the journals of the convention that our grievances were defined, our rights asserted by way of instruction to commissioners to be elected to co-operate with the border slave States in an adjustment of the questions at issue between the North and South. Commissioners were elected to meet at Frankfort, Ky., on the 27th of May, and after full consideration it was left to a majority of the voters of the State to say whether they would co-operate with the border States in such a settlement or would secede.

Thus matters stood, and the friends of the Union and co-operation, and of secession, had taken the field upon this issue, when news reached us that the United States troops had not been withdrawn from Fort Sumter, and that in anticipation that supplies, if not also reinforcements, were to be sent, a fight ensued, which resulted in the destruction and evacuation of the fort, since which time has followed a proclamation of the President, calling for troops to retake the forts in the seceded States, and enforce the laws. Amongst other States, Arkansas was called upon to furnish a regiment for that purpose. The reports as to the ground upon which the fight was commenced are contradictory, as well as to the extent of the preparation for a general war, between the slave and free States, but enough is known to leave but little doubt that there is imminent danger of a protracted and deadly civil war. Against the coercion policy of the Government this, as well as the other border slave States, protested, and by a resolution of our convention we declared that we would resist coercion if attempted. In view of these facts, and after seeking information as well from the border States as to their action, as from citizens of this State, I felt it to be my duty, in obedience to an order for that purpose, to call the convention together, to meet on the 6th of May. The question presented for your consideration is, under existing circumstances, what will you have your delegates do? Shall they adhere to the position taken by them before the election, and which you so unanimously endorsed, or will you expect of them to vote for an unconditional ordinance of secession, which is not to be referred back to you for approval? Do you wish to remain in connection with a government that, if not already at war with a large proportion of the slave States, is threatening and preparing to engage in such a war? Or would you prefer to cut loose from the old confederacy, and free yourselves from all further alliance to it? The effect of this act would be, on the one hand, to release you from all obligations to the old government, and, on the other, to deprive you of its protection and aid, such as its military defense on our borders, its Federal courts, land office, mail service, etc. Of this you will consider.

But again, will you secede and maintain an independent position, and await some general settlement and co-operation of all the slave States, or will you secede and unite at once with the Confederate States? Should you prefer the former, that is, to maintain an independent position until a government may be formed by the border States in common with the seceded States, and act in concert with them, you will necessarily incur the expense of supporting your own government and of defending it; but should you, on the other hand, prefer to unite with the Confederate States, and make common cause with them, you will necessarily assume the responsibility of furnishing men and money to aid them in the support and defense of their government.

I am induced to call your attention particularly to this matter, because I find a strong if not a prevailing opinion here that in no event should troops be drawn from this portion of the State; that our exposed condition in event of secession will demand that the troops in this part of the State should be kept here for our own defense. None should be misled or deceived in this matter. If the State unites with the Southern Confederacy she must necessarily come under obligations to furnish troops to fight at any and all points, at home and abroad, wherever required. And the fact is not to be disguised, that as the northern and western counties have the largest white population, a heavy demand must be made on them. There is but little hope, for a time at least, of a reunion of the States under the old Government, and as the border slave States contain, according to the late census, 2,085,858 more inhabitants than the Confederate States, we can readily see, that should they act together in the establishment of a government, composed of the fifteen slave States, they will have it in their power, in such organization, as far as may be practicable, to protect our rights and promote our interests in common with theirs.

I have thus hastily and imperfectly presented for your consideration the outlines of our present condition, and of the prominent question likely to be considered by the convention. There never was a time when we should act with more prudence than the present, and, as our interests are one, we should, if possible, act as a united people. I desire to know your will, what would you have me do? I hope you will act at once, and can, in conclusion, only pledge myself to obey your instructions, and reflect your will fearlessly and faithfully. I have intentionally omitted a reference to the original cause of our present difficulties, or to those upon whom rests the fearful responsibility of destroying and breaking up our once glorious and happy, but now prostrate and ruined government. You all know my sentiments. I have endeavored to avert the calamity that is now upon us, with regard to which my mind has undergone no change. But it would be useless and improper to dwell upon the past.

Our duty to ourselves and our country demands all our thoughts and all our energies. Let us look to the present and the future, and do all that we can to save our people from the calamity of civil war and utter ruin. For weal or woe, my destiny is yours. Your obedient servant,

(Signed)

DAVID WALKER.

We have seen how the convention at Fayetteville expressed itself on March 5, and now, in answer to the above call, the voters of West Fork Township assembled on April 27 and passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, First. That we are opposed to any ordinance of secession.

Second. That we utterly oppose any action in the State convention that will sever the State of Arkansas from the Federal government without a full and fair expression of the loyal voters of the State.

Third. That in case of an ordinance of secession we wish to co-operate with the other border State or States.

Fourth. That we are opposed to any act of the convention that would unite us with the Southern Confederacy as it now exists.

Among the names attached to these resolutions were C. G. Gilbreath, chairman; W. R. Dyer, secretary; J. C. Stockburger, D. E. Robinson, A. W. Reed, John A. Rutherford, Thomas McKnight and W. D. Dye, committee on resolutions.

These two conventions represent the various conflicting instructions.

After the act of the convention at Little Rock, martial activity was rife in every quarter. In Washington County, where sentiments were so divided, there was more or less uncertainty. The governor had ordered proclamations for troops, and those of this section were placed under Gen. Pearce. Then Brig.-Gen. Ben. McCulloch, who was in charge of Confederate troops protecting the Indian Territory and Arkansas, issued his proclamation for troops about the 1st of July, 1861. Under the latter several hundred men recruited at Fayetteville, in charge of Col. McRae. This raw material operated about Springfield and at Oak Hill.

No opportunity, so far, had appeared for Federal recruiting; but the halting action of the county was evidence that there was a large latent element of neutrality or Federal sympathy. Indeed the men of Washington County were in a peculiarly trying position. With a large element of educated men, who felt the conviction that union was the only hope of the land, the strong fraternal feeling with the Southern States whose interests were similar, a stronger hope that their homes might not be laid waste by invasion, and that the secessionary rupture might still be healed, all this certainly was an explanation, if not an excuse, for a great mass of uncertain and changeable action.

In all these acts, however, the right of secession, if not silently assumed, was at least not denied, so that, without positive conviction on that right, all the motives that would appeal to citizens of Arkansas could not but lead to just such procedure as was adopted. And when once the secessionary course was chosen it was natural for the authorities to take all measures for identifying the interests of the State with the Confederate States. The State government was in the hands of ultraists, and it is not strange that their radical measures should not be met by universal enthusiasm in Northwestern Arkansas; for, to quote from Col. A. W. Bishop, "Though bordering on the Cherokee line, it has been the intellectual center of the State, with Fayetteville as the point from which its intelligence radiated. Settled principally by Kentuckians and Tennesseans, whose early teachings under Henry Clay and Andrew Jackson gave to their politics life, and to their loyalty vigor, attachment to the Federal Union has, from its settlement, been the prevailing sentiment of this section; a result attributable, in no small degree, to the educational institutions of Fayetteville and vicinity."

The time had come, however, when Washington County was supposed to furnish every able-bodied man to fight for State protection against the Federal Government and for the Confederate cause; and the most severe military measures were adopted to enforce this throughout the county, means which, to those not realizing the necessities of war, seemed hideous and barbarous.

Those with neutral inclinations, or those in whom union convictions were supreme, were compelled to flee the country, hide in caves, use any deception to cover their intentions until a favorable opportunity arose, go armed, or, in some cases, suffer death. This state of affairs continued during 1861, and up to March 29, 1862, at which time the Union "Army of the Southwest" was lying at Cross Timbers, Mo., when refugees from all parts of this section applied to the Federal officers for protection and enlistment. The battle at Pea Ridge, in which McCulloch lost his life, was the signal for the exodus of Union sympathizers to the Federal lines, and it gave them more boldness at home in Washington County. The movement also aroused more severity among the State and Confederate authorities in their hopes to prevent it, until the lot of any in Washington County, except active adherents of the Southern cause, was far from pleasant. Neutral citizens of the county often joined one army or the other as seemed necessary to save their lives; Unionists thus became, in varying numbers, members of regiments from probably every State whose troops came within reach of Washington County—those of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, and, probably, others.

To illustrate this movement, the following from the over-caustic, though otherwise excellent, pen of Col. A. W. Bishop is inserted: "Prior to that event (Pea Ridge) the loyal (Union) citizens of Arkansas were cowed and powerless. With difficulty they avoided enlistment in the rebel army, and now that the reins of persecution began to slacken they availed themselves of every opportunity to strike for the Federal lines. The army of the Southwest moved to Batesville, and Cassville, Barry Co., Mo., became the outpost of the frontier, with Lieut.-Col. C. B. Holland, of 'Phelps' Missouri Volunteers,' as commander of the post, and M. La Rue Harrison, then of the Thirty-sixth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, as quartermaster and commissary of subsistence. Cassville was also at this time the seat of a general hospital, and in other respects a position important to hold.

"On May 10, 1862, there came to its pickets a band of eleven Arkansans, led by Thomas J. Gilstrap and Furiben Elkins, of Crawford County. Listening to their story of suffering and wrong, and learning that others still were toiling their way northward, the idea occurred to Harrison of applying for authority to raise a regiment of Loyal Arkansans for the cavalry arm of the service. * * *

"On June 16, 1862, a special order of the War Department was issued authorizing the raising of the regiment, and Col. Harrison, with increasing zeal, now bent his energies to the task. Meantime, other fugitives had crossed the Missouri line. On May 14 there came into Cassville a band of thirty, led by Thomas Wilhite, of Washington County, men of nerve and activity, whose undesirable life on the Boston Mountains had, nevertheless, fitted them admirably for the wild-wood skirmishing in which they were destined to act a conspicuous part.

"On June 20 there arrived another detachment of the yeomanry of Washington County, 115 strong, under the leadership of Thomas J. Hunt."

The return of the remnants of McCulloch's army, after the death of their leader, and the laying waste of supplies on the retreat, left Washington County open for occupation by the new Federal troops under Col. Harrison, who had soon after organized the First Arkansas Cavalry, and afterward came to Fayetteville to establish a post, which was to be the key of Northwestern Arkansas, as it had been under Gen. McCulloch. In July, 1862, Maj. Hubbard, of the First Missouri Cavalry, and Maj. Miller, of the Second Wisconsin, appeared at Fayetteville on a raid of capture and recruiting.

Meanwhile, all manner of Confederate guards, squads, companies and battalions, were organizing under the following:

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 17.

HEADQUARTERS, TRANS-MISSISSIPPI DISTRICT, }
LITTLE ROCK, ARK., June 17, 1862. }

I. For the more effectual annoyance of the enemy upon our rivers and in our mountains and woods all citizens of this district, who are not subject to conscription, are called upon to organize themselves into independent companies of mounted men or infantry, as they prefer, arming and equipping themselves, and to serve in that part of the district to which they belong.

II. Where as many as ten men come together for this purpose they may organize by electing a captain, one sergeant and one corporal, and will at once commence operations against the enemy without waiting for special instructions. Their duty will be to cut off Federal pickets, scouts, foraging parties and trains, and to kill pilots and others on gunboats and transports, attacking them day and night, and using the greatest rigor in their movements. As soon as the company attains the strength required by law, it will proceed to elect the other officers to which it is entitled. All such organizations will be reported to these headquarters as soon as practicable. They will receive pay and allowances for subsistence and forage, for the time actually in the field, as established by the affidavits of their captains.

III. These companies will be governed in all respects by the same regulations as other troops.

Captains will be held responsible for the good conduct and efficiency of their men, and will report to their headquarters from time to time.

By command of MAJOR-GENERAL HINDMAN.

(Signed.) R. C. NEWTON, A. A. General.

During the summer Gen. Hindman's pickets were near the southern boundary of Washington County, and the territory between that and the Missouri line was harried by parties from both armies, engaged in all that is included in bushwhacking, scouting, recruiting, foraging, burning, and all this not unattended by independent bands of robbers and assassins, who were fighting for no cause but plunder.

So the situation continued in Washington County until December 7, following (1862). Meantime, the gallant and indefatigable Col. W. H. Brooks had become commander of that famous Washington County regiment known as the Thirty-fourth Arkansas Confederate Infantry, and on December 7, 1862, they engaged in the hard-fought battle of Prairie Grove, so graphically described by one of its participants elsewhere in this chapter. The Thirty-fourth Arkansas was to the Confederate cause in Washington County what the First Arkansas Cavalry was to the Unionists of this county, and T. M. Gunter, of the former, and T. J. Hunt, of the latter, both of Fayetteville, were their respective lieutenant-colonels, who were Washington County men.

The retreat of Hindman's army after Prairie Grove left the county in charge of the Federals, with headquarters at Fayetteville, where, January 8, 1863, Lieut.-Col. A. W. Bishop was made provost marshal and Col. M. La Rue Harrison was post commander. The First Arkansas Cavalry, under the immediate command of Maj. Thomas J. Hunt, bore the brunt of the service in scouring the country to relieve it of the independent bushwhackers, who were the result of Hindman's order, No. 17.

In March, however, the following proclamation offered new developments:

To the People of North and West Arkansas:

In obedience to special orders from Headquarters Trans-Mississippi District, I this day assume command of all the troops, of whatever kind, in Northwest Arkansas. In doing so, I hope to be able in a short time to rid that section of the State of the presence of an insolent and unscrupulous abolition invader. To do this I must have the hearty co-operation and sympathy of the citizens, and the united and determined effort of the soldier. I bring with me to the task the life-time experience of a soldier, coupled with the zeal of a citizen. Arkansas is the home of my adoption, and that part of it which I am assigned to command is my favorite locality.

The soldiers of Arkansas have, in the present struggle for independence, distinguished themselves on every battle-field. The record they have made on the bloody plains of Virginia, Missouri, Tennessee and Mississippi have shed a halo of glory around their name, and I know that in defending their homes and families they will maintain the character they have made in other States. I therefore ask every man in Northwest Arkansas, capable of bearing arms, to rally to the defense of their homes and their firesides. Every man knows he owes his country service, should come forward at once, and enroll themselves beneath their country's flag, to protect their rights and their liberties. Come at once! In war, moments are precious.

Those who betake themselves to arms are expected to do their whole duty; those who remain at home should do theirs. The soldiers must be fed and clothed. I hope that a spirit of industry will pervade all classes; that farms will be cultivated with care; that the hum of the busy wheel will be heard in every household, and that the women of Arkansas will emulate the mothers and daughters of the Revolution. We are engaged in a war with a bitter, unscrupulous and mercenary enemy—our success alone can terminate it. The motto of our enemy is: "Subjugation and spoliation;" ours is: "Peace—independence."

We must conquer it. The enemy must be driven from the soil of Arkansas, and beyond the borders of Missouri. The war has now assumed such vast proportions, and is being prosecuted with so much vigor, that it can not, in the nature of things, be of long duration. One united and vigorous effort on the part of the soldiers in Arkansas will expel the invader. He will not return.

(Signed) W. L. CABELL,
Brigadier-General, Commanding Northwest Arkansas.

Events following the issuance of this proclamation are explained in the succeeding official report of Gen. Cabell's attack on Fayetteville the following month:

HEADQUARTERS POST,
FAYETTEVILLE, ARK., April 19, 1863. }

MAJ.-GEN. S. E. CURTIS, Commanding Department of the Missouri:

General: The following report of the battle of yesterday, at Fayetteville, is respectfully submitted, in addition to the telegraphic dispatches of last evening. On Friday, 17th inst., a scout under command of Lieut. Robb, First Arkansas Cavalry, returned from the direction of Ozark, and reported no apparent preparations of the enemy to move in this direction. Having no fresh horses I ordered Lieut. Robb to take his command to quarters, expecting to be able to send a small scout again on the next day. On Saturday morning, 18th inst., at a few minutes after sunrise, the enemy, having made a forced march from the Boston Mountains during the night, surprised and captured our dismounted picket, on Frog Bayou road, and approached the town with wild and deafening shouts. Their cavalry charged up a ravine on the east of the city, and attacked my headquarters (Col. Tibbett's place). The firing of the picket had alarmed the command, and by the time the enemy had reached town the First Arkansas Infantry had formed on their parade ground under command of Lieut.-Col. E. J. Searle, assisted by Maj. E. D. Ham, and slowly retired by my orders toward the cavalry, then formed, dismounted at their camp. Fearing that, not being uniformed, they might be mistaken for the enemy, and be fired upon by the cavalry, I ordered Lieut.-Col. Searle to post seven companies as a reserve, in a sheltered position in our rear, two of which were afterward ordered to support the left wing. The remaining three companies of the First Infantry, together with four companies of the First Cavalry, formed the center of our line, under my own immediate command. The right wing was composed of the Third Battalion, First Cavalry, under command of Maj. Ezra Fitch; and the left wing, Second Battalion (First Arkansas Cavalry), was commanded by Lieut.-Col. A. W. Bishop, assisted by Maj. T. J. Hunt. Headquarters was made the "bone of contention," and was repeatedly charged by the rebels, who were gallantly repulsed by our men. In less than thirty minutes after the first attack the enemy planted two pieces of artillery, one a twelve-pounder and one a six-pounder, upon the hillside east of town, near Col. Gunter's place, and opened a sharp fire of canister and shell upon the camp of the First Arkansas Cavalry, doing some damage to tents and horses, but killing no men. At 8 A. M. our center had advanced and occupied the house, yard, out-buildings and hedges of my headquarters; the right wing had advanced to the arsenal, and the left occupied the open field northeast of town, while the enemy had possession of the whole hillside east, the Davis place, opposite to, and the grove south of headquarters. This grove was formerly occupied by the buildings of Arkansas College. At about 9 A. M., or a little before, Col. Monroe led a gallant and desperate cavalry charge upon our right wing, which was met by a galling cross-fire from our right and center, piling rebel men and horses in heaps in front of our ordnance office, and causing the enemy to retreat in disorder to the woods. During this charge Capts. Parker and Smith, of the First Infantry, while bravely cheering their men, were both wounded in the head, though not dangerously. At about the same time, by my order, two companies of the First Cavalry, led by the gallant Lieut. Robb, advanced within rifle range of the enemy's artillery, and, guided by the blaze of its discharges, fired several volleys into the midst of the artillerists, which effectually silenced their battery and caused its precipitate withdrawal from the field. The enemy's center, occupying the Davis place, made a desperate resistance for nearly an hour after both wings had partially given away, and skirmishing continued at intervals for some time with pickets, reconnoitering parties and stragglers. At 12 M. their whole force was in full retreat for Ozark. Having only a very few horses, and those already on duty with picketing and reconnoitering parties, I was utterly unable to pursue them. During the whole action the enemy occupied ground covered with timber and brush, while my command were in the streets and open fields.

Since the battle I have ascertained the following particulars: Gen. Cabell and staff, with about 2,000 men and two pieces of artillery, left Ozark on Friday morning with three days' rations and a full supply of ammunition. They halted at the crossing of the mountains a little past noon, and rested until nearly sunset, afterward marching rapidly toward Fayetteville. They were delayed by the darkness of the night and the incumbrance of their artillery, so that they did not commence the attack as early by nearly two hours as they had intended. Col. Monroe recommended a cavalry attack, to be supported by the artillery, but was overruled by Cabell, and a halt was made until the artillery could come up. Their force was made up as follows: Brig.-Gen. W. L. Cabell commanding, accompanied by staff and escort; Carroll's First Arkansas Cavalry Regiment, Col. Scott, of Virginia, commanding, assisted by Lieut.-Col. Thompson; Monroe's Second Arkansas Cavalry, Col. Monroe commanding in person; First Battalion Parson's Texas Cavalry, Lieut.-Col. Noble commanding; one section of artillery, commanding officer not known; four companies of bushwhackers, commanded by Mankins, Palmer, Brown and others. The enemy left all their dead and wounded, which they could not take away on their retreat, in our hands, leaving Surgeon Russell and Assist.-Surgeon Holderness to take charge of them. To-day Capt. Alexander arrived at our picket with a flag of truce, bringing a communication from Gen. Cabell, a copy of which I enclose. The flag was immediately ordered back with my reply, a copy of which is also enclosed. The following is a list of casualties on our side:

First Arkansas Infantry: Killed—S. Cockerill, Company A. Wounded—Capt. Randall Smith, Company A, head, slightly; Capt. William C. Parker, Company H, head, slightly; Corp. John Woods, Company A, slightly; James Shackley, Company A, mortally; Niles Slater, Company A, slightly; Daniel Rupe, Company E, slightly; William Rockdey, Company F, severely; — Nolin, Company H, slightly.

First Arkansas Cavalry: Killed—Privates H. Morris and J. D. Bell, Company I; R. B. Burrows, Company A. Wounded—Capt. W. S. Johnson, Company M, right arm, dangerously; Sergt. Frederick Kise, Company A, slightly; Sergt. John Asbill, Company D, severely; First Sergt. W. M. Burrows, Company E, severely; Com. Sergt. Benjamin K. Graham, Company L, slightly; Corp. Josiah Fears, Company A, slightly; Corp. Henry C. Lewis, Company D, slightly; Corp. George A. Morris, Company G, slightly; Corp. Doctor B. Morris, Company M, slightly; Farrier William Wooten, Company C, slightly; John Hays, Company A, severely; James Jack, Company A, severely; William J. Qunton, Company D, slightly; Francis M. Temple, Company D, John Grubb, Company E, slightly; Jordan Taylor, Company E, severely; William F. Davis, Company G, slightly; George Davis, Company H, mortally; William J. York, Company H, severely; Davis Chyle, Company M, slightly. Missing—thirty-five (mostly stampeded toward Cassville during the engagement). Prisoners—one lieutenant and eight men First Arkansas Cavalry, taken while absent without leave at a dance nine miles from town; also one private First Arkansas Infantry, and six privates in other commands, taken in town. Total killed, 4; wounded, 26; prisoners, 16; missing, 35.

The enemy's loss is not accurately known. At and about this post are not less than twenty killed and fifty wounded. Citizens report one colonel and several men as having died on the retreat, also a large number of wounded still moving on with the command. We captured during the engagement Maj. Wilson, Gen. Cabell's commissary, wounded, and Capt. Jefferson, of Carroll's regiment; also four sergeants, three corporals and forty-six privates, a part of them wounded; also not less than fifty horses and one hundred stand of arms, mostly shot-guns. Among their killed are Capt. Hubbard, of Carroll's regiment, and a captain of hushwhackers. The enemy admit the loss of over 200 horses, killed, taken and stampeded. Enclosed please find a rough sketch of the position of forces at 9 A. M., when the battle culminated.

Every field and line officer, and nearly every enlisted man, fought bravely, and I would not wish to be considered as disparaging any one when I can mention only a few of the many heroic men who sustained so nobly the honor of our flag. Lieut.-Col. Searle and Maj. Ham, in command of the reserve, did good service in keeping their men in position, and preventing them from being terrified by the artillery. Lieut.-Col. Bishop and Majs. Fitch and Hunt, of the First Cavalry, led their men coolly up in the face of the enemy's fire, and drove them from their position. Capt. W. S. Johnson, Company M, First Cavalry, had his right arm shattered while leading his men forward under a galling fire. Lieut. Roseman, post-adjutant, and Lieut. Frank Strong, acting adjutant, First Cavalry, deserve much praise.

I remain, General, your most obedient servant,

M. LA RUE HARRISON,
Colonel First Arkansas Cavalry, Commanding.

P. S.—We had actively engaged during the battle between three and four hundred men only. I should not neglect, also, to mention that S. D. Carpenter, assistant surgeon of volunteers, assisted by Assist.-Surgeons Coffee, Drake and Tefft, were actively engaged during the contest in carrying the wounded from the field and attending to their wants.

Colonel First Arkansas Cavalry, Commanding.

This defeat of Confederate arms, although not gaining to them their object, the capture of Fayetteville, was followed by the evacuation of that city on April 25 (1863), a few days later, under the order of Gen. Curtis, to "fall back by forced marches on Springfield," thus leaving Washington County open to Confederate occupation. During the summer both Confederate and Federal troops were largely drawn off toward Vicksburg, and on the return of Col. M. La Rue Harrison from a raid down on the Arkansas River, he reoccupied Fayetteville on the 22d of September. The remainder of 1863 and the early half of the following year was occupied by the Fayetteville post in scouring the whole region for bands of bushwhackers, and by the Confederate bushwhackers in threatening and annoying the enemy in all ways possible, and who in October made a concerted attack on the city, but failed. On October 3 (1864), a detachment of Gen. Price's army, under the command of Maj.-Gen. Fagan, which had circled about on its Missouri raid, and was lying at Cane Hill, made an attack on Fayetteville. About 800 of the First Arkansas Cavalry and others, making the number 1,128 men, were stationed in a fort, and behind a line of rifle-pits, and although the attack was kept up all day, and many attempts were made to storm the fortifications, they were repelled. On the morning following Gen. Curtis appeared with his army, in pursuit of Gen. Price, and, joined by the First Arkansas Cavalry, ended the great raid some time later, leaving Washington County comparatively quiet during the winter. During 1865 guerrilla warfare was carried on with varying degrees of intensity, until about the 1st of July, when news of the surrender of Gen. E. Kirby Smith, then commanding the Confederate trans-Mississippi department, reached Fayetteville, and on the 23d of August the sturdy First Arkansas Cavalry was mustered out of service.

The following letter to Lieut.-Col. Bishop, acting adjutant general, Arkansas, gives an idea of a feature of Washington County life during 1865:

FAYETTEVILLE, ARK., December, 23, 1864.

Colonel: * * * * I write this as a simple memorandum to guide you in your entreaties for the suffering women and children of Northwestern Arkansas. There are thousands of old men, women and children left here yet. You know their condition. I have from time to time worked to assist and protect them. Since you left I have established, at their request, post colonies at Rhea's Mill, Engle's Mill, Bentonville, Pea Ridge, Elm Spring and Huntsville, and am about organizing others at Mudtown, Mount Comfort, Oxford Bend, Richland, McGuire's, Middle Fork, West Fork and Hog Eye.

The plan is: 1. Fifty men, capable of bearing arms, unite and ask to be organized into a home guard company, and permission to settle on a large tract of abandoned land, which is all in one body.

2. They are organized, armed and move their families to the place.

3. They build a block house or small fort in the best point on the land (selected by me).

4. They sign articles agreeing to be loyal to the United States authorities; to abide by the laws and orders from the nearest military post; the laws and present constitution of Arkansas; the proclamation of the President, etc., and are all mustered in as home guards.

They also agree to parcel out the land by vote, giving to each one all he wants to cultivate, but to have nothing in common, except common defense and obedience to law. Thus all persons within ten miles of these settlements are expected to enroll their names and belong to them, and none but rebels have, so far, objected.

Six of the settlements have made such progress that each will raise large quantities of corn next season, and the Union Valley settlement has agreed to deliver one thousand tons of hay next season, if needed.

Bentonville and Elm Springs are filling with people who have moved in. Winningham is going to settle Mudtown with fifty Arkansas families returned from Missouri.

All this is no chimera, it is half accomplished now, and the other companies are forming and will be at work in ten days. Some of the forts are nearly done. The refugees have nearly all left this place and gone to the colonies. * * * *

[The rest pertains to the revocation of Gen. Canby's evacuation order.]

Yours, for Arkansas,

(Signed)

M. LA RUE HARRISON,

Colonel First Arkansas Cavalry.

The most famous Washington County Federal regiment, the one mostly drawn from that county, and most active in it, was the First Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers, who were mustered into service August 7, 1862. Their regimental organization is as follows: Colonel, M. La Rue Harrison; lieutenant-colonel, Albert W. Bishop; lieutenant, Thomas J. Hunt; majors, James J. Johnson, Ezra Fitch, Charles Galloway, John I. Worthington, Richard H. Wimpy, Hugo C. C. Botefuhr, Frank Strong; surgeon, Henry J. Maynard; assistant surgeons, William Hunter, Amos H. Coffee, Jonathan E. Tefft; chaplain, Reuben North; adjutant, Denton D. Stark, Henry M. Kidder; adjutant first battalion, E. B. Harrison; adjutant second battalion, Frank Strong; regimental quartermasters, J. H. Wilson, John M. Bigger; regimental commissaries of subsistence, Thomas J. Rice, John A. Maxwell. Non-commissioned staff—Sergeant-majors, Robert Thompson, Thomas Brooks, Warren W. Munday, Simeon A. Baker, Jonathan Douglass; regimental quartermaster-sergeants, John M. Bigger, James C. Summers; regimental commissary-sergeants, Thomas H. Scott, Jeremiah B. Hale; hospital stewards, Amos H. Coffee, W. E. Maynard, Melancthon Hilbert, Thomas J. McCord, S. W. Chism; chief trumpeters, John Pool, O. A. Whitcomb, James Lusk. Company A—Captain, M. La Rue Harrison, Steward H. Carlile, Joshua S. Dudley; first lieutenants, James J. Johnson, Thomas J. Gilstrap, William J. Patton, Frederick Kise; second lieutenant, Charles F. Eichacker. Company B—Captains, Thomas J. Hunt, Bracken Lewis, Hugo C. C. Botefuhr; first lieutenants, William Hunter, Denton D. Stark, Thomas Willhite, Gustavus F. Hottenhauer; second lieutenants, Crittenden C. Wells, Owen A. Whitcomb. Company C—Captains, Ezra Fitch, Charles C. Moss, Elizur B. Harrison; first lieutenants, Samuel W. Chism, James R. Ivie; second lieutenant, Philip McGuire. Company D—Captains, Jesse M. Gilstrap, William L. Messenger, James Allison; first lieutenants, James H. Wilson, George W. M. Reid, William P. Clark; second lieutenant, Jacob H. Keiser. Total, 279.

The following is the history of the regiment, as given by the report of Adj.-Gen. A. W. Bishop, of Arkansas: "On March 29, 1862, while the 'Army of the Southwest' was lying at Cross Timbers, Mo., M. La Rue Harrison, of the Thirty-sixth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, applied for and received authority from General Curtis to recruit a company for the Sixth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, and proposed to enlist citizens of the State of Arkansas, many of whom had escaped conscription, and were then entering various regiments of the national army.

"On the 12th of May, 1862, eleven men from Washington County, Ark., made their appearance at the post of Cassville, Mo., and were sworn into the service of the United States; on the 18th of the same month about twenty more were added, and on the 1st of June the organization, numbering forty-five men, moved from Cassville to join a battalion of the Sixth Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, then stationed at Forsyth, Mo. On the march Capt. Harrison learned that many more than were enough to complete one squadron were on their way from Arkansas to join him, and he telegraphed to Hon. John S. Phelps, tendering, through him, to the President, a regiment of loyal Arkansans, for the United States volunteer army. On the following day a reply was received that the President would accept the regiment, provided it was completed within twenty days. [An inserted letter here is omitted.]

"Recruiting parties had already been sent into various parts of Arkansas, and squads of from six to thirty men were constantly arriving at Springfield and enlisting in the regiment. On the 20th of June a raid was made into Fayetteville, Ark., from Cassville, by a detachment of the First Missouri and the Second Wisconsin Cavalry, under command of Maj. Hubbard, at which time 115 recruits were brought out, mostly from Washington County.

"July 1 Capt. Harrison, with about 200 recruits, left Cassville with the Thirty-Seventh Illinois Infantry, and established his rendezvous at Springfield, Mo. July 3, the authority for mustering having been received, four companies were mustered into service, and on the 7th day of August a minimum regiment. On the 11th day of August Col. Harrison was, by order of Brig.-Gen. E. B. Brown, appointed chief engineer for the district of Southwest Missouri. About the 1st of September the first battalion, under Maj. Johnson, was ordered to join the command of Gen. Brown, in the field, west of Mount Vernon, Mo. It was engaged, September 15 and October 13, in the battle near Newtonia, Mo., and during the campaign furnished most of the scouts, guides, and messengers for the army, besides being frequently engaged in skirmishes with the enemy's scouting and reconnoitering parties. On the 2d day of October, 1862, the regimental organization of the twelve companies was completed.

"On the 3d day of October the second battalion, having been mounted and armed, was sent to the southwest to join the 'Army of the Frontier,' under Gen. Schofield, and during that month it, with the first, constituted the advance of that army in its march through Northwestern Arkansas. On the return of Gen. Schofield, about the 20th of October, these battalions were stationed at Elkhorn Tavern and Cassville, as outposts, and there remained until the next forward movement of that army. November 11 three companies of the third battalion, under command of Lieut.-Col. Bishop, left Springfield and joined the regiment at Elkhorn Tavern, on Pea Ridge, which place was held by him as the extreme outpost south of the second and third divisions of the Army of the Frontier, until its second advance, which resulted in the battle of Prairie Grove.

"On the 5th of December, in obedience to orders from Gen. Herron, Col. Harrison, who had been relieved from duty as chief engineer of the district of Southwest Missouri, left Elkhorn with eight companies of the regiment and a train of twenty wagons, and moved forward to join Gen. Blount, then at Cane Hill, Ark. On the night of the 6th the detachment camped at Prairie Grove, ten miles southwest of Fayetteville. During the night orders were received from Gen. Blount for the detachment to move at day-break and join Gen. Solomon near Rhea's Mill. Messengers also brought information from Gen. Blount that the enemy were west of Cane Hill, and would probably attack him in the morning; that the road between himself and Col. Harrison was clear.

"At daylight on the morning of the 7th the detachment moved forward, but at sunrise was met by detachments of Missouri troops retreating, who had been attacked by Hindman's advance at their camp two miles south of Illinois Creek. A determined attack was made by the enemy at this point, and within half an hour a serious panic ensued, which resulted in the capture of the train of the First Cavalry and the temporary demoralization of the regiment. Falling back to the Walnut Grove Church Col. Harrison rallied his men upon the right of Gen. Herron's army, which was met at that point, and advanced with it to Prairie Grove.

"On the following day Col. Harrison made a raid south to the Boston Mountains, pursuing some of the routed detachments of Hindman's army and capturing twenty-nine prisoners.

"1863—On January 8 a detachment under the command of Lieuts. Thompson and Vaughan participated in the defeat of Marmaduke, at Springfield, Mo., Lieut. Vaughan and Sergt. L. D. Jernigan were severely wounded during the engagement. About January 25 a detachment, commanded by Capt. Galloway, participated in a raid into Van Buren, under command of Lieut.-Col. Stuart, Tenth Illinois Cavalry, at which time a steamer and 315 prisoners were captured. On February 3 a detachment of eighty-three men, under Capt. Galloway, routed 180 rebels near White Oak Creek, in Franklin County, and on the following morning Capt. R. E. Travis was mortally wounded in an attack upon a party of guerrillas, who had fortified themselves in a log house near Thurlkill's ferry, on the Arkansas River.

"On April 18, at sunrise, the post at Fayetteville was attacked. [Elsewhere described.]

"In September Col. Harrison attacked a detachment of rebels under Coffee, in the Seneca Nation, pursuing them down the Indian line to Round Prairie, Ark., and on the 22d of that month the First Cavalry reoccupied Fayetteville. On October 4 a detachment of the regiment, 450 strong, with two sections of Battery A, First Arkansas Light Artillery, and one section of mountain howitzers, under command of Col. Harrison, left Fayetteville in pursuit of the rebel Gen. Shelby, who at that time was moving north from Neosho, Mo., with 2,000 men and two pieces of artillery. Marching through Pineville, Newtonia, Granby, Carthage, Lamar and Greenfield toward Warsaw, countermanding orders turned the column toward Bower's Mill, and thence by way of Mount Vernon and Cassville to Fayetteville, to relieve the garrison at that place, which was being seriously threatened by a superior force under the rebel Col. Brooks. At sunrise, on October 15, a part of the detachment, while in camp at Cross Timbers, and having in charge a train of twenty-five wagons loaded with supplies for Fayetteville, was attacked by Brooks, but through the timely return of Col. Harrison, who, having gone forward toward Fayetteville with a portion of his men, had heard the firing, the attack was repelled. On October 23 a portion of the regiment, with its howitzer battery, under command of Maj. Hunt, joined Gen. McNeil at Huntsville, taking the advance in the pursuit of Gen. Shelby across Arkansas River.

"On November 7 an expedition, 435 strong, under Col. Harrison, left Fayetteville, moving eastward, and on the morning of the 9th routed a force of rebels near King's River; and again, on the following day, at sunrise, at Kingston; at noon, on the Dry Fork of King's River, and in the evening near Mulberry Mountain. On the 11th and 12th Capt. J. I. Worthington drove the same irregular forces across Arkansas River, carrying his howitzers by hand across the Frog Bayou Mountain, and on the 23d and 25th engaged and routed bands of guerrillas near Sugar Loaf Mountain, in Marion County, and on Richland Creek, in Searcy County, the last time with considerable loss. Lieut. L. D. Jernigan was here severely wounded and taken prisoner.

"1864—During the months of January and February a detachment of the regiment, commanded by Capts. Galloway and Botefuhr, served in Carroll, Marion and Searcy Counties, under orders from Brig.-Gen. C. B. Holland, from the district of Southwest Missouri. They were engaged repeatedly with the enemy, and received high praises in Gen. Holland's official report.

"During this year detachments of the regiment were very frequently engaged with guerrillas, who were still infesting Northwestern Arkansas, and on October 28 a concerted attack upon Fayetteville was defeated. On October 3 the town was again attacked by a largely superior force, detached from Gen. Price's army, then lying at Cane Hill, the whole under the command of Maj.-Gen. Fagan. [Mentioned elsewhere.]

"All summer long the First Cavalry had been actively employed against the enemy, who increased in strength until in autumn they swarmed through the county, but Price's retreat and the approach of winter secured, for a time, comparative quiet.

"1865—During this year a relentless warfare was carried on against the small bands of guerrillas who infested Northwestern Arkansas, and many were killed. * * * * [The mustering out of the regiment on August 23 is mentioned elsewhere.] From May, 1863, until the disbanding of the regiment a cornet band was maintained at the private expense of the officers, and at the close of the war the instruments were presented to the city of Fayetteville."

The Fourth Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers was commanded by a citizen of Fayetteville, Col. Lafayette Gregg, but, as its further county representation was very small, this mention will suffice.

The First Arkansas Infantry Volunteers was recruited at Fayetteville after the battle of Prairie Grove, by Dr. James M. Johnson, of Huntsville, Madison County, and contained Washington County men in various parts of its organization. The following is a brief account of its history, by F. M. Johnson, major, commanding regiment: "At the time of the muster-in of J. M. Johnson as colonel of this regiment it numbered thirty-six commissioned officers and 810 enlisted men, recruited in the previous sixty days in Madison, Washington, Newton, Benton, Searcy and Crawford Counties. It participated in the battle of Fayetteville, under the immediate command of Lieut.-Col. E. J. Searle and Maj. E. D. Ham, on the 18th of April, 1863, and marched for Springfield on the 25th of that month. On the 6th of July it was ordered to Cassville, Mo., where it shortly afterward arrived, and on the 17th of August joined the Army of the Frontier, under command of Maj.-Gen. Blount, at Fort Gibson, Cherokee Nation, pursued the rebels under Cooper and Stanwatie to Perryville, in the Choctaw Nation, and, returning to Fort Smith, was the first regiment to enter the garrison on the 1st of September, 1863. Shortly afterward, by order of Brig.-Gen. McNeil, the regiment proceeded to Waldron, and remained there until February, 1864, when it was again ordered to report at Fort Smith to take part in the movement southward under Brig.-Gen. Thayer; left Fort Smith with the frontier division on the 24th of March, 1864, forming part of the first brigade under Col. John Edwards; participated in the battle of Moscow, losing three men killed and several wounded; entered Camden on the 16th of April, 1864, and was engaged in a reconnoissance of the enemy after the battle of Poisoned Springs; left Camden on the 26th of April, and, as a part of the right wing of the Union army, was engaged with the enemy at the battle of Saline River, where it repulsed a strong flanking party with considerable loss to the enemy, and losing no men itself. On the 1st of May, 1864, the regiment arrived at Little Rock, and proceeded thence to Fort Smith, where it arrived on the 17th of the same month; since which time it has been engaged in escort and guard duty on the frontier. The greatest aggregate was in November, 1863—979 officers and men; the lowest in March, 1865—774; present aggregate, 788, 31 commissioned officers and 757 enlisted men."

The regimental officers and captains are as follows: Colonel, James M. Johnson; lieutenant-colonel, Elhanon J. Searle; majors, Elijah D. Ham, Francis M. Johnson; surgeon, William B. Waterman; assistant surgeons, Thomas B. Drake, Harvey H. Bolinger, Robert B. Campfield; chaplains, Francis Springer, John M. Leard; adjutants, Francis M. Sams, William Patterson; regimental quartermasters, Crittenden C. Wells, Jonathan H. Hewes; Company A, captains, Randall Smith, Daniel E. Sutcliffe; Company B, captains, Elith Haynes, Thomas H. Scott; Company C, captain, James R. Vanderpool; Company D, captains, Ransom R. Rhodes, William H. Newman; Company E, captains, James M. Hutchings, John W. Spralding; Company F, captains, John McCoy, George W. Raymond; Company G, captain, George W. R. Smith; Company H, captain, William C. Parker; Company I, captains, William J. Heffington, John Whiteford, Samuel Bard; Company K, captain, Abial Stevens. Total casualties, 184.

The Second Cavalry and Second Infantry of the Federal Arkansas troops had but few representatives from Washington County. Col. Edward J. Brooks, of Fayetteville, was given authority to organize a Fourth Arkansas Infantry Volunteer troop at Fayetteville, but his recruits were absorbed into other commands or disbanded.

Battery A, First Arkansas Light Artillery Volunteers, known as "Stark's Battery," was raised by Denton D. Stark, then adjutant First Arkansas Cavalry. "April 1st the battery was full," so says the adjutant-general's report, "but was not mustered into service until August 31, 1863. Meantime and until the 25th of April, of this year, it was stationed at Fayetteville, Ark., (though officers and men were absent in Missouri procuring horses when the battle of the 18th of April took place), when, by orders from headquarters of the department of the Missouri, Northwestern Arkansas was evacuated. From May 4th to September 21st, 1863, the battery was stationed at Springfield, Mo., receiving, while there, guns and equipments. In September Lieut. Robert V. Thompson, with one section of the battery, participated in an expedition under the command of Col. M. La Rue Harrison, through Southwestern Missouri and Northwestern Arkansas, in pursuit of Col. Coffee's command, then raiding that section of country, and proceeded thence to Fayetteville, Ark. The remaining two sections of the battery, under the command of Capt. Stark, left Springfield, Mo., September 21, 1863, for Fayetteville, marching first, however, as far north as Greenfield, Mo., under Col. Harrison, who was then in pursuit of Gen. Shelby. Moving thence to Fayetteville, one section of the battery took part, about October 20, in a skirmish with the enemy, under Col. Brooks, at Cross Timbers, Mo. The battery remained at Fayetteville until March 19, 1864, when, by order of Brig.-Gen. Thayer, it marched to Fort Smith. On the 23d of March it joined the expedition to Camden, forming a part of Col. Adams' brigade. It was present in the skirmish at Moscow on or about the 13th of April, with four guns in action, and relieved the Second Indiana Battery, under a severe fire from the enemy's artillery. Leaving Camden with the retreating force under Gen. Steele, April 28, it reached Little Rock May 3, 1864, and moved thence with the frontier division of the Army of Arkansas, to Fort Smith. In October one section of the battery, under Lieut. Mayes, was sent with other troops in pursuit of Col. Gano, who had captured a supply train between Fort Scott and Fort Smith, making a forced march to Cabin Creek, north of Fort Gibson, where they came up with the enemy retreating, but he escaped. The battery occupied Fort No. 2, at Fort Smith, until the 30th of August, 1865, when it was mustered out of service. * * *

* * [The men] were faithful, brave and efficient, and reflected great credit upon the battery and the State."

The officers were Captains, Denton D. Stark and Henry H. Easter; first lieutenant, Robert Thompson; second lieutenants, Edward D. Brogan, William Mayes; first sergeant, Alex Thompson; quartermaster-sergeant, John B. Malidon.

The battery was largely represented by Washington County men. Their casualties were twenty-five, who were killed and died of disease.

Independent companies were organized in the autumn of 1863, under orders of Maj.-Gen. Schofield, and among those organized in Washington County were Capt. Bracken Lewis' company, Capt. Mackey's company, and a West Fork Township company. The first two companies served in the defense of Fayetteville, November 3, 1864.

The total number of Washington County men in the Federal army, according to an estimate of Col. T. J. Hunt, is between 500 and 800.

Col. W. H. Brooks was probably the most active representative of the Southern cause for Washington County. Among the first organizations was Brooks' battalion of cavalry (State troops), which afterward became E. I. Stirman's battalion, and later on was transferred to the Cismississippi Department, where it was known as the Sharpshooters' battalion. A few of these were Washington County men. Capt. Lafayette Boone's company, which served at Elkhorn, was officered as follows: First lieutenant, L. P. Beavert; second lieutenant, Sam. H. Smithson, and third lieutenant, John O. Parks.

The well-known Thirty-fourth Arkansas Infantry then fell to the command of Col. Brooks, and for an account of its formation a portion of the address of Col. J. R. Pettigrew, delivered at the Grand Reunion of ex-Confederates at Prairie Grove, on August 19, 1886, is here inserted: "Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: Twenty-five years ago this beautiful valley was a military camp; red battle had stamped his foot, and the nation had felt the shock. Peaceful pursuits had been abandoned, and all was busy preparation for the inevitable conflict. In September, 1862, at this place, the Thirty-fourth (Brook's) Regiment of Arkansas Infantry was organized; shortly thereafter the regiment went into camp at Mount Comfort, then at Elm Springs, then to Elkhorn, thence to Camp Reagan, then to Spadra, on the Arkansas River, where we received our arms, Enfield rifles; thence we marched to Mazzard Prairie, near Fort Smith, where the regiment became a part of Fagan's Brigade. All the points named were camps of instruction, and the 'tramp, tramp' of the soldier was heard on every hand. The hot blood of youth coursed in our veins then, and the 'pomp and circumstance of glorious war, was hailed with delight. The enemy was approaching; patriotism and desire to defend homes and firesides was at fever heat. The order to march at length came; the Arkansas River was crossed. At Lee's Creek the head of the column was halted, the different commands massed, and the solemn ceremony had of presentation of battle flags to each regiment. No more impressive scene was ever witnessed in all this land than on that calm winter morning, to see thousands of soldiers kneeling with their faces northward, and the solemn invocation commending them and their fortunes to the arbitrament of arms and the God of battles. Thenceforth the red flag of battle waved over each command. The march was resumed, and on the 7th day of December Prairie Grove was reached.

"The stillness of the early morning was broken by the clash of arms. about 200 of the enemy's cavalry were captured near the church. Our infantry coming up, met the prisoners; enthusiasm and eagerness for the fray were aroused to the highest pitch. We moved rapidly to the battle-field, and the long line of infantry and artillery was placed in position, where we awaited the approach and attack of the enemy. About noon the cavalry were withdrawn, pickets driven in, and the enemy charged the whole line of Fagan's Brigade; the battle of Prairie Grove had opened in earnest, and Fagan's Brigade, from that time until shortly before sundown, repelled charge after charge of the enemy under the gallant Herron. About an hour before sunset the enemy withdrew his infantry, and opened a terrific fire upon our lines. The enemy was reinforced by Gen. Blount's command, which at once opened a terrible fire upon our left.

Gen. Parsons and his invincible Missourians met him with great gallantry and success. The battle of Prairie Grove, while of short duration, will compare, perhaps, with any fought during the war, in fierceness and desperate gallantry. The rattle of musketry often rose above the roar of artillery, and the bright sunlight gleamed from bayonets held by hands as steady as Napoleon's veterans at Austerlitz or Waterloo. Officers and soldiers were alike brave, and there were feats of individual prowess that stamped the actors heroes. Thus it was the logic of fate that Brooks' regiment received its first shock of battle, and baptism of blood, almost on the very spot of its origin. * * * * Many a gallant life went out in that fierce conflict; Capt. William Woosley (or Owsley), Lieuts. Ben Boone and James Pollard, as brave and good men as ever breathed the breath of life; Tell Duke, the gifted and intrepid lieutenant, whose spirit rose from the din of battle, the rattle of musketry, and the roar of artillery to the peaceful bosom of its God; William Gray, color-bearer; John Sharp, Henry Morrison, Cy Graham, Clem Kirksly, James Gray, and others whose names I cannot now recall, went down in the shock of battle to fill heroes' graves, and left names with immortality synonymous. Brooks' regiment can well claim to be the child of Prairie Grove. It had its origin here, and aided in making its fields and groves historic. * * * * Night closed the scene at Prairie Grove with the victorious Confederates occupying the field, and the wearied soldier sought whatever of repose he could get on the perilous edge of battle, which he expected to be resumed on the morrow, dreaming, fitfully, perchance, of home and loved ones whom he expected soon to greet; but late at night the order was silently passed along the lines to prepare to march. The soldiers who expected to follow up the victory were not slow in getting ready; such, however, was not the case; it was a retreat, and Gen. Hindman's army were subjected to the trying ordeal of turning their faces from home and loved ones, and a hard-earned victory. Thus we came to Prairie Grove, and thus we left its fields, made forever historic by the valor and blood of patriots."

The regiment served after this at Helena, and were in the retreat from Little Rock. At the action at Jenkins' Ferry they sustained greater losses probably than during all their career; here it was that Capt. Walker was killed and Col. Brooks was wounded.

The most reliable information obtainable gives the following regimental organizations of Col. Brooks' command, with changes, and as complete as possible where companies are from Washington County: Colonel, W. H. Brooks; lieutenant-colonels, T. M. Gunter, J. R. Pettigrew; majors, James Owsley, J. R. Pettigrew, F. R. Earle; adjutants, M. C. Duke, Peter Carnahan; quartermaster, James Trott; commissary sergeant, Capt. Robert Tyus; sergeant-majors, Frank Watson, Henry Keyser; surgeon, Dr. W. B. Welch; assistant surgeon, Dr. J. M. Lacy; hospital steward, G. M. Cox. Company A—Captains, T. M. Gunter, J. W. Walker; acting captain, Lee Taylor; first lieutenant, Pomroy Hart; second lieutenant, J. M. Roark. Company B—Captains, F. R. Earle, James Mitchell, George Gibson; first lieutenants, James Mitchell, Peter Carnahan; second lieutenant, William Buchanan. Company C—Captain, Samuel H. Smithson; first lieutenant, John O. Parks; second lieutenant, Isaac Roark; third lieutenant, James Pollard; orderly sergeant, Robert Anderson. Company D—Captain, William Owsley. Company E—Captain, James E. Wright; second lieutenant, J. M. Pittman. Company F—Captain, C. L. Pickens. Company G—Captain, James Owsley. Company H—Captain, Wallace; first lieutenant, Mayes; second lieutenant, Albert Brodie; third lieutenant, J. L. Duke. Company I—Captain, A. V. Edmondson. Company K—Captains, J. R. Pettigrew, A. Wilson; first lieutenants, M. C. Duke, S. P. Pittman; second lieutenants, B. F. Boone, C. F. Reagan; third lieutenants, A. Wilson, James Beard.

At Camden the following consolidation seems to have been completed in 1863: Companies C, H and A were consolidated into Company A, Company G was merged into Company D and Company I was placed in Company K.

The Sixteenth Arkansas Confederate Infantry was organized under Gen. McCullough's order, at Rogers (then Calahan Springs), about the middle of November, 1861, with the following officers, the list being made most complete when there is Washington County representation:

Colonels, J. F. Hill, W. T. Neal, David Province; lieutenant-colonels, W. T. Neal, B. F. Pixley, J. M. Pittman; majors — Farmer, J. M. Pittman. Company A, captains, L. Swagerty, Jesse Adams. Company B, captains, — Turner, Jesse Cravens. Company C, captains, John Connelly, J. J. Yearwood. Company D, captains, John Smith, E. G. Mitchell, J. Bailey. Company E, captain, W. S. Poyner. Company F, captains, David Goodnight, — Stephens. Company G, captain, J. P. Carnahan; first lieutenant, W. E. Pittman; second lieutenants, B. F. Pixley, B. Carnahan; third lieutenants, V. A. Ross, John Eggers. Company H, captains, — Kelley, J. P. Cloud. Company I, captains, Dan Boone; first lieutenant, John Garrett; second lieutenant, Abe Wilson. Company K, captains, John Lawrence, James Waldon.

The last change of officers occurred at the reorganization at Corinth, Miss., where Col. David Province took charge of the regiment. The general course of the regiment was as follows, after its organization at Calahan's Springs: It first went to Elm Springs, thence to Cross Hollows with Gen. Price, then Elkhorn and Van Buren, thence with Gen. Price to Corinth, Tupelo, Iuka and Corinth again, where it was the only Arkansas regiment in the First Missouri Brigade. Their next move was to Port Gibson, where they were captured. The officers were imprisoned and the privates paroled. The greatest casualties occurring to the Sixteenth Regiment was at Corinth, where seven-twelfths were reported "killed, wounded and missing."

The following State troops were in service at Oak Hill: Col. Gratiot's Third Arkansas Infantry, Col. Walker's Fourth Arkansas Infantry, Col. Dockery's Fifth Arkansas Infantry, Col. Churchill's First Arkansas Cavalry and Col. Carroll's Cavalry.

Their Washington County representation was somewhat as follows:

Colonel, Gratiot, Third Arkansas Infantry; lieutenant-colonel, David Province; Company —, captain, Bell, and Company —, captain, Pleasant Buchanan; first lieutenant, J. M. Lacy; colonel, J. D. Walker, Fourth Arkansas Infantry; lieutenant-colonel, T. D. Berry; major, S. W. Peel; Company —, captain, T. M. Gunter; first lieutenant, Wythe Walker; colonel, —, Dockery, Fifth Arkansas Infantry; captain, W. T. Neal; colonel, T. J. Churchill, First Arkansas Cavalry; colonel, Carroll; Company —, captain, Jeff Kelly; first lieutenant, Lafayette Boone; second lieutenant, James A. Ferguson; third lieutenant, Samuel H. Smithson.

Col. Walker's regiment was organized about July 8, 1861, at Camp Walker, in Benton County, and was disbanded about the last of August, of the same year, at Walnut Springs. Among the other captains of the regiment were Denny, Fancher, Johnson, Pittman, Sanders, Bunch and Tinnin. An independent company, under Capt. J. F. Rieff, also did excellent service.

The Fifteenth Arkansas Mounted Infantry of the Northwest, so distinguished from another Fifteenth Arkansas Infantry, did service at Wilson's Creek. In it was organized by Capt. James Richards, probably in November, 1861, a company which took the title Company G, and also one under Capt. Pleasant Buchanan, called Company H. Capt. Richard's company was partly of Washington County men, but Company H was entirely from that county. The company was organized at Cane Hill, with First Lieut. Patton Inks and Second Lieut. A. A. Evans. The captain and first lieutenant were captured at Elkhorn, and A. A. Evans became captain. The regiment then started for Pittsburg Landing, but the battle was over. Iuka and Corinth were their next points of action. At the latter place Capt. W. H. Holcomb, of Springdale, became captain of Company G. Companies G and H were next among the forces that moved to Port Gibson, then Jackson, Miss., and Champion Hill. At Black River, on May 17, 1863, Capt. Holcomb was captured and sent to Johnson's Island, Ohio, and after the siege of Vicksburg Companies G and H were returned to Arkansas and consolidated under Capt. A. A. Evans. The organization of Company G was: Captains, James Richards, W. H. Holcomb; first lieutenants, William Cooper, J. H. Williams; second lieutenants, Marion Mosier, Evan Atwood; third lieutenants, James Cooper, White.

In the Seventeenth Arkansas Infantry, under Col. H. M. Rector and Lieut.-Col. Griffith, there was but one company, that of Capt. T. W. Thomason.

The total Confederate representation from Washington County is estimated at about 2,000 men by Col. T. M. Gunter et al.

It is greatly to be regretted that the records of Confederate soldiery in Washington County have all been lost except those uncertain traces left in the treacherous memories of those, now growing old, who passed through the distracting struggles.

In the tombs that dot the cemeteries lying on the hills east and west of Fayetteville are the certain records of the deadliness of the conflict.

The National Military Cemetery, lying about three-quarters of a mile southwest of the court-house, is a natural mound embracing six acres, surrounded by a columned brick wall, and surmounted by a flag-staff, about which in concentric circles lie 1,214 of the victims of Pea Ridge, Prairie Grove and Fayetteville. The place was located by the Government in 1867, and stationed in the brick lodge, with its adjoining stables, is the keeper, who is now in constant charge—Capt. A. Pettit. The grounds originally contained about 1,900 graves, but many have been removed by friends.

The Confederate Military Cemetery lies on the slope of East Heights. It is an octagon, surrounded by a stone wall, with a smaller octagon in the center, intended for a monument, but which now contains the grave of Gen. Slack, who fell at Prairie Grove. The cemetery is divided into eight convergent sections, the four sections of graves alternating with the remaining four, which are devoted to ornamental shrubbery. Here lie about 700 who wore the gray at Pea Ridge, Prairie Grove and Fayetteville, embracing citizens of Texas, Louisiana, Missouri and Arkansas; and it represents a greater mausoleum in the hearts of the wives, mothers, sisters and daughters of those men, or such of them as lived in Washington County, for it is the result of the efforts of the Southern Memorial Association, a society of ladies organized in Fayetteville, and other parts of the county, in June, 1872; it was dedicated by them precisely a year later. For some twelve years the president of the society has been an earnest and intelligent Christian lady—Mrs. Lizzie Pollard—to whose efforts the success of the movement is in no small degree due.

CITIES, TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

FAYETTEVILLE.

The enterprising town of Fayetteville dates its history from the organization of Washington County in 1828. At about that time George McGarroh, the father of James, John and William McGarroh, removed from the neighborhood of Evansville, and located near the spring in what is now known as the Masonic addition to Fayetteville. The next year James Leeper, the father of Mathew W. Leeper, came, and after living for a time in a camp, built a small log house near where the Mountain House now is. Soon after Reuben W. Reynolds and the Sweeneys arrived. One of the Sweeneys built a house, and kept a sort of hotel. In February, 1830, the first store-house was erected. It was built by James Holmsley and two other young men for one John Nye, an Eastern man. They built it of black oak poles, and covered it with boards made from a large oak tree that stood on the branch below the spring west of town. It was without a floor. It stood on the west side of the public square. This building was completed in one day, and the next day the same young men erected a similar structure for two brothers, Seviars, who opened a store near what is known as the Blockmill corner. The Seviars remained but a few months. Nye continued for two or three years.

The above were the first settlers of Fayetteville. The McGarrohs were of the true backwoods type, and not a few of the now well-worn newspaper anecdotes of early Arkansas are said to have originated with them. They were entirely uneducated, not able even to read or write, but John, or Jack, as he was more popularly known, was a man of considerable native ability, and was twice elected to the Legislature. As a member of that body he assumed much dignity, and sedulously sought to conceal his illiteracy. To this end he frequently procured a newspaper, and while sitting in his seat in the House scanned its columns long and earnestly. A member, one day observing that he held his paper upside down, accosted him with: "Uncle Jack, what is the news?" "I see they have had a thundering big storm on the river," replied Jack, "and capsized every durned boat." The paper was filled with advertisements of boats, each accompanied by a picture of a boat, from which, in the inverted position of the paper, he drew the inference, they had been capsized.

William McGarroh was for a long time a grocery keeper in Fayetteville. He never kept any books, and although he did a considerable credit business he is said never to have made but one mistake. On one occasion he charged a customer with a cheese, when he had purchased a grindstone. Upon settlement the customer objected to the item. McGarroh turned to the wall back of him, which was covered with marks and signs, and after studying it for a moment, broke out with: "I'll be durned, if I didn't forget to put an eye in that cheese."

In a letter to Mr. J. H. Van Hoose, in 1879, Rev. John Buchanan has the following to say of the early history of Fayetteville: "The town of Fayetteville was located at the county site of Washington County in 1829. The territory now embraced in Benton and Madison Counties then belonged to Washington County. This is the reason why the location was made so far northeast of the center of what is now Washington County. Two of the commissioners who located the county site were former residents of Lincoln County, Tenn., and Fayetteville was the county site of Lincoln County, hence the name Fayetteville was given to the new town.

"So soon as the location was made Capt. Jack McGarroh moved to the place and camped there until a house was built. The first court was held there in August, 1829. Two log houses were erected at the time of the court. One was floored with hewed puncheons; the court was held in it. The other had only a dirt floor, which was used for a hotel. Forks were driven in the ground, poles laid in them, and boards placed upon the poles for a table.

"I do not remember who presided as judge of the court, but think it was Judge Johnson, father of Hon. R. W. Johnson, now of Little Rock. There were two lawyers present, but their names I do not remember.

"McGarroh's table was well supplied with pound cake, beef, venison and turkeys, as wild game of every description was abundant about there at that time.

"The first store-house ever built in Fayetteville was put up for two brothers by the name of Sevier, nephews of the Hon. Ambrose H. Sevier, one of our first lawyers and statesmen. They brought their goods to Cane Hill, and deposited them there with Col. W. B. Woody until their house was built in Fayetteville. In December, 1829, they hired me to haul their goods to Fayetteville. They remained in business there but a short time."

The commissioners of the seat of justice were Lewis Evans, Larkin Newton, Samuel Vaughn and John Woody. They fixed upon the site of Fayetteville, and when the government survey of land was made, it was found to be upon a sixteenth section, the school section. A special act of Congress was therefore passed transferring the school section of Township 16, Range 30 west, to the twentieth section. The patent for the town site was issued February 27, 1835. It granted to the commissioners the south half of the northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of Section 16, Township 15, Range 30 west.

The survey of the town was made by Charles McClellan, then deputy county surveyor, assisted by John West, John Smallman, James Parr, William McGarroh and A. Mankins as chain carriers.

Sale of Lots.—The lots were sold chiefly at public sale, A. Whinnery being the auctioneer. The following is a statement of the sales up to 1837, the names of the purchasers and the price paid:

These sales in the aggregate amounted to $6,339, of which nearly the whole sum was expended in the erection of public buildings.

Early Settlers, etc.—Of above purchasers several were not residents of the town, but all, it is believed, were citizens of Washington County. A. B. Anthony was a merchant, associated in business for several years with L. Brodie. He succeeded in accumulating a large fortune, but subsequently removed to Texas, where he lost it all. Brodie died at his residence near Fayetteville. Mathew Leeper, W. McK. Ball, David Walker and Isaac Murphy were lawyers, and are mentioned elsewhere. W. T. Larremore was a prosperous merchant. He was also a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and was in great demand as a camp-meeting preacher. He subsequently became a convert to the teachings of Alexander Campbell, and united with the Christian Church. After several years' residence in Fayetteville, during which time he represented the county in the Legislature one term, he removed to Texas, where he died two or three years later.

In this connection mention of Moses Campbell should not be omitted. He was one of the leading merchants of "the thirties," and built what at that time was considered the finest dwelling in this portion of the State. It was the house now occupied by Mr. Prentice. Mr. Campbell remained but a few years, and when he left sold the property to W. S. Oldham.

The Wallace family consisted of William Wallace, the father, and four sons: Willis S., Alfred, Leonard and Riley. They came to the county about 1831, and located on a farm some four or five miles east of Fayetteville. Soon after Alfred Wallace opened a general store on the west side of the public square, where for several years he carried on a prosperous business. Willis S. Wallace and one of the other brothers were the proprietors of a grocery.

James Byrnsides kept a hotel in a log building standing on the site of the Star livery stable. He was a man of some influence in the community, and in 1833 was elected a member of the Territorial Assembly. H. W. Mahan was a physician, and was killed by W. T. Blakemore, a son-in-law of Byrnsides.

William Skelton was a farmer and hatter, and lived two or three miles from town. W. D. Hart was a cabinet maker, and P. V. Rhea a blacksmith. John Lewis was also a blacksmith, and kept a hotel on what is known as Stone's Corner. M. H. Clark was a physician, and resided where Z. M. Pettigrew now does. Onesimus Evans was president of the Fayetteville branch of the State Bank. This institution was established in 1837, and did business in the two-story brick building standing about where the Van Winkle Hotel now is. William McK. Ball was the cashier. After an existence of four or five years it suspended, and the officers were charged with having stolen a part of the funds. Upon investigation it was found that the books had been carried away. One of them was subsequently found in White River, another in a stable loft in Fayetteville, and a third in an old stove. All had been badly mutilated, and the exact condition of the bank at the time of its failure was never ascertained. The most of those connected with it removed to Texas.

About 1839 Fayetteville received several citizens. Among them were James Sutton, Dr. T. J. Pollard, Stephen K. Stone, Dr. Charles W. Deane, Dr. Throckmorton, father of ex-Governor Throckmorton, of Texas; Dr. John I. Stirman, James H. Stirman and Alfred Stirman. Of these only two, Dr. T. J. Pollard and Stephen K. Stone, are now living. James Sutton was a Kentuckian, but had resided in Missouri prior to his coming to Fayetteville. He was engaged in merchandising until his death some time in "the fifties." His brother, Seneca Sutton, was also a merchant of Fayetteville for a time. Dr. Throckmorton lived in the country near town, and was a partner of Dr. Pollard until he removed to Texas. Dr. Deane came from Tennessee, and for nearly half a century was a leading physician and prominent citizen of Washington County. The Stirmans came from Kentucky. James H. and Alfred Stirman were brothers, and were partners in a general mercantile business. The former was afterward a member of the firm of Stirman & Dickson, and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1861. Dr. John I. Stirman was a brother of James H. Stirman, and from March, 1860, to November, 1862, was Secretary of State. A correspondent of the Van Buren Intelligencer, writing in 1849 from Fayetteville, describes the town as follows:

"The population of this place has not increased since 1844, rather diminished—it has followed the business and taken abode at Van Buren. The retail business here is important, and the merchants engaged in it are 'coining money' faster than they could do it in California. Messrs. Stirman and Dickson and James Sutton are indeed doing a fine business; and I must say that dry goods are retailed here as cheap as at Van Buren. This they are enabled to do on account of the small expense of store-keeping, living, etc.

"Fayetteville is the foremost town of Arkansas in the cause of education, and Washington stands second to no county in the State for schools. The Rev. C. Washbourne and Miss Sawyer are sturdy pioneers in the cause, and are entitled to the gratitude of parents and guardians for their perseverance under so many adverse circumstances. It was under Mr. Washbourne's charge of the matter that the Ozark Institute took its rise, under the style of 'Far West Seminary,' which, though it was destroyed by fire, phoenix-like rose from its ashes, and is now spreading its wings of literature and science over a pupilage of sixty scholars. This institution is under the control of Mr. Robert W. Mecklin, who is in every way qualified for the charge. His reputation has reached over the whole of Western Arkansas. He is assisted by Messrs. Lockhart and Van Hoose, both gentlemen of high literary acquirements. I learn that Rev. Robert Graham, a gentleman of high literary attainments and fine reputation as a scholar, has been engaged, and will, some time next month, commence as assistant to Mr. Mecklin. This school, even in its infancy, far excels any other that I know of in the State. The Ozark Institute is about three miles from Fayetteville, in a beautiful and highly cultivated neighborhood, distinguished for its health.

"Miss James has a fine academy for young ladies, about a mile from the institute. It is a new establishment, but is in a progressive and flourishing condition. Miss J. has the reputation of being a fine teacher, and of an indefatigable spirit. At an early day she will, I doubt not, have a fine academy.

"At this place Miss Sawyer's Female Seminary stands No. 1 in the whole country, and the success of this institution is a gratifying testimonial to laudable perseverance. Miss S. commenced with a small beginning against many odds, which she controlled with an energy that would do honor to any leading spirit. Hers, indeed, is a leading spirit. She first sounded the tocsin of education, and sounded the death-knell of ignorance and vice. By her exertions a degree of intelligence and refinement is spread over this county, unseen and unfelt in other new countries. But I was going to speak of the school. The building is new, copious, convenient and neat, combining all the necessary requirements. About fifty pupils attend, the largest number of whom reside in the neighborhood, yet a considerable number are from abroad, who either board with Miss S. or in the neighborhood among the many clever families that reside here. The school has the benefits of the erudition of a splendid teacher and enlarged scholar in the person of Rev. C. Washbourne.

"Among the many beautiful cottages in sight from this place is the 'Waxhaus,' the homestead of the gallant and lamented Yell. Upon a high hill, about a mile off in the northwest, stands the residence of Judge Oldham, by far the most beautiful seat of all around. The judge has moved off to Texas, as I understand, about a week ago. Col. Leeper has built upon a neighboring hill. His fine improvements present a beautiful prospect, and as fine as is the view of this residence from town, yet much more so is the magnificent scenery around from thence. At one glance a beautiful panorama of nature and art is beheld—hill, valley, forest, prairie and stream.

"The 'yaller' fever rages here to a considerable extent, and for so healthy a country many will be carried off with it. About 100 will go from this county. They intended to go up the Arkansas and cross the mountains on Col. Fremont's last trace. The only reason I can learn for taking an unexplored route is that they believe Fremont has gone to some rich diggings that are not known to the public, and they wish to share the fruits of his discoveries. Among those going are Judge Murphy, Judge Davis, Dr. Cunningham, Dr. McCulloh and Lewis Evans, of this county, Judge Hoge, J. W. Washbourne and Pierce Miller, of Benton."

The following description of Fayetteville as it was in 1852 is condensed from an interesting sketch written by Hon. J. H. Van Hoose in 1882. Thirty years ago Fayetteville was a pretty little village of about 600 inhabitants, all of whom were industrious and happy. Arkansas College, presided over by Rev. Robert Graham, was fast coming into notice, and a large number of boys and young men, sons of wealthy planters of the South, were sent here each year to be educated. There was also a female seminary, founded by Miss Sawyer, who, with such assistants as those accomplished young ladies, Miss Foster and Miss Daniels and Prof. Zilliner, an accomplished musician, added much to make Fayetteville then famous for its educational facilities. Many beautiful young ladies from Missouri, the Indian country and South Arkansas attended this school. These school girls and the young men of Arkansas College, together with the young men of the town and our own beautiful girls, made Fayetteville society second to none in the State; in fact, from 1851 to 1861 there were very few towns in the South or West the size of ours where there could be found more prosperous business men, more gallant beaux, more charming and beautiful young ladies, better schools or more intelligent, industrious, happy and contented people than our own loved Fayetteville could produce.

In 1852 we elected a town council, with Col. James P. Neal as chief alderman or mayor, and Jim Ballard as town constable. There were then six dry goods stores in Fayetteville, all doing a profitable business. People from King's River and War Eagle country, from Benton and Crawford Counties and the Indian Nation, bought all their goods here. James Sutton sold goods on the corner now occupied by Achard & Co. His store-room and warehouse was 30x150 feet, and he sold immense quantities of goods, and bought everything the farmers brought to him. Stirman & Dickson sold goods in a brick store-house located on the lot now occupied by the drug store of Whitlow & Lake. They, too, did a large business. S. K. Stone was selling goods in a small, one-story brick on the same spot where his splendid fire-proof brick now stands. L. B. Cunningham did business in a two-story frame house on the corner where Hansard's gallery is now located. W. L. Wilson was selling goods in a frame house where Mulholland's grocery store is. Baker & Bishop, of Van Buren, had a store here in charge of William A. Watson. Merchants then bought goods only once a year, and it required about eight weeks to make the trip to New York and buy the year's goods.

There was no regular drug store in the town until 1854, when a young doctor named James Stevenson came here from Kentucky, and opened a drug store in a building about where the Democrat office is located.

There were two groceries or saloons in the town then, one kept by Capt. William McGarroh, on the McGarroh corner, and the other by Bill Throckmorton, on the west side of the square.

There were two hotels. One was on the corner where Kell's livery stable is, and was known as the "Byrnside House." The other stood on the south side of the street on a lot now occupied by the lumber yard, near the Methodist Church. This hotel was kept by John Onstott, and a man could get as good a dinner there for ten cents as any hungry man could wish for.

There were three blacksmith shops, run by John Lewis, John Krim and Jim and Dan Stone, and two wagon shops, one run by W. B. Taylor, now of Prairie Grove, and the other by Asmos Outzen. Joseph Dunlap carried on a saddlery shop, and Nathan Wilcox, a shoe shop. There was one cabinet shop, in which William M. Bowers made tables, bedsteads, coffins, etc., and two tailor shops, run by W. G. Bassore and James B. Simpson, respectively.

On July 4, 1860, Fayetteville was first placed in telegraphic communication with the remainder of the world. On that day Stebbins Telegraph Company completed a line from Jefferson City to Fort Smith, via Fayetteville. The first message was sent by Col. J. R. Pettigrew to the mayor of St. Louis, who returned an appropriate answer.

Newspapers.—The first newspaper published in Fayetteville was the Fayetteville Witness, in 1840, by C. F. Town. It was short lived, and there was no further attempt at newspaper publication in Washington County until the year 1852. On the 8th of May, 1852, the first number of the Western Pioneer was issued by William E. Smith, who had previously published the Mountaineer, at Huntsville, Ark. This paper was followed two years later by the Southwest Independent, William Quesenbury, editor and publisher. He was a racy and vigorous writer, an accomplished editor, and something of a humorist and poet. He continued the publication until some time in 1856. The town was then again without a newspaper until 1859. In that year J. R. Pettigrew and E. C. Boudinot established the Arkansian, a six-column folio, the first number of which appeared on March 5, 1859. The following were some of the objects for which the publishers stated the paper was established: "To advocate the principles of the Democratic party, and to stay the onrushing tide of abolitionism, which threatens to overwhelm the South; to advocate the building of a railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and to secure its location on or near the thirty-fifth parallel, and to promote the cause of education." The paper was conducted with so much ability as to make it one of the most influential papers in the State, outside of Little Rock, and its circulation soon reached two thousand copies weekly. Its reputation was supported not only by the well-known ability of its editors, but such writers as Quesenbury and Washbourne were frequent contributors to its columns. It was published until some time in 1861.

In August, 1860, W. W. Moore began the publication of the Fayetteville Democrat, but discontinued it during the war, owing to the destruction of the press and materials by the Confederates when evacuating Fayetteville. Moreover, the publisher joined the army and served until the close of hostilities.

In 1867 one Brown established a radical Republican paper, called the Radical. Soon after R. C. Brown began the publication of a Democratic newspaper, called the Fayetteville Times. The two Browns became involved in a quarrel, and the latter fought and whipped the editor of the Radical. Shortly afterward the name of the Times was changed to the Fayetteville Arkansian, while the Radical was purchased by Bard & Richardson, and became the Mountain Echo. Richardson soon sold to Mr. Lindsay, and in 1870 Daniel Webster became the proprietor of the Echo, but Col. Bard had a claim upon the office and the material. He obtained possession of it, and established the News, which remained under his control until 1874, when it was suspended. Webster obtained new material, and continued the publication of the Mountain Echo until about January 1, 1873.

In 1868 E. B. & W. B. Moore purchased the press and material of the Arkansian, and re-established the Democrat, the first number of which was issued on the 4th of July, 1868. They conducted it until 1884, when it was purchased by S. E. Marrs and J. N. Tillman, the present proprietors. It has since been under the able editorial management of Mr. Marrs.

In the fall of 1879 Revs. Floyd and Shepherd, of the Christian Church, began the publication of a religious weekly, the Fayetteville Witness, which they continued about eighteen months.

On September 2, 1875, the first number of the Arkansas Sentinel appeared. It was established by the Sentinel Publishing Company, with the late Col. J. R. Pettigrew, one of the founders of the old Arkansian, as editor, and it was published under his name until his death. For several years, however, his control of it was only nominal. It is now owned by I. M. Patridge and H. F. Reagan, and is one of the most widely circulated and influential Democratic papers in Northwest Kansas.

Early in 1885 the Fayetteville Republican was established at West Fork. Jacob Yoes furnished the capital, and G. S. White became the editor. In the summer of 1886 it was purchased by W. M. Simpson, who removed the office to Fayetteville. He transferred it to Thomas Wainright, but, at the end of one month, resumed charge of it. In December, 1886, he sold out to Thomas Brooks and Damon Clarke. At that time it was a six-column folio, "patent outside," and had a subscription list of about 300. Messrs. Brooks & Clarke made it a seven-column folio, printed it all at home, and within a year had increased the circulation to 1,500 copies weekly. On January 10, 1888, Mr. Clarke purchased the interest of his partner, and has since been the editor and proprietor. The Republican is the organ of the Republican party in the Fourth Congressional District, and wields a decided influence in public affairs. For a short time in 1885 a daily paper, named the Evening Call, was published at Fayetteville, by T. P. Price, with Frank J. Price and Albert H. Price as editors.

A "Greenback" organ, called the Blade, was established in 1880 by John Moore, who, after about two years, sold out to F. M. Wolf, now of Springfield, Missouri. Wolf, changing the name and the politics of the paper, published for about six months the Times, a Republican sheet.

Societies.—The society of a town may in general be gauged by the number and character of its churches and societies. Measured by this standard Fayetteville ranks high, having seven churches and eight lodges, besides several other benevolent and social organizations. Washington Lodge No. 1, A. F. & A. M., as its number indicates, is the oldest Masonic lodge in the State. In 1835 a number of Masons in this part of the State petitioned the Grand Lodge of Tennessee for a lodge at Fayetteville, and on November 5, 1835, a charter, signed by Hugh L. White, Grand Master, was issued to Washington Lodge No. 82. Among the charter members were Onesimus Evans, W. M.; James McKisick, S. W.; Mathew W. Leeper, J. W.; Archibald Yell, Samuel Adams, Abram Whinnery, W. L. Wilson and William McK. Ball.

This charter has a history of its own. In 1862, when the Federal troops took possession of the town, it was thrown with other papers into the street, where it was picked up by a member of an Iowa regiment, a Mason, who sent it to Past Grand Secretary A. O. Sullivan, of Missouri. In 1866 it was sent to W. D. Blocher, and was by him transferred to J. H. Van Hoose, who returned it to the lodge. It is now in the possession of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas.

On November 21, 1838, representatives of four lodges met at Little Rock and organized the Grand Lodge of Arkansas. The delegates from Washington Lodge were Onesimus Evans, Washington L. Wilson, Robert Bedford, A. Whinnery, R. C. S. Brown, Samuel Adams and Williamson S. Oldham. Washington Lodge No. 82 now became Washington Lodge No. 1. About 1840 a two-story frame building was erected for a hall. The lot was donated by Governor Yell, who also gave $100 toward the erection of the building. This hall was remodeled in 1875, and is in a good state of preservation. In the winter of 1862, after most of the members of Washington Lodge had gone South, the Federal troops took possession of the hall, and Col. La Rue Harrison, the Post Commander, was here initiated into the order, as were also a number of other officers and privates. To this circumstance was doubtless due the preservation of the hall, when every other public building was destroyed.

The following is as complete a list of the Past Masters as could be obtained: John B. Costa, 1843; J. H. Stirman, 1848; W. R. Quarles, 1850; W. L. Wilson, 1851; J. M. Tibbetts, 1852; Robert Graham, 1855; W. R. Quarles, 1858; J. B. Simpson, 1859; Robert Graham, 1860; P. P. Van Hoose, 1861-65; J. H. Van Hoose, 1865-68; D. B. Jobe, 1868; J. H. Wilson, 1869; J. D. Henry, 1870-73; J. H. Kelton, 1873; W. O. Lattimore, 1874; P. R. Smith, 1874*; O. C. Gray, 1875; R. Putman, 1876; O. C. Gray, 1877; A. S. Gregg, 1878; J. H. Van Hoose, 1879-81; R. Putman, 1881; J. H. Van Hoose, 1882; J. R. Southworth, 1883; W. B. Welch, 1884; O. C. Gray, 1885-87; D. W. C. Davenport, 1887, and James J. Boss, 1888.

In 1841 the General Grand High Priest of the United States issued a dispensation to the Far West Chapter at Fayetteville, in answer to a petition signed by Joel Haden, Samuel Harris, William Shannon, Onesimus Evans, Thomas J. Pollard, Richard P. Pulliam, Alfred A. Stirman, Thomas Bean and Abraham Whinnery. The following year a charter was granted by the Grand Chapter, which, after the organization of the Grand Chapter of Arkansas in 1852, was replaced by another. The first records of the chapter, which are now in existence, are dated * Filled the unexpired term of Lattimore.

April 21, 1854. W. L. Wilson was then High Priest, and J. L. Dickson, Secretary. The members numbered twenty. The High Priests since 1854 have been as follows: J. H. Stirman, 1855; W. R. Quarles, 1856; W. L. Wilson, 1857-60. (From October, 1860, to June, 1865, but one meeting was held.) James H. Van Hoose, 1865; D. B. Jobe, 1866; J. H. Van Hoose, 1867-69; Johnson Reynolds, 1869; J. H. Van Hoose, 1870-73; J. D. Henry, 1873; John Mayes, 1874; J. H. Van Hoose, 1875; O. C. Gray, 1876-79; J. H. Van Hoose, 1879-83; O. C. Gray, 1883; J. S. Hurlburt, 1884; T. J. Pollard, 1885-87; E. B. Wall, 1887; J. H. Van Hoose, 1888.

Baldwin Commandery No. 4, Knights Templar, was established in June, 1871, under a dispensation from W. S. Gardner, Grand Commander of the United States. There were then but two Sir Knights in Fayetteville—W. O. Lattimore and J. H. Van Hoose. The first meeting was held June 20, and several members of — Commandery were present for several days, who assisted in the organization. The first officers elected and appointed were as follows: W. O. Lattimore, Eminent Commander; J. H. Van Hoose, Generalissimo; Abraham Allen, Captain-General; R. T. Lacey, Prelate; George A. Vaughan, Senior Warden; J. R. Pettigrew, Junior Warden; John Mayes, Treasurer; W. C. Roberts, Secretary; Samuel Bard, Standard Bearer; J. L. Lewis, Sword Bearer; B. F. Little, Warder; Henry Reed, Guard. In September of that year J. H. Van Hoose attended the Grand Encampment at Baltimore, and obtained a charter for Baldwin Commandery. The first regular election under the charter took place in January, 1872, when the officers above named were re-elected with the following exceptions: Dr. C. W. Deane was chosen Prelate; J. A. C. Blackburn, Recorder; B. F. Little, Standard Bearer; A. J. Gilbreath, Sword Bearer, and T. M. Gunter, Warder. Since then the Commanders have been elected as follows: George S. Allbright, 1874; O. C. Gray, 1876; J. H. Van Hoose, 1877; J. R. Pettigrew, 1878; George S. Allbright, 1879; D. W. C. Davenport, 1883; J. S. Hurlburt, 1885; J. R. Southworth, 1886.

Fayetteville Lodge No. 10,388, K. of L., dates its organization from June 17, 1887, when it was organized at Byrnes' Hall at Fayetteville. The first officers elected were as follows: A. C. Hoag, M. W.; J. Tillman, W. F.; C. H. Putman, W. I.; W. Gakin, Almoner; S. H. Smith, F. S.; H. M. Rieff, Treas.; E. D. Erwin, Statistician; C. T. Carr, R. S.; John French, U. K.; A. Hodges, I. E.; John Zilla, O. E.; H. M. Rieff, Judge; D. Calvin, Judge Advocate. These, with twenty-five others, embrace the charter membership. The lodge is composed of forty-eight Knights at present. Their list of officers for the current year is F. E. Martin, M. W.; W. H. Merion, W. F.; D. Calvin, W. I.; John French, U. K.; E. Nix, Treas.; J. Nix, F. S.; W. French, R. S.; I. M. Baber, V. S.; T. F. King, Statistician; A. Hodges, I. E.; H. Broadie, O. E.; J. C. Van Hoose, Judge, and A. J. Boatright, Judge Advocate.

Fayetteville Lodge No. 28, A. O. U. W., began its existence December 29, 1887, when it was organized by J. C. Byers, D. G. M. W. of the Grand Jurisdiction of Texas. Capt. E. B. Harrison was elected P. M. W., together with the following officers: E. Z. Davies, M. W.; G. E. G. Penn, Foreman; A. C. Hoag, O.; J. R. Southworth, Recorder; T. J. Martin, F.; S. H. Blackmer, Receiver; J. A. Hassel, G.; J. W. Bishop, I. W., and J. B. Nix, O. W. These officers and twenty-two other members embrace the charter membership. The only change in officers is the succession of W. A. Watson as Recorder. The society have thirty-five "United Workmen" on their rolls at present, and the lodge is in good condition. They meet in the Odd Fellows' Hall.

Frontier Lodge No. 1626, K. of H., at Fayetteville, became an independent society May 24, 1879, with twenty-six charter members. The Knights of Honor have a large number of officers, and their first election resulted as follows: J. L. Cravens, P. D.; O. C. Gray, D.; E. D. Harrison, V. D.; E. B. Moore, Asst. D.; J. J. Vaulx, Chaplain; D. W. C. Davenport, Reporter; C. J. Sumstag, F. R.; J. L. Duke, Guide; H. S. Gray, Guardian; Albert Byrnes, Sentinel; Dr. C. S. Gray, Med. Examiner; J. S. O'Brian, Treas.; W. F. Stirman, L. D. Jernigan and O. C. Gray, Trustees. Since their organization the Dictators of the order have been as follows: O. C. Gray, E. B. Harrison, E. D. Moore, H. S. Gray, C. M. Greene, Albert Byrnes, D. W. C. Davenport, Cuth P. Conrad, J. L. Cravens, C. S. Gray, Walter Cook, J. L.

Cravens, J. N. Thurmond, the present occupant of that chair. Their present officers are S. H. West, V. D.; Oscar Richter, Asst. Dictator; C. M. Greene, Reporter; W. C. Cardwell, F. R.; W. R. McIlroy, Treas.; J. J. Vaulx, Chaplain; W. W. Harrison, Guide; S. H. Blackmer, Guardian; J. L. Knesal, Sentinel; A. S. Gregg, Med. Ex.; E. D. Harrison, W. E. Nix and O. C. Gray, Trustees. The society meets in the I. O. O. F. Hall, and have rented from that order since the organization of the K. of H. Lodge.

Mountain Lodge No. 15, I. O. O. F., Fayetteville, Ark., was organized August 12, 1856, by Past Grand England and A. Clark, who installed the members. This veteran lodge elected the following officers: J. F. Rieff, N. G.; H. Marshall, V. G.; C. S. Hauptman, Sec., and A. Outzen, Treas. A. Clark was the only other charter member. During the war the general disruption affected the lodge, and the charter was lost; but on November 14, 1866, the lodge was granted a duplicate of the original charter, and on May 1, 1869, they reorganized permanently on a dispensation from G. M. Peter Brugman. Their lodge, on the memorable Sunday night of April 18, 1880, was destroyed by a cyclone, and after a few years of meeting in various places, they leased their present lodge for a term of five years, December, 1885. Among their present members the following are Past Grands: C. S. Hauptman, E. B. Moore, E. B. Wall, D. W. C. Davenport, J. F. Johnson, J. F. Simonds, J. J. Vaulx, H. F. Reagan, J. N. Tillman, B. H. Stone and C. B. Paddock, and their present officers are C. S. Hauptman, N. G.; W. L. Stuke, V. G.; J. F. Simonds, Sec., and J. N. Tillman, Treas. The lodge has $2,000 in the stock of the Building Loan Association of Fayetteville, and at the expiration of their lease propose to erect a commodious hall. At present they rent their rooms to three other local orders.

Travis Post No. 19, G. A. R., Fayetteville, Ark., was organized August 23, 1884, and the members were mustered in by C. M. Barnes, Adjutant General of the Department of Arkansas. The first officers chosen were the following: E. B. Harrison, P. C.; T. J. Hunt, Sr. V. C.; J. B. Coffey, Jr. V. C.; J. B. Cox, Adj.; J. V. Quick, Surgeon; L. D. Middleton, Chaplain; Lafayette Gregg, Quartermaster; C. M. Greene, Officer of the Day; William Mayes, Officer of the Guard; C. F. Lang, S. M.; P. M. Stephens, Q. M. S., and J. H. Harmon, Guard. These, with the following, constitute the charter membership: G. W. M. Reed, T. J. Taylor, W. O'Brian, J. H. Flood, W. Mayes, J. Clancy, Phillip McGuire, B. F. Rice, I. W. Daniel, J. F. Wilson, W. F. Jones, J. Armstrong, H. K. Stephens, Joseph Duncan, T. Brooks, J. K. Pool, S. S. Mayes, George Carney, D. Devilbiss, W. C. Roberts, J. M. Brinson, S. Cox, W. J. York, T. J. Hunt, H. Harmon, J. Harmon, J. H. Johnson, R. H. Clayton, Elias Andrew and C. W. Wright. The lodge lapsed after a few meetings, and was reorganized April 4, 1887. Their hall is on the second floor of the Byrnes & Blackmer Planing-mill Block, where, among the post relics, is a flag-staff, captured from Gen. Caball by the men under Lieut. Brooks. The present officers are Thomas Brooks, P. C.; W. O'Brian, Sr. V. C.; J. W. Quick, Jr. V. C.; W. J. York, Surgeon; Elias Armstrong, Chaplain; R. S. Curry, Officer of the Day; J. R. Lee, Officer of the Guard; J. C. McClellan, Adj.; S. H. Blackmer, Q. M. S., and W. A. Todd, S. M. They have thirty-nine members.

Criterion Lodge No. 36, Knights of Pythias, of Fayetteville, was organized June 16, 1887, at the I. O. O. F. Lodge hall. The order began with the following charter members: J. C. Purdy, E. B. Harrison, Chas. M. Greene, R. C. Choate, C. A. Mulholland, John P. Wood, W. C. Cardwell, John A. Reed, J. S. McDaniel, H. F. McDaniel, Thomas Shores, Thomas W. White, Joseph T. Morris, H. D. Perky, J. L. Bozarth, John T. Jarrell, E. B. Wall, C. Dale, George Reed, Jr., Lafayette Reed, Damon Clarke, Frank Van Horn, J. B. Shannon, John N. Tillman, W. R. McIlroy and J. H. Williams. Of these, Mr. Harrison, P. C.; Mr. Greene, C. C.; Mr. Reed, V. C.; Mr. Clarke, P.; Mr. McIlroy, M. of E.; Mr. Dale, M. of F.; Mr. Tillman, K. of R., and Mr. Reed, Jr. M. at A., constituted the first list of officers. From the organization until the present the Chancellors Commanding have been as follows: E. B. Harrison, C. M. Greene, John A. Reed and John N. Tillman. The lodge now has a membership of fifty-seven, over whom are the following officers: J. N. Tillman, C. C.; W. C. Cardwell, V. C.; T. A. Hancock, M. at A.; W. R. McIlroy, M. of Ex.; W. L. Benbrook, M. of F., and J. J. Vaulx, the Prelate. The society use the I. O. O. F. Hall.

Municipal.—At the January term of the county court, in 1841, a petition signed by more than two-thirds of the taxable inhabitants praying for the incorporation of Section 16, Township 16 north, Range 30 west, was presented and granted. P. V. Rhea was appointed the first alderman, and John W. Johnson, John B. Costa, Richard P. Pulliam, Hosea G. Cardwell and M. W. Thornby, the first councilmen. This organization was maintained until 1859, when a city charter was obtained from the Legislature. The first election under the new charter was held in April of that year, when the following officers were chosen: J. W. Walker, mayor; J. W. Washbourne, C. E. Butterfield, P. P. Van Hoose, J. B. Simpson, A. Crouch, J. H. Stirman and E. C. Boudinot, councilmen. The next year the officers elected were Stephen Bedford, mayor; L. B. Cunningham, J. R. Pettigrew, J. Holcomb, C. E. Butterfield, J. T. Sutton, J. H. Van Hoose and W. T. Pollard, councilmen, and M. D. Frazer, marshal.

During the war the municipal government was suspended, and was not reinstated until 1867 or 1868, when M. LaRue Harrison was elected mayor. Some of the acts of the new municipal government were distasteful to the citizens of the town, and in 1869 an application was made to the Legislature to revoke the charter, which was done. An organization was then effected under a general statute, and E. I. Stirman was elected mayor. The order of incorporation was made by the county court, August 24, 1870, and he was elected in November upon a Democratic ticket. In November, 1871, T. Murray Campbell, a Republican, was elected mayor, A. J. Norris, recorder, and G. W. M. Reed, Alonzo Flanders, G. W. Taylor, Charles Smith and A. J. Blackwell, councilmen. One of the first acts of the new council was to adopt the following ordinance:

"Be it ordained, that all ordinances and parts of ordinances passed by the former council, except those in relation to the agricultural college, be and hereby are repealed up to date of November 7, 1871."

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF WASHINGTON COUNTY.

The municipal government was maintained under this organization until 1885, when Fayetteville became a city of the second class.

The following is a list of the mayors elected since the retirement of T. Murray Campbell: J. R. Pettigrew, 1872-73; George A. Grace, 1873-74; Robert J. Wilson, 1874-76; A. M. Wilson, 1876-77; A. S. Vandeventer, 1877-80; J. H. Van Hoose, 1880-81; W. C. Jackson, 1881-83; C. W. Walker, 1883-84; Samuel E. Marrs, 1884-85; W. C. Jackson, April to December, 1885; R. J. Wilson, January to April, 1886; O. C. Gray, April, 1886, to October, 1887; E. B. Wall, October, 1887, to April, 1888; J. H. Van Hoose, elected for a term of two years, beginning April, 1888.

Business Development.—The Civil War dealt harshly with Fayetteville. Her churches and institutions of learning, all of her public buildings, and many others, were destroyed, while her people were scattered all over the South, financially broken and morally disheartened. But an intelligent and enterprising community, possessing the natural advantages that belong to Fayetteville, cannot be permanently "downed." No sooner had hostilities ceased than the work of restoration began, and the city of to-day is a lasting monument to its extraordinary recuperative powers. The location of the State University here in 1871 marks a long step forward, but the completion of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad added an element of still greater importance to the growth of the city. The population is now not far from 4,000, and in 1887 the estimated total business transactions amounted to more than a million and a half dollars. The following is a running account of its business:

McIlroy's bank (private) was opened in 1872 under the name Denton D. Stark & Co., with William McIlroy as a large owner in it. Mr. Stark had the management of the business until 1878, when Mr. McIlroy assumed complete control. On July 1, 1886, the present firm name was adopted, the capital being owned by the McIlroy estate. W. R. McIlroy is cashier, and is assisted by C. M. Greene. Their resources are as follows: Loans and discounts, $88,978.60; overdrafts, $1,538.73; building, furniture, etc., $4,500; due from banks (good on draft), $50,487.71; cash, exchange and other items, $26,343.80; total, $171,878.84. Liabilities: Capital, $25,000; surplus and profits, $9,231.67; due depositors, $137,614.42; due banks, $32.75; total, $171,878.84. Loans made during 1887, $50,923.35; correspondents, Chemical National Bank, New York; Continental Bank, St. Louis, and the First National Bank, Little Rock.

The Washington County Bank was chartered November 6, 1884, under the State banking laws, by W. B. Welch, president; J. A. Ferguson, vice-president; B. R. Davidson, T. F. Jones, directors, and S. P. Pittman and A. L. Williams. The first four directors and two officers mentioned, with Mr. MacDevin as cashier, constituted the first organization. These men represent an estimated worth of $320,000. The officers remain unchanged, excepting S. P. Pittman, as vice-president and director, vice J. A. Ferguson. The resources of the bank are as follows: Discounts and loans, $55,943.25; bonds and stocks, $25,000; county warrants, cash value, $2,300; real estate, furniture and fixtures, $5,700; due from banks, $21,148.32; cash on hand, $20,267.54; total, $130,359.11. Liabilities, capital stock, $12,000; surplus, $6,400; undivided profits, $4,056.42; due other banks, $641.20; due depositors, $107,261.49; total, $130,359.11. Loans made in 1887, $290,000; exchange in 1887, $480,000; average daily clearance, $20,000; correspondents, National Park Bank, New York; Bank of Commerce, St. Louis; First National Bank, Fort Smith; German National Bank, Little Rock, and Merchants' Loan and Trust, Chicago.

Fayetteville Building and Loan Association, No. 1, permanent, was incorporated and began business March 11, 1886. E. B. Harrison was chosen president; J. W. Stirman, secretary; D. W. C. Davenport, treasurer; B. R. Davidson, attorney; E. B. Harrison, J. C. Williams, Albert Byrnes, G. T. Lake, J. L. Duke, H. K. Wade and C. W. Trott, directors. Their stock is divided into two series of $100,000 each, and each series is divided into 4,000 shares, valued at $25 each. Monthly dues are 12½ cents per share, and premiums are from 15 to 30 per cent. The present officers are President, E. B. Harrison; secretary, C. M. Greene; treasurer, W. R. McIlroy; attorney, E. D. Wall; directors, E. B. Harrison, G. T. Lake, A. Byrnes, J. L. Cravens, J. L.

Duke, C. Dale and J. L. Bozarth. The association has been a powerful agent in the development of Fayetteville.

The Fayetteville Electric Light and Power Company was organized as a stock company in January, 1888, with the following officers: President, E. B. Harrison; directors, A. Byrnes, J. S. McDaniel, Lee Baum, J. L. Cravens, G. T. Lake and J. L. Duke. Their chartered stock was $36,000. Their plant, valued at $8,000, has a capacity of 460 Heisler incandescent lamps of 20-candle power each; however, they have now but about 250 lamps, distributed on streets, in churches, hotels, etc. The H. F. McDaniel Railway Supply Company is one of the largest in the State. The Fayetteville Street Railway Company's president is I. J. Ronan, and W. L. Killebrew is secretary and superintendent.

In general merchandise are Baum & Bro., Reed & Ferguson, Campbell & White, C. C. Conner & Co., Wood & Co., B. H. Stone & Co., R. S. Curry, Boles & Co. and "The Famous" of Jesse Ellis. The grocers and general stores are represented by Mulholland & Lake, Gilbreath & Taylor, Wilson & Dickson, W. W. Harrison, C. M. Bigelow, Blakeley Bros., Lantrip & Miller, Moore & Gallaher, A. B. Lewis, Randall & Oliver and D. A. Coker. In the line of bakery, restaurant, confectionery, etc., are August A. G. Hach, Hodge & Riggs, Ira Turner, C. M. Bigelow, U. G. Pearce, N. L. Dickson & Co., T. Satterfield & Co. and J. F. Johnson. Hardware is headed by E. B. Harrison, E. Z. Davies, W. N. Crenshaw and R. R. Smith. W. F. Russell and John Cox are barbers. Jesse Ellis deals in, and John Feathers manufactures, boots and shoes. J. L. Duke and J. Wadkins have jewelry and time-piece establishments. Z. Thomas is a cigar maker. Mrs. S. J. Young and J. W. Hansard are photographers. Books and stationery are handled by J. D. Van Winkle and W. C. Cardwell. Gregg & Smith, Benbrook & Co., W. H. Whitlow, J. H. Williams & Co. and W. W. Dickey are in the drug and pharmacy trades. John F. Buie, undertaker. Saddlery and harness are in the hands of George Sutton and S. J. Jones. Implements of various kinds are sold by S. L. Kyle, John M. Howe and Cato Bros. Mrs. M. M. Allbright & Co. deal in musical instruments. D. M. Harbison and Carter & Taylor have meat markets. The Van Winkle House, by R. S. Miller, Mountain House, by Thomas Jennings, Tremont House, by H. L. Glass, and Quarles House, by E. Quarles represent the hotels. The Sweitzer Wagon Co., president, E. B. Harrison, and Ellis Duncan, secretary and superintendent. The Fayetteville Evaporator Company, by Campbell & White. The Bed Spring Manufacturing Co., proprietor, Thomas Jennings. The tailors are Baum Bros. and McFadden. W. L. Call, R. T. Smith and J. W. Quick are blacksmiths. H. F. Buie has a billiard hall. The legal fraternity are L. Gregg, B. R. Davidson, A. M. Wilson, J. V. Walker, J. D. Walker, C. W. Walker, J. W. Walker, T. M. Gunter, W. L. Contractors and builders, Mix & Co., I. N. Baker, F. P. Milburn and O. H. Marion. Architect and superintendent, C. M. Prentice. Insurance, J. H. Van Hoose and E. B. Wall. Sewing machines, L. Matney.

SPRINGDALE.

This is now a horticultural and commercial place, although its founding was due to religious purposes. As in many other cases the immediate cause of the settlement was the noble spring near a tree across the road west of Haxton & Co.'s woolen mills, but which, during the war, broke out at a period about 400 feet distant from its first opening, and south of the mills. The following entries of land in this part of the county will show what material there was for a settlement: Township 18 north, Range 30 west, Section 36—John Holcomb, September 1, 1845; S. P. Fine, February 29, 1840; W. G. Quinton, March 16, 1840; John Holcomb, September 18, 1856; Joseph Holcomb, December 29, 1852; James Fitzgerald, March 7, 1840; Isaac S. Fitzgerald, December 29, 1849, April 2, 1853, December 26, 1849, and April 9, 1855; W. H. Holcomb, January 11, 1853; Section 35—Freeborn Graham, February 28, 1840; Section 30—John Ingram, April 24, 1840; Thomas M. McLain, January 2, 1831; Section 31—William Barrington, September 5, 1849; Jacob Pearson, November 29, 1851; Section 32—John Ingram, November 22, 1848; John Hamilton, November 7, 1840. Township 17 north, Range 30 west, Section 1—James Brandon, October 29, 1838; W. D. Quinton, September 19, 1839; Section 2—John Fitzgerald, February 9, 1839; Isaac S. Fitzgerald, October 25, 1838. Township 18 north, Range 29 west, Section 30—John Fitzgerald, June 6, 1840; Joshua Fitzgerald, June 6, 1840; Section 29—S. White, September 12, 1840; W. Graham, June 12, 1840, and J. S. Graham, August 2, 1848. These are some of the earlier entries of the region of Springdale and Elm Springs, covering the plats of both places. The earliest settlers, then, about Springdale's site were the Fitzgeralds, James Brandon, W. D. Quinton, the Grahams, S. P. Fine, the Holcombs and S. White, together with some others at various dates, as Elijah Lee, William Easley and James Mayfield.

Many of these were adherents of the Primitive Baptist faith, and soon after their arrival held meetings at various places, and among the first visiting preachers were Rev. James Mayfield and Rev. John Holcombe (he retained the final e). Mr. Joseph Holcomb thinks the first members were Elijah Lee, William Graham, William Easley, Freeborn Graham and wife, Ira Graham and wife. The church was organized in 1840, and given the biblical name Shiloh, and on Christmas day, 1841, William D. Quinton deeded a plat at the spring, six rods by twenty rods, to the trustees of the church, William Easley, Elijah Lee and Freeborn Graham, for the site of a church. They soon erected a log church, and in 1843 found their first regular pastor in the person of Rev. John Holcombe, who bought of W. D. Quinton, and entered all the present plat of Springdale, and more, to the amount of 600 acres. From this time on to the present the place attracted attention through the well-known and largely attended "May Meetings" of this sect, in which the ceremony of "feet-washing" is performed. They have been held regularly, with three exceptions during the war. Rev. Holcombe built him a home, and also established a wagon-shop in which he employed four or five men, but aside from these and his wife and several children, and Shelby Fitzgerald, there were no residents on the site of Springdale for over twenty years. With dangers of the opening war arising, Rev. Holcombe and the most of his family sought refuge in Texas, and during the first year all their buildings were burned by men claiming to be Federal soldiers.

Following the close of hostilities he and the family returned, at once rebuilt the church, and built his home on the elevation just east of the woolen mills. This was in 1866. In July, 1868, he laid out the original town of Shiloh, on the west side of Spring Creek, about the old church plat. The first store was opened by R. S. Coon, whose stock was purchased the following year by Holcomb & Putman. In 1870 Joseph Holcomb returned from his travels succeeding his war service, and bought the old homestead, excluding the town plat. The Missionary Baptist College was about the next addition to the town of Shiloh, although it was short lived. It was organized in 1872. (Its growth will be treated of in the chapter on schools.) Then Mr. Jack Steele opened a general store. In 1875 the post-office was established, and the name changed to Springdale. The post-master appointed was B. E. Putman, and the successors to that position have been W. H. Lovelady, C. C. Phillips, B. W. Gregg, J. B. Gill and W. Y. Winton, the present incumbent.

Its Growth.—The growth of the village was so marked that incorporation began to be agitated, and the most active in this, as in other enterprises for the good of the place, was Joseph Holcomb, "the father of the town," as he is familiarly styled. By an order of the county court on April 1, 1878, "the town of Springdale" was incorporated. June 14, 1879, the following officers were elected, and on July 4 sworn in: Joseph Holcomb, mayor; W. R. Ritter, C. Petross, A. J. Hale, J. B. Baggett and R. M. Huffmaster, aldermen, and S. S. Purcell, recorder. The successors of Mr. Holcomb to the mayoralty have been: R. M. Huffmaster, O. C. Ludwig, Mr. Holcomb a second time, W. G. Prunner, S. L. Staples, for two terms, and Millard Berry, who is now serving his second term. The present aldermen are Joseph Holcomb, J. F. Barr, N. S. Haxton, E. A. Linebarger and Wilson M. Davis; treasurer, C. Petross, and recorder, E. H. Bryant.

During about a decade, in the earlier half of which was the date of incorporation, some of the following firms opened their respective places: W. H. Lovelady, the successor of Holcomb & Putnam; Slaughter & Seacy, A. M. Phillips and Joseph Holcomb with general stores; in the hardware line, J. A. Coffelt, Gill & Harris (afterward Deaver & Harris, and Deaver & Co.); wagon-shop, Drum & Phillips; flouring-mill, Petross & Son; evaporator, D. Wing & Bro.; nursery, J. B. Gill; Springdale Canning Co., president, J. R. Harris; lumber yard, A. J. Armstrong, and a newspaper, mentioned elsewhere.

The construction of the "Frisco Railway" during 1881 gave an impetus to the growth of Springdale, greater, probably, than any other place in the county, and it has been so marked as to be denominated a "boom." Putman's Addition to the town was laid out on the west, and afterward Joseph Holcomb laid out Railroad Addition on the south and east. Business spread itself along the street leading to the depot. The railway outlet for produce and fruit made those two industries the most prominent, and gave Springdale a leadership in the general fruit-growing interests of this part of the State, equal to any.

The general merchandise trade is represented by B. F. Deaver & Co., Dodson & Co., Lane, Linebarger & Co., Searcy & Sons, D. A. White and Martin & Livingston, while the grocers are G. M. Gabbert, C. W. Wright and Theo. Parker. W. T. Farrar and J. R. Harris & Bro. deal in hardware, and the drug trade is handled by H. A. Daily, W. Y. Winton and A. Starkweather. The Springdale Canning Co., a stock company, has a large factory. The Springdale Nurseries, owned by Gill & Vincenheller, another owned by A. M. Kennan & Son, and Zimmerman & Bryan represent the fruit interests. The W. B. Haxton & Co. Woolen Mills and the Springdale Milling Co. (roller mill) represent the mills. Phillips & Phillips and J. R. Harris & Bro. have lumber yards. Real estate is handled by Berry & Harris, while Millard Berry and A. J. Hale are lawyers.

The Springdale House, Thomas Gladden, proprietor, is the only hotel, while the bakeries, restaurants, confectioneries, etc., are represented by R. E. Renner, J. W. Kensil, Mr. Yocum and Mr. Davis. Drs. John Young, D. Christian, J. M. Kennedy and W. J. Wilkerson are the medical representatives, while Dr. J. B. Dare cares for the dental needs of the community. A. M. Kennan and Roach & Vinson are shoemakers; Charles A. Minney, barber; Sevier & Lewis, J. B. Baggett and G. W. Bowman care for wagon and blacksmith interests; Robert Orr and W. H. Russell have tin shops; Stokes & Bro. are liverymen; W. T. Farrar, harness-maker; E. T. Caudle and J. W. Carter have brick yards; a dairy is owned by W. Hewitt; milliners, Miss Mary Hodges and Miss Fannie Kensil; furniture is handled by B. H. Welch and B. F. Pollock; meat market, J. B. Henson; jeweler and photographer, George F. Kennan; plasterers, Van Dyke & Bartholomew; and among the sixteen or seventeen contractors and builders are C. W. Phillips, Stork & Gaut, D. M. Linebarger and C. A. Jones.

The Springdale News is the only newspaper. Its existence began in 1882 under the title of the Springdale Enterprise, O. C. Ludwig, editor, and a year or so later H. C. Warner purchased it and gave it the name Springdale Yellow Jacket. Price & Bro. then ran it for a brief interval under the cognomen Springdale Journal. Damon Clarke gave it its present title when he assumed control in 1886, but he sold out to H. M. & J. Van Butler, whose editorial charge, under the appellation The Arkansaw Locomotive, with which they headed the paper, closed May 1, 1887. The present editor, John P. Stafford, has since had charge of it, and has resumed the title News. Its political policy is Democratic.

The schools and churches of Springdale appear in the chapter on those subjects. Three societies, a farmers' club, the Masonic and G. A. R., are in a prosperous condition; two, the I. O. O. F. order and the W. C. T. U., once organized, are abandoned.

The Springdale Farmers' Club was organized in January, 1886, with W. M. Davis, president, and John B. Gill as secretary. The club has been one of the powerful instruments in the development of Springdale. They have introduced fine stock, particularly a Holstein bull and Berkshire hogs, the latter being the property of the organization. New varieties of fruit have been introduced and experimented with, amongst which is the noted early red peach, "The Gov. Garland," named and discovered by J. B. Gill. The shipping interests have been worked up by them. A successful live-stock show was held at Springdale in the fall of 1887 by the society, and they now have the finest collection of grains and grasses in the State for exhibition in the fall of 1888. The society has fifteen wide-awake members. I. D. Rader and John B. Gill have filled the office of president since the first incumbent. J. D. Beck is secretary.

Societies.—Springdale Lodge No. 316, F. & A. M., was chartered in 1873, and organized by James D. Henry, D. D. G. M. The first officers chosen were J. B. Steele, W. M.; W. H. Lovelady, S. W.; D. C. Smithson, J. W.; A. G. Smith, Treas.; J. R. Harris, Secy.; C. Petross, S. D.; Peter Graham, J. D.; and W. B. Smith, Tyler. They began with seventeen members, and have increased to fifty, with lodge property valued at $500. The present officers are D. Christian, W. M.; B. S. Williams, S. W.; W. N. Pierce, J. W.; C. Petross, Treas.; Evans Atwood, Secy.; L. D. Petross, S. D.; W. F. Daily, J. D., and E. Adams, Tyler. A list of Masters is as follows: B. Putman, N. D.; J. B. Steele (chartered), H. G. Hartley, W. H. Lovelady, W. M. Harris, J. A. Armstrong, B. F. Deaver, J. S. Patterson and the present incumbent. Messrs. Putman, Hartley, Harris, Lovelady and Deaver have served more than one term.

U. S. Grant Post No. 34, G. A. R., at Springdale, was chartered October 30, 1886, and the members were mustered in by S. P. Gilbreath, of West Fork. They had nineteen members, and elected the following officers: B. R. Butcher, C.; J. Smith, Sr. V. C.; C. W. Wright, Jr. V. C.; B. C. Cox, Adj.; A. W. Baker, Q.; R. E. Renner, Chaplain; J. T. Sullivan, Surgeon; John Vernon, O. of D.; J. W. Langford, O. of G.; S. Mayes, Q. S. They have a hall in the Searcy Block, and number sixty-five members. Present officers: J. Smith, C.; W. Mayes, Sr. V. C.; A. W. Baker, Jr. V. C.; C. W. Wright, Q.; R. E. Renner, Chaplain; E. P. Hall, Adj.; J. Vernon, O. of D.; E. A. Ellis, O. of G.; J. Pollett, S. M.; J. Conger, Q. S.; J. T. Sullivan, Surgeon.

OTHER TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

Elm Springs.—This name is derived from probably the largest of Washington County springs, and is a settlement six miles west of Springdale, located among great springs of such power that, not far from their openings, John Ingram, in 1844, found them strong enough to run a water-mill. This was the earliest mill in this part of the county, and was the nucleus of the village.

From the entries given in connection with the Springdale land entries, it is seen that Mr. Ingram made the first entry on the site of Elm Springs, in 1840, and that in that region Thomas M. McLain entered land as early as January 2, 1831. William Barrington, Jacob Pearson and John P. Hamilton made entries in 1849, 1851 and 1840, respectively. A Mr. Rose was a very early settler there, but no record of his having entered land exists. After the location of the mill Mr. Ingram was joined by William Barrington, who also opened a store, and gave the name Elm Springs to the new settlement. His miller was W. F. Deaver. Mr. Barrington bought out Mr. Ingram, and some time afterward sold a half interest in the mill to B. J. Deaver—the firm then bearing the name Deaver & Barrington. After 1852 a blacksmith shop was added, and soon the schools under Rev. and Mrs. Jesse McAllister were opened. At this period the population of the place had probably reached its highest. A few years later an epidemic broke up the school. One of the first stores opened was owned by Barrington, Shelton & McAllister, and a pioneer named "Hosey" Moses had a small establishment. Early church buildings will be mentioned in the pages devoted to those subjects. Among the business men since the war have been Dr. Christian, F. F. Webster, James Pollock, Trotter & Wasson, B. J. Davis, Farrar & Reed. Elm Springs post-office was established in 1848, W. Barrington, postmaster. In 1852 W. S. Deaver was postmaster, and was followed by John Reavis, who held the office until the discontinuance of mails, in 1861. The postmasters since 1865 have been Miss M. W. Pearson (now Mrs. Wasson), J. R. Pollock, James Grimsly, James Trotter, T. F. Webster, R. L. Ritter, W. T. Farrar, R. L. Ritter, B. J. Beaver and W. V. Steele, the present incumbent.

The war almost depopulated Elm Springs, and its business has not since risen above its present condition. The mills, which once made the place a center of trade, have long since disappeared, and what remains is general business, represented by the following firms: In general merchandise—M. D. Steele, R. L. Ritter, G. A. Wilkerson and W. V. Steele deal in drugs, notions, etc.; Garrison & Pearson manage the marble trade; Smith & Robinson are blacksmiths; E. M. Hilsabeck holds the shoe trade; Drs. T. G. Welch, D. C. Summers and G. A. Wilkerson are the physicians; J. M. Robinson, J. P., and B. J. Deaver, N. P., are the sources of legal light. One lodge is also in operation, the F. & A. M.

West Fork.—This place and its vicinity had settlers who entered land as early as April 25, 1836. The following entries were made in that region: William Bloyd, October 24, 1840; James Wynn, July 16, 1840; Eli Bloyd, August 19, 1840; Peter Bloyd, November 10, 1840; John Graham, May 7, 1836; George Putmer, April 10, 1837; Robert McPhail, April 25, 1836; Moses Graham, July 9, 1838; Evan Harrer, July 10, 1838; J. F. Tami-son, December 12, 1838, and Benjamin Hardin, April 25, 1836. The general settlement went under the name of West Fork, but its village life did not begin until about 1875 or 1876, when the old water-mill plant at the head of the creek was moved there, and the steam mills built. This was carried out by H. H. Davis, D. Robinson and W. H. Brock. Following this was a carding-machine, introduced by M. M. Morrow, and John Hughes became the first merchant. A spoke-factory was established by J. M. Langston, soon followed by a Mr. Bentley. H. H. Davis and J. M. Langston soon became proprietors of the mill, and added a blacksmith shop; and a Mr. Bell soon added another place where the anvil's ring could be heard. Hughes, the merchant, soon disposed of his stock to Jacob Yoes and a Mr. Simco, but on the completion of the "Frisco" railway he reopened another establishment.

The construction of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway was as great a boon to West Fork as to other places along the line. An outlet for its fruits, produce and timber led to rapid development in the village, until its business is now represented by the following establishments: Jacob Yoes and Gilbreath & Langston lead in merchandise; F. J. Males has a fine drug store; J. P. Cox deals in groceries; hardware and implements are handled by Jacob Yoes; a meat market is owned by Thomas Everett; C. Stapleton deals in furniture; J. W. Bell, and D. H. and D. K. Barron are blacksmiths. The West Fork Hotel is owned and managed by Dr. A. S. Fleming. The proprietors of the West Fork Flouring Mills are Yoes & Crider. The West Fork Canning and Evaporating Company is a local stock company, with a capital of $25,000, and $8,500 already invested in equipment. The president is S. P. Sample; secretary, G. S. White, and superintendent, C. K. Winslow. Mr. Sample, H. H. York, G. A. Yoes, J. W. Robertson, Thomas Walker, J. F. Collyer and J. C. Oldham are directors. The company also own a can factory. Lozier's Nursery is owned by Fred. Lozier. J. M. Phillips is a contractor and builder. Drs. J. S. Cannon, S. P. Sample and A. S. Fleming represent the medical fraternity. Thomas McKnight, J. P., J. C. Oldham, N. P., and G. S. White, N. P., attend to legal business.

The post-office was moved from the present site of Pitkin, which then bore the name West Fork. The first incumbent of that office was H. H. Davis; he was followed by J. W. Hughes, W. Simco, himself and J. P. Cox, who is now in charge. A well-known deputy postmaster was J. M. Langston.

Four fraternities are represented, the G. A. R., F. & A. M., I. O. O. F. and Knights of the Horse.

West Fork was incorporated in May, 1885, and the following officers chosen: Mayor, J. M. Phillips; recorder, J. A. Smith; marshal, Joshua Carmen; aldermen, H. H. Davis, H. H. York, S. P. Sample, W. E. Shanks and N. Northern. Messrs. Simpson and Emerson have served as mayors, also. The officers for 1888 are as follows: Mayor, J. M. Phillips; recorder, J. B. Lansdell; treasurer, S. P. Sample; marshal, N. Northern; aldermen, J. C. Carmen, J. F. Collyer, J. D. Sample, Thomas McKnight and James Emerson.

Prairie Grove.—This is the third town in Washington County in population and importance. It is situated in the midst of one of the most beautiful valleys in Northwestern Arkansas, and within a short distance of the geographical center of the county. Its site was first settled by Rev. Andrew Buchanan in 1829, and by his influence a school and a church were established soon after. He died in 1857, leaving his real estate by will to his widow during her life-time. At her death, with the exception of eighty acres, it was to go to Cane Hill College, and in event of the failure of that institution it was to become the property of the Cumberland Presbyterian Book Concern, at Nashville, Tenn. The eighty acres were to go to two servants. This bequest naturally produced serious complications in the title. In 1871 Col. James P. Neal, a step-son of Mr. Buchanan, obtained deeds from the various parties interested in the property, and took up his residence on the old homestead. He then conceived the idea of founding a town, and soon after secured the establishment of a post-office, of which he was made postmaster. In 1872 a blacksmith and wagon-shop was opened by Rogers & Baggett, and in 1875 a store-house was erected, and a stock of goods put into it. The following year McPhetridge, Baggett & Rogers erected a large steam flouring-mill, and in 1877 the town was regularly laid out. The first sale of lots took place on March 24 of that year. Since that time the town has steadily improved, and now has a population of about 500.

In 1885 a weekly newspaper called the Prairie Grove News was established by Joseph Garrison, and published for about one year. In April, 1887, H. Milton Butler began the publication of the Prairie Grove Banner, which he has since continued. The Rising Sun was published for a short time in 1887, but was soon bought out by the Banner.

The two most important manufacturing enterprises of the town are the Prairie Grove Mills, now owned and operated by H. C. & G. W. Crowell, and the Prairie Grove Canning and Evaporating Factory, operated by a joint-stock company. The latter enterprise was recently established. The officers of the company are E. G. McCormick, president; D. F. McMillan, vice-president; W. I. Cook, secretary; W. T. McCormick, treasurer; D. K. Hulbert, superintendent. The directors are E. G. McCormick, C. G. Marrs, J. O. Parks, W. P. Dyer, D. F. McMillan, S. B. Hardy and J. H. Flood. The authorized capital stock is $25,000, of which $8,000 has been paid in. The factory is supplied with all the latest improved machinery for canning and evaporating fruit. It has a capacity of 10,000 cans per day by the canning process, and 250 bushels per day when evaporating fruit or vegetables.

The mercantile interests of Prairie Grove are represented by the following individuals and firms: General stores, H. C. & G. W. Crowell, B. A. Carl, W. N. Butler & Co., Hardy & Marrs, W. P. Dyer and D. F. McMillan; furniture, H. H. Collier; harness and saddlery, A. Dixon & Co.; druggists, McCormick & Co. and H. C. Crowell; jewelry, musical instruments, etc., Simmons & Henderson; marble works, Leach & Dorman; hardware, Baggett & Sanders; lumber, J. V. Rich.

Occidental Lodge No. 436, A. F. & A. M., of Prairie Grove, was organized March 20, 1886, with the following officers: J. E. Mock, W. M.; E. G. McCormick, S. W.; J. J. Baggett, J. W.; G. E. James, S. D.; J. O. Parks, J. D.; W. R. Wallace, Treas.; R. S. Staples, Sec., and W. D. Rogers, Tyler. The membership at present numbers twenty-eight. The meetings are held in the institute building. E. G. McCormick is now W. M.; W. W. Mahan, S. W.; A. Sanders, J. W.; W. N. Butler, Sec., and J. J. Baggett, Treas.

Boonsboro.—Eight miles southwest of Prairie Grove is this flourishing community of two or three hundred souls. It is in one of the oldest settled sections of the county, and dates its existence as a village from the "thirties." The first store was opened by Morris Wright in 1834 or 1835, in a little log cabin, just north of the present village. In 1840 he removed a little further south, and continued in business until the war. At about the same time Levi Richards and White McClellan opened a second store, and John F. Truesdale erected a steam mill just below the town, where some ten years before a small water mill had been built by Thomas Garvin.

The establishment of Cane Hill College in 1852 somewhat increased the importance of the village, but in 1860 it could boast of only two stores. These were kept by McClure & McClellan and Wright & Lewis. At the close of the war E. W. McClellan & Son, Lewis & Ayres and Warren Stewart were among the first merchants to resume business.

The great distance of the town from the railroad has somewhat obstructed its growth, yet it has made steady improvement. The following is a directory of its present business interests: Edmiston & Co., J. Edmiston, S. T. Cole, McBride & Haygood and Cowley & Welch, general stores; J. W. Cope, druggist; Ross & Blackburn and Mrs. M. L. Mann, millinery; W. F. Easterley, wagon-maker; Russell & Wood and A. E. Andrews, blacksmiths; Moore & Pyeott, roller flouring-mill; J. M. Russell & Co. and R. H. Bean, grist-mills; canning factory, operated by a stock company. The canning factory is similar to the one at Prairie Grove, and was recently put into operation. The president of the company is J. S. Edmiston, and the secretary, H. W. Moore. The raising of nursery stock is an extensive business in the vicinity of the town. The leading nurseries are owned by J. B. Russell & Co., Haygood & Co. and D. M. Moore & Son.

When Cane Hill Lodge No. 57, A. F. & A. M., was organized is not now known, as the charter and records were destroyed during the war. The first meeting of which any record could be found was held on August 3, 1865, when J. A. L. McCulloch was W. M.; George W. Scott, S. W.; L. W. Yates, J. W.; F. R. Earle, S. D.; R. H. Bean, J. D.; E. W. McClellan, Secretary; A. Mitchell, Treasurer, and W. B. Brodie, Tyler. The next year a building committee, composed of J. W. Staggs, J. A. L. McCulloch and L. W. Yates, was appointed, and a second story was built over E. W. McClellan's store for a lodge room. It was occupied until December, 1886, when the building was destroyed by fire.

Meetings have since been held over the Methodist Church. The following is a list of the Worshipful Masters since 1865: W. B. Welch, 1866; J. M. Lacy, 1867; F. R. Earle, 1868; R. D. Hays, 1869; James Mitchell, 1870; J. P. Carnahan, 1871; H. M. Welch, 1872; C. McCulloch, 1873; H. M. Welch, 1874-76; J. A. L. McCulloch, 1876; J. A. Buchanan and J. P. Carnahan, 1877-79; T. S. Tennant, 1879; J. P. Carnahan, 1880; W. B. Welch, 1881; R. H. Bean, 1882; H. L. Routh, 1883-85; T. W. Blackburn, 1885-87; J. P. Carnahan, 1887. The members of the lodge now number about thirty.

Evansville.—This village was named in honor of Capt. Lewis Evans, who opened a store there about 1830. He was succeeded by Charles McClellan, and about 1838 a flood of merchants came in, bringing large stocks of goods to sell to the immigrant Cherokees, to whom large sums of money were due from the Government. As payment was delayed for fifteen years, many of these merchants failed, and the business interests of the town were seriously impaired. Soon after the town was laid off Leonard Schuler established a tan-yard, the most extensive ever in the county. A horse-mill was built by Evans soon after he opened his store, and for a short time it supplied nearly the whole county with meal. There are now in the town two steam saw and grist mills, with cotton gins attached. The first was erected by C. E. Rose, in 1870, and the other by Littlejohn & McCormick, about five years ago.

The first schools in Evansville were taught by Allen M. Scott, who was succeeded by Mrs. Dr. Bartlett. For four years, from about 1874 to 1878, a graded school was maintained, but it has since been abandoned.

The business interests of the town are now represented by the following firms: J. A. Bacon, Basham & Goodrich, J. M. Chandler, J. R. Flinn, F. N. & N. B. Littlejohn and G. W. McClure, general stores; L. W. Rosser, cabinet maker; W. L. Childress, cabinet and wagon maker, and J. C. Ferguson, wagon maker. About one mile north of Evansville is a little village known as Greensburg, containing a store, a blacksmith shop, carpenter shop, a Masonic lodge and a school-house.

Cincinnati.—This is one of the best inland towns in the county. It is situated in Section 29, Township 16 north, Range 33 west. and is the center of a rich grain and live stock region. It is within one and a half miles of "the Nation," and has a good trade from that country. The amount of business transacted in 1887 is estimated as follows: Aggregate, $224,935; merchandise, wagons and agricultural implements, $82,865; grain and grain products, $43,500; cattle, hogs, sheep and mules, $91,750; miscellaneous, $5,000. There are in the town five general merchants, two milliners, one druggist, one wagon factory, one agricultural implement factory, two blacksmiths, two tanneries, two harness shops, one undertaker, two shoe-shops, one merchant and custom mill, two physicians, one dentist, one hotel, one livery stable, an academy and two churches. One of the most important enterprises is the wagon factory of James Oates, who located in Cincinnati in 1868. His sales in 1887 amounted to $15,000. The oldest mercantile establishment is that of R. J. Rhea, who in 1884 succeeded W. H. Rhea, who began business in 1849. Among the others are Rhea & Watts, Spivey & Marquess Bros., Moore Bros., H. Shields and C. M. Cox. Moore Bros. are also proprietors of the Eureka Mills.

Farmington.—A little village six miles west of Fayetteville is called Farmington. It was laid out about 1870, by W. H. Ingles, and for a number of years grew quite rapidly, but of late it has somewhat deteriorated. The principal business is carried on by C. C. Conner & Co., who have a general store, and also operate a flouring-mill. Reed & Son and Rieff & Macy are the other merchants. A wagon-shop is conducted by J. H. Cato.

HAMLETS.

Dutch Mills, on Section 28, Township 14, Range 33; Greensburg, on Section 16, Township 13, Range 33; Viney Grove, on Section 1, Township 15, Range 32; Sulphur City, on Section 15, Township 15, Range 29; Brentwood, on Section 29, Township 14, Range 30; McGuire's Store, on Section 25, Township 16, Range 29; Winslow, on Section 13, Township 13, Range 30, and Salem Springs, on Section 8, Township 14, Range 33, are smaller places, some of which promise growth.

EDUCATION.

Lands and Funds.—Washington County, if she could have controlled Arkansas, would, no doubt, have dotted the State with schools and colleges; as it was she was among the first counties to encourage the proper use of the great United States land grants for public institutions of learning. It was not because there were not large grants made to the commonwealth that the public-school movement languished until 1868, for with the "16th section" grant, "the 72 sections seminary land grant," the 640,000 acres, and "the swamp lands grant" of September 28, 1850, there were from nine to eleven millions of acres of school lands at the disposal of the commonwealth for the education of its children; and some of this, too, as early as "the forties."

Every State has its periods of fraudulent administration, but in no part of the history of Arkansas has fraud and plunder been more rife than in the early administration of the most precious of its funds and resources, the school funds and lands. The lands were sacrificed at 50 and 75 cents an acre, and even then the funds were misappropriated and misloaned, until the statutes teemed with acts to suppress the evil. The office of county school commissioners was established in the hope that evils of caring for the fund might be lessened, and so the situation continued until 1868.

Earliest Schools.—Washington County suffered with the rest of the State, as far as the fund was concerned, but her settlers and pioneers, like their forefathers from the "old world," brought their schools and churches along with them, and welcomed others, who were pioneer planters of such institutions. Many parents taught their own children, and then sent them to other States. Some lady or gentleman would take a few boys and girls of the neighborhood to his or her own home and hold a "subscription school." But the poorer people and the colored race had not even these advantages. There is no certain information as to the first teacher in the county. A Mrs. Hoge held one of the earliest private schools, in her home near Evergreen Cemetery, at Fayetteville. (Governor) Isaac Murphy was also a teacher at the county seat in the latter part of "the thirties."

His was a mixed school. A Dr. Sanders was one of the earliest pedagogues there also. Mr. and Mrs. Dickson were among the number about the year 1840. In the region of Springdale probably "Uncle Joe" Holcomb taught the first schools, as early as 1844; he was followed in 1845 by "Tom" Cannon; Harvey Adams covered the time to 1850, when Miss Jennie Mills took up the birch for the two years following; D. A. White in 1853, George Hancock in 1854, and Charles Wildes covered the most of the period before the war. "Abe" Whaley and a Mr. Allbright were among those after the war.

The Far West Seminary.—This institution was intended to be the first college in Arkansas, and some place its earliest beginnings, before 1835, in a brick church at Mount Comfort. In 1843 its board of visitors included Rev. C. Washbourne, G. W. Paschal, A. W. Arrington, Robert W. Mecklin and Isaac Strain, who published in the Arkansas Intelligencer a three-column article on the purposes of the institution. Rev. Washbourne was sent east to solicit aid for it, and great exertions were made to get it firmly on foot. It was incorporated in 1844—then the only college in Arkansas, and Ozark Institute was to become a preparatory school. Good buildings were started, but on February 27, 1845, the still unfinished structures were burned, causing a loss of from $12,000 to $13,000. This seemed to be the death-blow to the enterprise. Rev. Robert W. Mecklin was among its principals, and Col. J. P. Neal, of Prairie Grove, was one of the many young men who attended it. It was suspected of being a political move, for some reason, and that, no doubt, had much to do with the lack of encouragement extended to it.

Cane Hill Schools.—Cane Hill was settled in the main by educated Christian people, and it early became distinguished for its churches and schools. Both were established as soon as the first settlers had located their land, and secured shelter for themselves and families. At first one school supplied the youth for several miles around with instruction, but as the settlements became more numerous better educational facilities were demanded. On October 28, 1834, a meeting of the Cumberland Presbyterians, of Washington County, was held in the Cane Hill meeting-house for the purpose of taking the necessary steps to establish a school. Rev. Samuel King was called to the chair, and presided over the deliberations. A board of trust was chosen, and the Rev. B. H. Pierson, D. D., was elected president and Ezra Wilson clerk. This school was opened in April, 1835, and was probably kept up in some form until the founding of Cane Hill College.*

Cane Hill College.—This latter institution was chartered in 1852, and went into operation in a brick building erected for the purpose at Boonsboro'. Rev. Robert M. King, of Missouri, was president, and Prof. S. Doak Lowry, assistant. After laboring for about six years Mr. King resigned, and his place was filled by the promotion of Prof. Lowry. James H. Crawford and P. W. Buchanan were at the same time made assistants. An effort was made to raise an endowment by scholarships, and Rev. W. G. L. Quaite was appointed endowing agent. He received in donations and scholarships about $1,000, but owing to the loss occasioned by the war very little was realized from this effort.

In March, 1859, Rev. F. R. Earle, of Greenville, Ky., accepted the presidency, and was formally inaugurated the following June. At the close of the collegiate year, in June, 1859, two young men, S. H. Buchanan and J. T. Buchanan, were regularly graduated, receiving the first diplomas given by the institution. At that time, also, the first catalogue was issued. S. H. Buchanan was employed as tutor for the next session, and at the close of the school year, in 1860, Prof. Lowry resigned. In 1861 work was necessarily suspended, and in November, 1864, the college building with all its contents was destroyed by fire. A building previously used as a boarding-house escaped the flames, and after the close of hostilities the president began preaching and teaching there. In 1868 a new frame building, valued at $5,000, was completed, and in September the president, assisted by Prof. James Mitchell, opened the college. The next year J. P. Carnahan was added to the teaching force. In 1874 Prof. Mitchell resigned, and his place was filled by Prof. Harold Bourland. In 1875 the trustees resolved to admit pupils of both sexes, and Rev. H. M. Welch was placed in charge of the young ladies' department. He retired in 1879. In the four years following Mrs. Earle, Miss Welch, Miss Moore and Mrs. Whittenburg were employed as teachers whenever the patronage demanded it. In 1883 Prof. Carnahan retired, after eighteen years' service. The president then had entire charge of the work until 1885, when he too resigned, and Rev. J. P. Russell was placed in charge. Mr. Russell taught for two and one-half sessions. In the second session of his administration the college building was burned. In this emergency the Methodists offered their house, and this, with a small dwelling, furnished accommodations for the school. Upon the resignation of Mr. Russell, Dr. Earle again undertook the management of the institution, and in 1886 there was completed a new brick building, better than either of the former ones, at a cost of about $8,000. In 1887 the president, assisted by two good teachers, began work in the new building, and a fairly successful year ensued. Dr. Earle is an able educator and a faithful worker, and Cane Hill College is doing much for the cause it represents, but it is now under the shadow of the State University, and is so far removed from railroad communication that it can scarcely hope to regain its old-time prosperity.

At about the time Cane Hill College was established Esquire James B. Russell, who had previously done much for the promotion of education in the community, erected a large frame building about one mile south of Boonsboro, furnished it with a library and apparatus, and installed Thomas G. McCulloch as teacher. McCulloch, who was an excellent instructor, although a somewhat severe disciplinarian, remained in charge of the school for four or five years, and under his administration the attendance became so great that an addition to the building was made. After Prof. McCulloch's retirement the school was successively under the direction of Miss Coleman and Miss Lloyd.

Upon the establishment of Cane Hill College Mr. Russell proposed to donate the property to the church, provided $500 was raised for the college in his name. This was done, and Cane Hill Seminary became as famous an institution for the education of young ladies as Cane Hill College was for the education of young men. During the three or four years before the war this institution was under the care of Prof. Newton Gibens and three assistants.

Prairie Grove Institute is the name of a high-school conducted under the auspices of Fayetteville District Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It was opened in 1883, under the care of N. J. Foster, in a two-story brick building, erected for the purpose in a beautiful grove near the town of Prairie Grove.

The Fayetteville Female Seminary.—In 1839 this institution was founded by Miss Sophia Sawyer. This lady had left her New England home to become a missionary to the Cherokee Indians in Tennessee, and on their removal to the Indian Territory she followed them, in company with the Ridge family. Indian troubles led to her locating at Fayetteville, whither she brought fourteen young Cherokee girls, daughters of prominent Cherokee families. Among these maidens were four who bore the names Susan Drew, Amanda Drew, Maggie Harper and Julia Rogers. She opened her school near the present residence of Stephen K. Stone, and in time had an assistant, a Miss James (afterward Mrs. Marshall), and later on Miss Lucretia Foster and Miss Mary T. Daniels. Rev. C. Washbourne at one time was instructor in literature. Two Misses Freyschlag also assisted at one time. In about 1854 Miss Lucretia Foster became principal, and in 1859 the institution was incorporated. A neat catalogue, issued for 1859-60, gives the following faculty: Mrs. Lucretia Foster Smith, principal; Miss Mary T. Daniels, associate; Miss Annis C. Feemster, teacher in primary department; Madame Marie Janssen, teacher in French and embroidery; Mr. F. F. Zellner, professor of music. The whole number in all departments was 103; number in music, twenty-four; number in embroidery, thirty. The students were largely from Fayetteville, but some were from such distant points as Salem, Tenn. The first year of the war, however, closed this institution, but not before the first class received its diplomas. Elizabeth F. Massie, of Fayetteville, and Cener Boone, of Bedford County, Tenn., constituted the class.

Ozark Institute.—On May 19, 1845, Rev. Robert W. Mecklin, having withdrawn from The Far West Seminary, opened a well-attended male seminary about three miles northwest of Fayetteville, and gave it the title "Ozark Institute." Its reputation spread throughout the region, and its attendance often numbered over a hundred students. To it were attracted as teachers such brainy young men as Rev. Robert Graham, who became the partner of Rev. Mecklin. Under them were assistants A. S. Lockert and Z. Van Hoose. The institution continued until February 17, 1857, and remained inoperative until after the war, when for a time it was revived by Prof. C. H. Leverett.

Rev. Robert Graham was a Christian gentleman of remarkable abilities, and of excellent scholarship; he was a man who left his impress upon any society in which he moved, and with these abilities was coupled the earnestness and zeal of a convert of Alexander Campbell. He was not only a pastor, but an educator, and not only formed but was able to execute plans for the higher education of the youth of Washington County and the Southwest. He had made a strong impression on the students of Ozark Institute, and on his withdrawal from that school in 1850, to found a college in Fayetteville, he was followed by about twenty pupils. In October of that year he founded Arkansas College, and began the school on the lot now occupied by the residence of Mr. Prentiss. The enterprise was a private one, entirely under Mr. Graham's control, and in 1851 his situation was such that he felt warranted in building a new structure in McGarrah's grove, on the site of the present Fayetteville Christian Church. Mr. Graham's first assistant was Prof. John M. Pettigrew, afterward a senator. Among his students were the following well-known names, some of them of national reputation: James R. Pettigrew, afterward editor of the Sentinel, and one of the Utah Commission, Robert Rutherford (now Judge), Granville Wilcox, a distinguished lawyer, and editor of the Van Buren Argus. Arkansas and John Wilson, T. W. and W. T. Pollard, J. T. Sutton, Maj. Johnson and Mark L. Evans, who became useful men, were also among the number. The school had attained a first-class reputation under the influence of Robert Graham, and its attendance was probably never below 100 pupils after the new building was occupied. In 1859, another Christian minister, Rev. William Baxter, assumed control on the withdrawal of Mr. Graham, and was its president until, like all the other institutions of peace, it gave way to the march of war in 1861. There are conflicting rumors in regard to the destruction of the building;

it is said to have been destroyed by the order of McCulloch, in event of the defeat of his army at Pea Ridge, and according to others it was burned by Federal soldiers as a war signal to Springfield officers toward the North. Certain it is, however, it was reduced to ashes.

The loss of Miss Sawyer's school to Washington County's facilities for female education might have been replaced by the Fayetteville Female Institute, organized in 1858, if the war had allowed it to continue; but it had the misfortune to be used by Gen. McCulloch as an arsenal, and, after fatal Pea Ridge, the bombs and powder it contained were made to do self-destruction to the building and its magazine. Rev. T. B. Van Horn, of Ohio, the founder, in looking about for a site, chose the northwest corner of Dixon and College Avenues, the site of the parsonage of Rev. Dr. Maynard at present; here he built a three-story frame edifice, surmounted by a spire.

As Rev. Van Horn was a strong Unionist, he left Arkansas in 1861, and his institution was converted into a Confederate arsenal, meeting with the fate above mentioned. The attendance had averaged probably fifty pupils.

In 1849 Rev. Jesse and Mrs. S. A. E. McAllister organized two large academies at Elm Springs, Rev. McAllister teaching the male school, and the female school being in charge of his wife. The attendance reached sixty or more in the male school, and probably forty in the girls' school, many attendants of the latter coming from the Indian Nation. The school was under Methodist Episcopal influences, if not entirely controlled by that body. It was not destined to an unbroken existence, for an epidemic a few years after its organization resulted in its abandonment; not, however, before a Mr. Lockhart had served as Rev. McAllister's successor, and a Mrs. E. Saunders, who had been professor of music, had taken the place of Mrs. McAllister at the head of the female school. The deed for the lot for the building site was given May 8, 1852, by W. Barrington, to the trustees of Elm Springs Male and Female Academy, Thomas Stanford, Russell M. Morgan, Thomas McClain, W. N. Carlile, L. H. Flake and Lee C. Blakemore.

A Baptist College.—In 1872 there was organized at Springdale a Missionary Baptist College by the Rev. Barnes, and in the following year it was incorporated. It was under the control of three teachers, and held in a fine two-story brick edifice that rivals the public school building of the town. For some reason the school did not prosper, and in April, 1885, it was bought by the Lutheran Church, and converted into a parochial high-school for a colony of that faith in and to the west of Springdale, and now goes under the name "Lutheran College." Two instructors, Rev. A. S. Bartholomew and Rev. I. E. Rader, have been in charge ever since the new organization, and their enrollment often reaches eighty in number.

Elm Springs Academy.—In January, 1887, Rev. W. W. Lundy, a graduate of Hiwassee College, East Tennessee, leased the school property at Elm Springs, and established "Elm Springs Academy for Males and Females." The first year sixty-five students were enrolled, and in 1888 the enrollment reached 103 pupils. The school offers scientific, commercial, normal and classical instruction, under the able direction of Rev. Lundy and his assistant, Miss Jessie Gotcher.

The period from 1861 to 1867 may be considered practically a blank in the educational history of Washington County. During active hostilities the preservation of life was about all that the harassed mothers, left to care for their families as best they might, could do; and when reconstruction began, the broken up families, who looked round on devastated fields, burned homes, villages and towns, the ruins of everything that had been the fruits of years of labor and care, with scarcely anything to turn to except their orchards and the bare fields, found their situation almost as though they had come as penniless pioneers to a new country, and it needed some time for them to recuperate their exhausted energies and finances. Then, too, the situation had changed; the slaves were free; they were to be a part of the population; free schools were being agitated; the finances of the people and the State were in a lamentable condition; and for many reasons the free school idea did not become suddenly popular; there was still the tendency to cling to the private schools; the school funds from the public lands, so far as sold, were all gone; the State began taking means to secure what could be recovered; and soon a plan of free common schools was presented to the Legislature.

Common Schools.—On July 23, 1868, was approved an act of the State Legislature, entitled "An Act to establish and maintain a system of Free Common Schools for the State of Arkansas." The act begins :

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas:

SECTION 1. That the proceeds of all lands that have been or hereafter may be granted by the United States to this State, and not otherwise appropriated by the United States or this State; also all (moneys) stocks, bonds, lands, and other property, now belonging to any fund for purposes of education; also the net proceeds of all sales of lands and other property and effects that may accrue to this State by escheat, or from sale of estrays, or from unclaimed dividends or distributive shares of the estates of deceased persons, or from fines, penalties, or forfeitures; also any sales of the public lands which may have been or may be hereafter paid over to the State (Congress consenting); also all the grants, gifts, or devises that have been or may be hereafter made to this State, and not otherwise appropriated by the tenure of the grant, gift, or devise, shall be securely invested and sacredly preserved as a public-school fund, that shall be designated as the "Common-School Fund" of the State, and which shall be the common property of the State.

SECTION 2. That the annual income from the said fund, together with one dollar per capita, to be annually assessed on every male inhabitant over the age of twenty-one (21) years, and so much of the ordinary annual revenues of the State as may hereafter be set apart by law for such purposes, shall be faithfully appropriated for maintaining a system of "Free Common Schools" for this State, and shall be applied to no other purposes whatsoever, than to the payment of teachers' wages and the salaries of the circuit superintendents of public instruction.

The act provided that the governor, secretary of State and its created head, the superintendent of public instruction, should be the commissioners of the fund; that every county should be divided into school districts, with a trustee as the district officer; that each judicial district should constitute a school circuit, over which a "Circuit Superintendent of Public Instruction" should have supervision, these officers being appointed by the governor; and that among other duties these superintendents should license teachers, hold county teachers' institutes, visit schools, arrange district apportionment of funds, etc. The salary of these officers was to be $3,000 and office expenses; thus is seen the importance attached to the office. As an interesting feature of reconstruction days, the act provides for the following "Teacher's Oath:"

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm), that I will honestly and faithfully support the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the Constitution and laws of the State of Arkansas, and that I will encourage all other persons so to do. That I will never countenance or aid in the secession of this State from the United States; that I will endeavor to inculcate in the minds of youth sentiments of patriotism and loyalty, and will fully, faithfully and impartially perform the duties of the office of teacher according to the best of my ability; so help me God."

This act was amended April 12, 1869, to provide for certain district contingencies, and the sale and transfer of lands. On February 4 of the same year it was also amended to adapt the system to the peculiar needs of cities and towns, making them a special school district.

Dr. Thomas Smith was the first State superintendent of public instruction, and under him was W. B. Henderson, the circuit superintendent of public instruction over the districts of which Washington County is a part. Under Supt. Smith about 2,500 schools were organized throughout the State, and Washington County had her share.

Industrial University.—The next most important event in the educational history of Washington County, and of the State also, was an act of the Legislature, approved March 27, 1871, entitled "An Act for the Location, Organization and Maintenance of the Arkansas Industrial University, with a Normal Department therein." It begins thus:

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas:

SECTION 1. That the treasurer of said State be a financial agent and trustee of said State, immediately after the passage of this act, to apply for and receive of the United States Government all the land scrip to which this State may be entitled by reason of her acceptance of the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and acts amendatory thereof.

The act further provides for converting this scrip into funds; for a trustee from each judicial district, who, together with the State superintendent of public instruction, were to constitute the board of trustees; for receiving bids from counties, cities and incorporated towns for the location of the institution; for proceedings for its erection; for the organization and maintenance of it; for the appropriation of $50,000 for these purposes, the 150,000 acres of land scrip being only for endowment; to provide also for the purchase of from 160 to 640 acres of land for the university and its farm, etc.

In 1872 the board, consisting of Hon. Thomas Smith, and Trustees Bennett, Cohn, Prather, Botefuhr, Bishop, Searle, Young, Clayton, Sarber and Millen, sent a committee to visit the universities of Illinois and Michigan. Among the bids received by them was one from Hon. Liberty Bartlett, of Pulaski County, offering ninety-two acres; one from Batesville, subscribing $50,000; one from Washington County, voting $100,000, with the city of Fayetteville voting $30,000 in addition, and one from A. P. Robinson, of Conway, offering a quarter section of land. Washington County was chosen, and the homestead of Mr. William McIlroy, embracing 160 acres, was bought by the committee on buildings and grounds, A. S. Prather, J. E. Bennett and M. A. Cohn, who paid the sum of $12,000, $1,000 of which was at once raised by citizens of Fayetteville. Large donations of land were offered by Hons. Lafayette Gregg and David Walker. Mr. Van Odell, of Chicago, was the architect chosen, and the contract let to Meyers & Oliver for $130,000. Work began September, 1873, and the following is a description of the results as completed August 10, 1875, and as reported by the board of visitors for 1875 to the governor:

We spent half a day in examining the new building, and were impressed with its grandeur. Its foundation is deep, broad, durable and abundantly able to support the heavy and well proportioned superstructure erected thereon. It is replete with beauty, solid in its construction, and well adapted to the purposes and objects for which it was built.

It is 214 feet long by 122 feet wide, covering an area of 26,108 square feet. It is five stories high, with French or Mansard roof, covered with slate and tin. The height of the building is 134 feet.

The basement story is built of stone; the foundation is bedded on solid rock. The three next stories are built of brick, and the attic of wood. The basement story is in height thirteen feet in the clear, first and second stories sixteen feet each, third and fourth fifteen feet, the clock and bell tower extending two stories above the attic.

There was used in the construction of [the] building 2,600,000 brick, 2,300 perch of rock, 719,805 feet of lumber, 260,000 pounds of iron, 250 kegs of nails, 85 doors, 282 windows, and 12,008 square yards of plastering in first and second stories. The building is to be heated with hot air furnaces and lighted with gas.

There are ten rooms 77x81 feet, ten rooms 22x29 feet, ten rooms 22x28 feet, ten rooms 22x25 feet, ten rooms 22x22 feet, ten rooms 22x19 feet, five rooms 15x28 feet, four rooms 22x20 feet, and one room 77x50 feet, making a total of seventy rooms. In addition there are four corridors 15x28 feet, and four corridors 14x206 feet.

There are four entrances to the building, and three flights of stairs from first to third floor, the principal stairway leading from the main entrance to the attic story. The principal entrance to the first floor is on the east, by circular steps surmounted by a beautiful portico of stone.

The fact that the stone, lumber and brick used in this building were obtained in Arkansas, and that the workmen who wrought so faithfully in "cutting, hewing and carving" are chiefly residents of this State, is, or ought to be, a source of congratulation to the entire commonwealth.

Says Prof. F. L. Harvey: "The brick for that beautiful structure, the Arkansas Industrial University, was made from clay found inside the campus, while the brown sandstone for the basement was quarried a few hundred yards away, and the ornamental grey limestone, used in the façade, procured in Washington and Madison Counties."

The entire value of the university property, as given in its first catalogue (1873-74), was $355,000; and the main building was to be finished by September, 1875.

In a memorial of the board to the United States Senate, praying for aid, they say: "* * in the month of January, 1872, (it) was opened for the reception of pupils;" and that 200 students had become connected therewith. The first faculty was Gen. Albert W. Bishop, A. M., president and professor of mental and moral philosophy; C. H. Leverett, A. M., professor of ancient languages and literature; T. L. Thompson, B. S., professor of theoretical and applied chemistry; Gen. N. B. Pearce, professor of mathematics and engineering; Lieut. E. S. Curtis, Second Artillery, United States Army, professor of military science and tactics; Richard Thruston, M. D., professor of practical and theoretical agriculture and horticulture; N. P. Gates, principal of normal department; Mary R. Gorton, preceptress in normal department; Lu J. Stanard, instructress of training school, and W. D. C. Botefuhr, professor of music. The freshman class opened with 16, the normal class with 13, and the preparatory department with 201.

It proposes as its object in the first catalogue:

First. To impart a knowledge of science and its application to the arts of life.

Second. To afford to students, such as may desire it, the benefits of daily manual labor. This labor is to some degree remunerative. But its remunerative character is not so much intended to lessen the expenses of students as for educational uses, as it is planned and varied for the illustration of the principles of science. The preservation of health, and of a taste for the pursuits of agriculture and mechanic arts, are two other important objects.

Third. To prosecute experiments for the promotion of agriculture and horticulture.

Fourth. To provide the means of instruction in military science; and to this end skilled instructors and suitable military implements will be secured and obtained as soon as practicable.

Fifth. To afford the means of a general and thorough education, not inferior to those afforded to all classes in the best colleges.

The experimental farming was to be done entirely by the pupils, under the faculty direction; the number of beneficiaries for Washington County, who were to receive four years' tuition free, was eight; the uniform prescribed for the male students was the West Point cadet suit; the courses arranged were the classical, agricultural, engineering, normal, and preparatory and musical courses; the discipline was to be self-government; one literary society, the "Claiosophic," was established; a mineral and geological cabinet and library was established; likewise a horticultural collection; a four-acre orchard; and the year closed commencement exercises during the first three days of July, 1873.

At the first commencement held June 27, 1872, President Gen. A. W. Bishop delivered an excellent address on the educational history of the county and of the A. I. University movement in particular.

The report of 1874 shows an aggregate attendance of 321, and a commercial course added. A military band of fourteen pieces was added also, and the cadets placed under military government; a professorship of history and English literature was established. The report of 1875, with the announcement, shows N. P. Gates as acting president, and Mrs. V. L. Gray as teacher of painting and drawing; a total attendance of 344; the "Mathetian," a literary, and two musical societies, the Euterpean and Philharmonic, were organized; $500 received from the Peabody fund; a branch normal college, for colored students, was opened at Pine Bluff, September, 1875. The report for 1876, and announcement for the following year, shows the attendance 270; the first graduates, six in number. The report for 1877, and announcement for 1877-78, shows Gen. D. H. Hill, president; total attendance, 287; four prizes are offered. For 1878 the report and announcement show an attendance of 256; morning and evening religious exercises in the chapel; two more prizes added. For 1879, with announcement for 1879-80, the report shows the faculty increased to sixteen; a medical department at Little Rock with a faculty of sixteen; aggregate enrollment, 420 (exclusive of medical department); one prize added; two more literary societies, Philomathean and Phamakohton; general increase in collection and library. The report for 1880, and catalogue of 1880-81, show the attendance 450; cadet battalion of three companies; uniform for ladies; large contributions to collections, library and reading room; number Washington County scholarships increased to twenty-one. For June, 1881, faculty numbers seventeen; attendance (exclusive of medical department and branch normal), 441; Y. M. C. A. organized; seven degrees obtainable; an oratorical contest established; fourth annual meeting of Alumni Association reported; seven literary societies reported; large contributions to cabinets, library, etc.; twenty-two scholarships for Washington County. For June, 1882, attendance 363. In 1888 a new three-story brick dormitory was opened; it contains forty rooms, and is lighted by electric light. The officers (at Fayetteville) are as follows: E. H. Murfee, A. M., LL. D., acting president, professor of mathematics, logic and astronomy; J. M. Whitham, A. M. (late assistant engineer United States Navy), superintendent of mechanic arts, and professor of engineering; H. Edwards, A. M., professor of history, English, French and German; F. W. Simonds, M. S., Ph. D., professor of biology and geology; E. L. Fletcher (first lieutenant Thirteenth Infantry, United States Army), professor of military science and tactics; A. E. Menke, F. C. S., superintendent of agriculture, and professor of chemistry and mineralogy; J. F. Howell, A. M., instructor in pedagogics and senior assistant; W. E. Anderson (graduate Miller Manual Labor School), assistant professor of mechanic arts, and instructor in mechanical drawing; S. S. Twombly, B. S., assistant professor of chemistry and agriculture; C. H. Leverett, A. M., assistant professor of ancient languages; G. W. Drake, A. M., assistant in preparatory department; A. M. Waggoner, assistant in preparatory department; J. C. Massie, Jr., A. B., assistant in preparatory department; N. J. Williams, assistant in preparatory department; K. V. King, instructor in music; C. B. Lyon, B. P., instructor in free-hand drawing and industrial art; J. W. Mayes (graduate Miller Manual Labor School, Va.), instructor in iron work; L. C. Gardner (graduate Chicago Manual Training School), instructor in foundry and forging; W. F. Bates, foreman of the farm; L. Treadwell, instructor in field engineering; P. H. Babb, instructor in wood work; W. N. Crozier, instructor in English; I. Pace, English instructor; M. Danaher, instructor in Greek; G. A. Warren, English instructor; A. Polson, English instructor; J. H. Hobbs, English instructor; Prof. Edwards, librarian; Prof. Howell, secretary of faculty; Miss Taff, assistant librarian; Prof. Drake, superintendent of dormitory; Mrs. F. W. Washington, matron; W. French, engineer, and W. W. McCant, janitor. The State Agricultural Experiment Station, located here, have a board of control, station council, and eleven station officers.

The students are as follows: In the agricultural course, 48; mechanical engineering, 26; civil engineering, 68; scientific, 46; classical, 55; normal, 54; irregular, 6; literary, 2; in lowest preparatory, 112; total matriculates at Fayetteville, 417; music, 27; medical department at Little Rock, 67; branch normal at Pine Bluff, 181; total, 665. Eight courses are offered, and among the degrees gained at Fayetteville are B. S. A., B. M. L., B. C. E., B. S., B. A. and L. I. Three post-graduate degrees are conferred, M. A., M. S. and Ph. D. Nineteen agricultural journals are taken for that department. Six shop-rooms accommodate fifty pupils at one time. Thirty-three engineering journals and about sixty volumes of proceedings of various societies in Europe and America are used in that department. Over 160 machines or models are in the museum of that department. The Gordon Engineers' Club, organized in 1887, have had six prominent lecturers during the year. A battalion of three companies is thus officered: E. L. Fletcher, first lieutenant Thirteenth United States Infantry, colonel; G. C. Shoff, first lieutenant and adjutant; W. N.

Crosier, first lieutenant and quartermaster; W. E. Dickson, first lieutenant and ordnance officer; G. A. Humphreys, sergeant-major; Company A, Capt. G. A. Warren; Company B, Capt. J. H. Hobbs; Company C, Capt. Press Boles. The property is valued at $300,000. There are three literary societies. Library, apparatus, museums, cabinets, etc., are good. The long vacation is now had in winter. The classes have been as follows: 1875 numbered 8; 1876 numbered 9; 1877, same; 1878, 5; 1879, 8; 1880, 10; 1881, 6; 1882, 15; 1883, 7; 1884, 10; 1885, 6, and 1886, 5.

Other Educational Matters.—From time to time the public school laws have been changed and amended, but the greatest change was made about 1875, after the change of administration in State affairs. An effort was made to abolish the supervision system, including the offices of State and circuit superintendents, and replacing the latter by throwing their duties on the county judge and county examiners, and substituting a district board of three directors for the trustee. J. L. Denton, then State superintendent, and ex-officio receiver of the George Peabody fund, on the prospect of the success of the anti-supervision element, telegraphed the manager, J. P. Curry, who at once went to Little Rock, and urged upon the Legislature the retention at least of the office of State superintendent. The great indebtedness of the State made this seem necessary, but it was a vital blow against the public-school system. Whatever the cause, however, the retrenching process cut out all supervision except the office of State superintendent. Aside from the poll-tax and other funds, a State tax of 2 mills is a source of revenue, and an optional district tax of 5 mills for districts who will vote it.

To trace out the statistical growth of the common-school system in Washington County is impossible, on account of the lack of records, and the absence of reports where records have been kept. The State superintendent's reports to the governor, excellent as they otherwise are, are thus rendered practically worthless as far as this feature is concerned. Both the State superintendent and county examiner lament the fact, and point to that as an argument for supervision of county work.

ington County to be: White, 8,292; colored, 342; increase, 216. Those pursuing studies to be: Reading, 1,222; orthography, 1,706; penmanship, 309; mental arithmetic, 410; written arithmetic, 610; English grammar, 337; geography, 259; history, 100; higher branches, 37; whole number taught, 2,354; whole number last year, 3,396.

The report of 1882, when there were 121 districts, but thirty-five districts reported, showing the number enrolled to be: White, 2,330 (the enumeration being 9,158); colored, 84 (the enumeration being 325 and the increase 849). Those pursuing studies to be: Reading, 1,274; orthography, 1,444; mental arithmetic, 356; written arithmetic, 549; English grammar, 156; geography, 152; history, 141; higher branches, 35.

For June 30, 1881, the number of teachers are given as: Male, 39; female, 7; with first grade certificate, 32; with second grade certificate, 13; with third grade certificate, 1. The average wages of first grade males, $33.66; first grade females, $48.33; second grade males, $20.71; total paid out, $7,781.39.

For June 30, 1882, the number of teachers given are: White males, 33; colored males, 2; white females, 7; average monthly salaries for males of first grade, $33.11; first grade females, $23.24; second grade males, $25.09; third grade males, $20.62.

June 30, 1881, number of buildings erected during the year, two of wood, costing $611.30; number erected previously, eighty of wood, costing $20,650; total valuation, $21,261.30; number of districts reporting, two.

June 30, 1882, eleven districts only reported.

The receipts and expenditures of the public-school fund in Washington County, as given June 30, 1881, is as follows: Received from all sources, $17,171.34; expended for all purposes, $7,781.39; amount unexpended, $9,389.95. As given June 30, 1882: Received from all sources, $14,615.55; expended for all purposes, $10,990.81; amount unexpended, $3,624.74.

In 1883 the enumeration was: White, 9,732; colored, 382; increase, 631; number of districts, 130; number reporting, 53; enrollment, white, 3,328; colored, 104; total, 3,432; pursuing, orthography, 2,254; reading, 2,050; mental arithmetic, 607; written arithmetic, 980; English grammar, 373; geography, 510; history, 163; higher branches, 15; penmanship, 926.

In 1884 the county examiner reports: Enumeration, 10,785; enrollment, 2,926; number of districts, 135; number of districts reporting enrollment, 53; number of teachers employed, 56; the county treasurer reports amount on hand July 1, 1883, $5,424.26; from common-school fund, $6,097.57; district tax, $1,702.17; poll tax, $3,954.24; other sources, $652.05; total, $17,830.29; amount expended, $12,254.72; balance on hand June 30, 1884, $5,775.57.

(In 1884) number of districts, 135; number reporting, 43; enrollment, white, 2,957; colored, 5; total, 2,962; pursuing orthography, 2,266; reading, 1,870; mental arithmetic, 835; written arithmetic, 901; English grammar, 436; geography, 408; penmanship, 548; history, 219; higher arithmetic, 11.

In 1883 the number of teachers reported are: Male, 47; female, 9; total, 56; average monthly salaries of first grade males, $32.55; first grade females, $26.66; second grade males, $28.75; third grade females, $20.00.

In 1884 the number of teachers reported are: Males, 35; females, 21; total, 56; average monthly salary first grade males, $33.00; females, $27.20; second grade males, $29.41; females, $22.50; third grade males, $22.50.

In 1883 Washington County reports twelve wooden school-houses, erected at a cost of $22.58; whole number, 123, valued at $24,600; and in 1884 reports three wooden buildings, constructed at a cost of $379; and the whole number reported are but eleven buildings, valued at $1,297.

In 1883 the school fund received was: Amount on hand June 30, 1882, $3,642.61; from common-school fund, $4,757.33; from district tax, $3,162.11; from poll tax, $3,583.79; from other sources, $101; total, $15,246.75; and in 1884, amount on hand June 30, 1883, $5,424.26; common-school fund, $6,097.57; district fund, $1,702.17; poll tax, $3,954.24; from sixteenth section sales or leases, $328.20; other sources, $323.85; total, $17,830.29.

Expenditures for 1883, teachers' salaries, $9,390.42; treasurer's commissions, $232.07; total, $9,822.49; amount unexpended, common-school fund, $4,214.46; district fund, $1,209.80; total, $5,424.26; and for 1884, teachers' salaries, $11,834.10; building repairing, $216.64; treasurer's commissions, $203.98; total, $12,- 254.72; amount unexpended, common school fund, $828.14; district fund, $3,125.03; funds from all other sources, $1,622.40; total, $5,575.57.

Of the $2,800 received by the State from the Peabody Educational Fund in 1883, all but $150 was expended, and the only direct aid received by Washington County was her share of $1,300 applied to the district normal institutes, one of which, in 1884, was held within her borders, at Springdale. In the latter year, of $2,000 received, all but $667.10 was expended for these institutes, as directed by the general agent of the fund. In addition to the above Washington County students have the privilege of competing for the eight Peabody scholarships in the State Normal College at Nashville, Tenn., each scholarship allowing $200 per annum for the expenses of its holder in the above college.

In his report for 1883 and 1884 the State superintendent showed the great need for revision of the school law in almost every department, but especially in regard to county supervision and school districting, and to provide free text books. He also states the condition of the permanent school fund, whose interest only is used as follows: Loughborough bonds, 6 per cent., $170,000; auditor's certificates of 1883, $270.91; reclamation certificates, $76.00; total, $170,346.91.

The fact is also mentioned of the loss of funds by fire in 1874 and 1879 to aggregate (with interest) over $300,000, and the replacement of this is urged.

In the report for 1885 and 1886 the State superintendent, Hon. W. E. Thompson, again urges county supervision in a masterly manner, and no doubt the public sentiment will soon demand it as the greatest need of her public-school system. His report shows a general advance in the schools of the State, and in public sentiment in regard thereto, which has no doubt been largely fostered by the district normal institutes, which are supported by the Peabody Fund. This fund is reported as follows: To balance on hand November 1, 1884, $667.10; to normal institutes in 1885, $1,500; total amount for 1885, $2,167.10; by amount expended for institutes in 1885, $1,087.90; to balance on hand January, 1886, $1,079.20; to amount received for public schools in 1886, $1,800; to amount for institutes in 1886, $1,500; total amount, $4,370.20; by amount expended for institute work, $1,678.75; balance on hand December, 1886, $2,700.45.

Two more scholarships in the Nashville State Normal College were given to the State.

September 30, 1886, the permanent school fund was as follows: Currency, $174,554.33; State scrip, $652.02; reclamation certificates, $76; refunding certificates, $100; total, $175,382.35.

The report for Washington County June 30, 1885, is: Amount received from common-school fund, State, $14,690.05; district tax, $11,262.12; poll tax, $4,307; other sources, $361; total, $30,620.17. Amount expended for teachers' salaries, $7,670.32; building and repairs, $1,493.32; treasurer's commissions, $222.79; total, $9,386.43. Balance unexpended of common-school fund, $7,640.73; district fund, $10,641.12; other sources, $2,951.89; total, $21,233.74. Enumeration, white, 9,947; colored, 227; total, 10,913; enrollment, white, 3,016; number of districts, 134; number reporting enrollment, 40; number districts voting tax, 4; number teachers employed, 50; number school-houses, 11; value of school-houses, $3,305; number of institutes held, 3.

The county's report for June 30, 1886, is as follows: Balance on hand June 30, 1885, $21,233.74; common-school fund, State, $8,056.40; district tax, $7,483.10; poll tax, $4,685.60; other sources, $500; total, $41,958.84. Amount expended for teachers' salaries, $15,301.57; building and repairs, $10,157.94; treasurer's commission, $414.48; other purposes, $279.76; total, $26,153.75. Balance unexpended common-school fund, $4,143.04; balance unexpended district fund, $6,580.16; balance of fund from other sources, $5,081.89; total, $15,805.09. The enumeration, white, 11,286; colored, 438; total, 11,724; enrollment, white, 2,946; number of districts, 150; number reporting enrollment, 104; number voting tax, 38; number of teachers employed, 114; number of school-houses, 80; value of school-houses, $26,177.29; number of institutes held, 4.

The county examiner's report for 1888 gives total white enumeration, 12,800; total colored, 430; grand total, 13,230; total white enrollment, 6,965; colored, 201; grand total, 7,166; average male daily attendance, 1,871; female, 2,443; total, 4,314; whole number of teachers, 124; amount paid teachers, $16,043.-

42; number of schools taught, 116; number of days schools were taught, 8,474; visits of directors, 345; amount of taxes levied for schools, $12,514.04; number of school-houses erected during the year, 10; cost of same, $2,200; whole number of school-houses in county, 84; total value of same, $35,782; value of all other property belonging to districts, $2,213; receipts for the year, $23,742.95; expenditures for the year, $18,516.60; balance, $5,237.57; number of districts voting tax, 75; total number of districts in county, 164; number of institutes held during year, 2; teachers attending same, 60; number of children deaf, blind, insane, etc., 7.

The public-school system has kept pace with the rapid growth of the county since the advent of the "Frisco Railway," and has made greater progress in the last semi-decade than in any twenty years previously. The growth in the attendance of three institutes held in the county since 1886, is significant; the first, at West Fork, had only seventeen in attendance, the second numbered eighty, and the last, at Fayetteville, had an attendance of 125. In September, 1887, a Directors' Annual Meeting was organized, which is expected to be an influential agent in the improvement of district management.

Among a large number who might be mentioned as active in the promotion of public-school interests in various parts of the county are Prof. E. H. Howell, Judge L. Gregg and Col. Thomas Hunt, of Fayetteville; William Mitchell, of Prairie Grove; County Examiner C. H. Inman, of Springdale; H. P. Sloan, of Pitkin; William Mayes, of Johnson; Dr. B. F. Williams, of McGuire's Station, et al.

It is but natural that Fayetteville, which had long had such excellent private seminaries and colleges, should be loth to exchange them for the undeveloped public schools, which, for some time, were considered not unlike schools for paupers. It was organized under Circuit Supt. E. E. Henderson as District No. 1, with J. Q. Benbrook as trustee, and schools with not to exceed three teachers, including those for colored schools. Among the various buildings rented from year to year were the Masonic Hall, the old Female Seminary, the Methodist, Baptist and Christian Churches. Under the corporation school law

Fayetteville was made a special district, and March 20, 1871, the following school board met: J. C. Massie, J. Q. Benbrook, H. C. C. Botefuhr, Thomas D. Boles, D. D. Stark and Charles L. McClung. Mrs. Smith then had charge of the white schools, and Miss Dora Ford and a Miss Mannels taught the colored students, under the care of the American Missionary Society.

No school building was erected by the city until their present edifice was built, in 1885, under the direction of the following board: L. Gregg, president; B. H. Stone, O. C. Gray, E. B. Harrison, J. T. Reynolds and another. The board made the following report September 1, 1885:

"We report that for the last school year the district voted a five-mill tax for building purposes, and for this year a five-mill tax for all teaching purposes."

The directors drew from the county treasury for building purposes during the year $2,468.63 from the State; from the common-school fund, $1,120; the amount received from other sources was an accumulation from previous years in the treasury.

We report one school-house built during the year. Its foundation is stone; its walls, brick; its roof, iron; contains two large halls and six good class rooms; materials and finish, good; location, on an eminence in a seven-acre lot; cost of building and grounds about $9,131.55, and the grounds unenclosed; amount in the treasury, in State scrip, $557.03.

One school building was erected for colored children in the city several years ago, of stone foundation, brick walls, and wooden roof, by the American Missionary Association and by individual contribution; it will accommodate about eighty or 100 pupils; the grounds (donated) and the house are worth about $2,500 to $3,000. The school board paid $150 to a colored teacher for the colored schools this year.

The following enumeration was reported: White, 602; colored, 139; total, 741.

The school building was rented to private teachers on its completion, on account of lack of funds; but the following year the public schools opened in full force, and have made rapid advancement.

In 1886-87 the first public school was held in the new building, under the following corps of teachers: Superintendent, Col. O. C. Gray; assistants, Miss Ella Carnall, Mrs. F. L. Sutton, Miss Anna Putman, Miss Jessie Cravens, Mrs. Alice Adams and Mrs. M. W. Alex.

The school graduated its first class of three pupils in 1888, and starts out for the coming year with the following corps of teachers: Superintendent, A. S. Stultz, a graduate of the Cook County Normal School, under the famous educator, Col. Parker; assistants, Miss Anna Putman, Miss Jessie Cravens, Mrs. Annie Stapp, Miss Mollie Dickson, Miss Mattie Ralston, Miss Mary Leverett and Miss Lena Rhodes, most of whom are graduates of the Arkansas Industrial University. Their curriculum is of a high-school grade, enabling its graduates to enter the A. I. U. The principal of the colored school is A. L. Richardson, and his assistant is W. J. Kidd.

The financial report of the school board for June 1, 1888, is: Total receipts, $6,394.41; total expenditures, $4,203.11; amount on hand, $2,188.20.

Among the earliest teachers at West Fork were Prof. Thomason and H. Lafferson. A log building was long used as an ordinary district school. In 1886 the growth of the town led to the erection of a special building of two stories. It is a neat frame, 36x40 feet, situated in the west part of town. G. S. White and the present incumbent have been the teachers in the new building.

In 1885 the Springdale district erected a fine two-story brick edifice, containing four rooms. Before this date, and even until 1888, private schools seemed to have a strong hold on the people. The first private school was in the old Baptist Church, a three-months' school "after corn was laid by," in which "Readin', Ritin', Rithmetic and Spellin'" were conned over. The date of the first is uncertain, but the old church answered this pedagogic purpose until the "fall of Sumter." The first public-school building was a frame, built about 1868-69. That built in 1885 is 40x70 feet, and is an ornament to the town. Three teachers, Principal J. W. Coltrane, assisted by M. W. Davis and H. M. Grenade, have charge of about 150 pupils. Principal Coltrane has been in charge since the erection of the building, which, like the house at West Fork, is a special district building. Other places in the county are ordinary members of the public-school system.

RELIGION.

Cumberland Presbyterians.—One of the first religious organizations to enter Washington County was the Cumberland Presbyterian. The first Cumberland Presbyterians to locate in Arkansas were the Pyeatts and Carnahans, who, in 1812, emigrated from Northern Alabama, and located at Crystal Hill, fifteen miles above Little Rock. The party consisted of James and Jacob Pyeatt and James and Samuel Carnahan. The next year the father of the Carnahans, Rev. John Carnahan, removed to Arkansas, and, in the house of Jacob Pyeatt, preached the first sermon delivered in what is now Arkansas by a Cumberland Presbyterian. He formed a circuit, and was placed on the roll of Elk Presbytery. In 1814 he was licensed, and in October, 1816, was ordained.

The intermediate meeting for the organization of the Presbytery of Arkansas was held at the house of John Craig, on White River, in 1823. R. D. King, Reuben Burrow, John Carnahan and W. C. Long were present, and James H. Black and J. M. Blair were received as candidates. The presbytery was constituted at the same place in May, 1824, by Revs. John Carnahan, W. C. Long and William Henry. At the next meeting, in the fall of the same year, a quorum was not present, but Rev. Andrew Buchanan presented himself as a candidate, and in the spring of 1826, with three others, was licensed. Soon after the Carnahans, Blairs, Buchanans, Pyeatts and Crawford removed to Cane Hill, in Washington County, and there, on August 30, 1828, Revs. William T. Larremore and J. M. Blair organized Cane Hill Cumberland Presbyterian Church, with James Billingsley, James Buchanan, William Reed and Robert Buchanan as elders. Meetings were held for four or five years in a log school-house, standing where the grave-yard near Boonsboro now is. One session of the presbytery was also held there. About 1832 or 1833 a large log house, 35x50 feet, was erected, and was occupied until 1858, when the building known as the White Church was completed. It is a frame structure, 40x50 feet, and cost about $1,500. Among the pastors who have served this congregation are John Carnahan, J. M. Blair, Samuel Harris, George Morrow, B. H. Pierson, John Buchanan, J. T. Buchanan, F. R. Earle, R. F. Adair and J. T. Molloy. Soon after the organization of the church a Sabbath-school was established, and, with the exception of a short time during the war, it has since been maintained.

During the pastorate of Rev. Samuel Harris the congregation was divided, and Salem Church organized. A portion of the members became dissatisfied with Mr. Harris, and elected another pastor. His adherents then organized a new congregation, with James B. Russell, James Haygood and Lewis Haygood as elders. This occurred in 1844. The successors of Mr. Harris have been Rev. Mr. Braly, B. H. Pierson and Dr. F. R. Earle. A school building located near Boonsboro was used as a place of worship until the erection of Cane Hill College. The congregation now numbers about 110 members. The officers are as follows: W. C. Braly, G. M. Haygood, J. R. Pyeatt, H. C. Pyeatt, A. E. Andrews and Z. B. Edmiston, elders, and W. F. Moore and J. S. Edmiston, deacons. Recently about eighteen members have withdrawn, and organized a new congregation about one and one-half miles south of Boonsboro.

Billingsley congregation of Cumberland Presbyterians was organized some time about 1850, and for many years was known as Mount Zion Church. Among the first members were G. B. Nolen and wife, Merritt Baker and wife, Nancy Stevenson, John Billingsley and Miriam Dodson. The elders were John Billingsley, G. B. Nolen and Merritt Baker. Until the Civil War the congregation was under the care of Rev. Ambrose Williams, and since that time it has been chiefly supplied by B. F. Totten, J. T. Molloy and F. R. Earle.

Previous to May, 1888, services were held in school-houses, but at that date a neat frame building was completed, at a cost of $540. In 1887 seventeen members of this congregation withdrew and organized Pleasant Grove congregation, with L. Tankersly, S. Dell and L. C. Blakemore.

The Fayetteville Cumberland Presbyterian Church is a part of the Arkansas Presbytery. Its early records were destroyed during the war, so that reliable information of the pre-war period is very meager. A Rev. Feemster is given as one of its earliest preachers. On June 3, 1867, the following members reorganized themselves into a church: Samuel H. Buchanan, E. H. Buck, M. G. Bonham, L. F. Graham, J. D. Henry, Dr. James Stephenson, Sarah Sellars, M. S. Bonham, Esther Crockett, L. M. and A. E. Routh, Adeline Graham, M. J. Reif, Margaret Calfee, Sarah Hodges, Martha Stephenson and L. A. Henry. Since 1867 the pastors have been as follows: Revs. Samuel H. Buchanan (now Dr.), John Buchanan, F. R. Earle (now D. D. and president of Cane Hill College), S. S. Patterson, J. L. Dickens, Rev. E. E. Morris, G. A. Henderson and J. T. Molloy, the present pastor. Dr. Earle was recalled three different times after his first pastorate. The largest accessions to the church have been made under Rev. A. M. Buchanan, R. G. Pearson, an evangelist, and Rev. Molloy, the total membership now being 114. Their first building was of brick, erected at a cost of $2,500. Their present church edifice is a frame structure, built during the centennial year. Two ladies' societies, the Aid and Foreign Missionary, are in a flourishing condition.

West Fork Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized in the summer of 1853, in a school-house one mile and a half from the town of West Fork. Two years later a log building was erected. The original members numbered about twenty-five, of whom four are now living. They are J. C. Stockburger and wife Martha A., Maria Brown and William Hutcheson. The first elders were J. C. Stockburger and E. Baker. There is now a membership of over fifty, and in 1881 a new frame church house was completed.

Barker Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized in 1881 by Rev. Samuel Cox, with the following officers and members: N. Rose, E. P. Haynes, S. A. Cox, elders; J. L. Barker, deacon; M. Hodges, treasurer; Margaret Cox, L. Landon, E. Haynes, A. D. Haynes, Tennie Haynes, Clara Cox, Jessie Lofton, Margaret Lofton, Mrs. Rose Huston Landon. During the same year a house of worship was erected. It was a frame building, and stands on the "old Barker farm." The pastors have been Rev. Samuel Cox, J. H. Pigman and S. L. Robinson.

Middle Fork Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized in August, 1887, with L. J. A. Prather as pastor. G. W. Van Hoose and Pleasant King, elders; George King, deacon, and G. W. Van Hoose, clerk. The congregation was composed of members from White River congregation at Maguire's Store. The petitioners were, besides the above officers, John C. and M. L. Moore, F. L. Davidson, J. Maguire, Matilda Maguire, members. E. A. Hammontree was chosen clerk, and John Wells ordained deacon. The pastors have been M. Smith, Mathias Spires, M. D. Cox and J. C. Peters. The congregation, now numbering thirty-two members; worship in a school-house.

Little Elm Baptist Church was organized by Elder T. H. Day, with the following members: M. W. Marrs, deacon; D. K. Clevenger, C. T. Clayton, James Jackson, Annie Day, Mary J. Clayton, Sallie Beaver, Lucy Slaughter, Belle Gibson and Mary Shelly. The church was organized in a school-house, but in 1883 a union meeting-house was erected. It is situated nine miles west of Fayetteville. T. H. Day served the congregation as pastor for six years, and was then succeeded by H. B. Borders, the present pastor.

Spring Valley is the name of a flourishing church at Spring Valley, organized by Elders A. J. Vaughn and C. S. Fritts. It now belongs to Spring Valley Association, which was organized in October, 1877.

Beersheba Cumberland Presbyterian Church is situated on the Middle Fork of White River. It is a member of Arkansas Presbytery, and was organized about 1878 by the Rev. Samuel Black. Among its original members and officers were Elders A. Hight, W. C. Douglass, J. S. Guinn and George W. Arnett, and Deacon Nathan Reed. The first building, erected in 1878, was built at a cost of about $200. The pastors have been Revs. Prather, Black, Goin and Pigman, under whose charge the membership has reached to the number of about twenty persons.

The Barker Cumberland Presbyterian Church, a member of Arkansas Presbytery, was organized in 1881, by Rev. Samuel Cox. Elders N. Rose, E. P. Haynes, S. A. Cox, Deacon I. L. Barker, Margaret Cox, E. Haynes, A. D. Haynes, Tennie Haynes, M. Hodges, Clara Cox, Jessie Lofton, Margaret Lofton, Mrs.

Rose, Huston Landon, L. Landon and W. Cornstep were the original members. Rev. Samuel Cox was followed in the pastorate by Rev. Benj. Pigman and Rev. Benj. L. Robinson. The society has twenty-three members, and a house of worship valued at $1,051. It is a frame structure, located on the old "Barker farm," and erected in 1881.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church, located five miles east of Prairie Grove, was organized in 1887, by Rev. T. Molloy, of Fayetteville. Their membership has increased from twenty-four, the original number, to thirty-four, the present membership. They occupy a union church with the Church of Christ at that point.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South.—The Fayetteville Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was organized about 1834 or 1835 at the home of Lodowick Brodie. Among its first members were Mr. Brodie and wife, Martin Frazier, Dr. Adam Clark and wife, David Reise and wife, a Mr. Avard and wife, a Mrs. Anthony, Mr. and Mrs. John Skelton, and a Mr. Cardwell and wife. They held services in Mr. Brodie's house, and after the completion of the first court-house used that as a place of worship. Their first church, which was afterward burned during the early years of the war, was built in the spring of 1840, and it was about 1868 that their present brick structure was erected. David Reise was the first class-leader, and among their earliest ministers and circuit riders were Rev. John Havel, Rev. Bump, Rev. Avery, Dr. Adam Clark, Rev. Custer, Dr. John Hunter, Dr. Sanders, Rev. William Cobb, Richard Cardwell and Rev. Carlyle. After 1840, among those who preached here were Revs. Young, Ewing, Lively, Thomas Stanford, Benona Harris, and Rev. Danley.

The Elm Springs Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a very old society, organized probably in the earliest thirties, by Rev. H. G. Joplin, its pastor. The earliest members received into the church, of which information could be obtained, was Margaret S. Webster in 1834, John B. Webster in 1839, Kilby Saunders in 1851, Sarah E. Deavers the same year, Rev. Jacob Pearson the same year, M. W. Wasson in 1852, Zachariah Ennis the same year, Marion D. Steele in 1857, Mary E. Steele in 1854, Catherine M.

Glover in 1855, Sultana D. Pearson in 1858, Thomas F. Webster in the same year, and Elizabeth A. Webster in 1860. The society erected a neat frame structure in 1850, and on their reorganization in 1866 their present building was put up. It is a frame, valued at $400. Rev. Joplin's successors are W. A. Cobb, G. Boyd, J. Banks, T. Stanford, M. D. Steele, H. M. Granack, E. J. Downe, S. D. Gaines, D. Sturdy, W. H. Corley, T. J. Smith, J. F. Hall, James A. Walden, C. R. Taylor, P. B. Summers, B. Williams, B. C. Matthews and J. M. Clayton. The church was reorganized in 1866, by Rev. M. D. Steele, and the officers were J. P. Simpson, W. S. Deavers and J. P. Birch. The present membership numbers fifty-four persons.

Sulphur Springs Methodist Episcopal Church, South, belongs to the Prairie Grove Circuit, and was organized about 1850. Larkin Tanksley, class-leader; Green Harrison, steward; Mrs. Tanksley, Mrs. Green, R. J. West and wife, John Mock and wife, Robert Houck and wife, Mr. Larabee and wife and a few others were the original members. They erected their first church soon after organization, about five miles south of Prairie Grove. It is of hewn logs, and cost probably $300. It still serves as their house of worship. The pastors of the society have been Revs. David Carethers, L. P. Linely, Thomas Stanford, John Mathis, W. W. Mathis, Dr. Andrew Hunter, J. W. Shook, — Woods, T. J. Smith and all others who preached at Prairie Grove. Their membership is fifty-one.

The Illinois Chapel Class of the Prairie Grove Circuit was probably organized as early as 1842, and among its first members are Mr. Ross and wife and James Young and wife. Rev. Young Ewing traveled the circuit in 1852. The church is three miles east of Prairie Grove.

The Stonewall Class of the Prairie Grove Circuit was organized by Rev. P. B. Hopkins, August 6, 1887. For its first members and officers there were J. N. Wheeler, steward; H. Davenport, class-leader; Jesse Wheeler, J. P. Bennett, Sarah Bennett, S. E. Davenport, J. H. Davenport, A. Allen, Ada Bennett, M. J. Sanders, F. E. Mahery, J. Mahery, Mittie Parker, S. J. Bates, Mary Wheeler, M. A. Taylor, Tenna Bates, Virgin Mahery, F. A. Taylor and M. E. Allen. The society hold services in a school-house three miles west of Prairie Grove.

Viney Grove Methodist Episcopal Church, South, another member of the Prairie Grove Circuit, began its existence in 1853, under the guidance of Rev. David Carethers. P. B. and Lucinda H. Tacker, James Branenburg and Thomas West (two officers of the church), Adeline Howel, Armind West, James West and Jetta West constituted the first membership. The first church, a log house situated on the prairie west of the present Viney Grove, was built in 1854, but suffered destruction during the late war. The next church, erected in 1869 at Viney Grove, was built at a cost of $1,200. It was dedicated by Bishop G. F. Pearce in 1869, but was burned in October, 1844. The present house, a good frame structure, was built in 1885, at a cost of $1,500, and has not yet been dedicated. The society numbers seventy-six persons. The pastors, beginning with Rev. David Carethers, have been Revs. Young Ewing, Jordan Banks, Walter Thornburg, J. W. Shook, W. W. Mathis, — Gering, Thomas Stanford, L. P. Linely, G. A. Danly and others mentioned among the Prairie Grove pastors.

Zion Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a member of the Elm Springs Circuit, and was organized in 1857 by Rev. John S. McCarven, with the following members: Richard W. Cardwell, class leader; Mary L. Cardwell, William H. Cardwell, D. Cardwell, Jane C. Ford, Amilla Ford, W. H. Eidson, Susan Eidson, Wilson Cage, Mary B. Cage, David Willeford, Martha Willeford and Mary J. Ruth. The first building was erected in 1857; it is a frame house, valued at $500, and is located six miles northeast of Fayetteville. Their pastors since Rev. McCarven have been Revs. Josiah A. Williams (P. C.), Thomas Stanford (P. E.), J. Banks (P. C.), J. W. Shook (P. E.), M. Granade (P. C.), William Mathis (P. E.), E. J. Dawn (P. C.), J. M. Clayton (P. E.), T. Wainwright (P. C.), James A. Walden (P. E.), T. J. Smith (P. C.), J. J. Roberts (P. E.), J. F. Hall (P. E.), David Sturdy (P. C.), James A. Anderson (P. E.) and William Mathews (P. C.). They have fifty members.

The Prairie Grove Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is the center of a considerable circuit bearing its name. The society was organized in 1869 by Rev. David Sturdy, with the following as a partial list of members: W. D. Rogers, steward; L. T. Sanders, class leader; John Mock, S. E. Rogers, Martha Rogers, Julie Rogers, Margaret Mock, M. J. Sanders, Martha J. Mock and Mary A. Mock. They erected a good frame church in 1880, at a cost of $1,500, and dedicated it the following year, Rev. R. S. Hunter officiating. The pastors of the society have been Revs. David Sturdy, J. Atchley, Jerome Haralson, W. H. Carley, R. M. Tydings, S. J. Stone, J. F. Hall, P. B. Summers, C. R. Taylor, J. P. Calloway, S. N. Burns, B. H. Greathouse, T. J. Reynolds, Young Ewing, J. A. Walden and P. B. Hopkins, the present incumbent of the pastoral office. The congregation numbers 107 members. It was for several years an appointment on the Cane Hill Circuit before its organization, and services were held in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Mount Carmel Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is on the Cincinnati Circuit, and was made a separate society in 1877 by Rev. T. F. Bremer. Samuel Gilbreath, Luretta Gilbreath, J. J. Clayton, Lewis Collins, Sallie Collins, N. J. Christian, Elizabeth A. Christian, E. M. Tullis, Mary Holt, H. Fosselman, E. Fosselman, Carol Moore, Isabell Washington and about ten others constituted the original membership. They have a small pine church building, valued at about $175, located about three miles east of Cincinnati. It was built in 1866. Revs. T. F. Bremer, Robert Johnson, J. W. Stone, — Dikes, P. B. Hopkins, W. M. Baldwin and J. H. Meyers, the present incumbent, have filled the pastoral office. The membership is now twenty-four persons.

The following list of appointments for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Washington County was obtainable:

1874—J. A. Walden, P. E.; J. J. Roberts, Fayetteville Station; W. H. Corley, Fayetteville Circuit; J. Harolson, Boonsboro Circuit; R. M. Tidings, Viney Grove Circuit; J. E. Martin, White River Circuit.

Christian Church.—The West Fork Christian Church is probably the oldest organization of the followers of the teachings of Alexander Campbell in Washington County. It was organized in 1837, with the following officers and members: Elders, William Robinson, Stephen Strickland and Alfred Arrington; deacons, Levi Combs and Shelby Conner, and members, Mrs. S. Strickland, Mrs. A. Arrington, Mrs. Shelby Conner, Thomas Wilson and wife, Mrs. W. Robinson, Benjamin Miller and wife, Samuel Alexandel and wife, Daniel Conner, Eli Bloyd and wife, John Wilson, Joseph Lewis, Betsy Conner, Christopher Harness and wife, Joseph Miller, Sr., and wife. They were first organized under an elm tree, and held services there until soon after the ruling elders built a church of hewed logs. Elder Stephen Strickland seems to have been the first pastor, and among others who held services there afterward were Rev. John Robinson, the well-known Rev. Robert Graham, Rev. Elijah Northam and Rev. Eli Baker. The present membership numbers about thirty persons.

The Fayetteville Christian Church is not only one of the oldest and largest churches in Washington County, but is probably the largest Christian Church in Arkansas. This is largely due to the character of its founder, Rev. John T. Johnson, its pioneer educator, Robert Graham, and its present pastor, Rev. N. M. Ragland. Rev. Johnson, a brother of Vice-President Richard M. Johnson, became a convert to the teachings of Alexander Campbell, and giving up his seat in Congress, took the water route to Little Rock, Van Buren and other points in the Southwest, to spread the new teachings, whose followers here became known in popular terms as "The Campbellites," "Stoneites" and "New Lights," as well as "Christians" and "Disciples." The following extract from a letter explains itself:

VAN BUREN, March 7, 1848. }
 Tuesday morning. }

Beloved Brother Campbell: I am here, in good health, about 1,500 miles from home, laboring in the cause of the reformation, for which you have sacrificed so much, and nobly struggled for a quarter of a century. The success has been far beyond the expectation of the most sanguine. Thank the Lord that your writings ever fell in my way! I shall ever feel the debt of gratitude that you taught me how to read the bible—the book of the Lord. It imparts to me a happiness that no language can tell. [Here he speaks of visiting Little Rock and Van Buren.]

3. I visited Fayetteville, fifty-two miles north, and labored twelve days with great success. We had about thirty-five additions, and organized a church fifty strong, with elders and deacons. We have four able lawyers, an able physician, and a distinguished preacher of the Cumberland Presbyterians in the congregation. I left rejoicing! [He then speaks of other matters, and closes with the following]:

This is a great country. The success of this precious cause is the only motive that could induce me to make such immense sacrifices of domestic happiness.

(Signed),

J. T. JOHNSON.

From the date of the above letter we see that the church was organized about February, 1848, and we also see that there was a settlement of probably fifteen adherents of this faith already there, among whom were Dr. and Mrs. Pollard, and a Mrs. Onstott, probably the first three members of the congregation. Among the ministers who preached before Johnson's organization was a Rev. Stirman. After the organization Rev. Robert Graham, a man of great natural and scholarly ability, was their next pastor, and he it was who founded Arkansas College, which, although a private school, was a powerful agent in the growth and character of the church. He was both president of the college and pastor of the church during a considerable period, until he was succeeded, in both positions, by another able and scholarly man, Rev. William Baxter, whose period of service covered the remaining time before the war. With three so able men as these in succession, the rapid growth of the new church is not surprising.

Among those that followed Rev. Baxter were Revs. A. B. Murphy during the war, Kirk Baxter, S. K. Hallam, a Mr. Rice, J. M. Shepherd and a Mr. Floyd, who were editors of The Faithful Witness, a religious journal, Gay Waters, James Elliot and the present pastor, Rev. N. M. Ragland. The increase in membership and the extension of church work has been greater under Rev. Ragland, probably, than under the guidance of any of his predecessors. The membership is about 300. A mission at Farmington, a frame building costing about $1,500, was dedicated May 27, 1888, and now has a flourishing Sunday-school. A mission chapel in the southeastern part of Fayetteville has lately been built, and is used for Sabbath-school purposes, chiefly. It is a frame structure, valued at $1,000. Another flourishing mission is held in a school-house about two miles north of Fayetteville. The following annual financial report for the year ending November 15, 1887, will illustrate the extent of their work:

To amount paid out by church for incidental expenses and improvements, $353.63; to amount paid out for various missions, $130.11; to amount paid by C. P. S. Club, $73.95; to amount paid by Dorcas Society, $97.35; to amount paid by Sunday-school, $84.09; to amount paid by mission school, $12.60; to amount paid on minister's salary, $900; total, $1,651.73. By regular and special collection, $417.64; by collection on subscription, $900; by collection from Dorcas Society, $138; by collection from C. P. S. Club, $73.94; by collection from C. W. B. M., $27.75; by collection from Young People's Mission, $12.45; by collection from Sunday-school, $173.56; by collection from mission school, $12.62; total, $1,755.97. To amount on hand, $104.24. T. J. Conner, church treasurer.

They have also a Ladies' Missionary Society, which meets once a month.

The first church building of the denomination was built on the site of the Tremont House, but that was, with many other buildings, burned during the war. The old Masonic Hall was their next church house, until the present brick structure on College Avenue was completed, about 1871.

The Christian Church, unlike many others, was not broken up or disturbed by political issues during the great conflict.

The Christian Church, on the middle fork of White River, was organized in 1840 by Rev. S. Strickland, with Elders Samuel Hanna and Bracken Lewis, Matilda Lewis, Francis Hanna, Owen Ramey and wife, William Chandler and wife, Eleazer Lancaster and wife, F. Lancaster and William Hunt as members. After the war Rev. John S. Robertson, an evangelist, reorganized the church, with Elders Owen Ramey, E. Hanna and S. Hanna, Deacons W. Kelley and W. Chandler, and Clerk W. H. Campbell as officers, and over 100 members. It then took the name Union Church, and at one time reached a membership of 300. A frame church building was erected in 1854, at a cost of about $1,000, but it was destroyed by fire in 1882. A new frame was begun in 1884, which, when finished, will equal the first in value. On account of branch churches forming from this congregation the present membership is but eighty-three. These branches are Black Oak Grove, the elders of which are Andrew Hobbs, James Mahon and James Dockery, and Clifton Church, two miles west of the old church, whose pastor is Rev. F. A. Hobbs. The pastors have been as follows: Revs. Stephen Strickland, John S. Robertson, A. B. Murphy, E. Baker, Isaac Tellis, S. R. Beaman, William McDonnell and C. H. O'Bryan, the present incumbent.

Pleasant View Christian Church was organized in the spring of 1867, by Rev. Elder James W. Garrett, Elder John Read, William Russell, N. McIlroy, William Cranby, Caroline Read, O. A. Russell, Malissa Garrett, Malinda English, J. English and S. English, the original members.

The society has a membership of sixty, and before branch churches were organized from it at Antioch and at Cherryvale in the Indian Territory they numbered about 100. Their neat frame building, erected in 1883 at a cost of $500, is situated in Vineyard Township. Rev. Elder J. W. Garrett has been in charge from the first, but occasionally services have been held by the following ministers: Revs. Gage, Baker, Beaman, McDonnell, Williams, Allison, Ferguson, Elliot, Moore, Ragland, Geddens and others.

Evening Shade Christian Church is a young society, organized the first month in 1888 by Rev. John Williams. The officers chosen were Elders James Privett, R. R. Falin, W. J. Malone, S. W. Passick, and Deacons A. C. Males, W. Pearson and John Phelan. The other members were Lidie Males, R. E. Malone, S. C. Brown, Mary Hall, Mollie Webb, John and Sarah Malone and Z. Rutherford. The society have met in the school house of District No. 137. Their pastors have been Revs. John Williams and H. C. Crowell. Thirty persons constitute their membership, most of whom are from Greenland and West Fork congregations.

Black Oak Church of Christ began its separate existence in 1880, with the following officers: Elders, J. J. Dockery, J. S. Mahone and L. A. Hobbs; deacons, E. T. Dockery and Robert Skelton, and thirty-six members. They built a hewn log house in 1878, as a community, for, a school-house which is now used as a church, but the society contemplates the early erection of a larger structure, 34x46 feet. They have a membership of 105 persons. Rev. Daniel Chich, the pastor who organized the society, was succeeded in his pastoral duties by Revs. J. S. Mahon, C. H. O'Bryan and the present minister, Rev. L. A. Hobbs.

The Christian Church, situated five miles east of Prairie Grove, was organized in 1884 by Rev. C. Sperry. They have thirty members at present. They have a weather-boarded ceiled building, 24x36 feet, erected in 1884 at a cost of $400.

The Church of Christ at Mountain View dates its organization from 1886, when it was effected by Revs. M. N. West and B. M. Curtis. The elders were Eli Winn and J. H. McDonald, and J. W. Fitts, Sr. and Jr., were deacons. The church began with ten members, and have now increased their number to thirty-seven, who meet in the school-house of District No. 92. Revs. H. C. Crowell and B. M. Curtis have been the pastors.

The Christian Church of Prairie Grove was organized some time in July, 1885, by Dr. William Judd. It began with between forty and fifty members, and the following year was able to build a neat frame church, valued at about $700. Rev. H. C. Crowell has been its pastor from the beginning, and now counts their membership at about fifty persons.

The Church of Christ at Springdale was reorganized in 1887, by Elder Evan Thompson, with the few members scattered about that place. At the present writing the foundation of a tasteful frame structure, about 30x40 feet, is in progress. The society numbers twenty-five members.

Presbyterians.—The Presbyterian Churches in Washington County are members of the Presbytery of Washbourne, named in honor of the Rev. Cephas Washbourne (or Washburn), who was an early missionary to the Indian nations, and who was probably the first Presbyterian preacher to hold services in Washington County. The presbytery was first ordered by the Synod of Arkansas, convened at Pine Bluff, Ark., in 1883, and met on October 24, 1884, in the Presbyterian Church at Fayetteville. Rev. S. W. Davies, D. D., opened the meeting with a sermon from Numbers xi, 10-17. Those present were Rev. S. W. Davies, W. A. Sample, J. L. D. Houston and S. B. Ervin, and Ruling Elders O. C. Gray, of Fayetteville; M. G. Hearn, of Mount Zion; T. P. Allison, of Big Springs; J. D. Reinhardt, of Alma; J. C. Clift, of New Hope; J. F. Nolen, of Prosperity; S. W. Dinsmore, of Bentonville; J. A. Dibrell, of Van Buren, and John Smith, of Fort Smith. Revs. W. M. Crozier and D. C. Boggs were also among the number. Rev. W. A. Sample was chosen moderator.

The second meeting was held at Alma Church, April 16, 1885, and one was held with Bethel Church in October following.

Presbyterian influences gained an early foothold in Washington County, not only through Rev. Washbourne's great labors, but they radiated also from the faculty of Miss Sawyer's school at Fayetteville, although not so directly in ministerial work.

The Fayetteville Presbyterian Church dates its present organization from November 9, 1872, when a Presbyterial committee, composed of Rev. W. A. Sample, of Fort Smith, Ruling Elder A. W. Dinsmore, of Bentonville, assisted by Rev. D. C. Boggs, of the latter place, effected it. There had been services held here before the war, by Rev. Washbourne, in whose honor the presbytery is named, and among the members of this faith here at that time were Miss Lucretia Foster and Miss Mary T. Daniels, instructors in Miss Sophie Sawyer's school; but the present church is the only complete organization, probably. The original members were Prior N. Lea, ruling elder; Mrs. Elizabeth Lea, Misses M. Lizzie, Laura J. and Emma Lea, Denton D. Stark, Mrs. M. C. Stark, H. M. Lyon, Mrs. Fannie Springer, Mrs. M. A. Harris, John Barnett, Mrs. Susan H. Barnett, Mrs. Mary T. Smith, Mrs. Lizzie Lattimore, Mrs. E. M. Cox and B. F. Cherry. In January, 1876, they completed and paid for a good frame church, costing $1,750, which is located on the corner of College Avenue and Spring Street. It was dedicated the following year, on February 18, by Rev. Dinsmore offering the dedicatory prayer and Rev. S. W. Davies, D. D., the pastor, reading a sketch of the organization. Rev. Davies has been their only regular pastor, and under his management the church has risen to a membership of eighty-three on the rolls, with the various societies connected with it in active operation.

The Springdale Presbyterian Church was organized May 1, 1882, at Springdale, by Rev. S. W. Davies, D.D., and Rev. J. L. D. Houston. Its first members under the organization were Elder and Mrs. A. G. Hill, Deacon and Mrs. J. G. Bratten, Deacon R. M. Huffmaster, Thomas M. Hill, Miss A. E. Hill, E. M. Bratten, Miss Belle Bratten, Miss M. F. Huffmaster, Mrs. A. A. Overton, James J. Fleming, Mrs. E. C. Fleming, Mrs. Cynthia Morgan, Mrs. Lavinia W. Phillips, Mrs. Emily Lichliter, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Armstrong and Miss Mattie Armstrong. Their pastors have been the Presbyterial evangelists, Rev. J. L. D. Houston and Rev. A. W. Milster, the present pastor, under whose ministry their membership has reached twenty-three. They have a neat brick house of worship, which was built about 1883 at an estimated cost of $1,000.

The Big Spring Presbyterian Church was organized in October, 1880, at Big Spring, by the Revs. S. W. Davies, D. D., and D. C. Boggs and Ruling Elder O. C. Gray. The congregation began with the following sixteen members: Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Allison, Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Hannah, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Hannah, Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Hannah, John Hannah, Miss Elizabeth Hannah, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Skelton. The ruling elders were T. P. Allison and R. O. Hannah. Their church building is a neat frame structure, erected in 1881 at a cost of $500; and was dedicated during the following year by Rev. Dr. S. W. Davies, of Fayetteville. This is one of the congregations under the charge of the Presbyterial evangelist, Rev. A. W. Milster, who assumed his duties in 1888; his predecessor was Rev. J. L. D. Houston, whose ministry in the same office dated from 1880. The membership of the church numbers twenty-three.

Prairie Grove, Boonsboro, Cincinnati and Viney Grove all have small congregations, but have never had any organization, if Cincinnati be excepted, which had a church there before the war, but which was among the large number of societies broken up during those chaotic days. These places are under the charge of the Presbyterian evangelist, Rev. A. W. Milster, of Fayetteville, who holds services at each place at regular intervals.

Baptists. — The Baptist Churches in Washington County belonged to Bentonville Association until 1871, when the Fayetteville Baptist Association was organized. The Bentonville Association is now in its forty-eighth year.

The Missionary Baptists did not begin the organizing of churches so early as some of the other denominations by several years. The oldest congregation of which any record could be found is styled Friendship Baptist Church. It was organized about three miles southeast of Springdale, in May, 1847, by R. C. Hill and J. F. Mitchell. Among the first members were Joseph Baker, James Meek, James White, Isaac Horton, Rhoda Baker, Elizabeth Meek and Nancy Fitzgerald. James Meek was the first deacon, and James White, clerk. The next year a small frame building with a chimney at each end was erected. It was used as a house of worship until 1861, when the present building was put up. Among the pastors who have served this church have been the following: J. F. Mitchell, Joseph Baker, Louis Heath, B. D. Gray, T. B. Van Horn, Asa Brown, Z. M. Vaughn, G. Bryant, A. D. Slaughter, E. Newton, J. C. Renfro, C. P. Tupper, J. T. Boyd, R. Hall, Mac. Slaughter, G. P. Hanks and J. B. Stark.

Mount Vernon Baptist Church was organized in 1848, by R. C. Hill and Joseph Baker. Among the pioneer members of this church were Isaac B. and Samuel H. Vernon, Brinson Sears, Sarah A. Meyers, Nancy Vernon, Emeline Phillips, Christiana Henson, Ann Pinkman and Elias Moncy. The last named was the clerk. The first house of worship was destroyed during the war, and a school-house was the meeting place from 1866 until 1877, when a frame building, 20x40 feet, was erected upon land donated by Dr. O. D. Slaughter. Among the preachers who have administered to this congregation may be mentioned Rev. Joseph Baker, O. D. Slaughter, R. Allen, T. Boyd, A. Huckaby, W. F. Green, C. P. Tupper, M. Slaughter and H. C. Calvert. The present membership of this church is seventy-five.

Valley Grove Baptist Church was organized in 1855, with the following constituent members: T. B. Van Horn, James Shults, Sarah Shults, Jackson Dyer, James F. and Sarah Hood, and Benjamin F. and Susan Boone. T. B. Van Horn was chosen moderator, and B. F. Boone, clerk. The congregation worship in a union meeting-house, which was erected in 1870, on the northeast quarter of Section 1, Township 15, Range 29 west. A former building was destroyed during the Civil War. Among the pastors of this church have been T. B. Van Horn, William Blakeley, James Campbell, W. G. Slinker, J. Mayes, J. M. Haycraft, A. Huckaby and J. Crawford.

About June, 1866, a Baptist Church, formerly known as New Prospect, but now called Sulphur City, was organized by Elders John Mayes and James Isacks. The former became the first pastor. His successors have been J. C. Renfro, W. G. Slinker, J. Crawford, A. Huckaby, J. A. Smith and J. H. Calvert. The first house of worship was a log building, erected by the Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians. The meetings are now held in a house erected by the school district.

Weddington Gap Baptist Church was organized on March 20, 1871, by Elders E. Baker and Elijah Burkett. The deacons elected were John England and George Dickison, the first of whom is still occupying that position. Among the other members were H. M. Davis, John T. Davis, Melvina F. Davis, Edward England and J. A. Cooper, who was the first and is the present clerk. Among the pastors have been C. Williams, H. J. Scruggs, J. B. Harralson, J. Robertson, T. H. Day, L. H. Palmer and H. C. Winstead. The congregation up to this time have worshiped in a school-house and Methodist Church, but is now completing a building.

Oak Grove Baptist Church is situated on Fall Creek. The congregation was organized on July 25, 1875, by Thomas Smith, with twelve members. G. M. Farmer and J. Swinford were chosen deacons, and J. Rogers, clerk. Since its organization the church has baptized thirteen members, licensed two ministers and ordained two deacons and one minister. The present officers are G. M. and C. O. Farmer, deacons; J. M. Carter, treasurer, and C. O. Farmer, clerk.

Mt. Gilead Baptist Church situated at Dripping Springs, eighteen miles south of Fayetteville, was organized on September 2, 1877, by Elder M. Smith, with nine members.

The Fayetteville Missionary Baptist Church was organized in 1857, at a private house about two miles south of Fayetteville, by John, Sarah, Martha and W. Z. Mayes, J. W. Buie, Sister Watson, Amanda (afterward) Peer, and a few others. The pastor was the Rev. Elder John Mayes, and their services were held at the various homes of the members until they were interrupted by the war, in 1863. The membership was then scattered and the records all destroyed, but in 1866, under their indomitable leader, the Rev. Mayes, nine of the old members resumed worship at a church in Fayetteville, and during the first month admitted thirty members. Their meetings were held in the Masonic Hall and other places until about 1879(?), when through the untiring zeal of Rev. Mayes, acting as pastor and carpenter, their present neat frame structure on College Avenue was completed, at a cost of, probably, $1,500. It was dedicated by Rev. J. P. Eagle, of Lonoke, Ark. Compelled by the weight of years to resign his pastoral duties, Rev. John Mayes was succeeded in his work by the following pastors: Revs. T. P. Boone, B. W. N. Simms, C. W. Callahan, M. L. Ball and Dr. B. G. Maynard, the present incumbent, who was formerly president of Tazewell and Mossy Creek Colleges, Tenn. The church has now a membership of about 118. It also has its various subordinate organizations, Sabbath-schools, etc.

The Springdale Missionary Baptist Church was organized about 1870, as Liberty Church, by Elders Bryant and Putman, and formed part of the Fayetteville Missionary Baptist Association. The moderator was Elder B. Putman, and W. A. Hunter was church clerk. The other members were John and Louisa Hychloter, Margaret and Elizabeth Fitzgerald, Margaret Baggett, Lucinda Baker, Fanny A. Putman, Isaac and Phoebe Lynch, William M. Blakely and James Meek. The society built their first church in the north part of Springdale in 1872; it is a frame structure, valued at about $1,500, and was dedicated by Elder Putman the following year. The Masonic order and the Primitive Baptist society have a financial interest in the building. Under the charge of the following pastors, the membership has reached seventy-five: Revs. B. Putman, H. R. Barnes, T. P. Boone, O. D. Slaughter, W. F. Green, I. C. Robison, C. P. Tupper, Elder Huckleberry, John Mayes, B. W. Neal and A. M. Kennan, clerk.

The Valley Grove Missionary Baptist Church was organized in 1855 by Rev. T. B. Van Horn, with the following members: James Shultz, Sarah Shultz, J. Dyer, James F. and Sarah Hood, Benj. F. Boone and Susan Boone. Rev. Van Horn was chosen moderator, and B. F. Boone became clerk. The first building erected by the society was some time previous to the war, but during that conflict it was burned, and no house of worship was had until the erection of the present one in 1870. It is a frame structure, situated in Section 1, Township 15, Range 29. It is a union building, also occupied by the Cumberland Presbyterians and a Methodist society. Rev. Van Horn's successors have been Revs. William Blakely, James Campbell, W. G. Slinker (?), J. Mayes, J. M. Haycraft, A. Huckaby and J. Crawford. The society has thirty-seven members.

Vineyard Missionary Baptist Church is another member of the Fayetteville Association, organized December 14, 1867, but there seems to have been an organization before the Civil War, which erected a good frame church in 1859. At the reorganization in 1867 there were but seven members: Elders G. Bryant and Asa Brown, Thomas Kimbrough, Sarah Kimbrough, J. S. Butler and M. E. Greer. Some of their pastors have been as follows: Rev. T. B. Van Horn, Elders G. Bryant, F. R. Ferguson, J. W. McCurly, A. J. Estes, T. P. Boom, G. A. Latinn (?), C. P. Tupper and T. H. Day. The society has eighty-four members.

The Valley View Missionary Baptist Church has a membership of twenty-nine persons. Its records have been destroyed. It was organized June 24, 1877, by Elders J. C. Peters and J. C. Swainford, with the following officers: deacons, A. E. and W. R. Bridges, and clerk, W. D. Bridges. Their church building, a neat frame, is located on Lee's Creek, about two miles north of the Crawford County line. The following ministers have filled their pulpit: Revs. J. C. Peters, Aaron Peters and W. C. Eads.

Bethlehem Missionary Baptist Church, of the Fayetteville Association, became a separate society on May 11, 1879, by the agreement of the following members: Elder Joab and Sarah Caviness, Elder Mathias and M. A. Spyres, Joseph and Polly York, Peleg Rigsbee and daughter, Winifred, and Mahlon and Rhoda A. E. Spyres. The society previous to 1881 held their worship under a brush arbor in summer, and in private houses in winter. During the latter year, however, they erected a hewn log house, 20x24 feet, located on Lee's Creek, four and one-half miles southwest of Woosley. They have plans afoot at present for the erection of a frame church, 28x35 feet. Under the administration of the following pastors the membership has reached sixty persons: Rev. Elder Joab Caviness, Elder M. Spyres, Elder Keggel, Elder J. D. Woolsey and Elder M. H. Spyres. Their present officers are Deacons, A. T. Hopkins and Mahlon Spyres, and clerk, Henry Spyres.

Little Elm Missionary Baptist Church is a large society of seventy members, who have a small frame church about nine miles west of Fayetteville. The church building is valued at about $200, and was built in 1883, as a union church, before which date meetings were held in a school-house. The society was organized in 1881, by Rev. Elder T. H. Day and Deacon M. W. Marrs. D. K. Clevenger, C. T. Clayton, James Jackson, Anice Day, Mary J. Clayton, Sallie Beaver, Lucy Slaughter, Bella Gibson and Mary Shelley constituted the membership. Rev. Day served as pastor for six years, and the present minister in charge is Rev. H. B. Borders.

Rock Spring Missionary Baptist Church, meeting about two and one-half miles northwest of Rhea's Mills, at a school-house, is a comparatively young organization, whose existence began in 1882, on the third day of September, by the agreement of twelve members. The first pastor was Rev. T. H. Day, and Deacon S. W. Gleason and Clerk J. P. Jordan were the first officers. Rev. H. C. Winstead, pastor, and R. Diment, the church clerk, constitute the present officers. Thirty-three members form the present society.

Fairmount Missionary Baptist Church, another young society of twenty-nine members, was formed in March, 1886, by Elder

M. Spyres and Deacon A. S. Hopkins. Besides these G. Spyres, John Jackson and Richard Daniels were the first members. The society was formed at a school-house two miles northwest of Winslow, and have so far been unable to provide a separate building for church purposes. Rev. M. H. Spyres is the pastor in charge, and B. F. Johnston the church clerk.

The Garret Creek Missionary Baptist Church is a flourishing society of twenty-eight members, under the pastoral charge of W. C. Eada. J. W. Tapp is the present clerk. When the society began its separate existence, in September, 1886, as a member of the Fayetteville Association, the following members and officers were enrolled: Deacons, A. F. Sooter and G. W. Walton; clerk, Thomas Baker; E. V. McBroom, J. T. Smith, Annie Rickets, Elizabeth Fleming, Louisa Smith, N. M. Walton and Nancy Sooter.

Evening Shade Missionary Baptist Church, whose pastor is Elder J. C. Williams, has a membership of twenty-five persons. Its elders are Joseph Malone, Robert Fallen and Mr. Parish.

Methodist Episcopal.—The Methodist Episcopal Church of Springdale was organized at Liberty, a defunct village two miles from Springdale, and the property there was sold and the congregation established at the latter place in 1870. The time of its organization at Liberty is approximated as 1852. The original congregation included Joseph Holcomb and wife, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Smith, Mr. J. B. Banks and wife, and Mrs. Wagoner. After the removal they united with Shiloh Baptist Church to build a union church. In 1884 their present church, a frame building 32x50 feet, was built. Their membership has increased to about 100. Among the pastors in charge have been Revs. J. M. Clayton, Thomas Smith, J. R. Tydings, J. A. Walden, Hall, W. H. Corley, Summers, Williams and B. C. Matthews.

Fayetteville Methodist Episcopal Church, North, was organized in 1866, by Rev. W. L. Molloy. There were few members, who were under the successive pastoral charges of Rev. Molloy, Revs. H. G. Hopkins, C. L. Howell, A. W. Fields and W. H. Gillam. Under the aid of the Church Extension Society a church was built by Rev. Fields, but about 1874 the Rev. Gillam was compelled to see the church sold as the only means to extricate the body from a lamentable financial situation, and the congregation was disbanded.

Primitive Baptists.—Shiloh Church of Primitive Baptists at Springdale, Ark., belongs to the Washington Association. It was organized August 22, 1840, with the following members: William Graham, Levi Graham, Nancy Graham (the only one alive at the present writing), Moses Lee, Lucinda Graham, James Owens, Ellen Owens, Margaret Wolf and Sarah Graham. Elders Samuel Wheat, of War Eagle Church; William Poston, of Union Church; John Holcombe, of West Fork Church, and Deacons John Wood and Berry D. Graham, of West Fork Church, were the presbytery who established it. Elder James Mayfield was the first pastor, followed by Elder John Holcombe, until his death in 1876; then Elders A. G. Smith and Norman F. Goodrich were elected jointly, but since the death of Elder Smith his colleague has served. The records of the first four years are lost, but the church, it is known, was established three miles east of its present location; on its removal, however, to Springdale a log house was erected within a few rods of the site of the present building, which is a neat frame structure, erected in 1871, at a cost of about $1,000. The present membership of the church numbers about 100. This denomination figured largely in the growth of Springdale.

The Catholics.—St. Joseph's Catholic Church, of Fayetteville, was first organized by Father Curry, of Little Rock, about forty years ago. This generous priest bought a section of land near the site of Fayetteville, and sold it at a merely nominal rate to a company of Rhode Island Catholics, among whom were William Flynn, Patrick Hennessy, Philip McCoy, Charles Healy, Albert Byrnes, Maurice Coffey and Peter Smith, the original members of the congregation. The next visiting priest was Father Lawrence Smythe. The congregation soon felt able to build and support a church, and through the active work of Patrick Hennessy and others, the present neat frame building on the corner of Willow Street and La Fayette Avenue was completed by a Fort Smith carpenter named "Bill" Sullivan. The edifice cost about $2,500, and in June, 1878, was dedicated by Bishop Fitzgerald. The priests located here have been Fathers Thomas O'Rielly and Joseph Phillip Maurel, the latter being the present incumbent. They have a membership of 120, and is the only congregation of that denomination in the county.

Protestant Episcopal.—St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church is one of the oldest churches in Washington County, and the only one of this denomination. It was organized May 23, 1848, by Rev. W. C. Stout, and the following officers were chosen: C. W. Deane, M. D., as S. W.; J. W. Chewas, J. W.; John Campbell, William McIlroy and Charles W. Washington, as vestrymen. On February 3, 1854, the corner stone of their first church was laid, and on October 29, following, the neat frame structure was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Freeman. Their present edifice is of brick, and the date of erection is 1872, the corner-stone being laid on October 26. The dedication was not made until April 8, 1888, when the Rt. Rev. H. N. Pierce, D. D., LL. D., bishop of Arkansas, performed the ceremony. Under the charge of the following rectors the church has increased the number of its communicants to 112: Revs. William Scull, W. C. Stout, C. C. Townsend, Otis Hackett, J. Sandels, C. M. Hoge, T. M. Thorpe, and J. J. Vaulx, the present incumbent.

Evangelical Lutheran.—The Salem Evangelical Lutheran Church is a part of the English Conference of Missouri, and was organized in 1879 by Rev. I. E. Rader. The original members were I. D. Rader and wife, D. M. Linebarger and wife, W. F. Renner and wife, C. S. Hawn and wife, J. H. Bird, Mrs. Jacob Mason and Mrs. I. E. Rader. Mr. Linebarger and I. D. Rader were the elders, and Mr. Renner and the first mentioned elder were trustees. In 1880 they built their first church in Springdale, but have since replaced the frame structure by a brick edifice costing $4,800. Their parochial school has an enrollment of eighty-eight scholars, in charge of two instructors; and their Sunday-school, managed by a superintendent and three teachers, is attended by seventy-five persons. Of the 140 in connection with the church fifty-six are communicants. Since Rev. I. E. Rader's pastorate Rev. A. Sloan Bartholomew has been in charge.

Adventists.—The Seventh Day Adventists are represented in but one portion of Washington County, namely, at Springdale. One feature of their faith, however, the observance of Saturday as Sabbath, has created no small degree of interest in political circles, and this gives them a prominence that their comparatively small numbers would hardly justify otherwise.

The Springdale Seventh Day Adventists Church began with the following officers: Elder, J. A. Armstrong; deacons, Z. Sweringen and William Martin; trustees, William Martin and P. M. Ownbey. In 1886 they built a good frame church at a cost of, probably, $800, situated not far from the "Frisco" depot. The new house of the society was dedicated by J. G. Wood, and since then the work has been in the charge of the following pastors: Revs. J. G. Wood and J. P. Henderson. The pastor who, in company with D. A. Wellinsin, organized the church was Rev. J. W. Scoles. The society belongs to the Arkansas Conference. Their members at present number 106.

Congregationalists.—The Congregational Church of Fayetteville (colored) was organized in 1883, under the auspices of the American Congregational Missionary Association of New York City. The church now used was a school-house on College Street, and was bought by the society that year. Their membership is seventeen, and they have been under the charge of the following pastors: B. F. Foster, J. M. Shippen, W. R. Polk and L. B. Moore.

Bible Society.—The Washington County Bible Society was a pioneer institution. Its first meeting was held in March, 1831, when the following officers were elected: Rev. A. Buchanan, president; John Truesdale and Robert McCarny, vice-presidents; Maurice Wright, recording secretary; Lewis Evans, corresponding secretary; James Coulter, treasurer; C. M. McClellan, depository; John Carnahan, Thomas Garvin, John Alexander, Joseph Reed and Jesse M. Blair, directors. The entire amount collected for the first year was only $63.47½. The society appears to have gone down about 1839, and was not revived until about 1850, when James Orr was elected president; Rev. John Buchanan and Robert W. Mecklin, vice-presidents; Rev. Cephas Washbourne, secretary; Maurice Wright, treasurer; Rev. Andrew Buchanan, James Crawford, Pressly R. Smith, Samuel Carnahan and Rev. Guilford Pylant, managers. This society continued in existence until the war, the last record being the report of Rev. John Buchanan, secretary, on June 14, 1860.

Y. M. C. A.—The Fayetteville Young Men's Christian Association was organized March 22, 1887, through the exertions of Mr. Ellis Duncan and Mark Dean. The original members were S. W. Barnett, R. S. Curry, W. N. and A. W. Crozier, Mark Dean, Messrs. Ellis, N. L., Garnett, Robert W. and Thomas G. Duncan, W. M. Flynn, W. McBride and Morton Milburn. The society is now in a prosperous condition, with parlor, reading room and hall in the post-office block. They have lately secured a general secretary, Mr. H. W. Hutchins, who devotes his entire time to the work, and is rapidly establishing all the various departments of Y. M. C. A. work. The following is a list of presidents since organization: W. McBride, Lee Treadwell and C. A. Davies, the present incumbent.

HISTORY OF CARROLL COUNTY.

TOPOGRAPHY—GEOLOGY—RESOURCES.

Location.—Carroll County is situated in the northwestern part of Arkansas, adjoining the State of Missouri, and in the second tier of counties from the line of Indian Territory, between Boone County on the east and Benton County on the west, with Newton County on the south and Madison on the south and southwest. It borders upon the Missouri line a distance of about thirty-five miles. The greatest length north and south is about twenty-five miles. The area is about 746 square miles, or in the vicinity of 500,000 acres.

Mountains.—The county occupies a position about midway between the Boston and Ozark Mountains, spurs from both of which diversify its surface. The western portion of the county is extremely broken and irregular. Gaither's spur of Boston Mountains, properly speaking a connecting link between this range and the Ozarks, extends northeasterly through Madison and Newton Counties. On the east side of the Fancher fork of Osage it is known as the Sisco Mountain, and above Dog branch bears the name of Phillips Mountain. Across Osage it becomes Morris Mountain, and thence continues in an irregular and broken trend in a general northerly direction, forming the divide between Osage and Long Creek, and known under the various local names of Long, Childer's, Bradshaw's, Jennings's, etc. In the northern part of the county, between Indian Creeks, the range culminates in Pilot Knob, the loftiest elevation along the northern boundary of the State. Crystal Mountain, detached from the main chain by the Osage River, is a conical elevation about a mile and a half in diameter, rising gradually to a considerable altitude. Upon the top, within well defined limits, the surface to a depth not yet ascertained is composed entirely of crystals. No similar geological formation is known to exist anywhere. The Sister Knobs, one mile west of the main chain, overlook the fertile valley of Osage and the Town of Berryville.

Streams.—The entire county, being north of the Boston Mountains, is drained by White River, the largest tributary of the Mississippi between the Missouri and the Arkansas Rivers. White River flows through the extreme northwestern part of the county, in a northeastern direction. It is here a considerable stream, confined to a narrow channel by high cliffs, and presenting scenery that has not been unappreciated by the tourist. Clabbern branch flows into the river at Beaver from the northwest, and Leatherwood Creek from the southeast at the same place. Stanley branch and Clifty Creek also empty into this river in this county.

King's River, next in volume and importance to the White, rises in the Boston Mountains, in Madison County, and enters Carroll in Dry Fork Township. For some distance its course is nearly identical with the county line. Its general direction is nearly due north. The current is rapid and the water clear. Dry Fork, the first tributary of King's River in the county, rises in Newton, and pursues a southwesterly course twenty-five miles through a valley ranging from 200 yards to one-fourth of a mile in width. Piney, so named from the variety of timber that flourishes upon the hills through which it flows, drains the whole of Piney and part of Osage Townships. It is about twenty miles long, and the uniform width of the valley is 200 or 300 yards. Osage River, the most considerable tributary of King's, is third in order among the streams that flow into it in this county. It is formed by the junction of the Fancher and Kenner forks, both of which rise in Newton County, at Fairview. From this point the general course of Osage is northwest. Its entire length is about thirty-five miles. The valley begins to widen immediately below Fairview. Cultivation along the benches, or second bottoms, first appears at the Blasengame settlement in Osage Township. Osage receives a small tributary from Lundy's hollow, seven miles north of Berryville, and also the waters of Bell's fork, near Fairview. Nearly opposite the mouth of Osage King's River receives the waters of Keel's Creek from the west. This stream rises near Clifty, and flows eastwardly.

Long Creek, a stream fifty miles in length, empties into White River near Forsythe, Mo., and rises in Carrollton, whence it flows through Long Creek Township and Taney County, Mo. The principal branch of this stream is Yocum Creek, one fork of which rises in Prairie Township, and the other in Hickory, near Green Forest. Yocum flows northeast, and forms the boundary line between Yocum and Hickory Townships. It has but one branch of any importance, Sycamore Creek. Lipp's branch, seven miles in length, rises in Boone County, and empties into Long Creek from the east. Dry Creek, dependent upon spring thaws for its existence, rises in Carrollton Township. It is twelve miles long, and flows in the spring months into Long Creek. Big Indian Creek rises in Prairie Township, and Little Indian in Polo. After gradually converging for a distance of eighteen miles, they unite two miles south of White River. Owl Creek rises in Franklin Township, and flows north into the same stream.

Prairies.—The principal prairies of the county are the "Big" prairies in Prairie and Polo Townships, between Big Indian Creek and King's River, six miles long from north to south, and from three to five miles wide; and Scott's Prairie, in Hickory Township, about three square miles in extent. These tracts, when first known to the pioneer settlers, were covered with the long grass peculiar to similar large tracts in the West, and were without any timber growth whatever. The Hale barrens, in Yocum Township, comprise an area about ten miles square. This tract is quite as level as the prairies. It is well timbered, but the same cannot be said of the drainage. The soil differs from that of the prairies, and approximates clay in its consistency. It has been found to be well adapted to the cultivation of fruits. In the southern part of the county the arable land is confined to the valleys of the streams, which are unsurpassed in fertility anywhere.

Geology.—The following, with reference to the geology of the county, was compiled by David Dale Owen, State geologist:

One and a-half miles southeast of Charles Hutchison's farm the following succession was observed in a ravine:

1. Sandstone.
2. Chert.
3. Light-grey limestone.

The Pilot Knob, near Charles Hutchison's, has the same general geological structure as the Boat Mountain.

Four and a-half miles from Carrollton, the Archimedes limestone was observed with remains of a dark shale over it. Under this limestone comes in a sandstone, which has much the appearance of that over the grey limestone on Crooked Creek; it is not likely that they can occupy the same geological horizon, unless there has been a great thinning away of the measures that form the base of the Boat Mountain.

Some loose pieces of conglomerate were also seen between four and six miles from Carrollton.

The descent to Terrapin and Long Creeks is about 390 feet; in the bed of the former creek entrochital, cherty limestone was found.

Along with some yellow pyrites, which were submitted to me for examination by the citizens of Carrollton, there were some specimens of a bluish-black scoriaceous ore, in some of which I detected a notable quantity of copper. This ore was said to have been obtained in the Childer's Mountain, about seven miles west of Carrollton, on the waters of Cornelius or Dry Creek. This ore has the appearance of some of the Ducktown copper ores of Tennessee; and, as I found samples of that variety of Tennessee copper ore in the hands of the brother of the individual who brought the ore into town, I thought it probable that this might be a sample of Tennessee ore, which, from inadvertency, had been mixed and confounded with the pyritiferous ores of the Childer's Mountain. On this account, and as the locality of this ore was then only known to the individual who collected it, and he was from home, I concluded, as my proposed route through Carroll County lay northwest, to request the Hon. W. W. Watkins, as soon as it was convenient for him, to visit the locality on Childer's Mountain in company with the discoverer of the ore. This he afterward did, and subsequently addressed a letter to me, dated the 6th of July last, in which he states that there was no mistake as to the ore having come from the locality, since he had now obtained specimens from the mines himself, viz.: on southwest quarter of Section 31, Township 19 north, Range 23 west, and had forwarded some specimens to await my arrival at Little Rock. These specimens I received at Little Rock, and have now had an opportunity of testing them for copper, in my laboratory, by the application of the reagents considered most delicate for the detection of that metal, without obtaining any copper reaction. If copper is to be found among these ores, in the Childer's Mountain, it can be only sparingly and locally disseminated.

Most of this ore sent to me, from this mountain, is a white iron pyrites, associated with a hydrated oxide of iron, in which yellow iron pyrites is diffused.

Where the Berryville road crosses the Childer's range of mountains, it is elevated about 370 feet above Terrapin Creek. The surface rock, at this elevation, is sandstone, overlying cherty limestone.

In the gap of the Osage Mountain the sandstone must be at least 130 feet in thickness.

About eleven miles northwest of Carrolltown, and three and a-half miles from W. Jones', on the divide between Scott's Prairie and Prairie Township, magnesian limestones, probably of lower silurian date, crop out, which are separated from the limestone and sandstone of the Osage Mountain by crisp chert. The upper beds of this lower formation have the same earthy character and checkered appearance on the surface as the strata which form the lower portion of the hills in Township 19 north, Range 17 west, and on Fallen-timber Creek, in Marion County, and are, no doubt, of the same age. Some of these limestones probably possess hydraulic properties. This change in the formations is accompanied by a corresponding change in the growth, which consists of small oaks, interspersed in groves on the hill-side, with a thick undergrowth of sumach and blackberries.

Here, as in Marion County, numerous springs of water issue from amongst these earthy, magnesian limestones, and, flowing down the slopes, render the roads wet and miry.

The crisp chert, which occurs on this side of Scott's Prairie, has a different lithological appearance from that associated with the subcarboniferous rocks on the southeast side of the same prairie, and occupies probably a lower geological position.

The hills about W. Jones' are composed of the same description of magnesian limestones, and crisp chert, with some associate sandstone. About midway of the hills, the so-called "cotton rock" is found: a white, close-textured variety of magnesian limestone, which is used for underpinning the houses and building the external walls of chimneys. If placed exposed to the direct heat of the fire it is apt to crack and give way; therefore, for the inside lining of fireplaces, another bed is preferred, which lies higher in the hills; this is, however, judging from its external appearance, a purer limestone, and, though it may not be so liable to crack by heat, it will certainly be more easily burnt to lime. Hereafter an analysis of these rocks will be made.

Several intercalated bands of sandstone occur in the hills in this part of Carroll County; most of them are below the level of the "cotton rock."

The formations here appear to be of the same character and age as those in the lead region of the eastern part of this county, and the western part of Marion, already described in the first part of this Report; it is probable, from this analogy in the two regions, that lead ore will be found, to some extent, disseminated in pockets in the calcareous members, in the same manner as it occurs in the Coka and Mitchell diggings.

Four of the most conspicuous hills of the Osage range, in the northwest part of Carroll County, in sight of Berryville, have received the names of the "Sister," "Grandfather" and "Indigo" knobs. The Sister hill, nearest to Berryville, gave a height of 370 feet above the Berryville branch of King's River. The summit rocks on this hill are the red, variegated and encrinital marble limestones; but most of the layers on this hill appear to be too earthy, and too prone to decomposition for ornamental outside work.

The "Fire-stone" was found in place about fifteen feet from the top, and the "Cotton-rock" toward the base of the principal ascent, at an elevation of about seventy to eighty feet above the branch from which the levels were taken.

In sighting with the level, across from the Sister to the Grandfather knob, a bench of rock was observed, cropping out about 80 or 100 feet from the top, corresponding, in level and position, to the red, variegated and encrinital limestones that crown the Sister-hill. By computation the Grandfather-peak must be nearly 100 feet higher than the Sister-hill.

The succession of the different beds of rock, forming the hills in Prairie Township, as far as they have yet been observed, is as follows:

1. Subcarboniferous chert.
2. Sandstone.
3. Light grey, subcarboniferous limestone.
4. Chert.
5. Encrinital, pink and red limestones; the place of the marble rock.
6. Sandstone; about seventy feet in thickness.
7. Chert.
8. Magnesian limestone and sandstone.
9. "Cotton-rock," a variety of magnesian limestone.
10. Magnesian limestones, some of which, probably, possess hydraulic properties.

Three or four pounds of lead ore are reported to have been found adjacent to the town of Berryville, on land owned by Berry. The remarks previously made in regard to the lead region of the eastern part of Carroll County, will apply also to Prairie Township.

Five miles northwest of Berryville, on the Osage, is a locality worthy the attention of the iron manufacturer. Iron is found here in quantities which might be sufficient to supply a smelting furnace. An attempt was made in this vicinity to establish iron works; but, in consequence of the death of Belcher, one of the principal parties interested, the enterprise was never fully carried out.

In the high ridge dividing the waters of the Osage fork of King's River from Piney, the succession was as follows:

1. Cherty sandstone.
2. Encrinital limestones.
3. A great mass of chert, replaced sometimes by sandstone.
4. Magnesian limestones, interstratified with some sandstone.

At Steven's mill, on Piney Creek, the encrinital limestone is underlaid by sixty to eighty feet of sandstone.

The soil, derived from the cherty sandstone, forming the summit of the above "divide," supports a growth of pine.

On the ridge between Piney Creek and the Dry Fork of King's River, the strata of the preceding section appear to have dipped considerably toward the southwest, so that they lie lower in the ridges, and are capped with white, subcarboniferous limestone and sandstone, overlying the cherty sandstone of the preceding section.

In descending from these strata to the Howard farm, on the Dry Fork of King's River, a great mass of chert was passed over.

No black shale was visible in any of the sections in this part of Carroll County.

The rock in the bed of the Dry Fork of King's River, at Howard's farm, is light grey limestone and chert, at least fifty feet in thickness, and apparently of subcarboniferous date; but, if so, there must be a rapid dip of the strata between the Piney and Dry Forks of King's River.

Some lead ore is said to have been plowed up in Howard's field.

A large spirifer was found in the limestone of the Dry Fork, allied to Spirifer striatus, and casts of Orthis crinistria in the overlying chert, both of which species belong to the subcarboniferous era, and therefore indicate the age of these rocks.

In passing from the Dry Fork to the main branch of King's River, a ridge of about 330 feet in height was passed over. At the base of this ridge is the aforementioned light grey limestone, fifty feet or more in thickness; over this is a slope of chert containing casts of Orthis crinistria, surrounded by sandstone, which forms the top of the ridge, where we passed over it into Madison County.

Caves.—Leatherwood, or Marley Cave, is five miles north of Eureka Springs. Its length is nearly a quarter of a mile, with an average width of thirty feet and a height varying from six to twelve feet. Some distance from the entrance there is an apartment 60x80 feet, and at the farther end there are numerous stalactites and stalagmites. There is but one passage way so far as known. This cave was discovered in 1878.

The Davidson Cave opens about 150 yards up the mountain from Sycamore Spring. "The entrance resembles a large gopher hole, and is anything but inviting, as one has to crawl into it feet foremost down a steep descent of about thirty feet. The ceiling is arched, the walls rising straight up, with an average width of between three or four feet, and are grooved and fluted columns, magnificent in proportions. It contains only one passage, of perhaps 100 yards in extent, with several shallow pockets in the sides. It ends in a small circular room, columned and fluted, terminating in an arched, dome-like ceiling, many feet above the main passage." This is also one of the attractions of Eureka Springs.

Moore's Cave, six miles northeast of Berryville, in the mountains of Indian Creek, near the road to Springfield, Mo., known as the Wilderness route, was discovered by John Moore and his sons while prospecting for lead, in 1845. The floor of the first chamber is reached after descending 200 feet from the outside elevation, the entrance being extremely difficult. From this room a number of passages radiate, one of which leads to the shore of a subterranean lake, and another to an immense basin-like depression. Stalactites are numerous. A party of gentlemen from the Hale barrens made the first extensive exploration September 4, 1845.

The Ocean Cave is situated six miles southeast of Eureka Springs. There is a constant current of cold air from the entrance. The interior, so far as known, consists of a subterranean lake, well stocked with fish.

A cavern of considerable extent was discovered by John Hinkle in 1878, on Keel's Creek, a mile east of William's saw-mill. An entrance is effected through an opening 4x2 by feet, and after a gradual descent of fifty feet a passage 100 yards long is entered, leading to an immense chamber filled with great pillars, arches and columns. Two wide passages, leading in opposite directions, terminate abruptly 100 yards away. The main passage continues 200 yards, opening into a small circular room. The exploration of this cave is exceedingly difficult.

Of other caverns of greater or lesser importance the Massman Cave, on Leatherwood Creek, has received some attention. Indian Cave, on the head-waters of Osage, is the only cavern of importance in that part of the county. Several skeletons, and specimens of Indian pottery, have been found in a great heap of ashes in a large apartment, a short distance from the entrance.

Mineral Development.—As early as 1834 one Col. Huff, a noted counterfeiter, extracted silver ore from Childer's Mountain, near Varmint Lick, smelted it, and carried on a vigorous business in the manufacture of spurious currency. The Jackson Mines, on King's River, and the Clebin Mines have yielded 315 ounces of silver to the ton of ore. At Trigger Hill, in the western part of the county, there is a locality known as the Indian Graves, form a number of small mounds resembling graves. It has been ascertained, however, that no burials ever occurred here, and that the earth was probably removed in prospecting for minerals. In 1850-51 Abraham Belcher established a bloomery and forge on King's River, for the smelting and forging of iron. The ore was obtained in that vicinity. Belcher died in 1853, and his establishment was discontinued soon thereafter.

Timber.—There are 110 varieties of trees in Carroll County. The oak is largely represented, the principal species being the Spanish, water, black, red, burr, pine, post and white oak. The black-jack, resembling the oak in some respects, is of a scrubby nature, and is found everywhere throughout the county. The ash, elm, cherry, walnut, box-elder, sycamore, hickory, birch, maple and linn are well distributed. Pine is found in the western part of the county. Fruits, particularly apples and peaches, are here cultivated under climatic conditions more favorable.

SETTLEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT.

Indian Occupation.—At the time when this county was first visited by settlers the Indian population was sparse. There was an Indian village at the site of Bellefonte, Boone County; the Delawares had a number of tepees on Long Creek, in Carroll County, and their principal town was on the James River, in Stone County, Mo. The Cherokees, from Georgia, began their migration about 1832, and the bands were wont to proceed leisurely, and pause for awhile upon the borders of their western home. Several bands, numbering 300 or more, are mentioned by early settlers. They had with them large herds of cattle, horses, etc., and lived comfortably in their camps, one of which, in July, 1833, was situated north of Berryville several miles. A visitor to this camp says they were very hospitable; he was almost obliged to eat with them. "May be sometime I get hungry and eat with you," was the logic of his host. There were no resident Indians in this locality after 1835. Hunting parties from the "Nation" returned frequently during the winters until game became too scarce, but their relations with the white settlers were always friendly. No outrages by either party are known to have been perpetrated within the limits of the county.

Emigration to that part of Arkansas within the bend of White River, and about its head-waters, followed two distinct routes, the courses of which are best indicated by reference to previous settlements in the State, which naturally followed the valleys of the Arkansas and White Rivers. Fort Smith was the terminus of a military road, which naturally invited settlement in that direction; but it was also upon the western boundary of the State, and emigrants thither turned to the north for permanent locations. The extreme northwestern part of the State was also accessible from St. Louis by a direct road; and thus it happened that many of the first settlers of Carroll County came thither after a temporary sojourn in Madison or Washington.

Batesville was for a long time the limit of emigration up the White River valley. The level country to the east seems to have been considered preferable to the mountainous region at its source, which received but little attention except from the hunter and trapper. It was by this route that the first white inhabitants of what is now Carroll County entered its borders.

Early Settlers.—William Sneed and his son, Charles Sneed, originally from Kentucky, removed from White River, near the mouth of Bear Creek, to Osage Township, in the spring of 1830. They located a claim embracing several thousand acres of the best land on Osage River. Here they had planted several acres of corn the previous spring, and were thus provided with food. They cut what was known as the old Dubuque road from Dubuque Landing, on White River, near Lead Hill; it passed through Carrollton, and thence followed an Indian trail southeast. John Boyd, one of the teamsters, is commonly given the honor of having driven the first team into Carroll County.

Louis Russell went from North Carolina to Illinois, and thence to Arkansas; he is said to have settled on Yocum Creek, Section 20, Township 20, Range 23, in the present township of Hickory, in 1822. If such is the case, he must have been the earliest settler in the county. He was of English and Cherokee descent. In 1836 he made a journey on horseback to his former home in Illinois. He was nineteen days returning, and brought with him as many apple trees as he could carry. Notwithstanding the length of time they were out of the ground, many of the trees grew, and sprouts from their roots are still bearing. This seems to have been the first effort at orchard planting. Russell assisted in the building of Fort Smith. He died in this county in 1869.

David Williams, the first white inhabitant of the central part of the county, and therefore of its western and northern portions, came from Tennessee about 1831. He lived on Osage, about a mile and a half from Berryville, in a pole cabin, with his wife and three sons. They cleared several acres of land, but never made any permanent improvements. One of the sons married a Cherokee woman. Williams removed to Buffalo Valley in 1838. His hunting grounds had become too narrow.

John, Alexander and Bruce Boyd, and Elijah Hulsey, brother-in-law to the two last named, removed from Crowley's Ridge, near Helena, Ark., in 1832, and settled on Long Creek below Carrollton. There were then living in the vicinity of Carrollton, Martin Standridge, his father, "Shot-gun" Jerry Meeks and his brother, "Blue" Jacob Meeks, "Black" Squire Blevins, Richard Blevins, Sam Blevins, and others of Cherokee and English descent, whose society was not appreciated by their neighbors, as subsequent developments will show. They were from Georgia, and had not been living in this country many years prior to 1832. George Stone, from Yellville, then known as Shawneetown, joined this community about the same time.

Robert Dawson came to Arkansas in 1832, having previously resided in Missouri and Tennessee. He owned four farms on Osage, in Prairie Township, upon one of which he lived forty-nine years, dying in 1886.

William Tabor, of Macoupin County, Ill., became a resident on Dry Creek, in Hickory Township, in 1834. He made the journey out in six weeks with three yoke of oxen. Jonathan Norris was also an early settler in that township.

January 3, 1833, John Baker, with his sons, Aaron and Jonathan, arrived at the present residence of Aaron Baker, in Prairie Township, having left their former home, four miles from Marble Hill, on Crooked Creek, in Cape Girardeau, now Bollinger County, Mo., October 11, 1832. They passed through Springfield and Fayetteville, and crossed King's River on New Year's day. John Baker died in Osage Valley in 1862. Aaron Baker, who had then a wife and four children, is still living, the oldest resident of Carroll County.

In the spring of 1833 Jesse White and William Walker, brothers-in-law, removed from Washington County. The former settled at the mouth of Osage, the latter on King's River, near the crossing of the upper road to Eureka. They lived alternately in Washington County four years. Wesley Walker, John Walker, and several others of the name, came from Tennessee somewhat later.

Thomas Hall built the fourth house in Prairie Township, in 1835. He had previously lived in Wilkes County, N. C., and near Chattanooga, Tenn., from whence he removed to War Eagle, Madison County.

John Yocum, from whom Yocum Creek derives its name, settled near Green Forest about 1833. He built a mill there at an early period in the history of the county.

Jesse S. O'Niell, the first constable of Hickory Township, was an early settler on Yocum Creek.

William Wood, a native of Kentucky, removed to Morgan County, Ill., about 1834, and thence to the vicinity of Berryville, where he took up land yet owned by his descendants.

Jacob A. Meek came from Henry County, Tenn., about 1837, and settled on Dry Creek. He was a member of the Methodist Church. His father, Jeremiah, and brothers, William, Joseph and Samuel, followed him.

The Chaney family, William Chaney, Sr., Joseph Chaney and William H. Wilson, his brother-in-law, settled on Osage, in Liberty Township, in 1834. They were from Overton County, Tenn.

George Suggs, Isaiah Watkins and Britain Smith settled on Dry Fork prior to 1837. They were the pioneers of Dry Fork Township.

John Musick, from Huntsville, removed to Osage prior to 1840, taking with him 200 cattle, seventy-five horses, and a large flock of sheep. This was the first introduction of sheep.

Keel Williams, from whom Keel's Creek is named, was a brother to David Williams, previously mentioned. Daniel Bromley, of Miller County, Mo., bought his land, and was among the first prominent settlers in that part of the county.

Charles Whiteley, a Baptist preacher, from Madison County, settled in the locality that bears his name, Whiteley's Prairie, in 1837 or 1838. He was a man of public spirit, fair ability as a speaker, and character worthy of his calling. He was especially active in his support of free schools. He left the county for Texas at the opening of the Civil War.

Stephen Holmesley, of Cape Girardeau County, Mo., removed to Hindsville, Washington Co., Ark., and thence to Yocum Creek, upon which he built one of the first mills. His wife was a daughter to Samuel Vaughn, from whom the celebrated Vaughn's Valley, Madison County, is named.

William and Joel Plumlee, who emigrated from Tennessee about 1836, were the first settlers upon the site of Berryville.

Absalom Cornelius, a Missourian, settled on Dry Creek, on the farm now owned by Henry Reeves. He was among the first settlers there.

Jeremiah Hale, from whom the Hale barrens are named, located there in 1845. Wilson Butler was one of his first neighbors.

James Fancher, Thomas Sisco and James M. Kenner were the earliest settlers upon the head-waters of Osage.

Thomson Ramsay, of Rule Postoffice, and Samuel Meek, of Prairie Township, have been residents of the county since 1835. Hon. Bradley Bunch came in 1838. William Scott, an early settler in the western part of the county, died in 1887, at the age of one hundred and nine. This enumeration might be multiplied indefinitely, but it is believed that the earliest of the first inhabitants of the county have been mentioned.

Early Mills.—Several mills came into existence in the county at an early date, and it is difficult to decide the question of priority. The first in the western part was a steel mill, turned by hand, brought by John Baker. People from this section had previously been obliged to go to mill thirty miles away, on War Eagle Creek. William Wood built a small water mill with the assistance of his neighbors in 1837–38. It was on Osage, and the land is now owned by Richard Walker. Henry Klinginbeard owned a small corn mill a short distance farther down the Osage, in 1838. The first mill on Yocum Creek was built by John Yocum about 1835. It was within a mile of Green Forest. It was a log building about 14x16 feet, and stood on four posts, one of which is yet to be seen. The dam was made of logs and brush, and was constantly being repaired. It was renewed after every freshet. The water was conducted by a chute over a tub wheel, communicating by shafting with the single “runner.” The bed stone was stationary. This mill had a capacity of four bushels a day. Lassiter & Crawford built a mill on a branch of Osage several years later, and Thomas H. Clarke built another on the Osage River farther up about the same time. Both of these mills were in Liberty Township. John Boyd built a mill on Long Creek about 1836, and another was built by Malachi Reeves on the same stream, near Denver Post-office, at an equally early date. One Patton built the first mill on Dry Fork, and two or three others followed it in close succession. John Denny built the first mill on King’s River so far as known. Steam mills have come into existence since the war, during which nearly all the old water mills were burned. A Mr. James built the first saw-mill in 1843 on Dry Fork, and Joel Blair built another on the same stream in 1844. B. H. Hobbs & Co. erected the first steam saw-mill nine miles northwest of Berryville in 1857.

Roads.—The opening of the old Dubuque road has been mentioned. The road from Huntsville via Rockhouse Creek, through Trigger Gap, crossing Carroll County diagonally from southwest to northeast, was laid out in 1837 by Thomas Hall, under the direction of the court. A road from Carrollton through Green Forest to Springfield, Mo., and a military road from Fayetteville through Carrollton to Jacksonport, twenty-five miles above Batesville, on the White River, was laid out, or at least opened for travel, prior to 1836.

Tanneries.—Tanning was at first effected by the most simple processes. The pelts were rubbed with ashes or lime, stretched and dried. Charles B. Whiteley was one of the first men in the county who made tanning a business. E. Roper, who lived upon land now owned by Prof. A. B. Johnson, was probably the first to introduce tanning by vats. At first these consisted only of log troughs, in which the hides were placed. Roper's tannery was continued five or six years.

Stores.—At the time when the first settlement of the county was in progress the nearest trading points on the east were on White River, fifty mile away; and on the west, Fort Smith and Fayetteville, an equal distance. Powder and lead were the principal commodities of which the frontier population stood in need. Business was done principally by barter. The frontiersman exchanged pelts and honey for ammunition and other supplies. The first stores in the county were at Carrollton, and Henderson Lafferty was probably the first store-keeper. Merchandising was profitable in those days.

Regulators.—A company of regulators was organized by the citizens of Carrollton and vicinity in the spring of 1839, with Thomas A. Clarke as captain. It numbered twenty or thirty members. The object was to suppress stealing and punish the miscreants, a community of half-breed Cherokees. Several were whipped and compelled to leave the county. Two or three confessed, promised reformation, and were permitted to stay. After accomplishing the object of its organization the company disbanded.

Early Land Entries.—Four land offices were established in the Territory of Arkansas in 1832, that for the northwestern district being located at Fayetteville, and here the first entries for Carroll County were made. The office was subsequently removed to Clarksville and Huntsville, and in 1870 was established at Harrison. The following is a list of persons who entered land prior to 1850, and between 1850 and 1855, inclusive; where more than one entry was made by the same individual, the first in order of time is given:

Township 17, Range 22: 1849: Thomas Cisco, 80.16 acres, Section 5; 1840, James Fancher, 118.26 acres, Section 6.

Township 18, Range 22: 1840, John Blevins, 160.62 acres, Section 4; 1840, John Roberts, 80 acres, Section 4; 1841, John Blevins, 79 acres, Section 5; 1841, M. Clements, 40 acres, Section 5; 1842, Hugh L. Denton, 80 acres, Section 7; 1842, Tilford Denton, 40 acres, Section 7; 1840, Charles Sneed, 80 acres, Section 9; 1841, Samuel Sneed, 40 acres, Section 9; 1840, James Fancher, 80 acres, Section 31.

Township 19, Range 22: 1847, John F. King, 40 acres, Section 6; 1844, Jeremiah Meek, 35 acres, Section 6; 1847, B. H. Berry, 122 acres, Section 6; 1843, Bruce Boyd, 40 acres, Section 15; 1840, Squire Blevins, Jr., 120 acres, Section 33; 1839, Richard Blevins, 80 acres, Section 33; 1839, Martin Standridge, 91 acres, Section 33; 1843, James Wilson, 160 acres, Section 34; 1848, William Poynor, 38 acres, Section 34.

Township 20, Range 22: 1849, B. H. Berry, 40 acres, Section 19; 1849, James Myers, 40 acres, Section 19.

Township 18, Range 23: 1844, Thomas Rains, 80 acres, Section 5; 1843, John Potts, 40 acres, Section 4; 1843, Simeon Moore, 40 acres, Section 5; 1849, Joseph L. Dickson, 40 acres, Section 9; 1846, Thomas H. Clarke, 80 acres, Section 9; 1847, Isaac B. Cadill, 40 acres, Section 9; 1849, Joseph L. Dickson, 80 acres, Section 15; 1849, William E. Armstrong, 40 acres, Section 22; 1847, Martin Holiford, 40 acres, Section 22; 1849, Smith S. Matlock, 40 acres, Section 24; 1844, Charles Sneed, 47 acres, Section 25; 1846, Thomas B. Fancher, 40 acres, Section 25; 1846, Peter Sneed, 40 acres, Section 26; 1844, James C. Chaney, 40 acres, Section 20; 1845, Alexander F. Miller, 40 acres, Section 27; 1844, Keziah Sneed, 40 acres, Section 36.

Township 20, Range 23: 1849, Charles G. O'Neill, 40 acres, Section 9; 1845, John Hayhurst, 80 acres, Section 29.

Township 17, Range 24: 1845, Hazael A. Sugg, 79 acres, Section 1; 1844, Nancy Jackson, 40 acres, Section 10; 1846, Mary Jackson, 40 acres, Section 10; 1845, John Jackson, — acres, Section 11; 1845, Cooper Wilmoth, 40 acres, Section 11; 1845, Jesse Seitz, 40 acres, Section 11; 1845, George Brown Sugg, 40 acres, Section 11; 1846, John C. Rewes, 40 acres, Section 12.

Township 19, Range 24: 1848, Moses Garrett, 40 acres, Section 10; 1847, John F. King, 40 acres, Section 25.

Township 20, Range 24: 1847, Nealy Butler, 43 acres, Section 3; 1847, John Standlee, 43 acres, Section 4; 1848, Abram Standlee, 40 acres, Section 5; 1848, Stephen Holmesley, 160 acres, Section 18; 1847, John C. Ernest, 130 acres, Section 18; 1848, William Plumlee, 60 acres, Section 29; 1847, William Wood, 40 acres, Section 31.

Township 21, Range 24: 1847, Lorenzo D. High, 40 acres, Section 33.

Township 19, Range 25: 1847, James Simmons, 40 acres, Section 1.

Township 20, Range 25: 1848, Jonathan Baker, 24 acres, Section 2; 1841, Isaac Boren, 40 acres, Section 9; 1848, John C. Ernest, 20 acres, Section 13; 1848, Seneca Deadmon, 80 acres, Section 13; 1848, William M. Jones, 40 acres, Section 14; 1841, William K. Reid, 40 acres, Section 14; 1848, Moses Garrett, — acres, Section 21; 1841, Charles B. Whitely, 80 acres, Section 24; 1848, Mary B. Brown, 15 acres, Section 25; 1848, William P. Jones, 50 acres, Section 25; 1845, William Baker, 40 acres, Section 26; 1841, John Baker, 40 acres, Section 27; 1849, Thomas Hall, 40 acres, Section 27; 1848, John Denny, 40 acres, Section 28; 1849, Daniel Brumley, 40 acres, Section 29; 1841, John Musick, 50 acres, Section 35; 1846, William G. Musick, 40 acres, Section 35.

Township 21, Range 25: 1847, Garrett A. Justice, 20 acres, Section 27.

Entries between 1850 and 1855, inclusive.—Township 17, Range 22: 1853, A. H. Wilson, 40 acres, Section 4.

Township 18, Range 22: 1854, T. McMilon, 79 acres, Section 6; 1851, A. C. Oliver, 40 acres, Section 5; 1854, William S. Payne, 40 acres, Section 5; 1851, J. S. Dickson, 80 acres, Section 5; 1852, John G. Maples, 40 acres, Section 6; 1853, William M. Rains, 40 acres, Section 6; 1855, Henry Barr, 40 acres, Section 9; 1853, S. M. Population.—The population of Carroll County in 1840 was 2,844; in 1850, 4,614; in 1860, 9,383; in 1870, 5,780; in 1880, 13,337. The apparent decrease in the decade ending 1870 is explained by the fact that Boone County was formed in 1869. The population by townships, in 1870 and 1880, was as follows:

Township.	1880.	1870.	Township.	1880.	1870.
Carrollton.....	1,148	808	Liberty.....	295	253
Cedar.....	965	511	Long Creek.....	574	452

The White population in 1860 was 9,053; in 1870, 5,743; in 1880, 13,272. The colored population in 1860 was 330; in 1870, 37; in 1880, 60. There were five Indians in the county in 1880. The native population in 1870 was 5,771; in 1880, 13,211, of whom 5,882 were born in the State, 1,583 in Tennessee, 207 in Alabama, 156 in Georgia, 102 in Mississippi, 2,121 in Missouri, 211 in North Carolina, 542 in Kentucky, 52 in South Carolina, 187 in Virginia. The foreign born population was 9 in 1870 and 126 in 1880. Of the latter number, 24 were born in British America, 19 in England and Wales, 27 in Ireland, 6 in Scotland, 26 in the German Empire, 6 in France, 3 in Scandinavia, 3 in Switzerland. The male and female population in 1880 was 6,976 and 6,358, respectively. There were 2,219 males and 2,114 females between the ages of five and seventeen, inclusive (the school age). The number of males between the ages of eighteen and forty-four was 2,671 (subject to military service). The number of males above twenty-one was 3,229.

Statistics.—1880, horses, 2,814; mules and asses, 817; working oxen, 120; milch cows, 2,898; other cattle, 4,182; sheep, 6,223; swine, 23,547; wool, 13,655 pounds; butter, 73,888 pounds; corn, 22,979 acres, 582,734 bushels; wheat, 7,343 acres, 51,992 bushels; oats, 4,626 acres, 64,451 bushels; rye, 582 acres, 4,820 bushels; cotton, 982 acres, 502 bales; tobacco, 28 acres, 16,540 pounds; sorghum, 20,084 gallons. In February, 1883, the county assessor returned 3,302 horses, valued at $151,987; 8,562 cattle, valued at $105,112; 6,339 sheep, valued at $8,389; 19,032 swine, valued at $26,838; 1,038 mules and asses, valued at $62,712. The number of farms in 1880 was 1,375; total number of acres, 140,245; improved acreage, 45,707; under cultivation, 43,903 acres; meadows, pastures, etc., 1,804; unimproved, 94,538 acres; woodland and forest, 69,522 acres; unimproved, mountain and prairie, not wooded, 25,016 acres. Value of farms, including land, fences and buildings, $515,647; value of farming implements and machinery, $49,540; value of live stock on farms, $270,484; estimated value of all farm productions, 1879, $255,816. The aggregate value of real estate in the county in 1880 was $326,875; personal property, $335,631; total, $662,506. In 1883, real estate, $633,323; personal property, $722,482; total, $1,354,805. The following table shows the valuation of lands by congressional townships for the year 1888 (to which should be added ninety-eight town lots in Carrollton, seventy-six in Berryville, and fifty-six in Green Forest, valued respectively at $6,840, $19,365 and $3,438; total, $29,643):

THE MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MASSACRE.

In the spring of 1857 an emigrant train was organized in Northwestern Arkansas, and principally in Carroll County, by Capt. Alexander Fancher, and in due time set out for the journey across the plains and the Rocky Mountains to California. Capt. Fancher was a native of Tennessee; he married in Cumberland County, Ill., and settled on Osage. He had made two overland journeys to California, and was well qualified to conduct them thither. His train consisted of about forty wagons, several carriages in which some of the ladies rode, nearly a 1,000 head of cattle, several hundred horses, including a stallion valued at $2,000, and was said to have been the finest that crossed the plains in 1857. There were forty or fifty men. The entire company were in comfortable circumstances; they had with them valuables and money which, with the property referred to, has been estimated at $70,000.

Progress of the Train.—The train left Arkansas in the spring of 1857, passed through Kansas and Colorado by the accustomed route, and reached Salt Lake City in August. From here "the southern route," through Provo, Nephi, Fillmore and Cedar City, was taken, and at the last named point the party reached the Spanish trail, their road to Southern California. They had not traversed the favored land of the Saints many days before it became apparent that they were regarded with suspicion and aversion. It was in vain that supplies of food and forage were negotiated for; they were "friendless as in a voiceless desert." The Federal power was openly defied in Utah, and armed troops were on the march toward its borders. Brigham Young openly declared that his "protection" would be withdrawn from emigrants passing through the Territory, and, under a combination of the most unfavorable circumstances, Capt. Fancher and his party slowly approached the melancholy termination of their journey. They crossed the Great Basin; they climbed up the southern rim, and on this border of Mormonism they stopped for a few days, to let their cattle revel in the rank, coarse mountain grass, before they went on the "Ninety Mile Desert."

The location of the Mountain Meadows, their stopping place, is in the southwestern corner of Utah, in the present county of Washington, about eight miles south of the village of Pinto. The place is a pass, sometimes called a valley, about five miles in length and one in width, but running to a rather narrow point at the southwest end. At about its center, lengthwise, is the "divide" between the basin and the Pacific slope, the ascents being very gradual, and at each end is a large spring. At the eastern spring was the house and corral of Jacob Hamlin, Mormon sub-agent for the Pah Utes, who, with some assistance, all Mormons, was pasturing cattle on the meadows. The train passed his place on the 3d of September, and encamped at the western spring on the 4th. This spring, which is a large one, is in the southern end of the narrow part. The bank rises from it to a height of about eight feet, and from its top there reaches a level stretch of some 200 yards, upon which the emigrants encamped.

The First Attack occurred on Monday morning, September 7, 1857, while the party were at breakfast. A volley was fired from the gully through which the waters of the spring meander, killing seven and wounding sixteen. A momentary confusion ensued; but the coolness of Capt. Fancher avoided a panic, and the women and children were soon placed within the shelter of the corralled wagons, while the men returned a vigorous fire. The attacking party drew off, and the emigrants improved the opportunity by chaining their wagons, wheel to wheel, and throwing up a breastwork. Their cattle had been driven away, and the frequent appearance of savages caused continual apprehension. One Aden and another man were accordingly dispatched to Cedar City for assistance, on Wednesday night. They were attacked by whites from that place at Richard's Spring; Aden was killed, but his companion returned to camp, and for the first time the truth dawned upon their minds—the Indians were abetted and instigated by the Mormons. A written statement was prepared, imploring assistance from good people generally, and intrusted to three of their best scouts, who set out for California. They were overtaken at the Santa Clara Mountains by an Indian party under Ira Hatch, and all three suffered death.

The Massacre.—The fifty-four white men and about 200 Indians under John D. Lee, were convinced that a direct assault would not be successful. A meeting of the Mormons in the meadows, under Maj. John Higbee, was held; the orders of President Haight, of Cedar City, directing that the entire party should be exterminated, was read; and after prayer (?) Higbee announced in confident tones, that he had the evidence of divine approval. The "higher law," in all its naked enormity, was to be executed by treachery.

On the morning of Friday, September 11, 1857, John D. Lee and William Bateman advanced toward the emigrants with a white flag, and were met by one of the party. Lee explained that the Indians were much excited because of certain acts of violence committed by the party, and that the only way of pacifying them was a surrender to the Mormon militia. They agreed to do so. Their arms were placed in wagons brought by Lee, with the small children; the women and older children followed on foot; the men, each at the side of a Mormon, brought up the rear. The wagons had just passed over the divide toward the eastern spring, the women were a quarter of a mile behind, and the men an equal distance behind them, in the ravine. Suddenly from among the ambushed Indians the form of Higbee appeared on the divide; he motioned with his arms, and at once the work of death began. Each militiaman wheeled and shot his man. The rifle of John D. Lee cracked, and a wounded woman in the forward wagon fell from the seat. The Indians rushed upon the women. Two young girls escaped some distance, but were pursued by Lee and an Indian chief. There is reason to think they begged for more than life.

Burial.—October 2, 1857, the scene of the massacre was visited by eleven Mormons, secretly escaping from Utah. They mention two piles of bodies, one composed of women and children, the other of men. The bodies were entirely nude; all were more or less torn by wolves except one, that of a woman, which lay apart from the rest, and showed no signs of decay. In the spring of 1859 Capt. R. P. Campbell, with two companies of infantry and one of dragoons, passed through the meadows and buried the remains of twenty-six of the victims. May 20, 1859, Maj. James Henry Carlton, United States Army, buried the disjointed bones of thirty-four skeletons in a grave on the northern side of the ditch. A rude monument, conical in form, and fifty feet in circumference at the base and twelve feet high, was erected over this grave. This was surmounted by a red-cedar cross, upon the transverse part of which was carved this inscription:

VENGEANCE IS MINE: I WILL REPAY, SAITH THE LORD.

A rude slab of granite, leaning against the northern base of the monument, bore these words:

HERE

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN WERE MASSACRED IN COLD BLOOD,
IN SEPT., 1857.
THEY WERE FROM ARKANSAS.

The Entire Number Killed was 121, 10 at the camp, 107 at the massacre, young Aden and the three scouts.

The Property, by direction of Brigham Young, was disposed of by Lee. A portion was given to the Indians; the money was kept by Lee and Klingensmith; the bedding and clothing were deposited in the tithing house at Cedar City, and was commonly referred to as "property taken at the siege of Sevastopol." The wagons, stock, etc., were disposed of at the tithing house, and the proceeds turned over to the Mormon treasury.

The Survivors.—The circumstances of the massacre were known at Los Angeles, Cal., the following month, and on the last day of the year 1857 William C. Mitchell, ex-clerk of Carroll County, and then a member of the State senate, apprised a friend of the death of his son and brother-in-law, with their families, numbering twenty-four persons; the Legislature of Arkansas took immediate action, as did also the National Congress. Dr. Jacob Forney, superintendent of Utah, learned the whereabouts of the surviving children June 22, 1858; they had been distributed among Mormon families of the vicinity. June 29, 1859, fifteen of them were placed in charge of Maj. Whiting, United States Army, who reached Fort Leavenworth August 25, 1859.

Here they were taken in charge by William C. Mitchell, special agent of the Government, and reached Carrollton September 16, 1859. Two other children, John C. Miller and M. Tackett, were detained in Utah as witnesses. In January, 1860, they were taken to Washington by Dr. Forney, and from there to Carrollton by Maj. John Henry, of Van Buren. The following is a list of the names, ages and residences of the children referred to:

Rebecca Dunlap, 9, Louisa Dunlap, 7, Sarah Dunlap, 4.	{ Females; daughters of Jesse Dunlap, deceased, of Carroll County, Ark.
Prudence Angeline Dunlap, 7, Georgiana Dunlap, 4.	{ Females; daughters of L. D. Dunlap, deceased, of Marion County, Ark.
Elizabeth Baker, 8, Sarah A. Baker, 6, William B. Baker, 4.	{ Heirs of G. W. Baker, deceased, of Car- roll County, Ark.
C. C. Fancher, 9, Tryphena Fancher, 5.	{ Heirs of Alexander Fancher, deceased, of Carroll County.
John C. Miller, 9, Mary Miller, 7, Joseph Miller, 4.	{ Heirs of Joseph M. Miller, deceased, of Crawford County, Ark.
M. Tackett, William Tackett.	{ Heirs of Pleasant Tackett, deceased, of Carroll County, Ark.
F. M. Jones, 4, Sophronia Jones, 7.	{ Heirs of J. M. Jones, deceased, of Ma- rion County, Ark.

But one of this number, Tryphena Fancher, the wife of J. C. Wilson, of Rule, is at present a resident of Carroll County.

John D. Lee was tried and convicted twenty years after the commission of his crime; he was given his choice of being hung, shot or beheaded. He preferred to be shot, and was accordingly executed at Mountain Meadows on March 23, 1877.

ORGANIZATION.

County Formation.—November 1, 1833, by act of the Territorial Legislature, Carroll County was erected. The act reads as follows: "All that portion of the county of Izard west of a line commencing at a point on the State line of Missouri, where the range line between Ranges 16 and 17 west strikes the same, running south with said line twelve miles; thence west six miles to the range line between seventeen and eighteen; thence south with said line to the dividing ridge between Crooked Creek and the Buffalo Fork, thence a direct course to the ridge dividing the waters of the Buffalo Fork and Richland Creek; thence with said ridge to the ridge dividing the waters of the Arkansas and White Rivers; thence west with said ridge to Range 25 west; thence north with said line to the ridge dividing the waters of War Eagle and King's River; thence down said ridge to the post road from Iazard court-house, to Washington court-house; thence on a north course to the Missouri line, so as to include all the waters of King's River; thence east with said line to the place of beginning, shall be constituted and erected into a new county, to be called and known by the name of Carroll County." The name was conferred in honor of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, a distinguished Marylander, or possibly in compliment to Gov. William Carroll, of Tennessee. The original territory was reduced in 1836, 1842 and 1869, upon the formation, respectively, of Madison, Newton and Boone. In 1869, in order that Carroll might not be reduced below the constitutional area of 600 square miles, the northern portion of Madison was annexed. With the exception of unimportant changes in the southwestern boundary, the territorial limits have since remained undisturbed.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The first election for county officers, held in 1834, resulted in the choice of George Campbell as judge, John Bush as clerk, Thomas H. Clark as sheriff, Abraham Shelly as coroner and William Noonan as surveyor. Their successors in order have been as follows:

Sheriffs.—T. H. Clark, 1834–36 (resigned in 1835, succeeded by N. Rudd); Charles Sneed, 1836–42; A. Thomas, 1842–44; J. L. Wilburn, 1844–52; A. C. Oliver, 1852–56; J. C. Shipman, 1856–58; R. C. Campbell, 1858–60; David Smith, 1860; R. C. Campbell, 1860–62; John Harper, 1862–64; A. S. McKennon, 1864–66; N. B. Crump, 1866–68; J. J. Grim, 1868–72; S. L. Hayhurst, 1872–76; A. C. Oliver, 1876–78; T. C. Freeman, 1878–84; Joel Plumlee, 1884–86; H. S. Shahan, 1886.

Clerks.—John Bush, 1834–36; W. C. Mitchell, 1836–40

(the office was filled part of the year 1836 by G. F. Stallings); J. A. Hicks, 1840-46; Tilford Denton, 1846-48; John W. Peel, 1848-54; George C. Gordon, 1854-58; Samuel W. Peel, 1858-64; George J. Crump, 1864-68; W. W. Davis, 1868-72; J. P. Fancher, 1872-76; J. C. Hanna, 1876-78; J. P. Fancher, 1878-80; J. E. Jones, 1880-84; H. H. Moose, 1884-87; Len Nunnally, 1887.

Treasurers.—A. M. Wilson, 1836-38; William Beller, 1838-42; H. L. Denton, 1842-44; E. Ford, 1844-46 (resigned, unexpired term filled by Thomas Callen); Thomas Callen, 1846-48 (deceased before the expiration of his term; W. E. Armstrong appointed); John Dunlap, 1848-50; A. Hulsey, 1850-54; J. Albright, 1854-56; Jeremiah Hale, 1856-60; J. M. Haggett, 1860-62; J. F. Seaman, 1862-64; J. S. Stanley, 1864-66; Tilford Denton, 1866-68; J. H. Hale, 1868-72; A. M. Bradley, 1872-74; James Walker, 1874-76; J. G. Walker, 1876-78; S. S. Meek, 1878-80; W. H. Woods, 1880-84 (failed to give bond, H. D. Field elected February 26, 1884); H. D. Field, 1884.

Coroners.—Abraham Shelly, 1834-36; M. L. Hawkins, 1836-42 (Burts was coroner from 1836-38); Thomas Moreland, 1842-44; John T. Spears, 1844-46; A. S. Dooly, 1846-48; Jesse McKelay, 1848-50; John Bunch, 1850-52; Gideon Weaver, 1852-54; W. M. Raines, 1854-56; Jacob Riddle, 1856-58; N. P. Naples, 1858-60; Daniel Grimlin, 1860-62; W. W. Bailey, 1864-66; J. M. Pittman, 1866-68; G. D. Bull, 1868-72; William Wood, 1872-74; O. P. Crockett, 1874-78; E. Thomas, 1878-80; E. Winfield, 1880-82; C. T. Dodson, 1882-84; J. M. Mitchell, 1884-86; C. Smith, 1886.

Surveyors.—William Nooner, 1834-36; Elijah Tabor, 1836-38; John McMillan, 1838-42; T. B. Callen, 1846-48; A. V. Callen, 1848-50; Price Byrne, 1852-58; J. Bartlett, 1858-62; Henry McMillan, 1864-68; Cyrus Maxwell, 1868-72; Thomas Bunch, 1872-76; T. S. Bunch, 1876-78; J. M. Bunch, 1878-82; W. R. Phillips, 1882-86; J. W. Kenner, 1886.

Assessors.—R. L. Evans, 1868-72; H. S. Shahan, 1872-74; R. S. Nance, 1874-78; N. C. Charles, 1878-80; T. G. Norris, 1880-82; N. C. Charles, 1882-84; W. J. Callen, 1884.

The election of Thomas as sheriff in 1842 was annulled by the county court, which declared Charles Sneed sheriff. This ruling was revoked by the governor, who commissioned Thomas.

State Senators.—C. R. Saunders, 1836–40; W. C. Mitchell, 1840–54; John McCoy, 1854–56; W. W. Watkins, 1856–62; Bradley Bunch, 1862–64; J. McCoy, 1864–66; W. W. Watkins, 1866–68; M. L. Stephenson, 1868–70; William Dugger, 1870–74; Bradley Bunch, 1874–78; W. W. Watkins, 1878–82; R. B. Weaver, 1882–86; ——— Crandall, 1886.

Representatives.—L. B. Tully, W. D. Reagan, 1836–38; T. H. Clarke, F. G. Willbourn, 1838–40; B. Gaither, 1840–42; G. W. Bains, J. Fancher, 1842–44; G. E. Birnie, T. H. Clarke, 1844–46; S. S. Matlock, J. W. Turman, 1846–48; J. H. Crow, 1848–50; B. W. Ayers, Tilford Denton, 1850–52; John H. Brittain, Tilford Denton, 1852–54; Bradley Bunch, John Haggin, 1854–56; B. W. Ayers, Bradley Bunch, 1856–58; Bradley Bunch, G. C. Gordon, 1858–60; Bradley Bunch, J. Childers, 1860–62; I. R. Holt, A. A. Baker, 1862–64; J. W. Plumlee, J. F. Seaman, 1864–66; Bradley Bunch, J. H. Berry, 1866–68; Benjamin Vaughan, J. A. Fitzwater, J. T. Hoffer, P. A. Williams, 1868–70; E. P. Watson, G. J. Crump, F. J. Eubanks, J. S. O'Neal, 1870–72; W. L. Chapman, Joseph Wright, J. M. Foster, J. F. Cunningham, 1872–74; D. G. Hart, J. M. Foster, 1874; H. H. Moore, 1874–76; W. S. Poynor, 1876–78; J. G. Morris, 1878–80; E. J. Black, 1880–82; B. W. Gowdelock, 1882–84; J. P. Fancher, 1884–86; W. R. Phillips, 1886.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The First Court-house of Carroll County was a log building about twenty feet square, two stories high. The purchase of the site and the disposition of lots in the town of Carrollton was entrusted to three commissioners, Henry Keys, John S. Blair and Barnett Cheatham, presumably appointed by the county court, and given charge over all matters pertaining to the erection of county buildings. Owing to the destruction of the county records, there is no certain information as to the time when this was done; but it is known that the court-house was intended to serve a temporary purpose only, and was built south of the center of the public square in Carrollton, in order not to interfere with the erection of its successor. There was a substantial stone chimney at the east end, built after the completion of the remainder of the building. There were two entrances to the lower floor, on the north and south sides, respectively. This floor was provided with benches, and was occupied during the sessions of the court. There was an inside stairway to the upper floor, which does not appear to have been used for any particular purpose. The roof was made of heavy hoop-sawed boards. The chimney was built in 1837, and the building proper the year previous, probably. The office of the clerk was usually in one of the stores at Carrollton, in which he officiated in a similar capacity.

The Second Court-house was built in 1844-45, at a cost of $3,000. It was a brick building about 30x40 feet in dimensions, two stories high, and stood in the center of the square at Carrollton. The lower floor was entered by doors on the north and south, and was used as a court-room. The upper floor was reached by an interior stairway; it was partitioned into three rooms, one of which, at the southwest corner, was used as the clerk's office, and the two others as jury rooms. The stairway was at the west end. The contractors for the erection of this building were Louis Rains and William Young; the former built the walls, the latter had charge of the wood-work. This building was destroyed by fire in the winter of 1859-60. It was supposed to have been the work of an incendiary, but no positive proof of this has yet been presented. There appears to have been but little necessity for a court-house during the Civil War.

Third and Fourth Court-houses.—Upon the close of hostilities in 1865, and the return of the soldiers to their homes, one of the first considerations that engaged their attention was the provision of what was essential to the administration of justice. A log building, closely resembling its first predecessor, was built in the public square, to the southeast of the center, and was one of the first houses built in Carrollton after the war. It was one story high, without a chimney, and did not remain long enough to receive that necessary addition. It was destroyed by fire in 1866 or the following year, and with it such of the county records as had escaped the previous similar catastrophe. They had been removed by S. W. Peel, the clerk, to a vault in the Carrollton cemetery, and there preserved during the war. The loss of these records is most unfortunate and deplorable.

A frame store building was purchased from Crump & Berry, removed to the center of the square and, with trifling alterations, transformed into a temple of justice. June term, 1870, James Stanphill, commissioner of public buildings, was directed to purchase six chairs and have seats sufficient to accommodate jurymen before August 1, following. May 1, 1871, Lot No. 2 in Block No. 13, purchased of Crump & Berry, was sold by the sheriff, J. J. Grim, to W. W. Davis for $102.

REMOVAL OF THE COUNTY SEAT.

The erection of Boone County in 1869 placed the major portion of Carroll County a considerable distance from Carrollton, and the removal of the county seat to a more central location was at once agitated. The claims of Berryville for metropolitan honors were energetically pressed, and an election was held November 1, 1869, upon the proposition to remove the county seat thither. The result cannot be ascertained; but at September term, 1869, a petition was presented to the court alleging that the election was null and void, a portion of the county having been ignored and refused recognition by the court. A new election was forthwith ordered for November 13, 1871. At December term, 1871, of the county court, the court was petitioned by certain citizens of Carrollton "to declare the proposition for removal of the county seat to Berryville," submitted to the electors November 13, 1871, "a failure, and to put said question at rest, for a time at least," but on the following day the court refused to grant this request, upon which the question was appealed to the circuit court, with results favorable to the petitioners. What action the county court proposed to take in the matter is expressed in the following extract from the minutes: "The court took into consideration the returns of the election held November 13, 1871; and it appearing that a majority of the qualified voters favored the change, the court appointed John S. O'Neal, George J. Crump and Dr. Isaac Plumlee commissioners to select a site at Berryville." They were directed to meet at that place on Monday, January 29, 1872.

The Final Issue.—January 5, 1875, upon petition of more than one-half of the voters of the county for the removal of the county-seat from Carrollton to Berryville, an election was ordered for February 22, 1875. May 5, 1875, the court instructed the clerk to notify all the justices of the peace in the county to sit with and assist the county judges in deciding upon the matter, on the second Monday in May, 1875. May 10, 1875, the day appointed, the election returns were laid before the court. There were 557 votes for removal, and 529 against, being a majority of twenty-eight in favor of removal out of a total vote of 1,086. E. J. Black, J. S. O'Neal and Isaac Plumlee were appointed commissioners "to aid the court in carrying into effect the will of said majority, in purchasing a site for the buildings at Berryville." June 22, 1875, the commissioners reported having purchased, for $100, a lot in Berryville, from Blackburn H. Berry, and also received from him without consideration the public square in Berryville. July 6, 1875, they reported that a suitable building had been secured, by purchase, for the court-house, and rooms for the county officers by rental; upon which the court directed the sheriff to remove the records, seals, archives, fixtures, etc., which was done July 17, 1875. The property of the county at Carrollton was sold by J. W. Freeman, commissioner, January 15, 1876. Len Nunnally bought the public square for $10; John G. Crump, the old court-house, for $100; James P. Fancher, a table, for $2.50; Lots Nos. 7 and 8, in Block 9, were sold for $62.

The Present Court-house, a substantial brick structure, was erected in 1880. R. H. Jones was appointed commissioner October 15, 1880, and instructed to prepare plans and specifications. December 6, 1880, he awarded the contract for the erection of the building to J. P. Fancher, his bid of \$8,997.50 being the lowest from any responsible person. The contract, and bond in double that amount, were approved by the court. The building is forty-six feet wide and fifty-six feet long, outside dimensions. A hall ten feet wide extends through the building in the direction of its greatest length. On one side there are three rooms, one of which is occupied as an office by the sheriff; on the opposite side there is one room,  $28 \times 15\frac{1}{2}$  feet, the clerk's office, connecting with which is the vault,  $10 \times 15\frac{1}{2}$  feet. A stairway ascends to the upper story from the front end of the building. This floor comprises the court hall, forty-four feet wide, and two jury rooms. The roof is flat. This building was first occupied in the autumn of 1881. The old court-house was sold by R. H. Jones to H. A. Pearce for \$100, in county scrip, June 30, 1881, and Dr. W. P. George's store building was occupied for county offices, and during the session of the courts, until the completion of the new building.

Jails.—The first county jail was built about 1840, and stood upon a lot in Carrollton now owned by Len Nunnally. The builder was James C. Cheney, of Osage. The jail was about twenty-two feet square and two stories high. The walls of the first story were triple thick, the logs on the outer and inner sides being built horizontally, in the usual way, with a wall of logs perpendicularly between them. The latter extended to the top of the building, making an upper story but little used. The floor and ceiling were made of twelve-inch hewed timber, securely imbedded in the walls, and the door was attached with massive iron hinges. The upper story was reached by an outside stairway. This building stood until the war, when it shared the fate of hundreds of others, and was reduced to ashes. It embodied the prevalent ideas upon jail architecture at the period when it was built, and like many others before and since was frequently left tenantless by the miscreants confided to its keeping.

There was no jail in Carroll County from this time until 1876, after the county seat was changed, and during this time prisoners were confined at Huntsville, Fayetteville or Bentonville. The contract for the jail at Berryville was awarded to W. W. Davis and Charles Byron, at their bid of \$2,500, April 5, 1876. The specifications called for a brick building with stone foundations,  $20 \times 30$  feet. A hall extended across the building; there were two rooms west of the hall  $7 \times 10$  feet, and one room east 10x16 feet. The ceiling was twelve feet high. There were three windows on the south side, two windows and a door on the north, and one window on each of the other sides. The contractors were released July 3, 1876, and the building was soon thereafter occupied.

"Jail delivery" has on a number of occasions been effected by other than the ordinary and lawful method. No particulars are obtainable so far as the old jail is concerned. A single instance will be given with regard to the jail built at Berryville: Wednesday night, October 10, 1883, five of the six inmates of the jail succeeded in escaping from their cells; the watchman was overpowered, his pistols secured, and himself compelled to open the door and accompany the prisoners a mile from the town. On the following day Sheriff Freeman organized a posse and started in pursuit. One of the prisoners was captured that evening near White River, and two others on Rock Creek. A fourth was overtaken Friday morning, and the fifth in the evening of that day. At 3 P. M. on Saturday all were again "behind the bars," if that phrase may be applied to the jail, sixty-six hours after their escape.

The Berryville jail was burned in 1887, and with it a single occupant, supposed to have planned the fire in order to effect his escape. The walls are intact, but no effort has yet been made to rebuild.

Present Agitation.—The destruction of the jail and the necessity for extensive repairs to the court-house have recently induced the people of Green Forest to offer the county a liberal bonus for the removal of the county seat to that place. It is urged that since the erection of the western judicial district Berryville is no longer centrally located upon the territory within the jurisdiction of its courts, and that the change to Green Forest would greatly convenience a majority of the people. At this writing (July, 1888) the court has ordered an election in the autumn, when the matter will be decided.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.

No record of township organization prior to 1870 is extant, but from a comparison of traditional knowledge it is inferred that the three original townships of what is now Carroll County were Carrollton, Osage and Prairie (said to have been known at one time as Ashley), to which Long Creek was added prior to 1850. The order of subsequent formation cannot be ascertained. The records having been destroyed it became necessary to establish township boundaries, which was done at an adjourned term of the county court, April 18, 1870; Hon. Robert Raines, judge, and Esquires Jackson Childers and Alexander H. McElyea presiding. On this day the court proceeded to establish the different townships, defining their boundaries and voting places as follows, to wit:

Long Creek Township to commence at the Boone County line, at the southeast corner of Section 27, in Township 20 north, Range 22 west, running west to the southwest corner of Section 25, in Township 20 north, Range 23 west; thence due north to the Missouri line; thence east to the Boone County line; thence south with said line to the place of beginning; and that the voting place in said township be, and the same is hereby designated at the residence of Redden B. Mattox.

Hickory Township line to commence above and near the Dallison farm on Dry Creek, running northward to the southwest corner of Long Creek Township; thence north with said township line to the Missouri line; thence with the Missouri line to a point near and east of the residence of Thomas Wise; thence southward with the range of mountains, leaving said Wise west of said line to the Pilot Knob; thence south to the Osage Mountain; thence east with the aforesaid mountain to the southwest corner of the sixteenth section; thence east with said section line to Dry Creek, near Jeremiah Youngblood's; thence down the main channel of Dry Creek to the place of beginning; and that the voting place be, and the same is hereby designated, at the residence of John S. Shahan.

King's River Township line to commence at the northwest corner of Hickory Township; thence west with the Missouri line to a point due north of Boat Mountain; thence south with the divide between Leatherwood and King's River to the head of the Cox and Hobb's saw-mill hollow; thence down said hollow to the Master's ford on King's River; thence by Bradley Bunch's to the southwest corner of Hickory Township line; thence with said line north to the place of beginning; and that the voting place in said township be, and the same is hereby designated, at the frame house on the L. D. High farm, in the waxweed hollow.

“Cedar Township line to commence at the northwest corner of King’s River; thence west with the Missouri line to the Benton County line; thence south with said line to the Madison County line; thence east with said line to the divide between Leatherwood and Keel’s Creek; thence to the southwest corner of King’s River Township; thence with said township line to the place of beginning; and that the voting place in said township be, and the same is hereby designated, at the residence of William Skelton, in said township.

“Prairie Township line to commence at the southeast corner of King’s River; thence west with the said boundary line of King’s River Township to the southeast corner of Cedar Township line; thence with the Cedar Township line to the Madison County line; thence with the Madison County line to the Rockhouse Creek; thence down said creek so as to include the settlements on said creek (which is to King’s River); thence up King’s River to the mouth of Piney; thence east to William Barkley’s on Osage; thence north by the way of Benjamin Jennings’s to the place of beginning; and that the voting place be, and the same is hereby designated at Berryville.

“Liberty Township line to commence at the southwest corner of Prairie Township; thence south with the Madison County line to Stephen Howard’s; thence east by the way of the Widow Usry’s on Osage, to Daniel Conner’s; thence north on the divide to the Hickory Township line near the old Rush still-house; thence with said Prairie Township line to the place of beginning; and that the voting place in said township be, and the same is hereby designated, at the residence of Matthew Griffith.

“Osage Township line to commence at the southwest corner of Liberty Township, thence south with the Madison County line to the Newton County line, thence east to the Boone County line, thence with the divide between Osage and Long Creeks to the southeast corner of Liberty Township, thence west with said township line to the place of beginning; and that the voting place in said township be, and the same is hereby designated at the residence of John P. Carter.

"Carrollton Township to commence at the southeast corner of Long Creek Township, thence west with said township line to the Hickory Township line, thence with said Hickory Township line to the Liberty Township line, thence with said Liberty Township line to the Osage Township line, thence with said Osage Township line to the Boone County line, thence with said Boone County line to the place of beginning; and that the voting place in said township be and the same is hereby designated at Carrollton."

Yocum Township.—October 7, 1873: "Ordered by the board that Hickory Township be divided as follows, to-wit: by a line beginning where Long Creek Township line crosses Yocum Creek, thence with the bed of said creek to the residence of John S. Shahan, thence due west to Prairie Township line; and that all north of said line be known and called by the name of Yocum Township; and that the voting place of said township be at the voting place of Jeremiah Hall."

Polo Township.—April Term, 1874, upon petition of a majority of the citizens of King's River Township for the formation of a new subdivision from its territory, the following line of division was confirmed: "Beginning about one mile and three-quarters west of Bradley Bunch's, where said township line crosses a hollow known as Methodist Hollow, thence down said hollow to King's River about one-fourth of a mile above Cra-baugh's mill, thence down said river to the Missouri line." The eastern part received the name of Polo Township, with Standlee's store as its voting place.

Clifty.—August 17, 1874, Cedar Township was divided by a line "beginning at the eastern boundary of said township, and running due west so as to divide Sections 20 and 19, Township 20 north, Range 26 west, and Sections 24, 23, 22 and 21, Township 20 north, Range 27 west, through the center of said sections to the western boundary;" that portion south of this line receiving the name of Clifty Township, with Hendry's mill as its voting place.

Piney Township.—April 5, 1875, division of Liberty Township ordered by a line "beginning at the north line of Osage Township, near Nathaniel Rudd's, and running in a northern direction on and with the divide between the waters of the Osage and Piney Creeks to the southern line of Prairie Township;" the territory west of this line to constitute the new township of Piney. Its organization was ordered to be effected May 1, 1875, with John Gilstrop's mill as the place for holding elections.

Fork Township.—February 7, 1876: "On this day was presented a petition of a majority of the citizens of Osage Township representing that said township is too large for the convenience of a large number of citizens thereof, and praying that said township be divided as follows, to wit: Beginning at the Newton County line, on the top of the mountain or divide separating the waters of Osage and Dry Fork creeks, and running with and on the top of said mountain or divide north to the Liberty Township line." This was favorably considered, the territory west of the line described being designated as Dry Fork Township, with the place of the election at Shiloh.

July 3, 1876, by order of court the southern boundary of King's River Township was so changed as to include that part of Prairie Township north of a line "beginning at the southeast corner of said (King's River) township, thence west to the W. R. Sartain farm on King's River, thence up said river to the mouth of Osage, thence west to Cedar Township line."

Winonia Township was formed May 1, 1882, from the following described territory, formerly part of Cedar: "Beginning where King's River crosses the line between Carroll and Madison Counties, running thence west to the line between Ranges 26 and 27; thence north to the northwest corner of Section 31, Township 20 north, Range 26 west, thence east four miles; thence north two miles; thence east to King's River; thence along said river to place of beginning." At July term, 1882, the line between Prairie and Winonia was so changed as to read as follows: "Commencing at a point on the line between Sections 4 and 5, Township 19, Range 25 west, where said line crosses King's River; thence north on said line to the southeast corner of Section 32, Township 20, Range 25; thence west to the southeast corner of Section 31, Township 20, Range 25; thence north to the southeast corner of Section 30; thence west one-half mile; thence north to King's River Township line; thence east to Prairie Township line."

Franklin Township.—April 7, 1884, upon petition of thirty-one citizens of Cedar Township, its division was ordered by a line "Beginning at the northwest corner of Section 10, Township 21, Range 26, on the Missouri State line; thence south to the southwest corner of Section 27, said township and range; thence east to the southeast corner of Section 29, Township 21, Range 25; thence north to the Missouri State line; thence west to the place of beginning." The new township received the name of Franklin.

Johnson Spring election district was formed July 14, 1882, and includes "All of sections east of Eureka Springs, to the Prairie Township line; all south of Eureka Springs to Winonia Township line, Sections 9, 16 and north one-half of Section 10; all of Township 20 north, Range 26 west in Cedar Township," except the corporation of Eureka Springs.

The present number of townships is fourteen; of election districts twenty, there being five wards in Eureka Springs, each of which with each of the townships constitutes a separate district.

THE WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Formation.—The State Legislature, by an act approved March 12, 1883, divided Carroll County into two districts for judicial purposes, that portion of the county received from Madison in 1869 to constitute the western district and the residue the eastern district. The act provided that circuit, chancery, and probate courts should be established in the western district, with original and exclusive jurisdiction within its limits. The sheriff, clerk, treasurer, and probate judge are elected for the county at large.

Deputy Clerks.—The following named persons have been incumbents of this position: — Jones, J. H. Hamilton, William McCormick, Gip Taylor.

Marriage and Divorce Statistics.—Fifty-nine divorces were granted in the district from its organization until January 1, 1887. Marriage licenses have been granted as follows: 1883, 49;

1884, 65; 1885, 55; 1886, 92; 1887, 78; total to January 1, 1888, 339.

COUNTY FINANCES.

The debt of Carroll County January 28, 1879, was $11,854.57; February 14, 1880, $11,961.21; October 3, 1881, $10,350.45; October 8, 1882, $14,855.74. During this time there was a general county fund; but upon the formation of the western district, in 1883, there arose a necessity for the creation of two other funds, that of the eastern and that of the western district. The general indebtedness November 19, 1883, was $19,769.00, this being the total amount of warrants called in for re-issue. The amount of warrants on record not issued was $7,915.65. The following is a statement of county finances from November 19, 1883, to February 1, 1888:

General prior indebtedness.....	$19,769.00
Warrants not issued.....	7,915.65

Outstanding indebtedness.....	$42,395.43

SOCIETIES.

The Carroll County Agricultural and Mechanical Association was organized in 1876. The fifth and last annual fair was held Thursday, Friday and Saturday, September 29 and 30 and October 1, 1881. The officers at this time were W. J. Hailey, president; J. A. Meek, vice-president; L. L. McKennon, secretary; J. W. Freeman, treasurer. The association owned sufficient land for its purposes, but was not a success financially. The annual fair was held at Berryville. During its short existence the association did much to promote the best interests of the county.

Medical Societies.—The first medical society in the county was organized at Eureka Springs in 1881, but disbanded several years later. The second effort was made at Berryville, where the Carroll County Medical Society was organized February 4, 1884. Its existence ceased in 1887.

The Eureka Springs and Carroll County Medical Society was organized June 5, 1887, with seven members, of whom the following were officers: — Visart, president; J. O. Ducker, vice-president; J. B. Bolton, secretary; W. A. Reese, treasurer. Examining board: An act of the Legislature provides for the appointment of three physicians as an examining board by the county court. Drs. W. P. George, D. F. Ray and W. R. Hardesty, the first board, served from 1881 to 1887. Drs. J. H. Malloy, Winfield Poynor and J. B. Bolton constitute the present board. It is the duty of this board to pass upon the qualifications of all persons desiring to practice medicine in the county.

COURTS.

The First Court in Carroll County was held at the residence of Charles Sneed, on Osage, probably in the year 1833; Archibald Yell presided, and David Walker was prosecuting attorney. The county formed part of the third judicial circuit, of which Samuel S. Hall was the regular judge.

Circuit Judges.—The county has always been embraced in the fourth judicial circuit, to which judges have been commissioned as follows: J. M. Hoge, November 13, 1840; S. G. Sneed, November 18, 1844; A. B. Greenwood, March 3, 1851; F. I. Batson, August 20, 1853; J. M. Wilson, February 21, 1859; J. J. Green, August 23, 1860; Y. B. Sheppard, May 9, 1863; Thomas Boles, August 3, 1865; W. N. May, April 24, 1868; M. L. Stephenson, July 23, 1868; C. B. Fitzpatrick, March 23, 1871; J. H. Huckleberry, April 10, 1872; J. M. Pittman, October 31, 1872; J. H. Berry, October 21, 1878; J. M. Pittman, October 31, 1882.

Prosecuting Attorneys for the fourth circuit during the same period have been as follows: A. M. Wilson, November 13, 1840; A. B. Greenwood, January 4, 1845; H. F. Thomasson, September 6, 1853; Lafayette Gregg, August 23, 1856; B. J. Brown, December 1, 1862; J. E. Cravens, January 7, 1865; 'Squire Boon, October 15, 1866; Elias Harrell, August 11, 1868; S. W. Peel, April 26, 1873; E. I. Stirman, October 13, 1876; H. A. Dinsmore, October 14, 1878; J. Frank Wilson, October 30, 1884; J. V. Walker, October 30, 1886.

County Judges.—George Campbell, 1834–35; William King, 1835–38; Hiram Davis, 1838–40; M. Perryman, 1840–42; W. J. Estis, 1842–44; J. D. Blair, 1844–46; Matthew Bristow, 1846–48; T. H. Clark, 1848–50; James Simmons, 1850; Samuel H. Ewing, 1850–52; Matthew Bristow, 1852–54; J. B. Turney, 1856–58; G. W. Walker, 1858–60; J. B. Turney, 1860–64; Samuel H. Ewing, 1864–68; Robert Rains, 1868–71; Cyrus Maxwell, 1871; A. Fanning, 1874–80; T. S. Bunch, 1880–82; William Walker, 1882–84; H. A. Pearce, 1884–86; R. H. Jones, 1886; Bradley Bunch, 1887.

Attorneys.—A. M. Wilson was the first resident practicing attorney at Carrollton, and seems to have been there as early as 1836. John Wilson was his brother and partner, and their office was on the southwest corner of the square. David Walker, from Fayetteville, subsequently United States Senator from Arkansas, was also an early attorney. W. D. Reagan, J. P. Neill, J. M. Pittman, the present presiding judge of the fourth circuit; James H. Berry, at present member of the United States Senate from Arkansas, and ex-governor of the State, and George J. Crump, of Harrison, one of the most prominent attorneys in the northwestern part of the State, are among the former members of the local bar. The following is a list of resident practicing attorneys in the county: O. W. Watkins, Henry Glitsch, R. H. Jones, J. H. Show, A. Davis, M. R. Baker, George Weymouth, E. R. Ray, George W. Ray, John Watkins, John B. Pendergrass, John Chiles, Joseph Maples, J. E. Jones, Charles Watson, John I. Worthington.

The First Circuit Court for the western district began its session May 7, 1883, Judge Pittman presiding. No jury commissioners having been appointed the court, as its first proceeding, directed the sheriff to impanel the grand and petit juries. These respective bodies, the first for the western district, were constituted as follows:

Grand Jury.—R. J. Insensberry, W. H. Jones, Wesley Kelley, Samuel Gregg (foreman), Bart Moore, L. B. White, F. J. Russell, F. S. Riley, Henry Arney, D. B. Jeringan, Z. P. Freeman, A. T. Wilson, D. A. Powell, Edward Pickering, W. W. Davis, James Ramey.

Petit Jurors.—L. Collins, J. V. Rawlins, Isaac Chidester, Samuel Montgomery, A. B. Combs, W. D. Ingram, I. E. Perrin, P. Landaker, E. A. Trayder, S. S. Purcell, Samuel Hollsman, J. W. Cary, L. M. Lane, H. M. White, N. B. Barfield, W. W. Hudson, David Conway, K. B. Thornton, G. A. Beaver, T. O. P. Terry, J. H. Hamilton, T. W. Norwood, Philip Noll, William Leach, impanelled May 8, 1883.

First Case, etc.—The first case tried was that of George P. Young vs. J. H. Nuttall, and resulted in a verdict of $68.17 in favor of the defendant. The first person admitted as an attorney after examination was John Carroll, who applied for a committee to inquire as to his qualifications May 8, 1883.

The first murder in the county was committed by W. W. Hutson, who was confined in jail, but escaped. Louis Russell, William Goforth and Jack Musick served as coroner's jury in making the inquest. The second murder was that of Thomas H. Clark, during his incumbency as county judge, 1848–50. His brother-in-law, Rudd, and a son of the latter were accused, and a change of venue was taken to Washington County. A nolle pros. was granted in the case of Rudd, Jr., and Rudd, Sr., was acquitted through lack of circumstantial evidence. The third murder was that of Louis Williams by his father-in-law, James Shropshire. H. F. Thomasson was prosecuting attorney. W. D. Reagan and John Wilson appeared for Shropshire, who was convicted and sentenced to be hung, but escaped from jail a short time before the time set for execution. There has been a number of murder trials, and several indictments now appear upon the records, but no judicial execution has yet occurred.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

EUREKA SPRINGS.

This city is situated upon Sections 10 and 15, Township 20 north, Range 26 west, in the northwestern part of the county, and upon the head-waters of Leatherwood Creek, a tributary of White River. It is nine miles from the Missouri line.

The Springs.—There are forty-two springs within the corporate limits of the city. First in importance, in the volume of its waters and the number of cures attributed to it, is the Basin Spring, so called from a circular depression eighteen inches in diameter and a foot deep in the solid limestone rock, in which a portion of the water from the cliff above was received. Twelve feet below this there was originally another basin, of similar shape, but much larger. Both have been destroyed in improving the street. On the same bench, northeast of the Basin, is the Sweet Spring, so called from the peculiar taste of its waters. Next in order and in importance to the Basin is Harding Spring. Congress Spring, in the immediate vicinity, was discovered in blasting rocks, and its entire flow is utilized by the Crescent Hotel. Continuing on Spring Street, Crescent, the Twin Springs and Dairy Spring are successively passed. The latter was formerly utilized in the business which its name implies, but has been opened to the public, and is protected from contamination. The Hollis Spring is a half mile northwest of Dairy Spring, and thence, southwest, are the Johnson and Oil Springs. The waters of the latter have peculiar oleaginous qualities. The Sycamore, Arsenic and several others are also in this vicinity. The Little Eureka, east of the Basin, remains unchanged by the heaviest rain-fall. To the northeast, in the direction of the railroad station, are the Iron and Sulphur Springs, so named from their mineral qualities. The Magnetic Spring, whose waters have the property of rendering an ordinary piece of iron magnetic, is in this vicinity.

Careful analysis has demonstrated that the waters of the various springs differ but little in their essential elements. The following is the report of the United States Government Chemist, February 15, 1887:

TOTAL SOLIDS IN PARTS PER MILLION OF THE WATER.

Crescent Spring.....	92.0, or 6.44 grains to an imperial gallon
Dairy Spring.....	108.0, or 7.56 grains to an imperial gallon
Basin Spring.....	119.6, or 8.97 grains to an imperial gallon
Magnetic Spring.....	132.0, or 9.24 grains to an imperial gallon

These waters contain mainly carbonate of lime and magnesia, with small amounts of sulphates, chlorides and alkalis. They are too weak to warrant complete quantitative analysis. They differ but slightly from one another, and the results here given show that the published analysis of the Basin Spring is sufficiently trustworthy for all practical purposes.

The Basin Spring waters, as analyzed in 1880, by Profs. Porter and Riggs, of Washington University, St. Louis, were found to contain following constituents to gallon of 231 cubic inches:

Chloride sodium.....	grains, 0.19
Sulphate soda.....	" 0.09

Meteorological.—The climatic conditions prevalent at Eureka Springs constitute one of the strongest considerations in its favor. The following table was compiled from original observations by A. H. Foote, Esq., for the year 1887:

1887.	January.	February.	March.	April.	May.	June.	July.	August.	September.	October.	November.	December.

Discovery of Curative Properties.—Thus located in that happy mean between the extreme cold of the Northwestern States and the tropical heat of the south, the springs existed to no purpose, apparently, until comparatively recent years. But the story of their discovery is no less interesting than the subsequent growth of the city has been remarkable.

The earliest traditional history connected with this part of the State is associated with the springs. There is reason to think that the "Fountain of Perpetual Youth," of which Ponce de Leon received such glowing accounts from the Indians of Florida, and for which he explored a large part of the southern country in vain, was none other than the Basin Spring, described with the powerful figures of the Indian language to a credulous listener. Prior to their migration westward, the Cherokees had a tradition of wonderful springs in the mountains far to the west of the "Father or Waters." They were said to possess virtue in the healing of various maladies. Years after the settlement of this tribe in Indian Territory it was their custom to hunt through the valley of White River, when such as were afflicted with various diseases drank the waters of these springs. It would also appear that similar knowledge was possessed by the savages of the north. Jean Baptiste, whose mother was the daughter of a Sioux chief, related to Col. Gilbert Knapp, of Little Rock, the following tradition of that tribe: Many years ago, during a long and severe winter, many of them perished, and the chief, thinking to save the remainder, set out upon a journey south. They reached the forks of a great river, where game and corn abounded, and would have been supremely happy but for the fact that the daughter of this chief was blind, or almost so. Her father was told of a stream of water flowing through beds of rock to a natural basin, two days' journey distant, and prevailed upon by a medicine man to take his daughter thither. They remained six moons, when she was entirely cured. Hon. J. M. Richardson, of Carthage, Mo., in a conversation with "White Hair," chief of the Osage Indians, in 1847, learned of a remarkable spring in this vicinity, at which any Indian might be cured of sore eyes by washing and bathing a full moon. The basin was said to have been scooped out by "Black Dog," a chief, about seventy years before.

Dr. Alvah Jackson was the virtual discoverer of the springs, so far as their medicinal qualities and present wide reputation are concerned. One of the earliest settlers in this part of the county, he found little exercise in the practice of his profession among its sparse population, and turned his attention to the more exciting pleasures of the chase. It is related that while thus engaged, in the summer of 1858, he camped with his sons upon the present site of the Southern Hotel. One of the sons was suffering from a painful inflammation of the eyes, and having none of the usual remedies with him, his father directed him to bathe in the Basin Spring. He obeyed, from desperation rather than faith, and in the course of a few days was agreeably surprised at a favorable change in his condition. Having thoroughly satisfied himself of the efficacy of the water in such cases, the Doctor extended his practice in this direction. "Dr. Jackson's eye-water" acquired a wide reputation in this and adjoining States.

The springs first reached the dignity of a health resort toward the close of the Civil War. Dr. Jackson was frequently called upon by the sick and wounded of both armies, among whom was Maj. J. W. Cooper, of Cooper's battalion, Cherokee brigade, Confederate army. This officer contracted rheumatism and chronic malarial poison while campaigning in the Southwest, and having obtained leave of absence, he came to Dr. Jackson, in February, 1865. As this section was then occupied by the Federals it became necessary to take refuge in the mountain fastnesses; and a party, consisting of the Doctor, the Major, William Nichols, Sine Creeley, and two others, took refuge in the "rock house," near the present site of the Southern Hotel. Here they lived in archaic simplicity, and in a few months the soldiers had completely recovered.

The curative properties of the springs were not utilized from this time until May, 1879, when Judge Sanders, of the county court, who suffered from erysipelas, was induced by Dr. Jackson to test their efficiency. He did so, and in ten weeks was completely cured. He was widely and favorably known throughout this section of the State, and the fact of his recovery induced others to follow his example in coming here. It is to this remarkable cure that the existence of the city is directly traceable.

Settlement and Growth.—The region about the head-waters of Leatherwood Creek was an almost unbroken wilderness in 1878. Farther down the valley of the creek there were cultivated sections, but the whole of Cedar Township was very sparsely settled. The hills and gulches about the springs were covered with a forest of pine and oak, and with an almost impenetrable growth of scrub and bushes. Rocks of every geological formation lined the hills, and loose stones of every conceivable shape rolled down the sides of the gulch below. Within less than a decade the forests have been transformed into habitations, and the stones lend comfort and permanence to the streets of a city whose wonderful growth might well cause the sanguine observer to ascribe creative, as well as recreative, properties to its far-famed waters.

Judge Sanders built the first house July 4, 1879. The sides were formed of poles dove-tailed together at the corners, and the roof consisted of rough boards. The first team was driven to the vicinity of Basin Spring by Burton Sanders, son of the judge. The first occupants of the first house were two lady members of his family. July 6, 1879, O. D. Thornton built a rough board shanty, and occupied it as a general store. At this time there was a small band of invalids, to the number of 150, probably, collected around the Basin Spring, and living in tents and wagons. Before the close of July the number of houses had increased to a dozen. August 10, 1879, there was a population of 180; fifteen houses had been built, and as many more were in process of erection. The stores of O. D. Thornton and T. Jackson were in operation; there were also a meat market and a blacksmith shop. A week later the population had increased to 300. Measures were taken to have the streets laid out and passable roads opened, and to this end H. S. Montgomery, with twenty men, cleared away the trees and opened Main Street half a mile down the gorge from the Basin. William M. Sanders was one of the blacksmiths. In the autumn of 1879 a Mr. Van Winkle established a lumber yard; A. D. Mize opened a hardware store; Dr. Hoge became the first druggist; one Jefferson opened a saloon, and a Mr. Wahlquist introduced himself as a tailor. The first bath-house was established in August, 1879. Dr. McCarty was the first resident physician, and likewise the first postmaster. William Conant was the first liveryman. A Mr. Cook, a helpless invalid and cripple, with no other tool than a jack-knife, began the manufacture of canes, and did quite a business. The first death occurred August 8, 1879. Prof. I. A. Clarke, of the Berryville Academy, was among the early visitors, and his wife was killed by the falling of a tree that had been burned at the roots by a camp-fire.

The nearest railroad point in 1880 was Pierce City, Mo., on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway, fifty-five miles distant. Liverymen here did a thriving business, and a line of coaches, known as the "Nine-hour line," was established in 1880. The fare was $3.00. In a distance of nine miles this road crosses Roaring River nineteen times. There was also a regular line of coaches from Ozark, Ark., eighty-five miles distant. This journey required nineteen hours, and the fare was $8.00. After the extension of the Frisco line to Fayetteville, Seligman, Mo., eighteen miles distant, became the nearest railroad point.

Population.—In May, 1881, Mayor Carroll had a census taken, when the population was found to exceed 8,000. The Federal census of the previous year showed a population of 3,984. The number of visitors in 1883 was estimated at 9,000, and the actual resident population at about the same. Under the severe police regulations, and from other causes, the town has been relieved of an undesirable element. The permanent inhabitants number 5,500, with a steady and substantial growth. "Life at the Springs," says a writer in 1881, "is to a great extent most primitive. The furniture is of the rudest, the accommodations few, and the inconveniences many. The cooking is much of it done out of doors, in the old-fashioned skillet and bake-oven. Many wealthy families prefer tent life, and the site is peculiarly favorable for the experiment. The loan of a drinking cup at the spring, or a fire-brand at the camp, often leads to a lasting friendship. There is little conformity to fashion, though many stylishly dressed people throng the streets. You speak to everybody you meet, whether you know them or not, and are sure of a courteous, cordial return. * * * * * The preliminary steps at meeting are the questions as to whence you came, when you arrived, how long you will stay, your malady, and your name. To some, this wholesale prying into your affairs may seem impertinent; but to the lonely camper, miles and miles away from familiar faces, sick and longing for sympathy, it is very pleasant."

The town is thus described: "Everywhere that a human abode could be constructed, houses of every description, tents and shelters, sprang up all over the mountain tops, hanging by corners on the steep sides, perched upon jutting boulders, spanning the gulches, or nestling under crags and in grottoes. It is a most peculiar looking place, presenting an apparent disregard to anything like order and regularity of arrangement, with its 'two-story' streets, its winding thoroughfares and circular pathways."

Fires.—A destructive fire broke out at 4:50 A. M., November 3, 1883, in a building claimed by one Cushingberry, whose right was disputed by his son. The origin was undoubtedly incendiary. The burnt area extended on both sides of Mountain and Eureka Streets, covering five acres, and involving a loss of $25,000. Vigorous preventive measures were at once taken, and no similar catastrophe has since occurred.

Municipal Organization.—Town committee: August 8, 1879, Hugh Montgomery, T. Montgomery, Jacob Mills, Q. Bennett, J.

Hooker, Alderson, McGuire, Nuby, Hardin, Tatum, Cook and another were elected at a public meeting a committee for the general management of such affairs as concerned the public in the incipient period of town development. The most important act of this committee was the appointment of I. N. Armstrong, of Benton County, town surveyor. Under instructions from the committee, a reservation of 100 feet around the basin spring was laid off, from which an avenue sixty feet wide was surveyed to the intersection of Main Street. Maj. Armstrong continued his work until the middle of the winter, laying out the principal streets of the town. The original committee was superseded by another, which dissolved without transacting any important business.

Incorporation: October 8, 1879, the petition of twenty citizens of Eureka Springs was filed in the county court of Carroll County, for incorporation as a town. January 2, 1880, the petition was dismissed, because there was not the required number of voters within the proposed limits. January 9, 1880, seventy-one qualified voters signed a second petition, which was favorably considered by the court February 14, 1880. Section 15 and the south half of Section 10, Township 20 north, Range 26 west, thus became the incorporated town of Eureka Springs. The first election of town officers occurred April 6, 1880. In 1882, the population having sufficiently increased, Eureka Springs, became a city of the first class. The mayor was thus given enlarged powers, and the number of aldermen increased to ten. There are five wards.

City Officials.—Mayors—Elisha Rosson, 1880; John Carroll, 1880–84; A. Davis, 1884–87; F. M. Lawson, 1887.

Clerks—F. A. Packard, 1880–82; John H. Hamilton, 1882–83; W. F. Daugherty, 1883–87; R. H. Du Bois, 1887.

Police Judges—E. R. Ray, 1882–83; F. C. Drennon, 1883; Larkin Collins, 1883–84; A. T. Wilson, 1884–87; J. P. McLaughlin, 1887.

Chiefs of Police—Joe F. Ivey, 1882–83; S. L. Hickerson, 1883–85; W. B. Smith, 1885–87; L. H. Park, 1887; W. M. Dale, 1888; J. C. Higgins, 1888.

Town Council, 1880—Jasper Hooker, R. R. Pace, George Beavers, W. H. Jones, John Holden.

1881—J. S. Tibbs, J. G. Breeding, Zeb. Pettigrew, J. T. Gooding, J. H. Pickett.

Aldermen, 1882—First Ward, T. O. P. Terry, J. H. Dolen; Second Ward, R. W. Luther, J. W. Cary, Levi Fuller (vice R. W. Luther, resigned); Third Ward, E. I. Putnam, L. Collins; Fourth Ward, E. Jenkins; R. H. Du Bois; Fifth Ward, Isaac Chidester, Z. P. Freeman.

1883—First Ward, Peter Landale, T. S. Spear; Second Ward, J. P. McLaughlin, L. Waite; Third Ward, E. I. Putnam, L. Collins; Fourth Ward, J. G. Breeding, L. D. Brown, R. H. Du Bois (vice J. G. Breeding, resigned); Fifth Ward, L. H. Park, W. R. Dye.

1884—First Ward, W. A. Broad, T. J. Atchison; Second Ward, J. P. McLaughlin, Lee Waite; Third Ward, E. I. Putnam, Robert Cuthbertson; Fourth Ward, J. G. Breeding, R. H. Du Bois; Fifth Ward, L. H. Park, W. R. Dye.

1885—First Ward, W. A. Broad, R. H. James; Second Ward, J. P. McLaughlin, G. W. Martin; Third Ward, E. I. Putnam, Robert Cuthbertson; Fourth Ward, W. R. Conant, R. H. Du Bois; Fifth Ward, T. F. Hawley, L. H. Park.

1886—First Ward, W. A. Broad, H. Davey; Second Ward, G. W. Martin, J. P. McLaughlin; Third Ward, Robert Cuthbertson, James Smith; Fourth Ward, W. R. Conant, R. H. Du Bois; Fifth Ward, T. F. Hawley, J. B. Mitchell.

1887—First Ward, W. R. Nichols, H. Davey; Second Ward, J. W. Newport, J. B. Sanford; Third Ward, H. Seidel, James Smith; Fourth Ward, T. J. Pointer, J. H. Martin; Fifth Ward, J. B. Mitchell, T. F. Hawley.

1888—First Ward, W. R. Nichols, J. H. Holleman; Second Ward, J. W. Newport, J. B. Sanford; Third Ward, H. Seidel, W. H. D. Brown; Fourth Ward, T. J. Pointer, Joseph Maddox; Fifth Ward, A. Smith, J. W. Hyatt.

Treasurers—Bart. Moore, 1881; H. D. Field, 1882–85; J. F. Fowler, 1885–87; E. L. Marsh, 1887.

Attorneys—P. H. Trone and ——— Cordell were elected to this office by the town council in 1880, but each resigned after a short term of service. H. Glitsch was appointed the same year, and was subsequently elected by popular vote for several successive terms. The office is now vacant.

Marshal—The town council elected William Kimbrough to this office at its first meeting, April, 1880. John Carroll and J. J. Kirk were the incumbents until 1882, when this office was merged into that of chief of police.

The offices of city surveyor, street commissioner, coroner and health officer existed in the first years of the city government, but have since been abolished.

City Finances.—The immense expense necessarily incurred in street improvement, and in prosecuting the litigation to secure title to the territory upon which the city is built, have severely taxed its resources. Prohibited from issuing bonds by the State Constitution, and from assessing a tax higher than a certain rate, inadequate to provide sufficient revenue, the city council was forced to the unfortunate expedient of issuing city warrants at from 50 to 85 per cent. less than their face value. The amount of outstanding warrants April 18, 1882, was $71,651.24; April 1, 1883, $75,816.30 the revenue for the intervening period being $36,679.10. This is a summary of the financial condition at the close of the first year of the city government. Much of the indebtedness had been incurred without adequate returns, and in 1883 the board of aldermen made an effort to effect a compromise with the holders of the "scrip." It was partially successful; but Samuel Ashley, the holder of warrants approximating $46,000, declined to compromise on the terms proposed by the city, and instituted proceedings in the United States District Court for the recovery of his claim. The case is still undecided. Exclusive of this claim, the city indebtedness April 1, 1884, was $38,066.45, and has not been materially reduced.

The Town-site Land Litigation.—Since 1879, and during the period of most rapid growth, public interest and the attention of the municipal authorities have been centered upon this subject, one of vital importance to every citizen. The large population which arrived in 1879, and the succeeding two other years, were of that class generally termed "squatters." The first arrivals staked off their locations, and the Basin Spring was the center around which village indications were first apparent. The committee elected in September, 1879, was charged with the duty of adjudicating differences between rival claimants; they authorized the surveyor, Maj. Armstrong, to lay off lots forty feet square upon the different streets as they were laid out, and through the autumn, as fast as lots were numbered, claimants appeared with the fee of $1, and received from the surveyor a record of entry in the following form :

Eureka Springs, Section No. 15, Township 20, Range 26 west, Carroll County, Arkansas, Lot. No. —, west side of — street, taken by —.

Received payment,

I. N. ARMSTRONG, Recorder.

No individual was allowed to enter more than two lots, and failure to improve a claim within a specified time involved forfeiture of title. Frequent disputes arose, but the judgment of the committee was supreme and final. Lot No. 1, on the south side of Main Street, was the first surveyed for individual occupancy, and was entered by O. D. Thornton.

Application for Town Site.—While thus providing for the peaceable distribution of land among themselves, the citizens were not negligent in securing their titles against outside claimants. May 10, 1880, Mayor Rosson made application at the land office at Harrison, to enter as a town site for the people of Eureka Springs the whole of Section 15, the south half of Section 10, and a portion of Section 14, for a portion of which he appeared as contestant.

Private Entries.—Prior entries had been made in the following order:

September 12, 1879, by Franzisca Massman, cash entry No. 400, northeast quarter of southwest quarter of Section 3, and southwest quarter of northeast quarter of Section 10.

February 23, 1880, cash entry No. 475, northwest quarter of northeast quarter of Section 10.

September 10, 1879, by William Evans, cash entry No. 398, southwest quarter of southeast quarter of Section 10.

October 16 and 27, 1879, cash entries Nos. 408 and 413, northwest quarter of southeast quarter, and east half of southwest quarter of Section 10.

January 2, 1880, by L. M. Lloyd and E. M. Chapman, cash entry No. 432, southwest quarter of southwest quarter of Section 10.

August 15, 1879, by J. K. Northcutt, homestead entry No. 4884, northwest quarter of southeast quarter, and north half of southwest quarter, and southeast quarter of northwest quarter of Section 15.

August 15, 1879, by Robert J. Alexander, homestead entry No. 4885, southwest quarter of northwest quarter, and north half of northwest quarter, and northwest quarter of northeast quarter of Section 15.

January 27, 1880, by Benjamin Woodruff, cash entry No. 453, southwest quarter of southwest quarter of Section 15.

October 27, 1879, by D. C. Bays, pre-emption entry D. S. 65, southwest quarter of northwest quarter of Section 14, northeast quarter of northeast quarter of Section 15, south half of northeast quarter of Section 15, southeast quarter of southwest quarter of Section 15; patented to J. L. Cox and B. N. Hobbs, January 21, 1881, but patent never issued.

January 23, 1880, by Peter Van Wynkle, cash entry No. 446, southwest half of southeast quarter, and northeast quarter of southeast quarter of Section 15.

Mineral Claimants.—There were a number of mineral claims, those of W. R. Conant, George W. Daly and Conant & Daly, filed July 19, 1880, being the most important.

The mineral and agricultural claimants were at this time in litigation, The Land Commissioner in April, 1881, rendered a decision adverse to the agricultural claimants, declaring certain portions of the town site mineral, and deciding that the applications of both the lode claimants and of the town-site applicants should be allowed. This was highly satisfactory to the latter; but in March, 1882, the Secretary of the Interior reversed this decision, declaring the lands agricultural in character, and remanding the case to the general land office. The commissioner directed the local land officers of the district to take testimony, which was begun September 4, 1882. Mayor Carroll had, in the meantime, twice applied for town-site entry, February 24, 1881, and June 10, 1881. The first application had been refused on the ground that legal proceedings were then in progress to determine the character of the land in question.

Decisions of the Commissioner and Secretary.—The hearing before the Register and Receiver at Harrison was concluded October 12, 1882. A decision from that office was rendered November 25, 1882, and, with the testimony and papers in the case, immediately transmitted to the general land office. The decision of Commissioner McFarland was promulgated July 19, 1883, deciding the question of priority of right in favor of the city authorities. The case was appealed to the Secretary of the Interior by the agricultural claimants, and in the following year his decision was rendered, affirming that of the commissioner, except in so far as the latter related to portions of Section 10 which were conceded to the agriculturists.

The Final Compromise.—February 16, 1885, an act of the Arkansas Legislature, to authorize and regulate the manner of disposing of the town-site lands, was approved. It was made the duty of the council to appoint one person from each ward to grade, classify and price the lots, at values ranging from $1 to $20. Evidence as to title was to be presented to the mayor, and upon his certificate of genuineness the city treasurer was authorized to receive payment, upon receipt of which the mayor should issue a deed.

It was upon a different basis, however, that the final settlement was reached. In February, 1885, the Eureka Improvement Company, successors to the agricultural claimants, instituted proceedings in the United States Court for the western district of Arkansas to test the legality of the town site title. The city treasury was empty and its credit impaired, while there was a general disposition among the citizens in favor of a compromise, the litigation of five years having discouraged many. The city council requested the citizens to meet en masse, and appoint a committee to co-operate with them, which was done, Joe F. Ivey and J. H. Cameron being respectively chairman and secretary of the meeting. The committee thus chosen met with the council in February, 1885; a proposition from the Improvement Company was received, but not favorably considered, and an abrupt termination of the negotiations was imminent, when the president of the company suggested that the matter be laid over until after the annual meeting of its directors. March 11, 1885, pursuant to adjournment of February 24, the city council and citizens' committee again met, John Carroll, chairman, and J. H. Cameron, secretary. They were met by representatives of the Improvement Company, and after a conference, that continued from 4 P. M. to 4 A. M., a basis of settlement was at length reached. March 19, 1885, the report of the conference was submitted to a meeting of citizens in Downie Hall, by which it was referred for reconsideration to a committee, consisting of John Carroll on behalf of the city, and Powell Clayton as the representative of the Improvement Company. No essential changes were made. The compromise measures were submitted to a vote of the citizens, who declared in their favor by a practically unanimous vote. April 6, 1885, a decree of the United States District Court was promulgated, ratifying the compromise, the main features of which were the following: The Improvement Company was invested with the title to that part of Section 10 entered by George Penn, upon condition that deeds should be executed to the lot-holders thereon at the city appraisement, and that the Dairy Spring should be free to the public forever. The title to the Northcutt and Alexander entries was vested in the mayor of the city, the president of the Improvement Company and John Carroll, by whom deeds should be executed to lot-holders at the city appraisement, to churches without compensation, and all reservations to the city, all property unclaimed within a certain period to revert without compensation to the Improvement Company. A commission was provided for, to consist of one person representing the city and Improvement Company, respectively, and a third, mutually chosen by them, to have jurisdiction in widening of the streets, abatement of nuisances, removal of unoccupied houses, etc., and the Improvement Company was granted the right to operate street car lines, gas and water pipe lines, for a period of fifty years. This compromise, honorable and just to all interests involved, removed the incubus of uncertain title which had so long interfered with the prosperity of the city, while its provisions for public improvements insured a realization of those conditions which attract a desirable class of citizens.

Eureka Springs Railway.—This road extends from Seligman, Mo., to Eureka Springs, a distance of 18.50 miles. The grade from Seligman, for some distance, is 138 feet to the mile. The general direction of the line is northwest and southeast. There is down grade thirteen miles to White River from the northwest, and six miles from the southeast. A two-span Howe truss iron bridge crosses the White River.

The road was chartered February 27, 1882, and opened to travel February 1, 1883. It was built by the Western Construction Company, of Little Rock, Ark. The building of an extension to Harrison, Ark., 49.25 miles, is in contemplation.

The officers are as follows: President and manager, Powell Clayton; vice-president and treasurer, Logan H. Roots; secretary, A. H. Foote; directors, R. C. Kerens, St. Louis, Mo.; Logan H. Roots, Little Rock, Ark.; E. W. Taylor, Jefferson, Texas; Nathan Herrmann, N. Y.; P. K. Roots, Little Rock, Ark.; C. H. Smith, St. Louis, Mo.; Powell Clayton, F. M. Richardson, A. H. Foote, Eureka Springs.

The operations for the year ending December 31, 1887, are, here enumerated: Train mileage (passenger, 13,505; freight 13,885), 27,390 miles. Passengers carried, 27,783; tons freight moved, 24,900. Earnings: Passenger, $35,011.52; freight, $39,597.74; mail, $1,459.68; express, $1,415.70; miscellaneous traffic earnings, $18,793.65; total, $96,278.32. Operating expenses: Transportation, $8,194.23; motive power, $5,767.84; general repairs, $2,355.98; maintenance of way, $5,848.39; general expenses, $9,153.68; total $31,320.12. Net earnings from traffic, $64,958.20. Payments: Interest on first mortgage bonds, $30,000; on debt, $30,000; other payments, $542.40; total, $60,542.40; balance surplus, $4,415.80.

Financial statement December 31, 1887: Capital stock (par value $100), $500,000; funded debt, first mortgage 6 per cent. fifty-year bonds, due February, 1933, interest payable February and August, $500,000; second mortgage income 6 per cent. non-cumulative bonds, dated February 1, 1883, $500,000; current accounts, $5,774.67; profit and loss, $8,921.60; total, $1,514,696.27. Contra: Cost of roads, franchise, equipment, etc., $1,500,000; due from other railroad companies, $3,568.33; from agents, $64.48; materials and fuel on hand, $3,112.24; other assets, $7,951.22; total, $1,514,696.27. Securities mostly held by construction company.

Rolling Stock: Locomotives, two; cars—passenger, one; baggage, etc., one; platform, six; service, eight; total, sixteen. Other rolling stock is furnished by St. Louis & San Francisco Railway company.

Business Interests.—First merchants: O. D. Thornton, the first merchant, established his place of business July 6, 1879, with a stock of goods worth about $200. September 13, 1879, Montgomery Bros. opened a grocery on the opposite side of the street, with a stock worth $150. Mrs. Massman supplied the lumber used in the early building operations from her saw-mill on Leatherwood Creek. William Conant was the first liveryman. The "King House," built by a Mrs. King, of Washburn, Mo., across the gulch from the Basin Spring, was the first hotel. The number of business places in the summer of 1881 is given as 100. The first shipment over the Eureka Springs Railway was several cars of hay, of which S. C. Mills was the consignee. Spring and Main Streets, and particularly the immediate vicinity of Basin Spring, have always been the most active business portions of the town, and will doubtless continue so.

The following is a classified list of business places at the present time:

Grocers—E. S. Timmons, A. L. Baker, Harper & Smith, W. H. Kaylor, McLaughlin & Robinson, J. S. Alexander, Martin & Co., Joseph Geck & Son, Hudson & Henson, Edward Haigler, H. N. Childers, S. T. Dickens, J. M. V. Shreve, H. D. Field, G. S. Brown, G. W. Finn, C. W. Smith, Packard & Gammon, D. H. Hopper, G. W. Malcolm, Joe F. Ivey & Bro., Levi Fuller & Son, Samuel Hays, S. J. Moore & Son, E. O. Freeman & Co., Mark Dean, — Adams, S. Carrell.

Dry Goods—Montgomery & Riley, S. Turner, Sam. Fyfe.

General Stores—T. E. Clark, W. W. Davis & Co., A. J. Ray, Davis & Champlin, Wilson Riley, Nichols & Smith, Cuthbertson & Co., B. N. Nichols, Payne & Haman, R. L. Meaders.

Hardware—Joseph Breeding, W. G. Jenkins & Co., A. N. Matthews & Co., J. G. Breeding.

Furniture—W. S. Wadsworth, Sutliff & Bradey.

Druggists—E. E. Brim, F. Belchamber, H. T. Pendergrass, T. L. Milner, N. Gibson.

Undertakers—Z. B. Drummond, W. S. Wadsworth.

Books and Stationery—H. Fitch & Son, Geo. Baldridge.

Jewelry—J. P. Shepherd, H. T. Shepherd, H. Fitch & Son.

Butchers—Lawson & Whitehead, H. O. Kinser, G. & C. Pendergraff, Fanning & Co., F. M. King, Thomas Banham.

Confectioners—Blockson & Young, Caldwell Bros., Snavelly & Bro., G. W. Swett, J. W. Whitten, C. H. Young, Maggie Kimball, W. S. Edwards.

Gents' Furnishers—John Tobien, Bayless & Ross, James & Beck.

Ladies' Furnishers—Appie Lee, Mrs. J. G. Cunningham, Mrs. E. W. Roe, Mrs. M. E. Boyd, Bertie Barnett.

Flour and Feed—W. V. Crow, G. W. Martin, S. C. Mills, G. H. Keeler.

Miscellaneous—Woodruff & Co., lumber; L. E. Lines, sewing machines; Neill & Co., boots and shoes; M. M. White, notions; John S. Tibbs, Eureka Water Company, water shippers; H. A. Rogers, harness; H. I. Seidel, produce, etc.; W. W. Bell, paints, etc.; J. W. Hill, Charles Hurlburt, Jacob Everman, livery and sale stables.

The Board of Trade was organized February 24, 1888. President, R. H. James; vice-president, Z. P. Freeman; secretary, J. B. Bolton; directors, A. H. Foote, H. I. Seidel, T. D. Wickersham, F. A. Packard, B. J. Rosenwater, Norbert Valin, J. T. Spring, G. W. Malcolm, J. T. Champlin, G. W. Sweesy.

Hotels have always been a prominent factor in the business of the town. After the first, built by Mrs. King, several others came into existence in rapid succession. The City Hotel, by Mrs. Charles, on Spring Street, the Gilmore House, Planters' House and Eureka House were among the first. Conner's Hotel on Main Street, known as the Grand Central, was the stopping place for new arrivals by the "nine-hour line" from Peirce City. The Mountain House, by Smith & Jackson, and Col. Zeb. Pettigrew's hotel were also in a flourishing condition at this time. The following is a list of hotels in 1881: Southern, Metropolitan, St. Charles, Grand Central, Pettigrew, Mountain, Hancock, St. James, Eureka, Kentucky, Ohio. The Perry House was built in 1881 by Joseph Perry, Esq., of Colorado. W. E. Beatty is the present proprietor of the Southern.

The Crescent Hotel was first opened to the public May 10, 1886, under the management of G. W. Kittelle. The building is five stories high, and is built of a variety of white stone, obtained at quarries on White River. The dining-room is 100x40 feet. The building is practically fire-proof. The Waring system of sewerage is adopted. A park of fifteen acres, presenting many attractions, surrounds the hotel. The Crescent was formally opened May 20 and 21, 1886, with an attendance of 400 guests and appropriate exercises.

The Eureka Improvement Company was incorporated January 15, 1883. The original organizers were Logan H. Roots, P.

K. Roots and W. P. Davison, and a temporary organization was effected January 11, 1883. The permanent organization occurred in August, 1884, when the present officers were elected, as follows: President, Powell Clayton; secretary, A. H. Foote; treasurer, Logan H. Roots. The present directory is constituted as follows: Powell Clayton, R. C. Kerens, Logan H. Roots, A. H. Foote, F. N. Richardson, John O'Day, H. N. Morrill, D. H. Nichols, James Dunn. The company has a paid up capital of $269,100. Its property consists of several hundred acres of land, a large part of which has been laid off into streets and lots, and the Crescent Hotel, described above.

The Inter-state Gas Company, Theodore Platt, president, has succeeded to that part of the Improvement Company's franchise which relates to gas pipe lines. A gas plant has been constructed and is in operation.

The Citizens' Bank, authorized capital $10,000, was organized February 15, 1887, with J. T. Waddell, president, John T. Champlin, cashier, and R. J. Gray, vice-president. J. W. Freeman was elected president in March, 1888. The office of assistant cashier was created in March, 1888, with D. F. Powell as its first incumbent. The banking house of John H. Cameron & Co. was established in March, 1881, and subsequently suspended.

Steam Mills. Webb & Brown's steam flouring-mill was built in the winter of 1887-88. The building is frame, three stories high; it is equipped with three double sets of rolls for wheat and one for corn. The engines are of twenty-five-horse power.

The corner-stone of the Co-operative Milling Company's mill was laid July 21, 1887, with impressive ceremonies. James W. Hart is superintendent, and L. H. Winchell, president.

Societies.—Bethesda Lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias, was instituted December 5, 1880, with the following officers: I. A. Newman, P. C.; A. J. Gibbs, C. C.;—Howell, V. C.; —Owens, P.; John Tobien, M. of E.; T. E. Clark, M. of F.; M. Harrison, K. of R. & S. Present membership, forty. Connected with this is a section of the endowment rank, instituted March 26, 1881; President, Joe F. Ivey; Secretary, T. E. Clark.

Eureka Division, U. R., K. of P., was instituted with twenty-eight members, J. T. Waddill, S. K. C.; Joe F. Ivey, S. K. L. C.; J. H. Edmonson, S. K. H.

Eureka Springs Lodge No. 83, I. O. O. F., was instituted March 24, 1881, with the following members and officers: S. W. Damon, N. G.; J. Q. Cowles, V. G.; Wilson Broyles, Secretary; Joseph Willett, D. C. Boswell, Edward Eads. Present membership, fifty-nine.

Basin Spring Lodge No. 386, F. & A. M., was instituted November 23, 1881. First officers: E. T. Walker, W. M.; H. H. Moose, S. W.; H. Glitsch, J. W. Present membership, sixty.

Eureka Chapter No. 82, R. A. M., was chartered November 27, 1884, and was organized under a dispensation granted April 9, 1884, to H. H. Moose, J. W. Cary, Peter Lamlaker, Henry D. Field, J. S. Tibbs, F. F. Hastings, S. L. Hickerson, R. W. Goudelock, D. B. Lukey, J. C. Cunningham, R. J. Gray, S. C. Reading, F. Bellchamber, W. C. Pendergrass, J. B. Fulton.

Cyrene Commandery No. 9, K. T., was constituted July 15, 1885; first officers, J. W. Cary, E. C.; H. D. Field, G.; S. C. Reading, C. G.

The Order of the Eastern Star is represented by two organizations.

Ruth Lodge No. 10, I. O. O. F., was instituted October 25, 1886, and numbers sixty members.

The W. C. T. U. was organized April 21, 1886; first officers, Mrs. C. C. Cook, president; Mrs. Miner Davis, vice-president; Miss Kate Richardson, secretary; Mrs. L. M. Himes, treasurer. Present membership, 100. Mrs. J. C. Fraker is the present efficient president.

The Y. W. C. T. U. was organized May 9, 1886; reorganized October 31, 1887, with thirteen members, the officers being Miss Appie Lee, president; Miss Hattie Fraker, vice-president; Miss Mollie Gird, secretary; Miss Maggie Moore, treasurer.

Newspapers.—The Echo. In November, 1879, T. J. Hadley removed his printing outfit from Olathe, Kas., to Eureka Springs, and issued the first number of the Echo February 21, 1880. This was the pioneer newspaper of the city. A. B. Adams was in partnership during the first four months of its history, when he retired. In September, 1880, Hadley disposed of the paper to H. A. Nickell and J. B. Lowe, by whom it was continued until October, 1882. Nickell had become individual proprietor by this time, and moved the office to Ozark, Ark. In August, 1883, A. B. Adams brought a printing outfit to Eureka Springs, and Volume I, No. 1 of the Echo appeared September 5, 1883. It was a three-column, four-page paper. The Daily Echoing Nemesis first appeared Thursday, April 23, 1885. D. P. Cloyd was associated with Mr. Adams in this enterprise for a time. The name has since been changed to the Daily Echo, in connection with which a weekly edition is published, both under the proprietorship and management of Mr. Adams. The paper is Democratic in politics.

The Times. The original predecessor of the Times was the Republican, established in 1881 by Murphy & Penn, who retired at the end of nine months, when the paper was run in the name of S. K. Morgan for a time. Perry & Spears were the next proprietors, and assumed control February 15, 1882, changing the name to the Times and politics to Democratic. June 20, 1885, the Times was consolidated with the Bulletin, established April 15, 1881, by Lucius Hitchcock, the consolidation taking the name of Arkansas Times-Bulletin. Don J. Perry had previously retired from the Times. May 15, 1884, H. A. Cook succeeded Spear & Hitchcock, and in November, 1887, Sweeney & Weymouth, the present proprietors, took charge. The name has been changed to the Times, and, under the present management, the paper has returned to its original political faith.

A number of definite journalistic efforts have been made at various times.

The annual meeting of the Arkansas Press Association was held at Eureka Springs in May, 1884.

BERRYVILLE.

Berryville, the county seat of Carroll County, is situated in Prairie Township, on a branch of Osage River, about the center of the county. The Congressional township is No. 21 north, Range 24 west, and the town plat forms part of the northeast quarter of Section 30. The place has the advantage of an elevated location. It is distant from Eureka Springs fourteen miles, from Carrollton twenty miles, and is conveniently accessible from all parts of the county.

The town site was originally entered by Joel Plumlee, one of the early settlers of this part of the county. He built a house near the large spring north of the town proper, and cleared a small farm. The surrounding prairie was covered at this time with heavy forest undergrowth, and there was nothing to indicate that a town would come into existence.

In 1850 Blackburn Henderson Berry, of Gunter's Landing, on the Tennessee River, in Northern Alabama, purchased Plumlee's farm and opened a store near the "branch." In the same year Dr. A. A. Baker removed from Carrollton to the site of his present residence, and engaged in the practice of his profession; he also opened an apothecary shop. The idea of founding a town seems to have occurred to both about the same time; and under their direction Arnold Champlin, a school teacher and surveyor, laid out the town in the autumn of 1850. The principal streets were named Main, Church and Forsythe, and the entire number of lots was twenty-four. Berry built the first business house on the northeast corner of the public square. One Brown established the first blacksmith shop, near his former location at the "branch." Thirteen lots were sold at the first sale. Isaac J. Thorn and Samuel Karns were among the first merchants after Berry. Benjamin Hailey built the first hotel, which still stands, not having yet been retired from active service. Within two or three years Berryville had become quite a trading point; and at the opening of the Civil War it contained fifty-one houses, with a population of more than 200.

During the war it was the rendezvous of the military forces formed on both sides in the county. It was occupied for some time by Federal forces, and the aid and comfort thus involuntarily afforded rendered it the special object of attention from the bushwhackers. At the close of the war but one house remained, that of Mrs. (Hailey) Hubbard. The population had been scattered. The town was gradually rebuilt, but more slowly than at first. Dr. Baker was probably the first to return and rebuild; he had spent the last year of the war at Springfield, Mo. The first merchant after the war was Frank Hoggs, an ex-Federal soldier. He was son-in-law to Mr. Walker, hotel proprietor of what was lately known as the Southern House. William Sartain and P. Packwood were the next to engage in business. The removal of the county seat to Berryville in 1876 gave to the place a great impetus, and considering the disadvantages entailed by a long distance from railroads, the growth of the town has been encouraging. The population in 1880 was 253. There are now seventy-three families, indicating about 400 inhabitants.

Present Business.—W. P. George, J. H. Malloy, druggists; Freeman & Bobo, O. D. Thornton & Son, K. J. Hodge, Shaver & Neff, general stores; Lincoln Phillips, Henry Wood, W. T. Cartwright, grocers; Mitchell & Ferree, Nunnally & Pearce, hardware; F. S. Kirtley, harness, etc.; A. C. Hailey, jeweler; James McCleary, hotel.

The Berryville Canning and Evaporating Company, incorporated in 1888 with an authorized capital of $20,000, was organized in June, 1888, with the following board of directors: W. P. George, president; W. H. Ross, vice-president; Len Nunnally, secretary; C. W. Hamilton, treasurer; J. W. Freeman, A. S. Bobo. A three-story frame building, 24x50 feet and twenty-four feet high, was completed for the company in July, 1888. The plant, consisting of a Plummer evaporator with a daily capacity of 150 bushels of apples or 100 bushels of peaches, was placed in operation in August, 1888.

The flouring mill of J. W. Freeman & Co., with engines of twenty-five horse power, has a large and increasing trade.

Newspapers.—The Carroll County Farmer, published at Bentonville by Robert S. Hines, originator of the Grange movement in this part of the State, and distributed at Berryville, was the first newspaper bearing a local name. It began and was discontinued within the short space of one year, 1874: About the same time W. S. Tilton and E. R. Marvin established the Carroll County Boulder at Carrollton. They had local correspondents in nearly all the different townships, and had a fair circulation. But Marvin, although the son of an ex-president of the State Senate, was not gifted with any great amount of industry, and Tilton found a more congenial location in Kansas, where he is now editor and proprietor of the Wa Keeney World. W. W. Moore & Son, proprietors of the Fayetteville Democrat, established the Carroll County Advocate at Berryville upon the suspension of Hines' sheet. It passed into the control of J. C. Hanna within a few months, and in 1875 was merged with the Boulder, under Tilton's proprietorship, and so continued until finally suspended in 1877. For a short time the county was without an "organ;" but in 1879 Jones Bros. established the Enterprise at Berryville. In September, 1880, it became the Weekly Eagle. Charles & Pittman and C. T. Moore were successively proprietors for a short time, and in April, 1881, W. J. Hailey assumed journalistic responsibilities as its proprietor. His knowledge of the "art preservative" was acquired under his own tuition. In September, 1881, the name was changed to Carroll County Intelligencer. December 10, 1884, the present style, Carroll County Progress, was adopted, when the paper reached its present style, a seven-column quarto. J. D. Hailey acquired an interest in 1884. The paper is Democratic in politics.

In 1883 the Berryville Enterprise, a Republican organ, was established by a joint stock company, with Clark W. Harrington as editor. J. C. Grim succeeded him. Jones Bros. purchased the plant in 1884, when the politics of the journal became Democratic. This paper was suspended in 1885.

Incorporation.—Berryville was incorporated March 11, 1876. The organization is no longer actively sustained, but its existence has not been without good results, as the improvements to the streets and public square sufficiently indicate.

Societies.—The secret societies are Ashley Lodge No. 56, F. & A. M., Carroll Chapter R. A. M., and Berryville Lodge, I. O. O. F.

CARROLLTON.

This town is situated in Carrollton Township, in the southeastern part of the county, about a mile from the Boone County line, in the valley of Long Creek. It is almost surrounded by hills.

The first settler upon the site of the town was one James

Jones, of English and Cherokee descent, who arrived about 1833. About 1838, when the congressional survey of this territory was begun, he secured a pre-emption title to eighty acres, embracing the site of the town. Among his neighbors was Henderson Lafferty, a pioneer Methodist preacher, but a man of shrewd business instincts. His extensive knowledge of the large territory embraced in Carroll County enabled him to perceive the central location of this point, and he secured Jones' eighty acres by purchase. When the time came to select a location for the county seat, he impressed the eligibility of this location upon the county commissioners so successfully as to influence its selection and purchase for the sum of $1,000, a large sum for a tract of that size in those days. The town was surveyed by Dr. Saunders, of Huntsville, under the direction of Henry Keys, John S. Blair and Barnett Cheatham, county commissioners. A square of ample proportions was reserved for the county buildings. Lots fronting on this were sold for $25, and others in the rear for less. Notes were given by the purchasers, which were tendered Lafferty in payment. William C. Mitchell, H. L. Denton and John S. Blair were among the first purchasers of lots. Thus placed in existence and named under county auspices, the town early attracted population. It derived an impetus as the location of the county seat, and at the beginning of the Civil War was in a flourishing and prosperous condition.

Business Interests.—Henderson Lafferty was the first merchant of Carrollton, and therefore of Carroll County. He remained in business but a few years. H. L. Denton & Co., Tilford Denton, now living three miles from Carrollton on the border of Boone County, being the junior partner, opened a store in 1837. John W. Peel, formerly of Batesville, and afterward county clerk; Henry Keys, from Washington County; John S. and Joel D. Blair, were also in business prior to 1840. Failures were numerous, notwithstanding the wide margin for profit. Numerous changes occurred, and in 1857 the four stores of the town were those of W. S. Poynor, J. F. Seaman, Berry & Massingale, and Samuel Crenshaw. H. Ratcliff and Joseph Childers were hotel proprietors. Both hotels were substantial two-story structures, as were also the principal stores and several private residences.

Growth Since the War.—At the close of the war there were but two buildings standing in what had previously been known as Carrollton, and both of these were stables. The people returned slowly, and families were sheltered in truly primitive style. One man hauled the material of an old stable that had been left standing in the mountains, and rebuilt it as a house. The first dwelling-house built after the war is still standing on the southeast corner of the square. It was built in 1866 by I. W. Wann, a blacksmith newly arrived from Tennessee, and L. J. Blankenship. Mr. Wann's smith-shop adjoining was next built. Edward Norris, a Missourian, opened the first store. I. W. Wann & Bro. and Crump & Berry were among those who engaged in business within a few years. Houses of a substantial character were built, and by degrees the business of the place and its general appearance improved. After the erection of Boone County, in 1869, it became evident that the removal of the county seat to a more central point must inevitably occur, and the growth of the town was correspondingly affected. At length, in 1878, the removal was consummated, and in the decade that has since passed away Carrollton has not perceptibly improved. It is still the center of a fine agricultural district, and commands a large local trade. The present population is about 250.

Business.—Nunnally & Kirkham, hardware and implements; Leathers & Shipman, J. N. Cardwell, Edward Mitchell, general merchandise; W. M. Watkins, drugs; H. Ratcliff, O. P. Crockett, hotels. Cincinnati Mills, Nunnally & Kirkham, proprietors, were placed in operation June 12, 1883. Engines of twenty-five horse power supply the power. The mill has a capacity of 100 bushels of wheat and 250 bushels of corn, per day. There is a saw-mill and cotton-gin attached. The gin has a capacity of six bales a day.

Societies.—Yell Lodge No. 64, F. & A. M., was instituted November 10, 1853. The first officers were J. F. Seaman, W. M.; M. Holeford, S. W.; A. A. Baker, J. W. Finley Chapter No. 83, R. A. M., was instituted December 10, 1887, with the following officers: I. W. Wann, H. P.; Kinsey Hulsey, E. K.; O. P. Crockett, E. S. Carrollton Chapter O. E. S.; U. D. The Masonic bodies erected a substantial hall in 1876, used also for school and church purposes. Adjoining is the cemetery, inclosed with a neat wire fence.

GREEN FOREST.

This village is situated in Hickory Township, Section 4, Township 19, Range 23 west. The principal street follows the east and west line through the middle of the section.

When first visited by white settlers this locality was a prairie, and hence attracted settlement earlier than the surrounding timbered region. William Martin and — Yocum were living here as early as 1836. John Scott, maker of sheep and cow bells, from whom the prairie became known as Scott's prairie, was probably an earlier settler. They no doubt left when the country became more thickly settled, as their life was that of hunters rather than farmers. In 1851 the northeast fourth of the southwest fourth of Section 4 was entered by one Callin. This comprises that part of the town site south of the public road. The forty-acre tract opposite, being the southeast fourth of the northwest fourth, was patented to George L. White May 1, 1861.

The first house on the site of the town was a log church and school-house, near the present location. There were stores here prior to the war, during which they were destroyed. In the spring of 1870 W. M. Ward, a farmer on Osage, built the first dwelling house on the site of its successor; the latter was put up in 1887. He also opened a store in a building still standing. The next house was built several years later by George Shahan, and is now owned by George Crump. Shahan never lived here. Alexander Hale succeeded to his business. In May, 1874, Dr. William Thomas built the house opposite that owned by Hale; while yet in an unfinished condition it was bought by Dr. J. E. Harbert. The three houses mentioned constituted the town in 1874. A fourth was added in 1875 by L. E. Harbert, and the number slowly increased. There was but one painted house in the town in 1880. Improvement has received a great impetus within the past few years, and fewer towns in this section of the State present a more favorable appearance. The present population is about 250.

Business Interests.—The first store was opened in 1870 by W. M. Ward; the second by George Shahan; the third by T. O.

Walker, who was followed successively by Norris & Ely, Cox, Cox & Galloway, and E. S. Foreman, the present proprietor. The only fire which the town has yet known burnt the stores of L. E. Harbert and Dr. Ray. The following is a list of business men at present: W. M. Ward, general store; J. E. Harbert, druggist; Cuthbert, Son & Co. (J. H. Holder, manager), J. A. Buell, J. P. Oliver, George Cramp, E. S. Foreman, J. H. Ramsey, general stores; Merritt Stroud, grocery; A. A. Pickens, hotel. J. R. Hanby is the proprietor of a flour and saw mill and cotton-gin, erected in 1887 and placed in operation in September of that year. The engines have a capacity of forty-horse power. The building is a three-story frame structure, 40x36 feet. The cotton gin has a capacity of five bales per day.

Societies.—Green Forest Lodge No. 404, F. & A. M., was instituted November 29, 1882, with the following officers and members: J. W. Wann, M.; J. A. White, S. W.; W. P. Kerby, J. W.; Thompson Ramsey, J. J. Grim, D. H. Smith, W. E. Graham, W. H. Bunch, J. L. Graham, James H. Winning, J. P. Fondren, W. F. Jones, K. D. Cottrell, J. P. Harbert, J. E. Harbert, W. M. Ward, J. H. Norris, Martin McNiell, J. J. Dixon, Joseph Farming. Green Forest Chapter No. 39, O. E. S., was instituted October 28, 1885. First officers: Queen Ray, W. M.; J. W. Wann, W. P.; Elizabeth Graham, A. M.

OTHER VILLAGES.

Fairview is situated at the junction of the Kenner and Fancher forks of Osage, in Osage Township. The name was conferred by J. F. Sisco, who rolled the first house on trucks drawn by oxen from a point several hundred yards distant. The next building, the school-house, was erected by Isaac M. Hoyle, who taught school four years. Sisco & Bro. were the first merchants. The town comprises four residences, the general store of Frank Shubert, the two drug stores of Drs. Poynor, and the school-house. The post-office is known as Osage. There are lodges of Masons and Odd Fellows.

Winonia Springs is a village of about twenty houses, situated in Winonia Township, in the midst of a valuable timber district. There is a large steam saw-mill, and lumbering is the principal industry.

Beaver and Gaskins, stations on the Eureka Springs Railway, are places of three or four houses each. At the former there is a dwelling house built in 1836.

MILITARY RECORD.

Mexican War.—At the opening of the war with Mexico the President called for one regiment from Arkansas, and the governor of the State issued a call for ten companies of mounted riflemen, to be accepted in the order in which their services were offered to the State. In due course of time the governor's proclamation reached Carroll County, and with characteristic promptness a company was organized, equipped and mounted at Carrollton. One Gregory was then dispatched post-haste to Little Rock with the muster-roll of the company, to secure it a place in the regiment. He was just too late; the regiment was full, and the Carroll County company was obliged to satisfy its military aspirations by the maneuvers necessary to disbanding.

The Old Militia.—In ante bellum days there were two battalion and four company musters every year, the former at Carrollton and Crooked Creek (Stroud's store, now in Boone County), the latter in the respective townships. These occasions were largely attended, the battalion musters particularly. The only instance in which the militia of this county was called out occurred early in "the fifties." Marion County became involved in a fight between the Tutt and Everitt factions, and the militia of the adjoining counties was called out to quell the disturbance. Carroll furnished two companies, under Cols. Tilford Denton and William C. Mitchell, the former from Carrollton. It was in the autumn that this occurred, and the companies were gone about six weeks.

THE CIVIL WAR.

Public sentiment at the opening of the Civil War was almost unanimously opposed to secession. The number of slaves and of slave-holders in the county was not large; the people were almost entirely of Eastern Tennessee descent, and inherited the ardent patriotism that has distinguished that section. When the time came to elect representatives to the secession convention, Dr. Dijon and E. G. Mitchell appeared as secession candidates, and W. W. Watkins and B. H. Hobbs as Union candidates. The former received but thirty-six votes in a total poll of 1,500. The convention was earnestly desirous of taking a neutral position, and uniting with the other border States in an effort to effect a compromise. It soon became apparent, however, that this was impossible, and the call of President Lincoln for troops from Arkansas forced the issue. The delegates from Carroll met their constituents in mass-meetings, and, finding that there was but little disposition to take up arms against the section to which they naturally belonged, cast their votes for the secession ordinance, which passed with but a single dissenting voice.

Home Guards.—Four companies of home guards were organized in what is now Carroll County, to repel the threatened invasion of the State by Gen. Lyon. H. B. Fancher was captain of the company recruited "Up Osage;" Capt. J. M. Pittman's company was formed at Carrollton; Capt. John Denny's and Leander Hayhurst's companies at Berryville. The four companies proceeded individually to Camp Walker, Benton County, and with seven others from different parts of the State were organized into the Fourth Arkansas Infantry Regiment, under the command of Col. J. D. Walker, forming part of Gen. Pierce's brigade. Maj.-Gen. Ben. McCulloch was in command. The enemy was met at Wilson's Creek, near Springfield, Mo., August 10, 1861, and defeated with severe loss. The Fourth Arkansas Infantry was stationed upon a hill across the creek from the principal fighting, supporting Capt. Reed's battery, and took no active part in the battle. It suffered no loss. Within a few days the regiment returned to Benton County and was disbanded, after a term of service of less than two months.

Regular Confederate Troops.—Company E, Sixteenth Arkansas Infantry, was the first company of regular Confederate troops formed in Carroll County. It was organized in October, 1861, at the militia muster at Green Forest, and numbered ninety-three men. The officers were Captain, W. S. Poynor; first lieutenant, A. S. McKennon; second lieutenant, W. W. Wilson; junior second lieutenant, James H. Berry. This company, with one each from Searcy, Conway and (at present) Boone, rendezvoused at Carrollton, and were there organized as a battalion, under Lieut.-Col. Moore, ignorant of the fact that they lacked one company of having the required number for this. The "battalion" proceeded to Fayetteville, and reported to Gen. McCulloch, who declined to recognize their organization. They were detailed to Trott's store, Benton County, and there organized, with three companies from Johnson, one from Washington, one from Madison and one from Pike, into the Sixteenth Regiment of Arkansas Infantry, under Col. John F. Hill.

The regiment was in winter quarters at Elm Springs, Benton County. It was actively engaged at the battle of Pea Ridge or Elk Horn Tavern, March 7, 1862, and was stationed on the extreme left, opposed to Sigel's command. It was the charge of this regiment that recovered the body of Gen. McCulloch, which was carried off the field by several men from Company E, with others. The army moved east of the Mississippi via Van Buren and Memphis within a short time afterward. Company E participated in the battles of Farmington and Iuka, Miss. At Corinth the Sixteenth Arkansas formed part of the First Brigade of the First Division of Price's corps, and was stationed on the left wing, which stormed the breastworks to the north of Corinth. In three hours Company E lost one-third of its men. Among the wounded was James H. Berry, afterward governor, and at present a member of the United States Senate.

The Sixteenth Arkansas was reorganized in 1862, when J. M. Pittman, formerly a private in Company E, became lieutenant-colonel.

In November, 1862, as part of Gen. Beall's brigade, the Sixteenth was detailed to fortify Port Hudson. July 9, 1863, this post surrendered to Gen. Banks, when the privates were paroled. Capt. Poynor and Second Lieut. Wilson escaped in a commissary wagon, returned to Carroll County, and reorganized the company, which subsequently participated in the battles of Poison Springs, Mark's Mills and Jenkins' Ferry, and finally surrendered, as part of Dockery's brigade, at Shreveport, in 1865.

Capt. Goodnight's company, recruited principally in Conway County, included about twenty-five Carroll County men. It was also in the Sixteenth Arkansas, and participated in the engagements above noted, to the fall of Port Hudson.

Company E, First Arkansas Cavalry, originally numbered 178 men, and was mustered at Carrollton with the following officers: Captain, J. W. Bishop; first lieutenant, William Gregory; second lieutenant, S. G. Sneed; third lieutenant, Robert Clark. The term of enlistment was three years, or until the close of the war. The company marched to King's River, where it encamped for the night. Here seventy-eight men withdrew, and elected — Dawson as captain. Capt. Bishop reported to Col. Adams at Prairie Grove, and his company became part of the Third Arkansas Infantry, which was stationed on the extreme left, near the church, during the battle here, December 7, 1863, and bore the brunt of the battle. Capt. Bishop's company lost fourteen men at one charge. After the retreat to Van Buren, Gen. Hindman directed Capt. Bishop to return to Carroll County and mount his company. It then became Company E, First Arkansas Cavalry, Harrell's battalion of Cabell's brigade, and took part in the battle of Poison Springs. Capt. Bishop was promoted to a majority on that battle-field, and John Rosson succeeded him as captain. The company was stationed at Camden and Washington, and passed the winter of 1864-65 at Marshall, Tex., where it was disbanded.

There were other companies formed in the county at various periods during the war; but the frequent reorganization of the Confederate forces renders it impossible to give an account of their services.

Regular Federal Troops.—March 29, 1862, while the "Army of the Southwest" was lying at Cross Timbers, Mo., M. La Rue Harrison, of the Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, was given authority to recruit a company for the Sixth Missouri Cavalry, and proposed to enlist citizens of Arkansas, many of whom had escaped the Confederate conscription and fled into Missouri. The facility with which this was accomplished prompted the organization of the First Regiment Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers, which was effected August 7, 1862. Company G of this regiment was made up almost entirely of Carroll County men. Rowan E. M. Mack was captain; Joshua S. Dudley, first lieutenant. Hiram S. Shahan, of Carroll County, was quartermaster-sergeant. Nearly all the men were enlisted in July and August, 1862. Company K, Theodore Youngblood, captain, Dr. F. Youngblood, first lieutenant, was also largely made up of Carroll County men. The regiment constituted the advance guard of Gen. Schofield's command, the Army of the Frontier, during the campaign of 1862. It was stationed for a time at Elk Horn Tavern and Cassville, under Lieut.-Col. A. W. Bishop. Col. Harrison assumed command December 5, and under him the regiment participated in the battle of Prairie Grove. January 8, 1863, a detachment under Lieuts. Thompson and Vaughan participated in the defeat of Marmaduke at Springfield; and later in the same month another detachment was actively engaged in the vicinity of Van Buren. The regiment, with others, constituted the post of Fayetteville, and successfully withstood an attack from the Confederate Gen. Cabell April 18, 1863. October 3, 1864, a similar attack from greatly superior numbers was also repelled. Throughout the remainder of the war the regiment was engaged in suppressing the guerrilla bands that infested the northwestern part of the State. It was mustered out August 23, 1865. The Second Arkansas Cavalry, in which were many Carroll County men, was originally organized as the First Arkansas Mounted Rangers, and was formed at Helena by Col. W. James Morgan, in 1862. In August, 1863, the regiment not having yet been filled, it was transferred to Col. John E. Phelps, who rendezvoused at Springfield and Cassville, "recruiting with such energy and success that, on the 18th of March, 1864, he was mustered in as colonel, twelve full companies having been formed." The regiment was afterward in active service in Mississippi and Tennessee. It was mustered out August 20, 1865.

In various Missouri regiments and several regiments of Arkansas infantry Carroll County was also represented. It is not possible, however, to go into detail in this matter.

Operations in the County—The first armed force that appeared in Carroll County was that of Brig.-Gen. McBride, Confederate, en route from Batesville to Elm Springs, Benton County, with his command, numbering 4,000 or 5,000 men. Passing through in June, 1861, they encamped for the night at Green Forest. Their progress was not marked by any violence. After the battle of Wilson's Creek numerous small bodies passed through the county frequently.

A strong Federal force was thrown into Southwestern Missouri in the spring of 1862, and, aware that a decisive battle was approaching, an effort was made to prevent the enemy from concentrating his forces, and to divert his attention from the actual point of attack. A movement of this character, executed by Col. C. A. Ellis, is thus described by him in reporting to his superior officer:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MISSOURI CAVALRY. }
Camp on Sugar Creek, Ark., March 9, 1862. }

General: In obedience to your order of the 2nd instant, to proceed to Keetsville and send forward a commissary train reported to be there, and then to make a reconnaissance of the country east of the position occupied by our forces, I marched with 140 men on the morning of the 3rd, accompanied by Col. Pease, of your staff, to Keetsville, and forwarded the train as directed. I then proceeded east to the Roaring River, and north eight miles northeast of Cassville, Mo., and finding no appearance of the enemy, bivouacked for the night. At daylight of the morning of the 4th I again moved forward in the direction of Morris' Mill, on the White River, where a camp of the rebels was reported to be in that vicinity. I reached the mills about 4 P. M. Finding no enemy there, I at once moved forward in the direction of Berryville, over the most broken country it is possible to conceive, crossing the White River six times in traveling eight miles. At 10 P. M., having found forage for our horses, I camped for the night, and again, at daylight of the 5th, moved forward on the road to Berryville. When about two miles, I arrested two men of suspicious appearance, and from them obtained information that a company was organizing at Berryville to leave on the following morning.

Moving forward as rapidly as the nature of the ground would admit, I soon came to the suburbs of the town, and observed a body of horsemen moving north on the road leading in that direction. Taking two companies, I went in pursuit: Col. Pease, with the balance of the command, in the meantime surrounded the town, taking some fifty prisoners, twenty-two horses and fifty stand of arms.

My horses being much worn, I was unable to undertake those that had left, and after destroying three wagons partially loaded with stores belonging to the enemy, I returned to King's River and bivouacked.

At early dawn the next morning the command was ordered to saddle, and, as men and horses were exhausted, and a snow-storm prevailing, I concluded on returning to camp, which I reached at 2 A. M. on the morning of the 7th. I found forage exceedingly scarce, failing to secure sufficient over the whole region I scoured in that direction to supply the immediate wants of my command.

C. A. ELLIS, Colonel, Commanding First Missouri Cavalry.

BRIG.-GEN. JEFF. C. DAVIS, Commanding Third Division.

E. B. Brown, brigadier-general commanding Southwestern division of Missouri (Federals), states in his dispatches that six squadrons of cavalry left Cassville June 12, 1862, to break up a camp of 400 near Berryville. It is extremely improbable that there was any such camp there at the time. The result of the expedition is not known.

Gen. Herron, with his command, numbering about 20,000 men, marched through the county in December, 1863, after the battle of Prairie Grove, en route for Forsythe, Mo. This army encamped at Carrollton about a week. Gen. Blount, in command of 3,000 Kansas troops, encamped there the previous spring. It cannot be said that this visitation is remembered with gratitude by the people of the vicinity.

The only skirmish in which any considerable body of men was involved occurred April 16, 1863, on a farm now owned by Martin Trantham, a quarter of a mile from Yokum Creek. Companies G and K, First Arkansas Cavalry (Federal), under Capts. Roan Mack and Theodore Youngblood, with a number of non-combatants whom they were conducting from the State into Missouri, with personal property of some value, were pursued by about 700 Confederates under Capts. Bailey, Dillon and others. Seven of the latter were killed, including the gallant Capt. Dillon. The Federal loss was one killed and nine wounded, of whom seven died. The advantage was with the Confederates.

In April, 1864, Capt. George E. Gaddy, Federal, encountered Capt. McFarland on Race Track hollow. Lieut. Jesse Patty, Federal, was killed.

A skirmish occurred at Carrollton August 14, 1864, in which several were killed.

It would be futile to attempt an enumeration of all the various encounters that occurred throughout the war. Warfare became predatory. Armed bands of robbers infested the country, the terror of those they pretended to befriend no less than those they openly attacked.

The following hitherto unpublished account of the manner in which a company of guerrillas was disposed, is presented through the courtesy of A. H. Foote, Esq.; it was prepared by S. C. Mills, Esq.:

"In the early part of the winter of 1863, while the First Regiment of Arkansas Cavalry was quartered at Lebanon, Mo., word was brought to headquarters that a band of bushwhackers were robbing the Union people in Stone County, Mo., and all along the Missouri line in that vicinity. Company F, Second Arkansas Cavalry, having been recruited in Stone County, Mo., and Carroll County, Ark., was selected to drive out Capt. Railey and his band of thirty-five bushwhackers. After reaching Stone County, Company F, Captain Berry in command, was not long in finding out where Capt. Railey and his band were, and were soon in hot pursuit. Railey, finding himself pursued, started for Leatherwood ford, on White River, at the mouth of Leatherwood Creek. Upon his arrival at the river, he found it rising rapidly, and crossed with his command and their plunder as rapidly as possible, starting up Leatherwood Creek to find shelter for the night. Thinking that the river would be impassable by the time his pursuers reached the ford, he had no further fears of pursuit. They went about three miles up the creek to Skelton farm, and went into quarters for the night, occupying the two farm houses. When Company F reached the ford it was found that Railey and his band had crossed, and that the river was past fording. Night coming on, the commanding officer did not think it safe to attempt to cross that night. First Lieut. John Williams, with Privates Samuel Gaskins and James Hobbs, were detailed to cross the river and keep the trail, these three men having been brought up on the creek, and get all the information possible. Swimming their horses across the river above the ford they followed the trail. Before reaching the Skelton farm they found that Railey and his band had taken possession of the houses and were then eating supper. It was nearly dark and they had not been discovered. They concluded to charge Railey and his men at once, which was done in splendid style. With a revolver in each hand, firing as they came, they completely surprised Railey and his men, who jumped out of the windows and took to the brush, bare-headed and unarmed. Railey and four of his men were wounded and one killed. This was doubtless one of the boldest and most successful charges against the greatest odds during the war. The next morning, while in pursuit of Railey and his scattered band, they overtook the notorious guerrilla, Calvin Dunaway, killing him in a hand-to-hand fight, and shooting him eighteen times before he gave up; he lived but a few minutes after doing so. His wildcat fur cap was sent to headquarters at Lebanon, Mo. After the death of Dunaway Railey discharged his men, and all was quiet in this vicinity during the remainder of the winter.

Col. John E. Phelps, of the First Arkansas Cavalry (Federal), occupied Berryville with his regiment in 186-. Companies A, E and G, Second Arkansas Cavalry (Federal), under the command of Capt. A. Roberts, took possession of Berryville in February, 1864. Capt. George E. Gaddy was organizing a company of home guards on Long Creek at this time; it was mustered in at Fayetteville, February 28, 1864. A similar company, recruited by Capt. Joseph G. Walker, was attached to the Federal force at Berryville. In April, 1864, Company G was ordered to Easley's Ferry on the White River. June 8, 1864, Capt. Gaddy reported at Berryville with his company; Capt. Walker's company disbanded and re-enlisted in Companies A, E and G, and Capt. Gaddy's; June 10, 1864, Companies A and E, and Capt. Gaddy's company, evacuated Berryville, the former to proceed to Cassville, the latter to re-enforce Company G at Easley's Ferry, and thus ended the Federal occupation of Carroll County.

The population of the county in 1860 was about 10,000, of whom it is reasonable to suppose that 3,000 were capable of bearing arms. Few able-bodied men remained at home. Such as were not received as regular soldiers, from old age or other causes, followed the different armies as sutlers, commissaries, etc. The exact number of men furnished each side cannot be definitely ascertained, but the general impression seems to be that the total number of soldiers furnished during the war from what is now Carroll County was about 2,000.

Pensioners.—The report of the commissioner of pensions for November, 1886, shows that in Carroll County there were 121 invalids, receiving $1,344.25; twenty-three widows, receiving $280; one minor, receiving $16; four dependents, receiving $36; one survivor of the War of 1812, receiving $8; six widows of the War of 1812, receiving $48; total number of pensioners, 156; amount dispensed per month, $1,732.25. There were more pensioners than in any other county in the State.

CHURCHES.

Eureka Springs.—The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1880 by Rev. O. P. Bryant. The erection of a church building was begun in the same year. The present membership numbers 115. The pastors in order have been as follows: O. P. Bryant, 1880-81; — Hood, 1882-83; C. E. Cunningham, 1884; LeRoy Bates, D. D., 1885-87; Newman P. Tedrick, 1888. There is a flourishing Sunday-school of 100 members.

The First Baptist Church was organized in the summer of 1880 by Elders J. R. Chambers, P. J. Jack, D. C. Boswell and four other members. J. K. Northcutt was made moderator, and James Isaac, clerk. Pastors: P. J. Jack, C. W. Callahan, 1882; C. N. Ray, J. C. Grosh, Judson Taylor, the present incumbent, who took charge February 1, 1888. The church building was erected in 1881-82. The membership is about 150.

Pine Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This society was organized in 1879 by Rev. Warren Brooks. The Sunday-school was organized in 1880. The present church edifice, a frame structure, 32x35 feet, was erected in 1887 by a building committee consisting of W. H. Johnson, John Davis and E. S. Weyand. It was first occupied in May, 1887. The membership has increased from twenty at the beginning to 150 at the present time. A revival under Rev. Thrower's administration resulted in 150 conversions. About 700 individuals have been connected with this organization at various times. Pastors: Warren Brooks, 1879-80; S. N. Burns, 1880-82; H. C. Jolly, 1882; B. K. Thrower, 1883; W. T. Keith, 1884-85; B. Williams, 1885-86; H. J. Brown, 1887—.

First Presbyterian Church.* The first Presbyterian services at Eureka Springs were conducted by Rev. W. B. McElwee, in the autumn of 1880. In the following spring he preached in a tent large enough to seat 300 people, at the corner of Mountain and Spring Streets. Although seated with rough plank benches, the tent was usually well filled, until cold weather compelled the discontinuance of the services. Northern, Southern and Cumberland Presbyterians were among the worshippers. During the winter of 1881-82 the members of the different branches, after conferring upon the subject, decided to unite in one organization and attach themselves to whichever of the general bodies offered the most liberal assistance. After preaching a week Rev. J. J.

Marks, D. D., presbyterial missionary of Ozark Presbytery, North, effected an organization March 1, 1882, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Of the twenty-eight constituent members, four were Cumberland Presbyterians, two Congregationalists, four Southern and eighteen Northern Presbyterians. The first session consisted of W. F. Daugherty, J. L. Baker and W. W. Johnston, M. D., elders. By unanimous vote the new organization was connected ecclesiastically with Ozark Presbytery, North. Since the organization there have been added to the session Elders William L. Lee and L. N. Stockton, May 1, 1884, and Horace B. Claflin, March 14, 1887. James L. Baker removed June 10, 1883, and W. F. Daugherty ceased to act in June, 1884. A. J. Gibbs and F. A. Pickard were elected deacons July 21, 1883; I. D. Stewart and E. L. Marsh, March 7, 1885; G. W. Lynn, March 14, 1887. F. A. Pickard resigned March 7, 1887. D. R. Whitcomb, G. W. Lynn and H. N. Brim compose the board of trustees. Rev. W. B. McElwee was pastor from March 1, 1882, to October 31, 1887. Rev. W. Scott Lowry assumed the pastoral duties November 1, 1887.

The tabernacle church was again occupied in the spring of 1882, with such additional comforts as a board floor and chairs. In October the basement of the Jones building on Short Street was occupied for a month, when the room above was secured and retained until the completion of the present edifice. In 1883 the ladies organized the "Extra Cent Society," gradually accumulating a fund of $1,400. It was resolved to build in 1885, and a lot was donated by the Improvement Company on condition that a stone building should be erected. The foundations were laid in the fall of that year. May 13, 1886, the corner-stone was laid with impressive ceremonies. The completed structure was dedicated on the third Sabbath of November, 1886, Rev. Thomas Marshall, D. D., officiating. It is built of stone; the auditorium has a capacity of 300, and the lecture room is of the same size. William L. Lee's munificent contribution of $3,000, and the courtesy of the Improvement Company in donating the lot, will always be remembered gratefully.

The Christian Church, Rev. Giddings, pastor, is among the older religious organizations of the city. The first sermon here was preached by a minister of this denomination. Rev. L. W. Scott was one of the first pastors.

St. James' Protestant Episcopal Church, Eureka Springs, originated in the efforts of Rev. J. J. Vaulx, of Fayetteville, who held services once a month for several years, and during this period a frame chapel was built on Mountain Street. A regular organization was effected September 15, 1887, the first vestry being constituted as follows: J. C. Cunningham, J. Congdon, M. O. Hines, G. W. Malcolm, F. Bellechamber. The present vestry is composed of Powell Clayton, J. C. Cunningham, G. W. Malcolm, F. Bellechamber, and the membership numbers about thirty. Rev. D. S. C. M. Potter, D. D., the present rector, assumed charge December 14, 1887. The parish has recently been presented with an eligibly located building, now being transformed into a church.

Roman Catholic.—Rev. Smythe, of Fort Smith, during a temporary stay at Eureka Springs in 1881, began the erection of a Roman Catholic Church, but left before its completion or the organization of a parish.

Prairie.—One of the first churches in this part of the county stood on land now owned by one McKeen, a mile and a half from Berryville. It was built on vacant land, and there was a camp-meeting ground in the vicinity. It was erected in 1848 as a Methodist Church. One Lively and James Jones were the first preachers.

A Union Church building was erected at Berryville in 1851, and dedicated in October of that year by Rev. Pleasant Bascom. This was burned during the war, but rebuilt in 1868. The present Union Church was built in 1882, mainly through the efforts of Dr. A. A. Baker.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Berryville, was organized in October, 1853, with thirty-one members, A. A. Baker and W. J. Ruth, elders, by Rev. John F. King, the first pastor. Among his successors have been Revs. Ruth, Ray, Kendall, Bell and Nashburn.

Berryville Church, M. E., South, Rev. David C. Ross, pastor, numbers fifty-three members. The circuit has a membership of about 200.

The Christian Church, Berryville, was built in 1879. Rev. Charles B. Whiteley built the first church in the central part of the county in 1841-42 at Pleasant Valley. It was burned down during the war and rebuilt in 1876, burned in 1885 and again rebuilt as a Methodist Church. Whiteley removed to Texas in 1861; he preached his own funeral sermon here before leaving. He was somewhat eccentric, but very active in building churches and schools.

Carrollton.—The first religious services in this township were held in the court-house by Rev. Henderson Lafferty. Revs. John F. Seamen, — Cook and Thomas Tanford were preachers prior to 1845, when Dr. A. B. Baker was appointed to this circuit, then comprising all the territory between Crooked Creek and King's River. Rev. W. B. Williams was recently the pastor. Pleasant Valley, Wright's Chapel, Black Jack School-house and Zion Hill Churches form part of Carrollton Circuit. There is an organization of Free-Will Baptists at Big Spring, of which Rev. J. W. Cannt has been pastor many years. Rev. Bartlett is pastor of the Missionary Baptist Church at Carrollton, and Sherwood Pursley at Pursley's School-house. A Cumberland Presbyterian organization at Carrollton was effected in 1839 by Revs. Pearson and Buchannon, of Cane Hill, Washington County.

Hickory.—William Martin organized a Methodist Church prior to 1850 of which Rev. — Keeton is the present pastor. Fair Grove Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1871 or '72. Isaac Stanley and Martin Butler organized New Hope United Baptist Church in 1852, and Palestine Church in 1853. New Home United Baptist Church, three miles north of Green Forest, on Section 20, Township 20, Range 23, was organized in 1882 by Rev. E. J. Hagan, with eighty members. R. E. Martin is pastor at present. A Presbyterian Baptist Church was organized in 1876 in the southeastern part of the township. O. A. Mayberry is pastor.

Long Creek.—Salem United Baptist Church, at the mouth of Dry Creek, was organized in 1853 by Isaac Stanley, George E. Gaddy and Martin Butler. Gaddy was pastor many years. The present pastor is R. A. Martin. Center Point Methodist Church was organized about 1853, and has a large membership. Revs.

Obar, Mattox, Hughes and Keeton are among the recent pastors.

Yocum.—Mount Zion Baptist Church was organized about 1868 by Revs. Gwaltney, Beddingfield and Stanley. William Bailey is the present pastor. The Methodist Church was organized about 1871 by Rev. Obar.

Liberty.—The Free-Will Baptist Church at Rule was established in 1884 by Rev. W. R. Miller. Sherwood Pursley is the present pastor. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is attached to Berryville Circuit, Rev. David C. Ross, pastor. It is known as Mount Zion.

Osage.—The Cumberland Presbyterian Church is an old organization, and shared in the labors of Revs. John F. King, Matthew Holford and Fleming Sanders forty years ago. Revs. — Stockton, Jasper Henry, Amos Kendle, Hugh J. P. Rudolph and F. McCracken have been the pastors in order since the war. Live Water Methodist Church is one of the oldest preaching points on Carrollton Circuit.

Dry Fork.—Shiloh Methodist Church, originally a part of Carrollton Circuit, was subsequently transferred to Berryville, and in 1887 to Kingston. In 1845 a small log building was occupied during inclement weather and an arbor at other times. Camp meetings were held every year on King's River, five miles distant. A Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized in 1886 by Rev. J. S. Rudolph. Rev. Albert Gregg, of Kingston, is pastor of a Baptist Church.

Piney.—Upper Piney Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a part of Berryville Circuit. Riley Miller and Gregg and Bradshaw are the pastors respectively of the Free-Will and United Baptist churches of Lower Piney.

Polo.—Pleasant Hill Missionary Baptist Church was organized in 1852–53 by Revs. Isaac Stanley, Martin Butler, Thomas Chrisope, Brantley Wright and Dyson Wright. Stanley is the present pastor. Antioch United Baptist Church was instituted by Revs. John, David and Isaac Stanley in 1876. John Stanley is the present pastor. Brigman is pastor of Stony Point Free-Will Baptist Church. Antioch Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is included in Berryville Circuit.

King's River.—Isaac Stanley, Joseph Stanley, E. Chappell and — Lindsay are respectively pastors of White Elm, Rock Spring, Grenada and Shady Grove Baptist Churches. Rev. Watson is pastor of a Christian Church at Walker's.

Franklin.—There is a United Brethren Church at Hostetter's school-house.

SCHOOLS.

The Berryville Academy was originally established by James Rhea in 1855. He was educated at Mechlin Institute and Arkansas College, Washington County, and had great natural ability as a teacher. The school at Berryville was conducted in a building erected for general school and church purposes by the community, and embraced such studies as usually form an academic curriculum. Prof. Rhea was assisted by different persons at various times. Among the students who have done honor to this school may be mentioned James H. Berry, successively judge, governor and United States Senator. The school was suspended during the war, when the building was also burned.

January 14, 1867, Prof. Isaac A. Clarke opened the academy that bears his name, with twenty-five pupils, which number increased to about 100 before the conclusion of the first session. The school was conducted in a commodious building about a mile southwest of Berryville until 1873, when this was burned. The large brick building within the corporate limits of Berryville was erected in 1874, and here the school has since been conducted, with a patronage from all parts of Arkansas and adjoining States. Prof. Clarke is eminently endowed with the rare qualifications necessary to inspire students with a desire for advanced culture and thorough education. He has, through his personal influence and the influence of his school, done more to advance the educational interests of the county than any other individual.

The following statistics, from the last biennial report of the State superintendent of public instruction, fairly represent the condition of the public schools of the county:

HISTORY OF MADISON COUNTY.

LOCATION.

Madison County is in the second tier of counties from the northern and western boundaries of the State, between Benton and Washington on the west, and Carroll and Newton on the east. Carroll forms the northern boundary, Franklin and Johnson the southern. The parallel of 36° north latitude crosses the county several miles south of Huntsville. The length of the county from north to south is thirty miles. It is twelve miles wide on the northern boundary and twenty-four on the southern, comprising an area of about 700 square miles.

TOPOGRAPHY.

Mountains.—The Boston Mountains extend east and west across the southern part of the county, between the head-waters of White and Mulberry Rivers. A range of hills extends nearly due north from the main mountain chain throughout the entire length of the county, forming the divide between King's River and War Eagle. Near the Carroll County line there is an elevation known as Swain's Mountain, the highest point in the northern part of the county. East of this divide, in the northeastern part of the county, the hills are high and abrupt, and the general aspect of the county is quite rugged. To the west there is a considerable expanse of comparatively level territory, elevated and not well watered, generally known as "the barrens." Ranges of hills define the flow of the streams, and in most instances restrict the intervening valleys to narrow limits, but nowhere rise to the dignity of mountains.

Streams.—White River, the most considerable affluent of the Mississippi from the west between the Missouri and Arkansas, rises in the southern part of Madison County, in Township 13, Range 25. After a general northwesterly course of about twenty miles, it crosses the western boundary in Township 15. In the county it receives the waters of Balden, Fleming and Miss Creeks from the south, and Kinney from the north. The principal branches of White River, which unite with it beyond the county limits, are Richland, War Eagle and King's River. Richland rises in Township 16, Range 26, and pursues a general northwesterly course. It receives the waters of Lollar and Drake Creeks, the former a stream about fifteen miles in length. Thomas Creek is a branch of Lollar. Cherry Creek is the only northern branch of Richland of any importance. Brush Creek, an unimportant branch of White River, drains a small territory between Richland and War Eagle. War Eagle is formed by the junction of Daden and Robinson Creeks, in Township 14, Range 25, and has a course of thirty-five miles in the county, changing abruptly from a northern to a northwest direction at the mouth of Berry branch, northeast of Huntsville. Whorton's Creek is its principal tributary from the east, being a stream about eleven miles long; the others are Henderson, Reed, Berry and Poynor. Jackson, Lee, Holeman and Glade flow into War Eagle from the west. King's River rises in the southeastern part of the county, and flows in a general northerly course. It receives the waters of Piney and Dry Fork from the east, and of Rockhouse and Pine from the west in this county.

Lake.—A lake on the land of J. C. Long and J. A. Carlock, Section 17, Township 17, Range 26, is worthy of mention. Originally embracing an area of ten acres, and known to have attained a depth of four feet, it has been reduced by drainage to two acres, and rarely reaches a depth of ten inches in a protracted wet season. The location is on the divide between King's River and War Eagle, and is elevated above the country immediately surrounding. There are no springs in the vicinity. During the summer the basin becomes dry, and is covered with a heavy growth of swamp grass.

Springs.—These are numerous. Probably the largest is that known as Withrow's, four miles from Huntsville. A large stream of water heré gushes forth from the base of a steep cliff, and after a course of several hundred yards, disappears into the earth, again coming to the surface at War Eagle, a half mile distant. In Bowen Township a small stream issues from a crevice in the rock, depositing a sediment similar to a stalactite or stalagmité.

Geology.—A geological reconnoissance of the county, prepared by David Dale Owen, State geologist, is herewith submitted:

The continuance of the southwest dip, brings in still higher members of the subcarboniferous group on the main fork of King's River.

Five miles below the forks of King's River, there are alternations of limestones and sandstones, with some shaly partings, all belonging to the upper division of the subcarboniferous group. Fifty feet above the highest bed of limestone observed at this locality, there are some thirty feet of shale shown in a section in a ravine. The lower part of this shale is black and bituminous, and exhibits, in splitting, curious, conchoidal impressions, in which, however, no organic structure is discerned; the upper part is light grey and encloses flattened concretions of clay ironstone. This shale is overlaid by sandstones belonging to the millstone grit series.

Ascending the valley of King's River toward the forks, masses of conglomerate sandstone are encountered, which have fallen from the cliffs above. From the forks of King's River, a high bluff is seen to the east, with vertical cliffs of conglomerate and millstone grit, overhanging the shales, under which are the sandstones, Archimedes, and encrinital limestones of the upper subcarboniferous group.

The soil of the valley of King's River is black and rich, from the washings it receives from the limestones and bituminous shales of the adjacent slopes; but the same cause has operated to produce a miry road; liable to be washed into deep holes, which makes the traveling disagreeable.

Both the ascent of the valley, and the southerly dip, contribute to bring the Archimedes limestone and millstone grits gradually lower in the hills as you proceed up King's River.

In the ridge, which divides the waters of King's River from those of War Eagle and Richland Creek, on or near Samuel Rags' farm, and about a quarter of a mile to the end of the Clarksville road, a small branch makes a perpendicular fall over twelve feet of overhanging conglomerate sandstone; beneath this are about eighteen inches of shale, including six inches of coal. I traveled fifteen miles from my camp on King's River, to see this coal, in the hopes that it might prove to be a workable bed, but was disappointed in finding it so thin; because a good bed of coal would be of infinite service to this country, remote from a navigable stream, if for no other purpose than that of blacksmith's use. At considerable labor a few hundred pounds of this coal were obtained, by taking advantage of the cavernous opening made by nature, beneath the cliff of conglomerate: already the bed is so difficult of access, back in the recesses of the cliff, that even with all the height obtainable by the removal of the whole thickness of the shale, a space of only from eighteen to twenty-four inches is cleared between the hard sills of sandstone, to work in, and it has become therefore necessary, in order to obtain any coal, that the workman should lie on his side and work his pick in this uncomfortable position.

By computation, the coal under this conglomerate is at least 400 feet above the valley of King's River. It is underlaid by millstone grit, succeeded, in the descending order, by a great thickness of marly shales, under which are the Archimedes and encrinital limestone and associate sandstone. No continuous section was obtained where the relative thickness of the different members could be measured.

In summits of the highest ridges, near the head of King's River, about 200 feet of red and variegated shales and sandstone come in over the conglomerate. In this space, coals of workable thickness are more likely to occur than under the conglomerate; and the inhabitants of Madison County would do well to make diligent search for outcrops of coal in these higher measures. As yet, however, no symptoms of coal have been discovered amongst these superior shales, in the southeastern part of Madison County.

Some pieces of lead ore are reported to have been picked up in the valley of King's River, viz.: in the Basham and Roebuck settlement on Dry Creek, three miles above Kingston; also by Burney, higher up the valley, near the head of King's River. At the latter locality, the rocks being mostly conglomerate sandstones and shales, which have not retained that openness of fissure requisite for the retention of metallic insinuations, it is not likely that productive lodes should occur, accessible to any reasonable amount of shafting; at the former, where the underlying limestone formations are nearer the surface, the prospect is somewhat more favorable; but still I do not consider the geological indications, in the southeast part of Madison County, as encouraging for mining operations as in the northern part of this county, where the barren and cavernous cherty limestones immediately underlie the country. * * *

From the forks of King's River, we ascended for several miles on the western branches of that stream, and then rose 460 feet to the divide between King's River and Whorton's Creek. In this ridge, the Archimedes, pentremital, encrinital, and other members of the upper division of the subcarboniferous limestone group were found in force, with intercalations and partings of shale and marl, with some alternations of ferruginous sandstone, especially on the western declivity, descending to Warton's Creek.

At Dotson's farm, on that stream, underneath these formations, a black, bituminous, sheety shale crops out, similar to the shale of Wiley's Cove, in Searcy County, of which fifteen feet can be seen exposed on the west bank of the creek. This shale dips at an angle of five or six degrees down stream, and is soon lost to view under flagstones; these again dip under argillaceous shales, including a ferruginous, calcareous band, charged with the remains of producta and chonetes, of which the P. elegans is the most abundant.

The ridge dividing Whorton's Creek and War Eagle is 290 feet above the former stream. On the top of this ridge some sixty to eighty feet of conglomerate overlies subcarboniferous limestones, shales and sandstones.

The succession on Whorton's Creek and War Eagle is as follows:

1. Ferruginous and argillaceous shales.

2. Conglomerate sandstone.
3. Shales, both black and ferruginous.
4. Millstone grit and shaly sandstones.
5. Shales.
6. Archimedes and pentremital limestones.
7. Black shale, thin.
8. Grey shales, including band of productal calcareous rock.
9. Flagstones.
10. Dotson black sheety shale.

No. 10, the Dotson black shale, is the lowest bed visible in this part of Madison County.

Five miles above Huntsville concretionary and schistose beds of Archimedes limestone form the bed of War Eagle, and a rugged bench of harder layers of the same rock borders for some distance its north bank, like an artificial wall. Some dark shales are intercolated amongst these upper subcarboniferous limestones on this stream. Here the dip is southeasterly, so that the flagstones and dark shales soon rise from beneath the aforementioned limestones in a northwest course.

The surface of some of the slabs, both of the flagstones and harder shaly strata, is covered with cylindrical and conical impressions, often in high relief, some of which are in semi-lunar whorls or coils. These are, probably, referable to various species of fossil fucoides, or sea weeds; but the structure is so obscure that the inference of their origin is, at present, rather problematical.

All the ridges passed over between King's River and War Eagle had a capping of conglomerate, which is separated from the Archimedes limestone by ferruginous shales; these are, however, not as thick as in the valley of King's River. The conglomerate has, also, a considerable mass of ferruginous shale overlying it; and the associate sandstones of the millstone grit series are also charged with oxide of iron; indeed, some of these ferruginous layers appear to contain iron enough to be entitled to rank as ores, and were they not too siliceous, might be profitably reduced to iron.

A few miles south of Huntsville the road is, in many places, strewn with white water-worn quartz pebbles, derived from the disintegration of the conglomerate rock which lies in the hill above.

The soil here is generally red, from the quantity of iron washed into it from the shales and ferruginous sandstones of the adjacent hillsides.

About fifteen feet of black shale are exposed in the banks of the spring branch of War Eagle, two miles below Huntsville. This shale encloses hard and heavy kidney-shaped masses of carbonate of iron, in the center of which particles of white iron pyrites are found, which have been mistaken for silver ore. Here, a considerable quantity of good iron ore could be obtained, though not enough, by itself, to supply a furnace; but, no doubt, other localities of the same ore can be disclosed, which, together, might afford sufficient. In fact, the symptoms of the presence of iron are so general in the rocks of this vicinity, under the conglomerate, as to render it a locality well worthy the attention of the iron-master and the owners of property. This mass of shale is covered with flaggy sandstone, and is, most likely, the equivalent of the Dotson black shale and flagstone of Whorton's Creek. The strata dip, here, to the south-east.

A qualitative analysis of the water obtained at the head of Kimble's Creek, four miles from Huntsville, was made, and gave as its principal constituents:

Bicarbonate of lime.

Bicarbonate of magnesia.

Bicarbonate of the oxide of iron.

Chloride of sodium.

Chloride of magnesium.

Small quantities of sulphate of soda.

It is a weak, saline chalybeate, possessing mild laxative and tonic properties.

At our encampment on Holman's Creek, two miles north-west of Huntsville, the Archimedes limestone occurs in ledges on its banks, underlaid by black shales.

The same limestone, with its accompanying shales, occurs two or three miles from Phillips', on the road to Osage Spring.

A few inches of coal are said to have been discovered some distance up Holman's Creek, associated with this black shale.

The rocks, along this branch, lie too low in the geological formations to contain any workable beds of coal.

On this same stream, about nine miles northwest of Huntsville, the road leads, for half a mile, through barrens with a sandy soil, followed by prairie in which sandstone crops out about ten miles from Huntsville. The prairie is bounded by wooded hills off to the southwest.

Proceeding toward the northwest, the Archimedes limestone and associate shale are succeeded by chert and cherty limestone on the edge of the barrens; after which comes sandstone in the prairie. In the former, casts of Orthis crinistria (?) were found about four or five miles from Holman's Creek.

The cherty limestone, which belongs, doubtless, to the lower division of the subcarboniferous group, has a considerable area in the northern part of Madison County, and possesses the peculiar lithological character of the most productive lead-bearing rocks of the adjacent part of Southwestern Missouri.

Some lead ore has been found in the Moodey settlement, about four miles north of Huntsville; if it had its origin in this formation, it is a locality which should claim the attention of the miner, as will appear more fully in the next section, when treating of Benton County.

This cherty limestone, containing a few entrochites, underlies the Brush Creek barrens, and the spring at C. Fitches', on the edge of these barrens, and close to the line between this county and Washington, wells up through the same description of rocks; these are analogous to, and most probably contemporaneous with, the geological formation that underlies the barrens of Kentucky.

Mineral Development.—Considerable excitement was occasioned in 1886 by the discovery of silver at Bear Creek Hollow, in Piney Township, in the northeastern part of the county. There was an immediate influx of miners; claims were staked off and recorded, but the expectations of the prospectors were not realized. Previous excavations were discovered, and the location of a smelter determined by a large quantity of ashes.

At the outbreak of the Civil War one Elliott was detected in the surreptitious manufacture of silver dollars in this section, and convicted of counterfeiting. The supposition that he discovered and utilized silver ore in this way is at least plausible.

Iron ore has been discovered three miles southwest of Huntsville, on the divide between Richland and War Eagle; zinc on the head-waters of War Eagle, on White River, in Valley Township; and various minerals at other places.

SETTLEMENT.

Archæological.—In June, 1888, a workman discovered seven metal images while plowing in a field near Huntsville. Each is about four inches in length and one-fourth of an inch thick, showing in silhouette the features of a race of people who seem to have had prominent noses and receding foreheads. The metal is evidently lead, with the possible admixture of silver. The circumstances under which they were moulded will always remain a subject of interesting conjecture. There are mounds in various portions of the county, the most important of which is situated on War Eagle, and has an area of an acre at a vertical height of fifty feet. No effort has ever been made to ascertain whether the people who constructed it have left any relics of their labor.

Roads.—Two principal routes were travelled by the earliest settlers to Madison County, one following the Arkansas River to Fort Smith, and thence passing through Fayetteville; the other passing through Missouri, southwesterly from St. Louis through Springfield, to the extreme northwest portion of Arkansas. The universal law obtained here, settlements advancing with the streams, and not until comparatively recent years has population pushed upward from the valleys into the mountains. As it is with the streams that an account of early settlement in the county is concerned, it may be well to mention each individually.

Richland.—George Tucker drove the first wagon to this section in the fall of 1828, from Cane Hill, Washington County. With Samuel and Daniel Vaughan he had explored the region in the previous spring. Tucker settled on what is known as the Sheridan bottom, on the border of Washington County. In the same year came John Holmesley, his son Stephen, and his son-in-law, Michael Masters, from Castor Creek, near Black River.

Holmesley, Sr., accounted for his removal in this way: A hog was missing in the Caster settlement, and he was accused of stealing it. After hearing the story of his misdemeanor several times, he began to believe it, and thought best to find a place to live elsewhere. He located at Wesley, his son opposite where Dr. Hite lives, and his son-in-law on the Green Gibson farm, where he died in 1831. This was the first death in the valley. In 1828 George Howery removed from Cane Hill to the Buchanan farm. He had come from Warren County, Tenn., to Cane Hill in 1827. His wife and her son, John Calico, ex-county treasurer, and still living at an advanced age, joined him in 1828. The first to arrive in 1829 were John Harp and Joseph McMurray, who settled where Calloway Lawson and Alexander Neely now live, respectively. In the same year John Austin settled where Judge Harrell now lives. Austin was son-in-law to John Holmesley. John Reeves settled on William Wilson's farm in 1829. Isaac and Jacob Drake arrived in 1830, from Tennessee; the former located at Sander's mill, the latter at the mouth of the creek that bears his name. Josiah Means in 1830 removed from the summit of the Cumberland Mountains, in Warren County, Tenn., to the farm of B. B. Davis, recently deceased, on Richland. Reuben Lollar and John Dunaway settled on Lollar Creek in 1830. The farm of the former is occupied by his son; Mrs. Dunaway still lives at a very old age. Green Gibson settled on Gibson Creek in 1830. Pleasant M. Johnson, first sheriff of the county, John C. Johnson, and Martin Johnson came in 1829; Thomas M. Johnson, in 1830; all from Warren County, Tenn. George and Nicholas Conute came in 1829 from the same locality. Willis Privett came in 1829, but sold his improvements in 1833 to Jacob Gray. William Clark settled on Drake's Creek in 1832, Beverly Harp, a Christian preacher, located at the head of Cherry Creek, in the same year.

King's River.—In the summer and fall of 1827 Thomas Cunningham, John J. Coulter, and Henry King, of Lauderdale County, Ala., made a prospecting expedition into the valley of King's River. King died (this being the first death of a white man in the county), and was buried on the bank of the stream that bears his name. Cunningham and Coulter returned to Alabama.

In the fall of 1829 William King, Charles Burney, Turner Hamblet, Thomas Rogers, William Adair, Lemuel Rogers and Benjamin F. King, of Alabama, came in a colony to the valley. They found here one settler, Leonard Koker, who had come the preceding year and cleared off three acres. He was in charge of a large drove of cattle owned by planters in the Arkansas River valley. He sold his improvements to Turner Hamblet, the son-in-law of William King. The latter settled near the old camp ground; William Adair, where Mr. McCracken now lives. The first white child born in the valley was William Henderson Burney, son of Charles and Mary (King) Burney. In addition to those already named there were living in the valley in 1832 one Melton, on the confines of civilization down the river; Manuel Clements, Samuel Durham, who came in 1830; Thomas Rodgers, by whom the site of Kingston was owned; Eli Sweden, who gave to Sweden Creek its name; Jeremiah Combs, from Warren County, Tenn; Garrett Lane, from Illinois, who came in 1832; James Frazier and Moses Guess, from Hickory Valley, six miles from McMinnville, Warren Co., Tenn.; George and Haywood Weathersby; John F. King, the well-known preacher, came in 1834. The first frame house in the valley was built in 1851 or 1852 by John Combs and George King. The first school-house, a log building twenty-four feet square, was built in 1833. The first teacher was from Tennessee. The first sermon was preached by Andrew Buchannan, a Presbyterian minister.

War Eagle.—It is said that Daniel and Thomas Jackson settled on Jackson's Creek in 1818, but this is probably not to be credited. William Hawkins settled upon the farm now owned by L. W. Routh in 1830, and built a mill here in 1838. David Phillips removed from Jackson County, Ala., to the vicinity of Huntsville in 1831, and John Phillips in the same year. Richard Withrow settled three miles south of Huntsville in 1831, and in 1832 removed to the spring which bears the name of his family. In 1831 George W. Sanders became a resident upon the site of Huntsville. Simon Smith came from Madison County, Ala., in 1830, and in 1832 removed six miles up that stream to the locality in which his descendants now live. In Bowen Township William McElhaney became a resident in 1833; William and John Bowen in 1832; John Moore in 1831; Pleasant Hamlin in 1829; Jeremiah Meeks in 1830; Jesse Maxwell in 1832; Robert Lee in 1832; Abner Cantrell (still living and nearly a hundred years old) in 183-. James Henderson settled on Henderson Creek at an early date. He made hunting a business. Others arrived at later dates, among whom were Abram McConnell, 1836; Hiram Stotts, 1838; J. B. Gilliland, 1837; Joshua Boren, 1836; B. C. Sams, 1837; James Cain, 1838. The "Alabama settlement" was made in about 1842; John and William Berry, Campbell Montgomery, M. P. Mitchell, W. D. Proctor, George Long, Thomas Maynard and Thomas Willis constituted its early population.

Whorton's Creek.—The earliest settler was Joshua Whorton, who with Joseph Fanning were residents prior to 1832.

Vaughan's Valley.—The most fertile and beautiful landscape in Northwestern Arkansas is named from its pioneer settlers, Samuel and Daniel Vaughan. Born in Virginia, their father, William Vaughan, removed to Warren County, Tenn., and thence to Wayne County, Mo., where he was one of the earliest settlers, and thence to Crawford County, Ark., where he located on the Arkansas River near Short Mountain Creek. Crossing the Boston mountains Samuel and Daniel Vaughan settled near Evansville, Washington County, before the Indian title to that section had been extinguished, and, being encroachers, their improvements were destroyed by the regular soldiers. In 1826 they removed to Cane Hill, Washington County, where they were the first settlers, and in 1828 migrated to what is now known as the Tuttle settlement, on Richland. In 1831 Samuel Vaughan removed to the valley and bought the improvements of one Friend, an Indian half-breed of migratory habits, then its only occupant. Isaac Vaughan now lives here. Samuel Vaughan dealt largely in Government claims. He died at the age of seventy-seven. Daniel Vaughan lived all his life on his first claim, a short distance west of Hindsville. William and John Hind, from Warren County, Tenn., arrived about 1832, John locating on the site of Hindsville, and William southeast two and one-half miles. Miles, Abram, John and Barnett Beach, Samuel and Riley Lane, John Harp, Jackson Titsworth and William Evans were also among the early settlers. The field notes of the government survey of Township 17 north, Range 27 west, show the "road from Osage Prairie to Izard court-house," crossing diagonally from southeast to northwest the dwellings of "Hynd," Beach and Vaughan. This origin was sectionized in 1834.

White River.—The settlers on this stream prior to 1834 were as follows: Robert Tucker, from Cape Girardeau County, Mo., who arrived in September, 1833, with a large family of grown sons; the father of Cleve Estep, who owned the site of St. Paul; John Balden, a man of bad reputation, who lived at the mouth of Balden Creek, but remained only a short time; Isaac Teeters, a Dutchman, from Illinois; Jesse Armstrong, from the same State, whose farm is now owned by H. B. Brashears; Samuel Shastid, from Illinois, who had been brought up with Abraham Lincoln; Maston B. Pool and John Bivens, who came on the same boat up Arkansas River in 1834; Enos Robbins, who lived near the Washington County line, and was a famous hunter; James Stewart, the first postmaster at Jupiter, who lived at Cross Creek; Morgan Buck, from North Carolina; Pleasant Stewart, who lived on 'Possum Creek; William Tucker, from North Carolina; Henry Raynor, John Williams, a great trader, who dealt largely in horses, slaves, etc. Under the impetus which this valley has received from the construction of the railroads the old landmarks are rapidly disappearing.

Game, etc.—Although unmarked by the influence of civilization the region that now constitutes Carroll County was in many respects most inviting. Buffalo ranged the forests in herds. Deer were found in great numbers, and smaller game abounded, while the black bear was the most formidable foe the hunter encountered. The creeks teemed with fish, and the forests literally flowed with honey. The means of obtaining a subsistence thus provided were not unappreciated. Every settler became a hunter and trapper. The black bear was found everywhere, but his principal haunts were the mountains in the western part of the county. Bruin was in great favor with the Indians. They returned from the Territory as late as 1842 in hunting parties, and usually remained several months during the winter. There was a suppressed feeling of resentment against this among the first population, but as the settlers began to turn their attention to farming and stock-raising, the work of the Indians in protecting them from bears came to be regarded in a more friendly light. The Indians could remove the pelt from a deer without cutting, and, after curing, such a pelt was filled with bear's grease, sewed shut, and in this manner carried away. Bears, Indians and whites seem to have had a common penchant for honey. The whites would cut down the tree, if necessary, remove the honey, and leave the bees to find a new home. Sometimes a hole was cut into the tree, thus enabling them to remove the honey from time to time: It was put in barrels by the whites, and in deer skins by the Indians, and sold at Fayetteville or Fort Smith for two bits a pound. Bee-trees are still to be found in the mountains, though not so frequently as at one time. Bears were not extinct in the Leatherwood Mountains ten years ago, before Eureka Springs came into existence, and deer are still seen occasionally about the head-waters of White River, but the chase may already be regarded as a "lost art," existing only in tradition.

Land Claims.—The first care of the immigrant upon reaching the county was the selection of a claim, if he had not already visited the region as a prospector and done so. Fertile bottom lands along the streams were invariably taken up first, as affording convenient access to water and insuring good soil. The underbrush and smaller trees were cleared away sufficiently to admit of the planting of corn, potatoes and vegetables; the larger trees were "girdled," and not removed for years in some cases. In the meantime the settler's family lived in their wagons, or in such improvised shelter as could be readily provided. Until their first crop should mature they lived on game, fish, wild fruits, and corn or other grain obtained from the older residents or settlements.

Pioneer Architecture was simple, yet ingenious. The house was supported upon stone walls at the corners, and a cellar was not deemed absolutely necessary. The walls were usually hewn logs, dove-tailed together at the corners, and plugged with blocks of wood and mortar. The doors and window shutters swung on wooden hinges. Window glass was unknown; light was admitted by opening the shutter, and in cold weather the inmates would have been badly off, indeed, but for that kind provision of nature which prevents the wind blowing from all directions at once, thus permitting one or other of the windows to be open all the time. The floor was puncheon, that is, it consisted of logs dressed on one side with the ax and fitted together as closely as possible. No part of the house required more work than the roof. Rafters were laid horizontally from end to end of the wall. A board-tree, known to those versed in wood-craft by a peculiarity of the bark, was carefully selected and split into clap-boards four or five feet in length. A row of these was placed upon the lower edge of the roof; a horizontal stick of timber about four inches square was placed over them, about twenty inches from the lower edge. This was technically known as a "weight." To keep it in position it was firmly braced against the logs in the gables. Another row of clap-boards was laid over-lapping the first, with their lower edges against the weight; another weight braced against the first was added, and so on until the roof was completed. Log chimneys mortared on the inside were usually constructed, and some are in use at this day. Stone chimneys are a later innovation.

Early Mills.—The preparation of cereal foods was one of the difficulties of frontier life, and the method of its solution seems to have been borrowed from the Indians. After the family had acquired a temporary residence, and even before, the "mortar and pestle" were indispensable in providing their food supply. A solid log, three or four feet in length, was planted firmly in the ground; the top was then burned out as much as required, making a basin-like concavity. This was the mortar. The pestle was a tough stick of timber from the heart of an oak or hickory, fastened at the end of a long sweep, after the manner of a well bucket. Corn was placed in the mortar, when the pestle was brought down upon it forcibly and rapidly. When the operator tired of his work, or thought he had done it well enough, the contents of the mortar were passed over a sieve; the finer portions were used as meal, the residue as hominy. Occasionally the pestle was operated by water-power, when the machines became popularly known as a "Slow Joe" or "Lazy Tom." The first water-mill in the county was on Richland. The With-row mill was the first on War Eagle. Here there is a natural site for an overshot wheel; the water from the Withrow Spring disappears in the ground, and in the crevice through which it falls the water-wheel was placed.

Population Statistics.—The following table shows the population by townships in 1850 and 1880:

Township.	1880	1850
Boston.....	552	....
Bowen.....	977	650
California.....	589	....
Hilburn.....	988	544
King's River .....	1,270	606
Lamar.....	861	....
Marble.....	554	....
Piney.....	411	....
Prairie. . . . .	1,441	836
Richland.....	605	736
Union.....	448	....
Valley... ..	522	....
War Eagle.....	1,879	1,240
Whorton's Creek.....	863	....

In 1860 the white population was 7,444; the colored population, 296; total, 7,740. In 1870, white, 8,081; colored, 150; total, 8,231. In 1880, white, 11,331; colored, 124; total, 11,455. Of the population in 1880 there were born in Arkansas, 7,366; in Tennessee, 1,367; in Alabama, 171; in Georgia, 227; in Missouri, 639; in Mississippi, 30; in foreign countries, 16.

EARLY LAND ENTRIES.

As evidenced by the records of the land office, the earliest entry in Madison County was made by John Austin in Section 31, Township 16 north, Range 27 west, a short distance west of Drake's Creek. The entry bears date November 8, 1834, and covers eighty acres. The following is a list of land entries prior to and including 1853; where the same individual made several entries, the earliest is usually given:

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

Erection.—Madison County was erected by the State Legislature at its first session, September 30, 1836. This part of the State was included in New Madrid County prior to 1813; in Arkansas County, from 1813 to 1815; in Lawrence County, from 1815 to 1820; in Independence County, from 1820 to 1825; in Izaard County, from 1825 to 1827, when Lovely County was erected. Lovely was abolished in 1828, when Washington was erected, including all that part of Madison County and the north-western part of the State north of the line between Townships 12 and 13, and west of the line between Ranges 25 and 26. October 26, 1831, by act of the Legislature, "All that tract of country, including all the settlements now made on the waters of what is called the War Eagle Fork of White River [shall] be, and the same is hereby declared to be in Washington County." When Carroll County was erected, in 1833, the line of Range 25, and the ridge dividing the waters of War Eagle and King's River, were made its western boundary, thus including all the territory drained by King's River. This arrangement continued until 1836, when Madison was erected. It extended from the northern boundary of Township 12 to the Missouri line, a distance of fifty-two miles, with an extreme width of about twenty-five miles. King's River formed the eastern boundary on the north. The western boundary was changed November 26, 1838. The line between Madison and Carroll was defined January 11, 1843, January 20, 1843, December 29, 1854, and January 15, 1857. The Newton line was defined December 21, 1848. April 8, 1869, that part of Madison north of a line bisecting Township 19 north, Ranges 25 to 27 west, was annexed to Carroll. This territory extended from King's River to the line of Benton County, and comprised about 180 square miles, including the whole of Mountain and Cedar Creek Townships. In 1885 a strip of territory two miles wide on the southern boundary of the county was annexed to Johnson and Franklin, and a similar excision one mile wide was made on the west in favor of Washington. The present area is about 750 square miles.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

Court-houses.—The first court in the county was held in the barn of Evan S. Polk, northwest of Huntsville about one-fourth of a mile. The barn of John Sanders was used for the same purpose.

The first court-house stood upon the public square in Huntsville, which has been occupied in this way ever since. It was built of hewed logs, which, to facilitate ventilation or for some other purpose, were never "chinked and daubed." There was one room, about thirty feet square, open to the roof; it was entered by two doors from the north and south, while the judge's table was at the east end. There was neither stove nor chimney, nor need of any, as the sessions were held late in the spring and early in the fall. The benches and tables rested on terra firma for several years, when a puncheon floor was added. This building was erected in 1837-38, at a cost of $150, provided by a tax levied at the rate of $1.28 per forty acres of improved land.

The next court-house was built in 1845. It was a brick building forty feet square and two stories high. The lower floor was used as a court-room. It was entered by doors on the north and south; the judge presided at the east end; the floor was of brick; the stairway was in the northwest corner, and a narrow hall extended east and west through the second story, communicating with the offices of the clerk and sheriff, the jury rooms and several other apartments. There were three windows on the east and west, an equal number on the north and south in the second story, and two windows and a door in the lower story. The roof sloped north and south. The contractor was Evan S. Polk, who burned the brick on his farm adjoining the town. The cost was about $4,000. This building was burned by northern vandals in 1863. The records were taken to Springfield, Mo., and there lost or destroyed, in great part.

The first sessions of the court, at the close of the war, were held in the house of John Vaughan, now owned by W. J. Sams, and in Masonic hall. January 28, 1867, James A. Jay, commissioner of public buildings, was directed by the county court to sell the bricks of the old court-house. April 27, 1868, the court resolved to build a court-house, and appointed John Carroll to draft a plan for a suitable building. May 1, 1868, he reported the plan of a brick building to cost $6,000. October 30, 1868, Charles W. Richmond succeeded Carroll, and on the following day he reported a plan, which was adopted, and $10,000 appropriated for its erection. November 14, 1868, Richmond and Carroll were directed to let out the erection of the building by contract. It was to have been a stone building, 40x60 feet, with a portico on the south side, and its erection would have been a boon to the county. Unfortunately the bids exceeded the appropriation by nearly $2,000. In January, 1869, a new plan was adopted. The building, as erected, was a frame structure, forty feet square and two stories high. A hall extended through the lower floor from north to south, on each side of which there were four rooms. The upper floor was used as a court-room, and two apartments in the north end were occupied as jury rooms. The building was completed under the supervision of William Logan as commissioner, Mr. Richmond having resigned. Isaac Drake contracted for the masonry, and O. D. Johnson for the frame work. The building was completed in January, 1871. The aggregate cost was $4,600, paid in county warrants at 75 per cent. discount, thus entailing a debt of about $16,000. The county court resisted payment, and did not formally accept the building until January 24, 1872. It was destroyed by fire December 1, 1879.

April 8, 1879, the court appointed M. Knight, A. A. Brodie, William Marrs, F. M. Sams, F. O. Massie, John F. Proctor, N. G. Heflin and W. A. Gage commissioners to select a site for a new court-house. The lot, then vacant, adjoining the public square on the north was favored by many, but the commission failed to agree, and the old site was chosen by the county judge. G. N. Heflin was appointed building commissioner January 5, 1881, but declined; John R. Simpson was appointed in April, 1881. The contract was awarded to W. A. Gage May 24, 1881, at his bid of $3,000. February 6, 1882, S. P. Jackson contracted to finish and furnish the interior for $1,000. The building is built of brick, 40x50 feet, and is twenty-six feet high from the foundation to the roof. There are four doors, and two halls crossing in the center of the lower floor, thus giving convenient access to four rooms, each 12x27 feet. The entire upper story is used as a court-room. The building was formally accepted by the county court October 4, 1882, and constitutes the present court-house.

Jails.—There have been three different county jails, all of which have occupied the same site. The first was built by Samuel Whiteley, about 1839. It was a log building about twenty-four feet square, constructed of very heavy timber, dovetailed closely together. On the west side, ten feet from the ground, there was a door, reached by steps, and opening into a room, in the floor of which there was a trap-door, giving access to a dungeon beneath. There was one window in each room, on the north side. The more dangerous prisoners were placed in the dungeon, and escapes were frequent until 1858, when an iron cage was placed therein. It was made of wagon-tire iron by the local blacksmiths, and after the burning of the jail in 1863 was wrought into horseshoes and various implements.

The second jail was built in 1866-67, by Elijah Drake. It was similar to the first in the arrangement of the cells, but had a window in each room on the north and south sides. The walls of the lower cell consisted of two horizontal log abutments, with a perpendicular palisade between. One Smith, imprisoned for robbery, burned the building in 1879, in an effort to escape.

The present jail is a substantial brick building, the equal of any in the rural districts of the State. A tax for its erection was levied in 1882, 1883 and 1884, and having reached the sum of $1,112, was duly appropriated by the county court November 3, 1884. F. M. Sams was appointed building commissioner. January 5, 1885, the contract was awarded to S. P. Jackson and S. H. Berry, at their bid of $772. In July, 1885, the P. J. Pauley Jail Building and Manufacturing Company was awarded the contract for the construction of iron gratings of the windows, doors, cells and corridors. C. W. Lear received $150 for digging a well at the jail. The aggregate cost was about $4,500. The building was completed in September, 1885.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Clerk.—The clerk of the circuit court is elected for a term of two years, and is ex-officio clerk of the county and probate courts and recorder. This arrangement has continued since the admission of the States. The incumbents of this office in Madison County have been as follows: H. B. Brown, 1836-48; P. M. Phillips, 1848-49; J. S. Polk, 1849-52; J. R. Berry, 1852-60;

B. B. Davis, 1860-64; O. D. Johnson, 1864-66; P. W. Newton, 1866-68; F. M. Sams, 1868-70; O. D. Johnson, 1870-72; F. M. Sams, 1872-74; W. A. Gage, 1874-82; J. H. Bohannon 1882-88.

Sheriff.—The incumbents of this office, elected for two years, have been as follows: P. M. Johnson, 1836-46; Joseph Bowen, 1846-48; B. Vaughan, 1848-58; T. D. Berry, 1858-60; E. Drake, 1860-64; W. K. Henderson, 1864-66; Lee Taylor, 1866-67; B. Vaughan, 1867-68; A. K. Berry, 1868-71; G. W. R. Smith, 1871-74; J. Gilliland, 1874-76; B. Vaughan, 1876-78; J. J. Taylor, 1878-80; J. C. Long, 1880-84; C. C. Hill, 1884-88.

Treasurer.—The treasurer is also elected for a term of two years. This office has been held by the following persons: H. C. Daugherty, 1836-42; J. Dennis, 1842-46; John C. Calico, 1846-54; C. H. Boatright, 1854-56; J. Williams, 1856-64; R. Johnson, 1864-66; J. Williams, 1866-68; R. Johnson, 1868-72; J. Phillips, 1872-74; J. Williams, 1874-78; W. R. Phillips, 1878-82; W. A. Marrs, 1882-84; C. B. Sanders, 1884-86; W. S. Lowry, 1886-88.

Coroner.—M. Perryman, 1836-38; Elias Henele, 1838-40; W. G. Phillips, 1840-54; I. Council, 1854-56; James Bynum, 1856-58; R. L. Fagan, 1858-60; E. Chapell, 1860-62; J. W. Canady, 1862-64; B. B. Baily, 1864-66; H. Combs, 1866-68; John Sisemore, 1868-72; J. K. Austin, 1872-74; L. R. Parks, 1874-76; Morgan Reaves, 1876-78; Thomas Bottom, 1878-82; J. M. Hawkins, Jr., 1882-84; John Bowen, 1884-86; J. M. Hawkins, Jr., 1886-88. The coroner is elected for two years.

Surveyor.—T. McCuiston, 1836-48; E. Davis, 1848-50; S. E. Renner, 1850-52; Henry Killian, 1852-54; B. B. Davis, 1854-60; S. Burchett, 1860-62; G. D. Niel, 1862-64; Enoch Ball, 1864-66; E. H. Shipley, 1866-68; S. Burchett, 1868-72; E. T. Shipley, 1872-74; R. W. Young, 1874-76; E. H. Shipley, 1876-78; D. D. Phillips, 1878-80; Calvin Evans, 1880-82; W. G. Canady, 1882-86; W. E. Keefer, 1886-88.

Assessor.—J. M. Wilson, 1862-64; E. Drake, 1864-66; J. M. Denny, 1866-67; B. Vaughan, 1867-68; J. Haynes, 1868-71; William Tweedy, 1871-72; B. Vaughan, 1872-76; B. B. Davis, 1876-78; A. Neeley, 1878-80; S. F. Vaughan, 1880-82; S. N. Welten, 1882-84; George Williams, 1884-86; J. A. Bell, 1886-88.

State Senator.—Madison County was not represented in the first session of the State Legislature, 1836–38. Washington, Benton and Madison were represented by O. Evans, A. Whinnery, 1838–42; Benton and Madison by J. G. Walker, 1842–46; J. B. Dickson, 1846–50; John Berry, 1850–66; Isaac Murphy, 1856–58; M. Douglass, 1858–62; E. D. Ham, 1864–66; J. Dunagin, 1866–68. In 1868 Madison, with Marion, Carroll, Fulton and Izard, became the Third Senatorial District, which elected M. L. Stephenson, 1868–70; William Dugger, 1870–74. Madison and Benton became the Twenty-fourth District in 1874, and so continued, with the following representation: C. J. Reagan, 1874–78; E. P. Watson, 1878–82; J. T. Walker, 1882–86.

Representative.—J. W. Sanders, H. S. Wilson, 1840–42; William Gage, Daniel Vaughan, 1842–44; J. C. Sumner, H. C. Berry, George W. Sanders, 1844–46; Joseph Dennis, J. F. Wright, George W. Forrest, 1846–48; John Berry, John Gage, 1848–50; G. W. Forrest, P. M. Johnson, 1850–52; P. M. Johnson, A. Wood, 1852–56; G. W. Forrest, J. S. Polk, 1856–58; B. Vaughan, T. Bateman, 1858–60; J. C. Montgomery, S. E. Kenner, 1860–62; J. R. Berry, R. F. Naylor, 1862–64; T. H. Scott, G. W. Seamans, 1864–66; L. B. Sanders, John Carroll, 1866–68. Under the constitution of 1868 the State was districted: Madison, Marion and Carroll—Benjamin Vaughan, J. A. Fitzwater, J. T. Hopper, P. A. Williams, 1868–70; Boone, Madison, Carroll, Fulton, Izard, Marion—E. P. Watson, G. J. Crump, F. J. Eubanks, J. S. O'Neal, 1870–72; W. L. Chapman, Joseph Wright, J. M. Foster, J. F. Cunningham, 1872–74; D. G. Hart, J. M. Foster, 1874. Under the last constitution Madison, individually, has been represented as follows: W. C. Cluck, 1874–76; F. M. Sams, 1876–78; W. C. Cluck, 1878–80; Daniel Boone, 1880–82; W. T. Brooks, 1882–84; Joel N. Bunch, 1884–86.

Isaac Murphy and H. H. Bollinger represented the county in the constitutional convention of 1861; G. W. Seamans in 1864; F. M. Sams in 1868; John Carroll in 1874.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.

There were six townships in Madison County in 1850, viz.: Bowen, Hilburn, King's River, Prairie, Richland and War Eagle.

The county court records having been destroyed, it is impossible to give the dates of their erection or original boundaries. It may be stated in a general way, however, that Bowen, named in honor of the first county judge, included the large central part of the county south of the county seat; King's River originally embraced all the territory drained by that stream, or the entire eastern part of the county; Hilburn extended across the southern boundary south of Bowen and Richland, and adjoining King's River; Richland included its present territory, Lamar, and part of Union; Prairie and War Eagle occupied the same relative positions as at present, the latter extending farther to the north. California, Cedar Creek, Marble, Mountain, Piney, Valley and Whorton's Creek were added between 1850 and 1860. The following is an account of the organization of townships so far as can be ascertained from existing records:

Boston.—April 22, 1872: "On this day the petition of S. B. Williams and forty-one other petitioners was presented, praying the court to revive Boston Township in the county of Madison, State of Arkansas, with boundaries as follows, to wit: Commencing at the original line at the low gap at the head of the west fork of Freiley's Creek, thence running north to Richard Maricles on White River; thence north to the head of Robinson's Creek; thence down said creek to the mouth at War Eagle; thence north to Ogden's Creek to the head of the north branch of said Creek; thence to the head of Pine Creek; thence down Pine Creek to the mouth of King's River; thence east to the Newton County line, and the precinct thereof to be at Ephraim Good's. And the court being advised in the premises, doth sustain the prayer of said petitioners, and constitute said township and precinct hereinbefore named as fully and legally as other townships are constituted for the said county of Madison."

Union.—October 28, 1872: "On this day the petition of A. Hartley and fifty-three other citizens and electors of the county of Madison was presented to the court, praying that a new township be organized as follows, to wit: Commencing on the divide between Richland Creek and White River where the section line running east in Township 15 north, Range 27 west, in the center of said township, crosses said divide; thence east with said section line to the divide between War Eagle and Richland Creeks; thence south with said dividing ridge to the divide between Richland Creek and White River; thence northwest with said dividing ridge to the beginning; and to establish the precinct at the Gardner school-house in School District No. 31, and the name thereof to be Union Township. And the court, being sufficiently advised in the premises, doth sustain the prayer of said petitioners, and order that the same take effect on the 6th day of November, 1872."

Lamar.—July, 1878: Upon petition of Daniel Boone and others, this township was erected with a boundary line "beginning in the middle of Lollar's Creek, on the line between the present township of Richland and Union Township, thence with the middle of said Lollar's Creek to its junction with Richland Creek; thence with Richland Creek to the line between Ranges 27 and 28; thence north with said line to the line between the present townships of Richland and Prairie; thence with said line west or northwest to the Washington County line; thence south with the Washington County line to the line between the present township of Richland and Valley Township; thence east with Valley and Union Townships lines to the place of beginning." The voting precinct is at Wesley.

Independence.—July 9, 1884. This township was formed upon petition of S. M. Smith and thirty-two other citizens, and comprises the territory included within the following boundaries: "Commencing at the northwest corner of Section 2, on the township line between Townships 13 and 14, Range 28 west; thence south on section line between Sections 4 and 3, 9 and 10, 16 and 15, to the northwest corner of Section 22; thence southeast on the county line between Washington and Madison County to the southeast corner of Section 25; thence north on the range line to the northeast corner of said township; thence west on township line between Townships 13 and 14 to the place of beginning." The voting precinct is at Independence school-house, District No. 97.

Kentucky.—August 8, 1885. This township was formed with the voting precinct at Center Point, and with boundaries described as follows: "Beginning at southeast corner of Section 22, in Township 13 north of Range 25 west; thence on section line between Sections 22 and 23, 15 and 14, 10 and 11, 2 and 3, until you intersect the township line between Townships 13 and 14; thence north to the center of Sections 34, 27 and 22, to center of Section 15, on south side, in Township 14 north, Range 25 west; thence west on section line to southwest corner of Section 16; thence north on west line of Section 16 to southwest corner of Section 9; thence west on section line to the center of the north boundary line of Section 16, Township 14 north, Range 26 west; thence south through the centers of Sections 16 and 21, to the center of the north boundary line of Section 28; thence east one-half mile to northeast corner of Section 28; thence south on section line to the center of the north boundary line of Section 3 in Township 13 north, Range 26 west; thence west one-half mile to northwest corner of said Section 3; thence due south on section line between Sections 4 and 3, 9 and 10, 16 and 15, 21 and 22, to the southwest corner of Section 22 to the county line; thence east on county line to the place of beginning."

COUNTY FINANCES.

Richmond Johnston, treasurer in 1865, received during the year, $2,080, and disbursed $1,764.94, leaving a balance of $315.06 for that year. The revenue in 1866 was $2,016.99, and the amount of delinquent taxes amounted to $240.49. In 1867 the amount of taxes received was $2,657.35. In November, 1868, the county court cancelled warrants amounting to $4,651.71. In 1868 a court-house tax of $3,332.26, a contingent fund of $3,332.26, and general county taxes amounting to $9,996.78 were assessed. A court-house tax of $2,666.33 was collected in 1869. August 27, 1872, the treasurer reported having received, in 1871, as general revenue, $3,576.40; as court-house tax, $555.44, and as pauper tax, $555.44; a total of $4,687.28. In 1872 the pauper tax was $438.95; court-house tax, $658.42, and general revenue, $2,739.72. In 1874 a poll tax of $1,659, State tax of $4,180, county tax of $2,090, pauper tax of $1,254, and tax to pay interest on court-house and pauper indebtedness, $1,045, were assessed. In April, 1881, there remained unpaid of indebtedness contracted prior to 1874, $1,926.38, and the amount of outstanding warrants and certificates issued since that date amounted to $6,285.24. In 1880 there was a poll tax of $1,816, a county tax for the reduction of obligations incurred prior to 1874 of $3,217.22, a contingent expense county tax of $3,056.35, and a tax for the care of public records of $160.86. The revenue for 1881 was as follows: General county fund, $1,387.98; pauper tax, $461.39; court-house fund, $1,234.47; poll tax, $1,639.90; old county indebtedness fund, $614.15; special school fund, $404.20; fines and convictions, $1,148. In 1882 the treasurer received as general county fund, $1,764.18; pauper fund, $669.56; poll tax, $1,868.65; assessment fund, $508.75; court-house rent, $18.75. State taxes, in 1883, amounted to $8,125.16, and county taxes to $7,843.65. In 1886 a total county fund of $8,383.01 was collected. The following is an analysis of the revenue for 1887: General State tax, $2,749.92; State school fund, $2,749.92; State sinking fund, $1,375.75; total State tax, $6,875.59; poll tax, $2,322.95; general county funds, $610.92; court expense fund, $2,712.92; criminal prosecution fund, $203.50; assessment fund, $678.23; support of prisoners, $203.50; county records, $67.84; pauper fund, $1,695.49; United States court judgments, $135.68; insane asylum expenses, $203.50; improvement of jail, etc., $135.65; to provide standard weights and measures, $135.65; total county tax, including additional levy of $82.47 apportioned pro rata, $9,188.30. The following is a statement of county finances from May 12, 1887, to July 16, 1888:

The assessed valuation of real estate in the county in 1887 was $670,648.

COUNTY ROADS.

The public roads of the county are under the jurisdiction of the county court. For convenience in repairing and improving their condition they are divided into districts, over each of which an overseer is appointed. The present number of districts is about 100, and varies but little from year to year. The entire county was redistricted every second year. In 1873 the different townships were constituted road districts in the following order, the roads in each being divided into a number of sections: No. 1, War Eagle, 11 sections; No. 2, Prairie, 2 sections; No. 3, Piney, 1 section; No. 4, Marble, 3 sections; No. 5, King's River, 11 sections; No. 6, Whorton's Creek, 2 sections; No. 7, Bowen, 6 sections; No. 8, Hilburn, 8 sections; No. 9, Valley, 4 sections; No. 10, California, 4 sections; No. 11, Richland, 9 sections. This arrangement continued only a short time.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Organization.—The constitution of 1836 provided for a division of the State into convenient circuits, each to consist of not less than five nor more than seven counties, for which the judges should be elected by the General Assembly on joint ballot. The age of twenty-five years was necessary to eligibility, and the length of term was four years. In 1848, by amendment to the constitution, the office was made elective, and the restriction as to the number of counties that might be formed into a circuit was removed, to be re-established in 1864. Under the present constitution the qualifications required of circuit judges are as follows: Citizenship in the United States, residence in the State two years, six years' experience at the practice of law, at least twenty-eight years of age, and "learned in the law." The term is four years. This court has jurisdiction in the great majority of civil and criminal cases, and exercises a superintending control over county and probate courts and justices of the peace.

Judges.—Madison County formed part of the Fourth Judicial Circuit from 1840 until 1861, when it was transferred to the Eighth. The latter arrangement continued until 1868, from which time it has again constituted part of the fourth. The following is a list of judges, with dates of their commissions: J. M. Hoge, November 13, 1840; Sibron G. Sneed, November 18, 1844; A. B. Greenwood, March 3, 1851; Felix I. Batson, August 20, 1853; John M. Wilson, February 21, 1859; Joseph J. Green, August 23, 1860; James D. Walker, July 25, 1861; Elias Harrell, May 8, 1865; William Story, March 27, 1867; Marshall L. Stephenson, July 23, 1868; Charles B. Fitzpatrick, March 23, 1871; James H. Huckleberry, April 10, 1872; James M. Pittman, October 31, 1872; James H. Berry, October 21, 1878; James M. Pittman, October 31, 1882.

Judge Hoge lived in Benton County. Sibron G. Sneed was a son of William Sneed, one of the earliest settlers of Carroll County, and lived on Osage River. His knowledge of the law, though not profound, was equal to the requirements of that day; and this, with a judgment naturally good, and the faculty of meeting his constituents in an agreeable manner, rendered his administration eminently satisfactory. His autograph is that of a rapid penman, the first three capital letters being made at one stroke of the pen. At the May term, 1847, court was opened by Hon. William W. Floyd, of the Third Circuit, and Judge Sneed did not arrive until the third day. Judge Floyd also presided at the October term, 1849.

April 14, 1851, Alfred B. Greenwood opened court at Huntsville for the first time. One of the first cases that came before his consideration was the application of Alabama Tennessee Phelps for divorce. Judge Greenwood had been appointed prosecuting attorney in 1845, and continued in that office until elevated to the bench. He was subsequently a member of Congress and Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Hon. Beaufort H. Neely, of the First Circuit, presided at the October term, 1852, on exchange of circuits with Judge Greenwood. This was common at that time. It was authorized by the constitution, and even enforced in some instance.

Judge Batson's first court at Huntsville was held October 10, 1853. He resided at Clarksville. The first term of Hon. John M. Wilson opened April 11, 1859. He was in office a little more than one year. Judge Green's incumbency was terminated in 1861, when Madison County became part of the Eighth Circuit, to which James D. Walker was appointed. The records close in September, 1861, with a number of murder cases on the docket. Lawlessness was already in the ascendancy, and during the next four years the county was virtually without law.

September 18, 1865, the court resumed its long interrupted sessions. Elias Harrell, appointed by Gov. Isaac Murphy, presiding. Several murder cases were tried at this term, and the great accumulation of business is evident from the fact that the minutes cover nearly fifty pages of a large folio. Judge Harrell is a native of Madison County. He began the practice of law before the war, and entered upon his judicial career with a knowledge of the law practical rather than profound. Slow of speech and deficient, perhaps, in legal acumen, his rulings were well considered and bore the imprint of a disposition to do exact justice. The times were troublous, however, and demanded executive rather than deliberative qualities in every public officer; and under such circumstances, Judge Harrell has failed to receive the credit justly due for his success in peacefully maintaining his position as the representative of a government and a party to which the majority of the people were hostile. After his retirement from the bench he accepted the appointment of prosecuting attorney. He is now a resident of Lamar Township, and of late years has devoted his energies to the practice of medicine.

William Story, appointed in March, 1867, by Gov. Murphy, was from Iowa, and one of the large body of men who formed their first acquaintance with the South as soldiers. He made his advent into Huntsville May 13, 1867, unannounced, apparently, and finding neither clerk nor sheriff in attendance, appointed John S. Polk to the office of the former. The sole proceedings are recorded in the following remarkable chronological declaration: "Ordered by the court that court adjourn until the third Monday after the eighth Monday after the sixth Monday after the first Monday in February, 1867, it being the first Monday in June, 1867, and being the third day thereof." The legal abilities of Judge Story were probably superior to those of any of his predecessors. His extensive legal knowledge, keen perceptive powers, and judicial temperament enabled him to grasp the intricacies of a case and balance its merits with unerring precision. But he was deficient in force of character; and to his misfortune entered upon public life at a time when executive ability was imperatively demanded. He was subsequently appointed United States Circuit Judge for the western district of Arkansas, and afterward returned to the North.

Marshall L. Stephenson, appointed in 1868, had previously become acquainted with this section of the State as captain of a company of Federal troops. He made his residence at Huntsville, and was the first judge to do so. A man of fine legal attainments and good address, his administration gave general satisfaction. He was subsequently associate justice of the supreme court of the State.

Charles B. Fitzpatrick was commissioned in 1871, and on the 10th day of April, that year, he opened court at Huntsville. He served but one term.

James H. Huckleberry, a northern man, was judge only from April to October, 1872, but created a favorable impression by his genial manners and careful administration. He was the last judge of northern proclivities, but has remained in the State, and is now a resident of Fort Smith.

James M. Pittman and James H. Berry complete the list. The latter served one term, and has since then been governor of the State and United States Senator. Judge Pittman served two terms, 1872-78; he was again elected in 1882, and has entered upon his second term. He is a jurist of unquestioned ability, the equal in learning of any other judge in the State. Socially he is the true type of a Southern gentleman, and is deservedly popular.

COUNTY COURT.

Organization.—The constitution of 1836 provided for the holding of a court by the justices of the peace, to be called the county court, with jurisdiction in all matters relating to the levying, collection and disbursement of taxes. The justices elected a presiding judge, who was commissioned by the governor for a term of two years, and had jurisdiction in probate matters. The office of county and probate judge was made elective by popular vote in 1848, by amendment to the constitution. It was shortly afterward provided that a majority of the justices should elect two of their number, to be known as associate judges, and assist the county judge in the discharge of his duties. In 1873 the office was abolished; a board of three supervisors was substituted for the transaction of county business, and the circuit court was given jurisdiction in probate matters. The constitution of 1874 re-established the county and probate court, and established a levying court, consisting of the county court and all the justices of the county. This arrangement continues.

Judges.—John Bowen, 1836–38; Joseph McMurray, 1840–44; John Berry, 1844–48; D. S. Sanders, 1848–1850; Joseph McMurray, 1850–52; Smith Elkins, 1852–54; S. T. Vaughan, 1858–60; G. W. Seamans, 1860–64; J. S. Polk, 1864–66; G. D. Neill, 1866–68; G. W. Vaughan, 1868–72; F. M. Sams, 1874–76; J. S. Polk, 1876–80; William Deramiah, 1880–82; A. L. Thompson, 1882–84; M. D. Lucas, 1884–88.

ATTORNEYS.

Prosecuting Attorneys were elected by the Legislature until 1848, since when the office has been elected by popular vote of the respective counties. The attorneys for the State in Madison County have been as follows: Fourth Circuit, Alfred M. Wilson, November 13, 1840; A. B. Greenwood, January 4, 1845; H. F. Thomasson, September 6, 1853; Lafayette Gregg, August 23, 1856. Eighth Circuit, C. G. Reagan, January 7, 1865; T. M. Gunter, October 15, 1866. Fourth Circuit, Elias Harrell, August 11, 1868; S. W. Peel, April 26, 1873; E. I. Stirman, October 13, 1876; H. A. Dinsmore, October 14, 1878; J. Frank Wilson, October 20, 1884; J. V. Walker, October 30, 1886.

The Local Bar.—William Houser, a Tennessean, was probably the first representative of the legal profession in Madison County. He came to Huntsville about 1845, but remained only a short time, long enough, however, to establish a good reputation as a pleader. Hugh A. Anderson and J. H. Hobbs, of Kentucky, were the next arrivals. The latter became a member of the first board of State land commissioners, and was appointed under the act of 1850. He was son-in-law to Judge Greenwood, and died at Bentonville some years ago.

Forrester Black was a prominent attorney from 1855 to 1859. He was a man of brilliant intellect, young, ambitious and successful. His death was as tragic as his future was promising. June 24, 1859, on the occasion of a public Masonic celebration at Huntsville, Black and a brother Mason, Warren Sams, became involved in an altercation. The latter drew a knife. Black advanced and fired several shots, killing him instantly. A crowd collected, and, unobserved, the fourteen-year-old son of Sams placed the muzzle of a double-barrel shot-gun close to Black's person, discharged both barrels, and made his escape. Black survived but a short time. The affair created a profound sensation in legal and Masonic circles.

Isaac Murphy was the only member of the local bar who acquired a national reputation. Born at Pittsburgh, Penn., he removed to Sumner County, Tenn., and thence to Washington County, this State, about 1840. He became a resident of Huntsville in 1854, and engaged in the practice of law. In 1856 he was elected to the Legislature to fill the unexpired term of John Berry, deceased. In 1861 he was elected to the constitutional convention as a candidate opposed to secession; May 6, 1861, he was the only delegate on the final ballot who cast his vote against the secession ordinance. During the war he served on the staff of Gen. Curtis. In January, 1864, he was appointed provisional governor by delegates from a number of counties, and in the following March he was elected by that portion of the State not occupied by Confederate forces. His administration was Federal, but non-partisan. He took charge of the State government when there was not a dollar in the treasury, and left it with a fund of $270,000. He retired in 1868, and returned to Huntsville, where he passed the remaining years of his life, practicing law to a limited extent, and was frequently called upon to officiate as special judge. He died in 1882.

Of the present practicing attorneys, James R. Berry is facile princeps. He has resided in the county since 1841, and was admitted to the bar in 1855. He was county clerk, 1852-60; enrolling clerk of the House of Representatives in 1854, and assistant clerk in 1856; receiver of the land office at Huntsville in 1861; elected to the Legislature, 1861; deputy State treasurer, 1862-63; auditor of the State, 1864-67 and 1868-72. In 1872 he was the candidate for auditor on the Reform or Brooks ticket, and participated in that memorable campaign. He returned to Huntsville in 1877, and has since given his attention to the practice of his profession.

Immediately after the close of the war John M. Caldwell, of Washington County, and John Watkins, now of Berryville, located at Huntsville. R. S. Andrews, W. S. Stuckey, A. S. Prather and others have also located here for a short time.

A. M. Brumfield was admitted to the bar of Newton County in February, 1882, after reading law under John O'Day, of Springfield, Missouri. He located at Huntsville in 1882, and is senior member of the firm of Brumfield & Johnson. S. M. Johnson was admitted at Berryville in October, 1883, and in the following month opened an office at Huntsville. His preceptor was Lafayette Gregg, of Fayetteville. These gentlemen enjoy the advantage of having been "to the manor born," and enjoy a lucrative practice.

J. H. Bohlen studied law under Nye & Richardson, Marietta, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar of Washington County, in that State, in 1878, locating at Huntsville in 1883. He was appointed county examiner in 1884, and again in 1886. W. C. Roberts, of the firm of Bohlen & Roberts, was admitted to the bar of Washington County some years ago, and came to Huntsville in 1885.

John H. Chiles was admitted to the bar at Eureka Springs February 9, 1888, and became the representative of the firm of Crump, Watkins & Chiles at Huntsville May 28, 1888. He was educated at De Pauw University, Greencastle, Ind.

Of prominent attorneys from other places who have practiced before the courts at Huntsville mention should be made of David Walker, ex-chief justice of the State; Lafayette Gregg, ex-associate justice; H. F. Thomasson, I. M. Gunter, S. W. Peel.

The following is a list of attorneys admitted to practice at this bar, so far as ascertainable from existing records: Humphrey Enquart, September 25, 1860; Robert B. Polk, September 26, 1865; Stephen R. Stone, April 27, 1874; C. W. Raines, April 27, 1874; J. W. Walker, March 30, 1887.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

HUNTSVILLE.

Incorporation.—November 3, 1877, Huntsville was incorporated by order of the county court, with the following described boundaries: "Beginning at the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 35, in Township 17 north, Range 26 west; thence west two miles to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 33, Township 17 north, Range 26 west; thence south two miles to the southwest corner of Section 4, Township 16 north, Range 26 west; thence east two miles to the southeast corner of Section 3, Township 16 north, Range 26 west; thence north two miles to the beginning." Town officers were elected for several years, but the organization has lapsed into desuetude.

It will be seen from the above that the county seat was exactly midway between the northern and southern boundaries of the county, before its territory was diminished in favor of Carroll. It is probably north of the center of population, but the location is conveniently accessible from all directions. The valley of War Eagle Creek is two miles east, and that of Holman's Creek an equal distance west. The surrounding scenery is of the most romantic type.

Early History.—The southern part of the town site was originally entered by George Sanders, by whom the first house was built. The tract adjoining this on the north was entered by Evan S. Polk. John Sanders, brother to George, seems to have been most actively interested in having the town laid off. This was done in 1837 by Thomas McCuistion, county surveyor. A certified transcript of the plat, dated July 22, 1839, shows seventy-six lots ranging in area from fifteen square rods to two acres. Missouri Street, forty feet wide, and Harris Street, near the center of the plat; Short Street on the west and Wilson's Alley are indicated as the highways extending north and south. War Eagle and Main Streets, the former north and the latter south of the court-house, are each forty feet wide, and extend east and west. The public square is bounded by Short, Harris, War Eagle and Main. Polk and Long Alleys are parallel with Short Street, Swamp Alley with Main. Lots 77 to 82 were surveyed October 1 and 2, 1839, on an extension of Missouri Street, McCuistion Street being parallel, Gage Street and Northern Alley at right angles. A common of several acres, upon which the public spring is located, is indicated on the plat, but the encroachments of adjacent owners have almost deprived it of any existence in fact. The public square has been appropriated by the county, and, if the town has any vested interests in the public property so generously granted by its founder, it would seem to be time some effort should be made to assert its rights.

Having thus planted a town and provided amply for its growth, a name was the next consideration. The vicinity of Huntsville, Madison Co., Ala., was well represented among the early settlers, and while their preference eventually secured recognition, it was not without opposition. At this time the only post-office in the northern part of the county was War Eagle, three miles south of Huntsville, on "the post road from Izard court-house to Washington court-house," and John Buchanan was postmaster. He was also one of the first merchants of the county. Realizing the advantages that his business would naturally acquire by an early location at the incipient county capital, he removed himself and his personal property, including the post-office, thither. Mr. Buchanan was an ardent admirer of Ambrose H. Sevier, one of the most prominent and talented men of the State, and sought to express his feelings by changing the post-office designation to Sevierville. He appears to have met with temporary success, but the wishes of the older citizens at length triumphed.

Joel D. Blair, of Fayetteville, built the first house in the town proper, and opened the first store on the northeast corner of the square. George Sanders started a grocery on the opposite corner, building the second house. In the spring of 1839 H. S. Wilson opened the second store. Thomas Elsey was the first blacksmith. John Long built the first hotel west of the square. The court-house was built in 1838, and by 1840 the place presented unmistakably the appearance of a frontier town. Merchandise was hauled fifty miles from Ozark, on the Arkansas River, which was also the shipping point of such commodities as the merchants exported.

There was a rapid growth during the next decade, and in 1850 there were six large general stores doing a flourishing business. Berry & Adams—H. C. Berry and Abner Adams—dealt largely in live stock, and were known to the agricultural community of half a dozen counties. Their general business was also large. McConnell & Sams, J. C. Pitner, Warren Sams, Forrest & Vaughan and S. E. Kenner were all well-known business men. George Sanders, who had been in business from the founding of the town, died in 1851. Ephraim Norton and John Woods were saddlers in 1850, and had an extensive trade. Everybody rode horseback in those days, and the local manufacturer had not yet been crowded out by larger establishments. The blacksmiths were William Woolen, Jonas Nicely, John S. Polk and Benjamin Titsworth. Miles Robinson, George Spradley and James Hamilton were wagon-makers and carpenters. There were three "groceries," drinking saloons, in the present terms used to denote that business, of which Reuben Harper, Jonas Bevins and B. F. Payne were proprietors. The population in 1850 was 212 whites and 43 colored. The business in 1860, just before the war, was as follows: General stores: McConnell & Sams, John Mosely, Berry & Adams, J. C. Pitner, Vaughan & Forrest, Warren Sams, S. E. Kenner. Groceries: J. Bevins, B. F. Payne. During the war, at one time or another, the greater portion of the town was burned, and business of every kind suspended.

Growth Since the War.—Calvin Evans, from Hindsville, was the first to engage in business after the war, and the second was L. E. Baum, of Fayetteville. Kenner & Buren, Kennan & Wilson, Sams & Bros. followed in close succession. Robert Stone, Johnson & Bros., Wilson & Ellenberg, Wilson & Drake, Sanders & Bros., Berry & Peel, Gage & Phillips, were among the business firms since the war, but are no longer in existence. In 1880 the population was 312. The erection of the academy building, Masonic hall and Presbyterian Church reflect the public spirit of the people and add to the attractions of the town, while the substantial county buildings, recently constructed, render its location as the county seat permanent.

The present business houses are as follows: William Marrs & Co., Sams & Co., A. A. Brodie, dry goods and groceries; Gilliland & Stotts, hardware; Massie & Oeff, Brooks & Williams, drugs; Jay & Gilliland, Hamilton & Cannaday, groceries; G. N. Hiflin, groceries and hardware; Newsome & Shackelford, hotel.

The steam flouring mill was built in 1881 by Col. F. M. Sams, at a cost of $6,400. It has a capacity of twenty barrels per day.

Societies.—November 6, 1851, a dispensation was granted by the Grand Lodge, F. & A. M., of Arkansas, to S. E. Kenner, W. M.; J. G. McConnell, S. W., and G. W. Forrest, J. W., for the organization of Odeon Lodge, No. 44, F. & A. M. The charter was subsequently surrendered, Huntsville Lodge No. 364, F. & A. M., was instituted January 16, 1879, with James Gilliland, W. M.; C. K. Polk, S. W.; John A. Proctor, J. W.; W. A. Gage, J. E. Plummer, P. W. Newton, F. M. Sams, G. T. Berry, C. B. Sanders, John Bowen, William Stotts and Neal Dorsey, as members and officers.

Huntsville Chapter No. 20, R. A. M., was granted a charter October 31, 1857, upon petition of Adam Wood, H. C. Berry and others.

Huntsville Lodge No. 87, I. O. O. F., was instituted June 26, 1884. Charter members: F. O. Massie, W.; B. J. Disney, N. G.; John B. Peach, S.; I. A. Oeff, U.; William Ozier, V. G.

Newspapers.—Some time between 1850 and 1860 W. E. Smith introduced himself to the good people of Huntsville as a printer, and announced his intention to establish a local paper, should sufficient patronage be assured. It was also intimated that provisions, vegetables, etc., would be received in lieu of cash, and during the whole of one summer the prospective publisher fared sumptuously. Preliminary arrangements seem to have required a long time, for the people at length became impatient, and it was not until early autumn, 1852, that the first issue of the Independent appeared. It was sadly disproportionate to the extensive preparations and promises that had been made, and S. E. Kenner, a member of the opposite party, remarked, in language too emphatic for repetition here, to a Democratic supporter of the "organ," that the mountain had been for a long time in trouble, with the proverbial result. After a troubled existence of several months the first journalistic effort in the county expired.

In 1856 J. P. Owen established the Mountaineer, also Democratic, which was removed to Springfield, Mo., following year.

The first number of the Madison County Record, J. H.

Daugherty, publisher, appeared May 31, 1879. The plant was burned December 1, 1879, when the paper suspended until February 1, 1880. December 12, 1884, J. W. Elsey became proprietor, when the name was changed to Madison County Democrat, so continuing until July 18, 1885, when Augustus Lowe secured the plant, and the name became War Eagle Republican, which was subsequently removed to St. Paul. In October, 1885, the Democrat was re-established by J. W. Baldwin. Bohannon & Gage became proprietors in March, 1886, and J. T. Gage, the present publisher, in May, 1886. The Democrat is a fair exponent of the principles of its party, and in every sense adapted to promote the best interests of the county.

KINGSTON.

Early History.—Kingston was laid out in 1853, by King Johnson, an immigrant to Madison County from Middle Tennessee. The public square is situated at the junction of the road from Clarksville to Springfield with the road from Jasper and Carrollton. Lot No. 1 was bought by William Berry and William King, No. 2 by E. H. Basham, and No. 3 by John and Kenner Henderson. The first house was built by King Johnson; the second was the store building of Johnson & Rodgers; the third and fourth were built by E. H. and Allen Basham; the next by the Henderson brothers. The town was named by James McConnell in honor of King Johnson. The first merchant was one Phelps, who retired from business in 1852. King Johnson & William Rodgers began business with the founding of the town, and continued many years. Berry & King, Henderson Bros., E. H. Basham & Co. and one Wilkinson were engaged in business before the war. The population in 1860 was forty-five white and fourteen colored.

Present Condition.—The first house rebuilt after the war (the town having been burned) was the present residence of E. H. Basham, in which — Powell, from Fort Smith, opened the first store. Joel Northcutt and Vellines & Basham were engaged in business prior to 1875. The present business of the town is as follows: Bunch Brothers, Frank Nantes, S. B. Grigg & Son, general merchandise; W. R. Hedgpeth, M. D., drugs; Canfield & Sisco, groceries; J. W. Merideth, photographer; E. H. Basham, wagon and smith shop; Mitchell & Gurley, blacksmiths; Canfield & Williams, steam mills.

Kingston Lodge No. 196, F. & A. M., was instituted November 8, 1866. Original officers: G. D. Neill, W. M.; J. J. Mashburn, S. W.; F. M. Reeves, J. W. The present membership numbers sixty.

HINDSVILLE.

Location.—Hindsville is situated on Section 16 of Township 17 north, Range 27 west, on a small branch of Brush Creek and in the fertile and beautiful Vaughan's Valley, ten miles west of Huntsville, on the Fayetteville road, at its intersection with the road from Wesley to Eureka Springs.

Founding and Growth.—John Hinds, from Warren County, Tenn., one of the earliest settlers of the valley, was the original owner of the site of the town. No regular survey into streets and lots was ever made. In 1868 F. G. Berry bought ground at the cross roads and opened store in partnership with S. W. Peel. This was virtually the beginning, there being but two houses at that time, owned by John Hind and S. F. Hayden. After Mr. Hind's death the property came into control of L. W. Routh and Robert Smyer, by whom lots were sold to various persons. Joseph D. Beavers, Anderson Sanders, Southerland & Youngman (now Mark Youngman), successively engaged in business. Berry & Peel have been succeeded by Berry & Lane, and Joseph D. Beavers retired some years ago. There are two drug stores, of which Drs. Henry Southerland and Simon Ellis are the respective proprietors. Dunaway & Dutton and W. A. Dudley are the local blacksmiths. In 1875 the first steam mill in the valley was built by Zimri Vaughan and J. G. M. Seitz, two miles west of Hindsville. It is now operated by Whitner & Smyer, successors to John Kennan. In 1883 the steam mill at Hindsville was built by John Keeney, Tolbert Lane, Albert Smyer and F. G. Berry; the present proprietors are James Harris and Thomas Lane. The town has a population of about 100.

Little Spring Lodge No. 230, F. & A. M., was organized in 1868, and chartered November 3, 1869, with C. S. Fritts, W. M.; D. R. Johnson, S. W.; L. C. Denney, J. W.; F. G. Berry, S., and eleven other members. Present membership, forty-six. The society has erected a substantial hall.

Hindsville Chapter No. 81, R. A. M., was organized in 1881, with ten members, of whom J. C. Keeney was first H. P. There are twenty-four members at present.

Spring Vale Chapter, O. E. S., No. 28, was chartered in 1884, and has a membership of sixty.

ST. PAUL.

Old St. Paul was founded by John C. Sumner, cousin to Charles Sumner, the great orator and statesman. He was a native of Vermont, removed thence to Texas, and from there to Arkansas, about 1837. A man of natural shrewdness and political capacity, and a Democrat of the most pronounced type, he used to influence the councils of his party, and represented the county in the Legislature. He was postmaster at St. Paul until the Civil War. For a time there was one mail a week from Fayetteville, and afterward St. Paul became a station on the line from Ozark to Huntsville. Old St. Paul never made any great pretensions to village honors, and now comprises a store, blacksmith shop and several houses.

Solomon Lodge No. 293, F. & A. M., at St. Paul, is one of the oldest in the county. Among the charter members were S. N. Welton, William Tucker, R. Stanford, A. L. Thompson, H. G. Brashears, W. R. Brashears, D. M. Cluck and others. The hall, a substantial frame, two-story building, was rebuilt in 1885, having burned October 6, of that year, mainly through the efforts of A. L. Thompson, H. G. Brashears, William Tucker and W. R. Brashears. The membership is about forty.

The New St. Paul is situated upon Sections 4 and 5, Township 13 north, Range 26 west, originally entered by Fielding Salyer and William Ake. The former came from Floyd County, Ky., in 1849. Ake subsequently removed to Texas, and at the time when the town was first thought of J. P. Salyer was sole owner of the site. In the spring of 1887, when it was decided to extend the Fayetteville branch of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway, this farm was noticed with favor by the projectors of the road as its terminus. The river at this point pursues its course at the base of the hills on the south, thus leaving a wide and sloping area, well situated for the purpose. In March, 1887, the town was surveyed by George W. Chase. The streets are uniformly sixty feet wide, numbered from First to Eleventh in order, from the river north, and from A to G, east and west, Madison Avenue being between B and C. H. F. McDaniel and the railway company each received a one-third interest in the town in consideration of their services in laying it out, and in May, 1887, at St. Louis, a division of the property under this arrangement was effected. The railroad was opened to the town from Powell, eight miles distant, July 15, 1887. At that time the house of Mr. Salyer was the only dwelling in the place. A. B. Lewis built a box shanty in June, 1887, and opened the first store. The first house was built by Charles Fierce, in the same month, and was also occupied as a store building. July 20, 1887, J. P. Salyer began business, and G. H. Davis a little earlier. The first year of its history finds St. Paul provided with more than a dozen places of business, as follows: J. P. Salyer, groceries and hardware; Price & Barrow, Coleman, Ogden Bros., general merchandise; William R. Brashears, groceries and dry goods; Lowry & Knight, drugs and dry goods; W. N. Russell & Co., N. F. Gilliland, R. S. Cardin, Guter & Tweedy, J. H. Davis, groceries; D. C. Pritchard, Charlesworth & Harri-gan, feed; R. A. Hazlett, livery; Sweitzer & Samuel, wagon manufacturers; F. P. Sunday, W. L. Gilmore, blacksmiths; George Rivercomb, Glendale Hotel; M. E. Geater, Riverside Hotel; William Dixon, City Hotel; Miller & Shanklin, lumber and grist-mill. The population is about 300. The prospect of steady improvement is most encouraging.

The St. Paul Republican was first issued under that name July 22, 1887, by the original founder and present proprietor, Augustus Lowe. The removal of the plant from Huntsville to St. Paul was made July 16, 1887. Mr. Lowe established the paper at the former place in 1885, issuing the first number July 18, under the name of the War Eagle Republican. The politics of the paper is sufficiently indicated by the title. It is one of the few Republican papers in Northwestern Arkansas and of the most aggressive in the State.

HUNTING PHEASANTS.

SMALLER TOWNS.

Wesley, situated upon Section 26, Township 16, Range 28, in the fertile valley of Richland and Lamar Townships, bears the surname of its first postmaster. Ten lots, constituting the site of the town, were surveyed April 1, 1872, but there had been some village indications previous to that date. The Wesley Joint Stock Company has a large general store. The most important feature of the town is the substantial two-story brick building recently erected by the Masonic order and school district.

Mate Trammel Lodge No. 93, F. & A. M., was instituted November 6, 1867, with the following members: Hezekiah Caldwell, W. M.; Daniel Boone, S. J.; William P. Clark, J. W.; W. R. Lawson, John Clark, G. T. Trammel, Levi Phillips, W. M. Phillips, N. R. Shofner, B. B. Davis, Martin Counts, James Malloy, James Stewart, Elisha Dodson, Frederick King, James Churchwell, C. S. Fritts.

Drake's Creek is named from the family of that name; it is situated at the mouth of Drake Creek, on Section 29, Township 26, and Range 27. The leading business enterprise of the county is the general store of Johnson & Kennan at this place. During the year ending May 16, 1887, $20,000 worth of fruit, eggs and produce was shipped through this firm from Huntsville, Marble, Kingston and other points in the county. The regular business of the firm amounts to $40,000 a year. Johnson, Kennan & Co.'s mill for the manufacture of falloes, wagon bows, etc., at Drake Creek, employs eight men. David Dickey is engaged in the business of saddlery; J. C. Calico is postmaster; John Sisemore and James M. Counts, justices of the peace. The Grand Army of the Republic and Masonic orders are represented. The latter, Johnsonville Lodge, No. 427, was instituted November 25, 1885. Charter members: J. S. P. Johnson, W. M.; R. W. Young, S. W.; G. N. Powell, J. W.; H. C. Johnson, J. C. Johnson, B. F. Johnson, D. M. Dickey, J. V. Roberts, John G. Cobb.

Aurora, on War Eagle Creek, in Bowen Township, comprises ten houses; the general stores of W. J. McElhaney & Co., Sisemore & Son, the drug store of John Williams, M. D., two blacksmith and two wood shops. John W. Upton was the first merchant, and his business was established in 1874. Johnson Bros. followed shortly afterward. J. R. Robinson, the first blacksmith, located here in 1875.

Infanta Lodge No. 437, was organized November 23, 1886, and has sixteen members. The charter members were J. B. Morris, W. C. Cluck, H. A. Reynolds, J. B. Scott, R. M. Wood, J. B. Guinn, J. W. Rawlins, S. B. Smith, H. C. Ledbetter and William Easterling.

The Independent Order Knights of the Horse was organized in 1884 by Charles W. Dennis, G. W. C. The grand president of the order is G. B. Scott, of Aurora. There are several other local organizations in the county.

Marble, in the township of that name, is situated upon Section 7, Township 17, and Range 24. A post-office of this name was established during pioneer times by Jacob Owens, at his store a short distance above the present location of the village. The first predecessor of Mr. Owens was Gabriel Hudson, who kept the office at his house. The village has been built since the war. Its first merchant was William Wilson. Owens & Williams, Sanders & Wann, — Owens, Owen Boydston, Boydston & Wall and E. O. Wall have successively been engaged in business, Howard Bros. & Co., Walter Schubert & Co. and H. F. Schubert being the genealogy of the rival establishment since 1885. W. N. Rutledge, postmaster, carries a line of hardware. The local blacksmith is W. S. Ross. A building used for school, church and society purposes was built in 1876. The lodges that meet here are as follows:

Madison Lodge No. 335, F. & A. M., instituted in 1876, with a membership of eleven, among whom were R. J. Taylor, W. A. Gage, Jacob Owens, R. I. Marshall, Hosea Paiher, Henry Ray, Dallas Coker, J. P. Boatright and Riley Williams.

Marble Lodge No. 92, I. O. O. F., instituted in October, 1885, with six members and officers, viz.: N. L. Sanders, N. G.; W. G. Holland, V. G.; D. M. Boydston, Secretary; W. R. Hedgpeth, B. J. Disney and James Curnell.

Delaney.—Twenty-five miles from Fayetteville, on the railroad leading to St. Paul, is a lumber shipping point of some importance. In February, 1887, William N. Jones opened the first store in a tent. Three stores, Jones & Thompson, Cartner & Reed, and J. S. Stuart, now divide the trade for which one was then sufficient. Dr. W. P. Dapney is the proprietor of a drug store, and J. H. Smith is the local blacksmith. There are a number of steam saw-mills on Davney and Delaney Creeks, in the immediate vicinity.

Combs' Station is so named in honor of Capt. H. Combs, the postmaster, and former owner of the site of the village. The business of Elliott & Thompson, now Jones & Thompson; of Pickens & Hiller, and of Allen & Cartner, respectively, general merchants, has been established since the opening of the railroad in 1887. Hurst & Hansburg are engaged in the drug business. There are two steam saw-mills here.

Powell, during the short time that it was the terminus of the railroad, enjoyed a "boom," and although its former prestige cannot be restored, enjoys comparative prosperity. There are several stores.

Clifty is the trading point for a large section of country north of Huntsville and Hindsville, and is situated in California Township. There are the usual features of a diminutive country village.

Whitner, in Prairie Township, near Hindsville, is the location of a mill and several stores.

Mill Branch Medical Springs, a prospective health resort on a branch of Kings's River, was laid out in July, 1887. Gilbert Hudson is the projector.

MILITARY RECORD.

The Mexican War.—Adj.-Gen. A. Wood, of the Arkansas State Militia, and a resident of this county, organized a company in 1847 for service in the Mexican War. It numbered more than 100 men, of whom only about thirty returned at the close of the campaign. The company was originally enlisted for service as cavalry, but, having been detailed as part of Gen. Scott's command, it served as infantry. Many died of fever at Vera Cruz, and many more were sacrificed in the severe battles that ensued before Scott's triumphant entry into the capital. Very few of these veterans still survive.

THE CIVIL WAR.

The Opening Developments of the Civil War—the secession of South Carolina and the firing upon Fort Sumter—divided public sentiment in Northwestern Arkansas but little different from its effects elsewhere throughout the country. While Democracy throughout the State was overwhelmingly of the Breckinridge type, the supporters of Douglas were numerous in the Northwest, and in Madison County their leader was Isaac Murphy. A resident of the State since 1834, he was elected to the lower house of the State Legislature in 1846 and re-elected in 1848. Here he became known as a man of sterling integrity, and rapidly acquired political influence. After a residence of six years in California he settled in Huntsville in 1854, and in 1856 was elected to the State Senate from Madison and Benton Counties. The Legislature of 1860-61 passed an act for the election of delegates to a State convention to take into consideration the advisability of secession. February 18, 1861, was fixed upon as the date of election. On the 11th day of February Mr. Murphy was prevailed upon by citizens of Huntsville to announce himself as a candidate from that county. Two others were in the field, one of whom was avowedly in favor of secession. Isaac Murphy and H. H. Bolinger, the Union candidates, were elected by a large majority, the former receiving all the votes in a poll of several thousand, except 144. This expression of public opinion is the most conclusive evidence of the loyalty of the people of Madison County. The convention assembled. An ordinance of secession was voted down by a majority of five. May 6, 1861, after a brief period of adjournment, it reassembled upon the call of President David Walker. The ordinance of secession was resubmitted, and adopted with but five dissenting votes on the first ballot. Four of those who had voted in the negative successively changed their votes, but Mr. Murphy steadfastly refused to do so, amid a storm of abuse and notwithstanding the persuasions of former friends. He returned to his home at Huntsville; and while, in the rapid revolution of feeling which at once resulted, his course was not generally approved, the sterling character of the man did not fail to be appreciated.

Home Guards.—Two companies were recruited in Madison County in the spring of 1861, to repel the threatened invasion of the State, one by Patrick Sanders, at Huntsville, and another by Larkin Bunch, at Kingston. They rendezvoused at Huntsville, and became part of Col. D. W. Carroll's regiment, of Pierce's brigade. In the battle of Wilson's Creek, August 10, 1861, the regiment suffered considerable loss, and the companies returned home with greatly depleted numbers.

Regular Confederate Troops.—Five companies of regular Confederate troops were organized in the county in the summer of 1862. That from Huntsville was commanded by John W. Moody; from Bowen Township, by John Parks; from St. Paul, by Hiram Combs; from Hindsville, by Samuel Phillips; from Kingston, by H. M. Moore. They rendezvoused at Elm Spring, Benton County, and, with five other companies from this section of the State, were organized as the Third Arkansas Infantry, of which S. W. Peel was elected colonel, T. D. Berry lieutenant-colonel. For some unexplained reason Peel was removed and followed successively by Cols. FitzWilliams and Adams. The latter was very unpopular. He led the regiment in the battle of Prairie Grove, December 7, 1862; this battle was disastrous to the Confederates, and resulted in the complete demoralization of their forces. Many survivors of the Third Arkansas deserted to enlist in the Federal service. The five companies furnished by Madison County were reorganized in different regiments, and from this time it is impossible to trace their history. It may be stated in a general way, however, that many of them continued in the field until the close of the war, and were principally engaged in the campaigns in the southern part of the State.

In the summer of 1864 John Carroll, recruiting officer, Confederate States Army, organized a company in Madison County, of which he was himself elected captain; J. T. Holt, first lieutenant; William Roark, second lieutenant; W. A. Gage, orderly sergeant. This, with two other companies formed in Benton County, was constituted Maj. James Cooper's battalion, which was assigned to duty in Texas. Capt. Carroll's company was detailed individually as body guard to Gen. Stanwatie, a Cherokee chief in command of a large force of Indians and whites, at Shawneetown, Choctaw Nation. The company returned in a body in the summer of 1865. This was a cavalry company.

Regular Federal Troops.—The following historical sketch of the First Regiment, Arkansas Infantry Volunteers, is from the report of the adjutant general of the State:

"In November, 1862, authority was given by Maj.-Gen. Schofield, then commanding the Army of the Frontier, to Dr. James M. Johnston, of Huntsville, Madison Co., Ark., to raise infantry troops from the State. This authority was general, one regiment to be completed, however, before another was undertaken, and such a course was to be pursued until a different policy should be determined upon.

"Early in the war Dr. Johnson's Union sentiments were avowed, and in April, 1862, being able no longer to remain at home in safety, he left Huntsville with Isaac Murphy, now (1867) governor of the State, and his brother, F. M. Johnson, afterward major First Arkansas Infantry. Arriving at an outpost of the old 'Army of the Southwest,' at Keitsville, Mo., he promptly reported to Gen. Curtis, then in command of this army, and was placed upon his staff as a volunteer aid. Subsequently he rendered valuable services to Gens. Schofield, Totten and Herron, and accompanied the 'Army of the Frontier' on its first march into Northwestern Arkansas, in October, 1862, under the command of Gen. Schofield. Returning with this army to Elkhorn Tavern, he received the authority alluded to, and marched with the army in the campaign that terminated in the battle of Prairie Grove, and, on the establishment of Fayetteville as a post, opened a recruiting office at that place for the First Arkansas Infantry Volunteers. Recruiting proceeded with rapidity, and on the 25th day of March, 1863, the regiment was raised, and Dr. Johnson was mustered into the service as its colonel. The following communication from Maj. F. M. Johnson, then in command, gives some accounts of the subsequent services of the regiment:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST ARKANSAS INFANTRY, }
FORT SMITH, ARK., JUNE 26, 1865. }

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report: 'At the time of the muster in of J. M. Johnson as colonel of this regiment it numbered thirty-six commissioned officers and 810 enlisted men, recruited in the previous sixty days in Madison, Washington, Newton, Benton, Searcy and Crawford Counties. It participated in the battle of Fayetteville, under the immediate command of Lieut.-Col. E. J. Searle and Maj. E. D. Ham, on the 18th day of April, 1863, and marched for Springfield, Mo., on the 25th day of that month. On the 6th day of July it was ordered to Cassville, Mo., where it shortly afterward arrived, and on the 17th day of August joined the Army of the Frontier, under the command of Maj.-Gen. Blount, at Fort Gibson, Cherokee Nation, pursued the rebels under Cooper and Stanwatie, to Perryville, in the Choctaw Nation, and returning to Fort Smith, was the first regiment to enter the garrison, on the first day of September, 1863. Shortly afterward, by order of Brig.-Gen. McNeil, the regiment proceeded to Waldron, and remained there until February, 1864, when it was again ordered to report at Fort Smith, to take part in the movement southward, under Brig.-Gen. Thayer; left Fort Smith with the frontier division on the 24th day of March 1864, forming part of the first brigade, under Col. John Edwards; participated in the battle of Moscow, losing three men killed and several wounded; entered Camden on the 16th day of April, 1864, and was engaged in a reconnaissance of the enemy after the battle of Poisoned Springs; left Camden on the 26th of April, and, as part of the right wing of the Union army, was engaged with the enemy at the battle of Saline River, where it repulsed a strong flanking party with considerable loss to the enemy, and losing no men itself. On the first day of May, 1864, the regiment arrived at Little Rock, and proceeded thence to Fort Smith, where it arrived on the 17th day of the same month, since which time it has been engaged in escort and guard duty on the frontier. The greatest aggregate was in November, 1863, 979 officers and men; the lowest in March, 1865, 774; present aggregate, 788, thirty-one commissioned officers and 757 enlisted men.'

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

(Signed)

F. M. JOHNSON,

Major, Commanding Regiment.

A. W. BISHOP,

Adjutant General, Arkansas.

"Aside from the operations of the regiment embraced in this brief resume, detachments were frequently sent out to succor Union men, a duty which, from their familiarity with the country, they were particularly well qualified to discharge. In September, 1863, it became known at Fort Smith that several hundred men of this class had gathered together from the surrounding country, upon and near Magazine Mountain, whither they had been compelled to flee for security, and though generally having arms of their own, were much in need of ammunition. To relieve them, Capt. William C. Parker, of the First Arkansas Infantry, was directed to proceed with sixty men to their rendezvous, which he did, accomplishing the object for which he was sent. On his return, while crossing Haguewood Prairie in Franklin County, he was suddenly confronted by the rebel general Shelby's command, then moving northward on his well-known raiding expedition into Missouri. A stubborn fight ensued, Capt. Parker slowly falling back until he reached the timber, where the unequal contest was still carried on until, finding himself nearly surrounded, he directed his men to escape as best they could. In this encounter he lost twenty-two men, killed and taken prisoners, but killing and wounding nearly the same number of the enemy. Capt. Parker himself succeeded, with the rest of his men, in arriving safely at Fort Smith, when, instant measures being taken by Col. Johnson to advise Col. Harrison, then commanding at Fayetteville, of Shelby's march northward, the intelligence was quickly circulated through South-western Missouri, and Shelby's movement was in a great measure frustrated.

"As early as the summer of 1862 bands of Union men similar to that relieved by Capt. Parker had, in various portions of Western Arkansas, consorted together, and, though compelled by oppression and violence to leave their homes, were accustomed to take refuge among the hills and in the woods, and no extent of persecution succeeded in driving them from the State. Commonly known as 'Mountain Feds,' they were true to the Union under the most discouraging circumstances, and from time to time gave valuable assistance to the organized forces operating in various portions of the State. To those in command at Fayetteville, Fort Smith, Van Buren, Clarksville and Dardanelle they were especially serviceable, and though it would be difficult, if not impossible, now to recount their exploits, they will long be remembered in Arkansas as men whose loyalty was put to the severest tests, shining out conspicuously when the Federal arm was not outstretched for their relief. Many of them entered various Arkansas regiments, the First Infantry among the number, as the Union army advanced; but not until the rebellion was suppressed did some of them cease their irregular though necessary warfare. * * * *

"In November, 1863, while this regiment was stationed at Fort Smith, about 300 of its men were vaccinated with spurious vaccine matter, a large number of whom were permanently disabled; and many others, whose disability unfitted them for duty, it became necessary to discharge.

"On the 30th of October, 1863, while this regiment was on duty at Fort Smith, a mass-meeting of Union men was held at that place for the purpose of inaugurating measures that should lead to the restoration of civil government in the State, at which Col. Johnson was unanimously nominated to represent the people of Western Arkansas in the Congress of the United States. In November he was elected, and again in October, 1865, for the Third Congressional District. Though thus a member-elect of the Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth Congresses, and necessarily called away from his regiment in his efforts to secure the recognition of the State government by Congress, he served with the regiment when not thus occupied, and with it was mustered out at Fort Smith on the 10th day of August, 1865."

Following is the official roster of the First Arkansas Infantry, in which several Madison County names appear: James M. Johnson, colonel; Elhanon J. Searle, lieutenant-colonel; Elijah D. Ham, Francis M. Johnson, majors; William B. Waterman, surgeon; Thomas B. Drake, Harvey H. Bolinger, Robert B. Campfield, assistant surgeons; Francis Springer, chaplain; John M. Leard, chaplain; Francis M. Sams, adjutant; William Patterson, adjutant; Crittenden C. Wells, Jonathan H. Hewes, regimental quartermasters. Companies B and G were recruited entirely in Madison County. Their respective officers were as follows: Company B, Elitile Haynes, captain; Francis M. Johnson, first lieutenant; Albert K. Berry, second lieutenant. Upon the resignation of Capt. Haynes in 1863, and the promotion of Lieut. Johnson in 1864, Thomas H. Scott and Felix G. Eubanks succeeded to their respective positions. Company G, George W. R. Smith, captain; John Johnson, first lieutenant; Simon P. Smith, second lieutenant. The county was also represented largely in Company A, and in the First Regiment Arkansas Cavalry.

In the autumn of 1863, in accordance with orders from Maj.-Gen. Schofield, then commanding the Department of the Missouri, several companies of Union men were organized in Northwestern Arkansas, the general government issuing arms and ammunition, and when on active service furnishing them with subsistence. A company of this character was organized in Madison County by Capt. John W. Bivens. It was in active service more than a year, and participated in frequent raids upon the enemy and in skirmishes without number. After the unsuccessful attack upon Fayetteville, and the subsequent order for the withdrawal of Federal forces from Arkansas, arrangements were made for the organization of companies of militia; commissions for Madison County were granted to John M. Bivens, March 27, 1865; George W. Seamans, April 18, 1865; Elittle Haynes, April 18, 1865; John Wilkinson, April 18, 1865; Bethel Counts, April 20, 1865; all of whom had the rank of captain, but the conclusion of hostilities rendered the organization of companies unnecessary.

Operations in the County.—There were no military movements of importance in Madison County. In December, 1862, Herron's command (Federals) passed through the county after the battle of Prairie Grove, and encamped several days at Huntsville. This was the first appearance of a large body of armed troops in the county. Skirmishes, impossible to enumerate, were of such frequent occurrence as to excite but little notice at the time. In the autumn of 1863 Col. Brooks, with a force of 600 or 700 Confederates, was met near Marble by Gen. O'Neill with about 1,000 Federals and a number of mounted howitzers. Brooks was en route northward, but was repulsed with severe loss, and pursued to the Arkansas River. Capt. Bivens' company and several others from the Federal post at Fayetteville, to which they were attached, were stationed at Huntsville nearly a year at the close of the war. Bushwhackers were numerous. November 16, 1862, a party of twenty-five men was detailed from Elkhorn Tavern to escort the daughters of Isaac Murphy to their home near Huntsville. On the following day they were attacked by a superior force, within two miles of Huntsville, and put to flight. On the 17th inst. Maj. Johnson was dispatched with a detachment of 200 men, with orders to penetrate as far as Huntsville, and ascertain the strength of the enemy. When within ten miles of the town he was met by accredited loyal citizens, who confirmed the reports of the survivors of the previous expedition. His scouts reported that Huntsville was garrisoned by not less than a brigade, and that cannons were planted in the streets. The major at once retreated, and with such precipitation that several horses were drowned in crossing White River. The sequel would seem to indicate that even a reconnoitering party may be deceived. It transpired that the escort was attacked by a small band of Missourians under Jackman, who had moved northward immediately.

SCHOOLS.

Early Schools.—The earliest educational efforts of the county resulted in the erection of a school and church house in every thickly settled community. One of the earliest of these first school-houses was built a short distance northeast of Huntsville; another in the Alabama settlement, on the site of Alabama Church; another in Bowen Township, a mile from Aurora; another at the old Cumberland Presbyterian camp-meeting ground, near Kingston; another within two miles of Hindsville, Prairie Township; another near old St. Paul, in the southern part of the county. These buildings varied but little in appearance, construction and appointments. They were usually constructed of logs, with puncheon floors, slab seats, without glass windows. As enlarged and repaired, several of these early temples of learning do service in a similar capacity to this day.

Teachers.—Among the early school-masters were John F. King, a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, who taught near Kingston; Thomas McCuiston, county surveyor, from 1836 to 1848; John Wilson, Arkansas Wilson, — Carlton and Isaac Murphy, at Huntsville. Schools were supported entirely by voluntary subscription. J. R. Berry relates that in 1846 he taught a three months' term for $15 and board, from which the rate of pay may be inferred. No great amount of learning was required in the teacher; and when two or more applicants appeared for the same school the one who gave the best evidence of muscular development was invariably employed, other things being equal.

Text Books.—Webster's "blue-back" spelling-book, Smiley & Pike's arithmetic, Kirkham & Smith's grammar, were among the first text books. The Bible was used as a reader, and in some schools English history was a branch of study. The course in mathematics terminated with the "rule of three." Writing books consisted of foolscap, with a copy "set" by the teacher.

Public Schools.—The public school system of the State was established under the constitution of 1868. The county is divided into a number of school districts, as the topography of the country and general convenience of the people require. The erection of districts, apportionment of funds, and levying of special taxes, is under the supervision of the county court. Previous to the war the distribution of sixteenth-section funds, seminary and saline (State) land funds, were distributed under the direction of a county commissioner, elected by popular vote. D. L. Saunders and P. W. Newton filled this position. The office of circuit superintendent was created with the common-school system; its incumbents were W. H. H. Clayton and A. S. Prather, the term of the latter expiring in 1874. Since that date, under the present State constitution, the local executive authority in county school matters is vested in a county examiner, appointed by the county court for a term of two years. This office has been held by the following named persons: O. S. Ragland, 1874-76; D. W. C. Bolinger, 1876-78; Frank Nantes, 1878; N. J. Carlock, 1878-82; R. S. Andrews, 1882-84; J. H. Bohlen, 1884-88.

Statistics.—The first school district in the county, Huntsville, No. 1, with ten others, was erected Thursday, November 13, 1868. The number was increased to fourteen December, 11, 1868; to twenty-one January 4, 1869; to thirty-four January 25, 1869. There were ninety-two districts in 1881, with an enrollment of 4,299. The State fund was $3,124.97 State scrip, and $1,553.11 in cash. The districts numbered ninety-four in 1882. In 1883 the State fund was $3,199.59 in cash, $1,903.28, scrip. In 1884, $5,612.10 in cash, and $1,458.81 State scrip, was apportioned among eighty-four districts. The same number of districts, in 1885, received $5,548.68, cash; $448.32, scrip. The following financial exhibits are from the report of C. C. Sanders, county treasurer:

Huntsville Academy.—About the year 1857 a female seminary building was erected about one-fourth of a mile south of Huntsville, upon land donated for the purpose by John Sanders, who, with Dr. V. L. Sanders, was the principal mover in the enterprise. The Misses Pearson, of Washington County, conducted the school until compelled to suspend by the war, during which the building was burned.

The present academy building, a frame structure two stories high, 61x36 feet in dimensions, was erected in 1881 at a cost of $4,000. The active supporters of this work were Dr. M. Knight, by whom the subscriptions were obtained, W. S. Laurey and W. A. Gage, under whose supervision the building was constructed. The first board of directors consisted of W. J. Sams, A. A. Brodie, Dr. J. E. Plummer, W. A. Gage and J. M. Caldwell. Dr. M. Knight, W. A. Marrs and W. S. Laurey were added in 1884, and, Mr. Caldwell having retired, the present board numbers seven. J. T. Walker, E. D. Tingle, John Sullivan, G. W. Stuckey and W. C. Adair have served as principals in the order of their names.

CHURCHES.

Cumberland Presbyterian.—King's River congregation is the oldest in the county. At the date of the first settlement of that valley a camp ground was established near Kingston, an arbor and other conveniences provided, and here Revs. Buchanan and John F. King preached. The latter was succeeded by Revs. E. Brown, J. G. Henry, A. G. Kendall and J. C. Long, present incumbent. Elders J. G. Brown, John Wiggins, J. D. McCracken, Samuel King and G. D. Neill constitute the present session.

Alabama Church was founded before the war, and has as its pastors, Revs. John F. King, Henry Ray and E. Brown. This was also a place for camp meetings. Since the war Revs. Silas Suttle, A. G. Kendall, W. D. Rudolph, E. Brown, J. J. Henry and J. C. Long have successively officiated as pastors. A reorganization was effected in 1878.

Marble Church was organized by Rev. Henry Ray, before the war. The membership has increased from fifteen four years ago to forty-eight at present, under the pastoral care of Rev. J. C.

Long. The session is constituted as follows: Elders, Posey Parker, Louis Parker, James Hammond, Bradfield Horrell, James Quall; deacons, Jacob Davis, Nicholas Hudson.

Huntsville Church was a strong organization at an early period in the history of that town, when Abner Adams, H. C. Berry and William Boatright were elders. The Presbyterian element seems to have been weak at the close of the war, and not until December 25, 1881, was a reorganization effected. Revs. John F. King, John and Andrew Buchanan preached before the war; J. C. Long is in charge at present. The elders are F. M. Sams, L. R. Parks and W. R. Phillips; deacon, Noel Stringfield. A handsome and substantial brick church edifice, 50x34 feet in dimensions, was dedicated January 1, 1888.

Hindsville Church was organized about the year 1876 by Rev. A. G. Kendall, its first and present pastor, W. D. Rudolph having served in that capacity several years. Present elders: James Harris, A. W. Walker, W. D. L. Keefer, Lafayette Banks.

Harmony Church, in War Eagle Township, was organized by Revs. A. G. Kendall and J. C. Long, the latter continuing as pastor. D. W. Sanders, D. W. Phillips and John Boatright were the first elders.

Spring Hill Church, in Prairie Township, Rev. J. C. Long, pastor; A. I. Berry, Thomas Fullerton, Phillip Smith, Frank Place, elders; Frank Lehmaster, deacon, has recently enjoyed a very successful revival. It was organized since the war by Rev. A. G. Kendall, who was the first pastor.

Pleasant Grove Church, in War Eagle Township, James Cain, J. M. Hawkins, D. W. Phillips, elders; M. I. Phillips, deacon, was organized in 1886 by Rev. J. C. Long, the present pastor.

Kingston Church is the most recent addition to the number, having been organized in 1887, with about twenty members, of whom J. R. Combs, James Arms and — Combs were elected elders, and James Sanders, deacon. Rev. J. C. Long is pastor.

Wesley Church, Lamar Township, was organized before the war by Rev. Luther Bell; a reorganization has recently been effected by Rev. William Washbourne, pastor at present.

All these churches are embraced in the geographical limits of Washington Presbytery.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South.—Huntsville Circuit includes a number of appointments throughout the central part of the county. The preachers upon this circuit since the war have been as follows: Revs. Collins, Brice, Stockton, Fair, Summers, Myatt, Johnson, H. C. Jolly, B. C. McCurry, O. H. Tucker, J. P. Calloway, H. Cummins, J. N. Villines, T. A. Martin and W. H. Corley, present incumbent. The territory was reorganized immediately after the war by Rev. Jacob Shook.

A church was built at Huntsville before the war, and since 1876 the society has been invested with the title to a half interest in the Masonic Hall. The present membership is eighty-five. The stewards are F. C. McCurry and W. A. Marrs. McConnell Chapel, formerly known as Hopewell, is a property owned exclusively by the church and built principally by Abraham McConnell. Membership, forty-six; stewards, Thomas Keeling, John Withrow. Arbor Church, in Bowen Township, near Aurora, has forty-seven members. Stewards, L. E. Parker. The Withrow Church, four miles east of Huntsville, has but a small membership. Samuel Withrow is steward. Alabama Church is one of the oldest organizations in the county, and camp meetings of more than local influence were frequently held here. J. B. Presley and Wiley Burns are the stewards. Pleasant Home Church was organized in 1886 by T. C. McCreery, and a neat house of worship has been erected. Stewards, T. Epperson, William Bailey. Membership, forty. The church on Bohannon Mountain, of which Eli Yarbrough is steward, was organized many years ago, and has a membership of twenty-three.

Hindsville Church forms part of Goshen Circuit, on which Rev. John H. Sturdy is pastor.

Kingston Mission has had the following named pastors in recent years: Revs. Young, Grant, Brice, King, Bradford, Derrnick, Jenkins, Sewell, Burns, Frost, Matthis and Pierce Merrill, at present in charge. Little's Chapel, on Sweden Creek, was built on Government land, and the title is unfortunately unsecured. There are thirty-four members here, and the steward is James Smelley. Bluff Spring Church, in King's River Township, J. F. Bell, steward, has a membership of twenty-three. The class at this place was organized more than forty years ago. About 1843 James Doak gave five acres for a camp-meeting ground; tents and a large stand for public speaking were erected, which were burned during the war, and the meetings have been discontinued. An arbor was built at Bluff Spring in 1880. Pleasant Hill was organized in 1888 with eleven members.

Clifty Mission, Rev. Robert Hardcastle, pastor, includes a number of small organizations in the northern part of the county.

White River Circuit, principally in Washington County, embraces several appointments in Valley and Hilburn Townships. About 1840 Henry Raynor bought three acres of land from John C. Sumner, at old St. Paul, and John Bivens built thereon, under contract, a shed 60x40 feet. Camp meetings were held here for a number of years. Jacob Sexton was one of the first preachers.

Methodist Episcopal.—St. Paul Circuit, Rev. J. B. Orwig, pastor, comprises three organizations, St. Paul, Bollinger's and The Cove. There is a membership of forty at St. Paul, and services are held at a school-house known as White River Chapel. A church building is in course of erection. The membership at Bollinger's is forty-three and at The Cove twenty-seven.

Aurora and King's River, with other points throughout the central part of the county, constitute a circuit under the care of Rev. Wren.

Protestant Methodist.—A church was organized in 1872 in Lamar Township by Rev. Clark Mason; his successors have been Coleman, Smalley, William S. Bartholomew and A. S. Wood. B. B. Davis, Henry N. Sanders and Lawson Pitts were among the first members. The present numerical strength is thirty, and Pleasant N. Gipson is steward.

Christian.—Fairview Church, in Lamar Township, was organized about 1853. Robert Graham, now a professor of theology at Lexington, Ky., was one of the first preachers, and after him Wesley W. Lucas, until his death in 1874. Elders Smith, Baxter and Gage were among the first members. In 1884 this church and the Whitehouse Church in Washington County were consolidated under the name of Wesley Church, with a membership of eighty, by elders D. W. Lucas and Daniel Boone. Rev. T. J. Giddings was pastor for a time, but since his withdrawal a vacancy has existed. Rev. Walker Moore has been called.

War Eagle Church was organized in 1859 by Elder Royal, disbanded in 1861, reorganized in 1867 by S. Bell, and has about fifty members.

Lollar's Creek Church was organized in 186— by Elder Joel Roberts, Joseph Thomas, James Sisemore and C. S. Hawkins being among the first members. Preachers, John Posey, Daniel Cluck, William Johnson, Daniel Boone and David W. Lucas. The church building was erected in 1870.

Whorton's Creek Church was constituted in 1870 by Elder Wiley McElhaney. Present membership, forty.

Mill Creek Church, Hilburn Township, was organized in 1866 by Elders Joel Roberts and Wiley McElhaney, with about twenty members, since increased to 125, under the care of Elder D. M. Cluck. Robert Graham, of Fayetteville, organized a church here as early as 1840, but it disbanded during the war.

Hickory Grove Church, Elder Robinson, preacher, was organized by him in 1885, and has a membership of 100.

Primitive Baptist.—New Hope Church at Kingston was constituted February 12, 1832, by Elders S. Wheet, William Poston and Berty Hachel, with ten members: Isaac Counts, Martha Counts, Elizabeth McElhaney, Joseph Bush, William Gage, Clara Gage, Joshua Whorton, Neely Whorton, and two others whose names are unknown. The church building was erected in 1886 and 1887, and is owned exclusively by this organization. Elders S. G. and Albert Grigg are in charge. The membership is sixty-five.

Richland Church was organized at the residence of John Titsworth about 1833, and continued to meet there about ten years. Among the first members were John Titsworth and wife, Martin Johnson and wife, Jacob Gray and wife, Elijah Drake and wife. There have been a number of preachers, among them Revs. S. Wheet, L. Bishop, David Gage, Young Lamar, Graham Jackson, James Mayfield, Stephen Strickland, Job Hob, George Mainard, Thomas Willis, Clark Johnson, Thomas Dotson, A. P. F. Crawford, F. G. Eubanks, John G. Taylor, Gabriel H. Loving. A log church house was built about 1843, and the present place of worship in 1855.

Concord Church, in Prairie Township, G. H. Loving, pastor since 1878, has fifty members.

Rock Spring Church, in Valley Township, Daniel Blevens, pastor for many years, has a membership of sixty-one.

Drake's Creek Church was constituted in 1874 or 1875 by Thomas Dotson and John Clement. Benjamin Drake and Jasper Duncan are in charge at present, and the number of members is eighty-one.

Mount Pleasant Church, in Richland Township, was constituted in 1878 by Thomas Dotson and F. G. Eubanks, the present pastor. Hartford Church was constituted in 1885 by J. R. Loving, Benjamin Drake and Jasper Duncan.

Washington Association, organized in 1839, embraces all these churches.

Free-Will Baptist.—The first Free-Will Baptist Church west of the Mississippi River was constituted in 1832 by Samuel Whiteley, at the house of David Pickett, on War Eagle, with seven members: Ann and Sallie Whiteley, Polly Pickett, Malinda Combs, John Clarke, Ann Perrott, and one other whose name has not been ascertained. This is now extinct.

Big Fork Church, near Aurora, is an old organization, constituted by Isaac or Samuel Whiteley in 1833. F. W. Blackburn and Robert Lee were also among the early preachers, Jesse Guinn being the present incumbent.

Mount Pleasant Church was constituted in 1880.

Center Point Church was constituted in 1875 by Isaac Whiteley and James Curnutt, with J. M. Green and George Brown as its first deacons.

King's River Church at Marble is an early organization. Harvey McCammich and Gilbert Hudson were among the first members. James Curnutt is the present pastor.

Mount Zion Church, in King's River Township, is under the care of Rev. John Bowen.

Missionary Baptist.—Antioch Church was constituted in June, 1888, with six members. C. J. Lester is pastor. There are others in different parts of the county.

HISTORY OF CRAWFORD COUNTY.

BOUNDARY, GEOLOGY, NATURAL FEATURES, ETC.

The Terraces.—Crawford County is bounded north by Washington County, east by Franklin, south by Sebastian and west by Indian Territory. It is generally understood to be a “mountain region,” but that is “a misnomer,” says an Arkansas Gazette writer, “if it includes not the idea of a system of five great terraces, the rise of which in elevation, the one above the other, is at the rate of fifty-seven feet to the mile.

“As due to the difference in the altitude of the terraces, the uppermost being 1,620 feet above the lowest, and, therefore, as is due to the topography of the country, and to protection against the storms of winter afforded by the Boston range, the meteorology is not the least remarkable condition upon which is founded the general difference from other counties of the State.

“In the immediate valley of the Arkansas, south of the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad, the track of which approaches the base of the third terrace, the annual mean temperature is 66° Fahrenheit. This is the maximum of the county. Throughout the third and fourth terraces, or the belt of country inclosed in the parallels bounding Townships 10 and 11 north, the annual mean temperature is 62° Fahrenheit. While not so indicated in the annual mean temperature, this given belt of country has been declared, after careful hygrometrical measurement, to have the driest atmosphere of any scope of country in the State.

“The annual mean temperature of the highest terrace, which is also strictly the mountain region of the county, is 58° Fahrenheit.

“The superficial area of the five great terraces of the county is in square acres 390,000. From this 79,430 acres are to be deducted as the aggregate area of a system of creek valleys, the head-waters of which are in the Boston range, and the course of which toward the Arkansas, in general, intersects the terraces at right angles. The effect of the valleys subordinated to the terraces has been, not only to build up in the interior of the county a system of extraordinary creek lands with material derived from the upper levels, but it has brought about a drain system which, as a whole, is the best so far encountered in the State. The area of creek valleys is 79,430 acres."

Water.—"The county is well watered by numerous streams, all running from north to south, and the large ones emptying into the Arkansas River. On the west is Lee's Creek, running the entire length of the county, from Boston Mountain on the north line of the county, and emptying into the Arkansas; about the center of the county is Big and Little Clear Creek, rising in Boston Mountain and traversing the county, the latter joining the former, which empties their combined waters into the Arkansas; on the eastern boundry of the county Big and Little Mulberry, rising in the Boston Mountain, running nearly through the county, join and empty into the Arkansas. These are all clear and beautiful streams, and all abound in the very finest fish. In addition to these are several smaller streams. Water for family use is easily obtained by digging, and there are many fine springs in the northern portion of the county. Cisterns are used to a limited extent, and principally in towns."*

Natural Dam.—One of the most remarkable features in the scenery of Northwestern Arkansas is the "Natural Dam." Prof. Owen says it is formed by a solid bed of sandstone, from six to eight feet in thickness, which runs entirely across the bed of Lee's Creek, forming a natural barrier to the descent of the water, in consequence of the gradual dip of the rock up stream toward the northeast, at an angle of four to five degrees, being just the proper inclination to dam the water back, and throw it to a sluice, that might be solidly and permanently fixed to this rock wall near where it runs into the northwest bank.

Stone.—Close to the spring, at the foot of the mountain over which we passed from the Barren fork of the Illinois to Lee's Creek, the Archimedes limestone is in place, 260 feet below the level of the principal mass of corresponding limestone in the section of the northwest slope of the mountain. There is, no doubt, a dislocation of the whole of the rocks of the mountain, with a subsidence to the southeast, which causes so sudden a depression of this limestone.

Half a mile below Alfred Smith's farm sandstone was observed dipping ten degrees to the southeast, the Archimedes limestone being no longer visible above the bed of Lee's Creek.

The high cliffs along Lee's Creek "are composed of sandstones, shales and limestone, belonging to the age of the millstone grit and sub-carboniferous group, the strata gradually dipping down stream toward the south." The heights at Van Buren are composed of similar rocks, the exposed strata being sandstone, grey shale and shaly sandstone, with ferruginous segregations, 30 feet; black and reddish shales, 15 feet; blackish grey shale, with segregations of carbonate of iron, 15 feet; shales, including 18 inches coal, passed through in the steam-mill well below the town of Van Buren, 110 feet.*

At the "Phillips Bank," in Section 18, Township 19, Range 30 west, from which coal was mined to supply the blacksmith trade of the region in 1858, the following section is given: Top of the hill, soil and subsoil; thin bedded sandstone, alternating with red marly clay (base of millstone grit), 25 feet; blue argillaceous shale, with segregations of carbonate of iron, 60 feet; black bituminous shale, with fossil plants, 1 foot; semi-bituminous coal, 1 foot; fire clay, .6 foot.†

Mineral Springs.—The Pennywit sulphur water was tested at the fountain head. Its principal constituents are bicarbonate of lime, bicarbonate of magnesia, chloride of sodium or common salt, chloride of magnesium, trace of sulphate of soda (Glauber salts), trace of sulphate of magnesia (Epsom salts), a trace of free sulphuretted hydrogen.* A spring thirteen miles from Van Buren, and about one mile north of the old stage road, is of similar composition.

The following mineral springs are located in the county:

†Dr. Elderhorst.

White Rock Springs and Sulphur Springs, north of Alma; Three Rock Springs and Chalybeate Spring, north of Uniontown; Oliver Springs and Sangster Springs, near Van Buren; Tapp Springs, near Rudy, and others of lesser note.

Mines.—Interest has been manifested in developing coal, iron, zinc, copper and fire clay, but so far two coal mines are the only effects of this interest.

Products.—The timber embraces gum, cotton-wood, oak, elm, hackberry, walnut, paw-paw and pecan, on the bottom lands; on the uplands, post oak, red oak, white oak, black-jack, black oak, hickory, and some pine and walnut. Cotton: 4,000 to 6,000 bales are shipped annually. Wheat, oats, rye and barley grow finely; corn, forty to 100 bushels to the acre; sorghum does well; Irish and sweet potatoes unsurpassed; entire millet family, timothy, red and white clover, red-top, blue, Bermuda, orchard grass (the favorite); tobacco on the uplands; broom-corn; apples (Peerless, Shannon, Dwight, Ben Davis, Arkansas Queen, Wine Sap and Shockley); pears (Bartlett, Duchess D'Angouleme, Seckel, Virgaliens, Bergamot and Winter Niels); peaches (Hale's Early, Amsden's June, Alexander, Early Beatrice in June, Amelia, Crawford's Early in July, Great Eastern, Lemon Cling in August and Heath's Cling or Eaton's Golden in September); quince, plum, cherry (Morello varieties, Early Richmond, English and Red Morello); grapes (Concord, Ives, Hartford Prolific, Delaware, Herbemont, Clinton and Norton's Virginia, a fine wine grape); fish (black bass, bream, speckled cat, rock bass, sun perch, blue and yellow cat, buffalo, drum, red-horse and suckers).*

The shipment of posts, timbers and ties, and the culture of fruits, particularly apples, peaches and berries, are the leading industries in all but the bottom lands, where "cotton is still king."

Stock.—The chief new breeds of cattle introduced have been the Durham, Holstein and some Jerseys; ordinary work horses and mules are bred; the favorite hogs are the Berkshire and Jersey Red, while Merino sheep represent that class of stock.

ERA OF SETTLEMENT.

Earliest Inhabitants.—It is uncertain whether ancient earth-works now found are those of Indians or Mound Builders; the probabilities place them among Indian remains. "Uncle" Peter Kuykendall, whose keen observation and life as a hunter since 1835 enabled him to know the territory of the county very thoroughly, found in several different places ring-like mounds similar to the rings used in a circus. On the southeast side of Vine Prairie Lake crockery was dug up also. On his own land he plowed up a rock weighing about thirty pounds, which was almost perfectly hollowed out as a basin, capable of holding a gallon of water; afterward many others of various sizes were found and used by the settlers as wash-bowls. The rocks were sometimes round and sometimes square. In the eastern part of the county is a mound of an elongated oval form, somewhat tapering at one end, and is composed of all sorts of rocks and covered with soil and very old trees growing upon it. At its highest point it has an elevation of six feet, and at that point is about thirty yards wide, while its length is given as about fifty yards; it is not impossible that this may have been a monumental mound erected by that ancient race which preceded the Indian occupation of the Mississippi valley. This is on the land of Mr. W. Bollings, on Frog Bayou (Clear Creek). In Section 35, Township 10, Range 31, and on a mountain, is a peculiar rock structure almost solid, and very regular, its dimensions being probably ten feet by six feet by ten feet, and concaved on top in a very regular form. Crockery was found in it by Mr. James Tapps, it is said. There are evidences of abandoned small mines also, from one of which "Uncle Peter" sent ore to St. Louis, which produced in silver, $17.50. In the northwestern part of Cedarville Township, about three miles from that village, are remains of an old fort, with mounds in the interior. Its arrangement is quite regular and gives evidence of some engineering skill in defenses. In some of its walls the stones are set perpendicularly and in others horizontally. From the branch of the creek two parallel walls extend about fifty yards apart. The right one is given as about 450 feet, and from its middle extends another wall toward and almost to the left wall, with a wing to the left making a passage way. This 450-foot wall, after leaving a passage way, is continued for over 150 feet farther, and from its end a wall extends at right angles to the left, over to where the left wall would be if it extended far enough; but the left wall comes only far enough to leave a passage way between its end and the branch of the right wall, and from this end, at right angles, extends a wall toward the right wall and almost to it, and parallel to the end wall, thus protecting this entrance in an excellent manner. This makes a form of about 600x150 feet, using the creek as one end, but an enclosure of about 400x150 feet, using the wall extending from the middle of the 450 foot wall as one end. At the passage way in the right wall is a peculiar arrangement of walls; you may enter the inclosure, but you find you are only in one part, for to your right, two walls, extending from the right and left walls toward each other, and presenting an acute angle toward you, leave a passage way between their ends into the farther apartment. There are numerous legends concerning this fort; one considering it a work of Mound Builders; another that of Indians, and the one most fondly held relegates it to the intelligence of the famous De Soto.

The Indians who are first known to have occupied Crawford County territory are the Osages, a savage nation; but their treaty of 1825 caused them to remove, and only occasionally return for a hunting expedition. During the following years the Creeks, Choctaws and Cherokees came through, and many of the Cherokees settled and were given right of title to their land. They were a largely civilized nation, and had orchards and log cabins equal to their white neighbors. A tradition says that the Cherokees and Osages had a fight just over the Crawford County western line, and a white man with the former, named Lee, was wounded and crawled back to the creek and there died; from this the Indians gave the creek the name "Tu-yah-ho-sah," meaning "where something dies." Lee's name was afterward used. Trails generally followed the water courses. The buffalo seems to have been pretty thoroughly killed off, as the skeletons of them were very commonly seen by the settlers of 1828. The exodus of the Cherokees, following the treaty of 1828, was followed by an influx of white settlers, and all of the possible sources of information give the Indian relations with the whites of Crawford County as peaceful. The white people simply came in and occupied the deserted Indian settlements, and welcomed the Indian hunter when he chose to return.

First White Settler.—David Boyd first set foot on the site of Van Buren in 1818, when cane-brake covered it, and bear, deer and wild turkey were to be seen. Thomas Martin, in his opinion, built the first house there. He saw the overflow of 1833, and witnessed, at Crawford old court-house, the punishment of a criminal, by Sheriff Joshua Brown, by means of public whipping.

The first permanent settlements* in the original county of Crawford were made in 1818-19-20, in what are now the counties of Sebastian, Scott, Franklin, Logan, Johnson and Yell; on Big Creek and the Arkansas River by the Billingsleys, Buchanans, Newtons, Joys, Sumners, Robinsons, Olivers, Wilsons, Howards, and Moores, Dillards and McGees a little later, together with many others; and between Big Creek and Fort Smith, by the Maxwells, Simpsons, Shannons, Marrs, Putnams, Knoxes, Ratcliffs, Saunders, Alexanders, Featherstones, Stagners, Larrimores, Moodys and others; and on the Upper Petit Jean by the Carthrons, Tumlinsons, Arringtons, Frenches, Perkins and others; and at McLain's Bottom (now Roseville), by the McLains, Titzworths, Forts, Marshalls, Scotts, Hixons and others; and about this time a few settlers were scattered along the river at various points from Fort Smith to the mouth of the Petit Jean, among whom were the Cravens, Clarks, Stinnets, Johnsons, Peeveys and others. These early settlers of Crawford County were mostly, it is believed, from the States of Kentucky and Tennessee, and were a most substantial body of yeomanry. It is no disparagement to others to say, speaking of them as a whole, that in point of character, worth and intelligence, they have not been surpassed by any succeeding tide of emigration that ever set toward Arkansas, from that day to this. Many of their descendants are now living in Western Arkansas, some in this and some in adjoining counties. Of this early emigration few are now alive. The Rev. John Buchanan and Maj. John Billingsley, of Washington County (both mere striplings at that day) are among the few survivors.

Soon after the present county of Crawford was attached to and made a part of the original Crawford, many of the settlers removed across the river into the newly annexed territory lying north of the river and south of the Boston Mountains. The first permanent settlements made in the annexed territory were in 1828-29 in what are now the counties of Pope, Johnson, Franklin and Crawford—Crawford embracing them all at that time. I regret that I have only data to give a few of the names of the early settlers of Crawford and Franklin. There were on White Oak the Russells, Gilbreaths, Merideths, Meltons, Huggins, McLaughlins, Lanes and others; the Bourlands followed a few years later. On Mulberry, the Beans, Quesenburys, Russells, Hendersons, Maxeys, Moores, Jesse Miller, Simpsons, Snodgrass, Reeves, Moeses, Williams and others. On Frog Bayou the Corders, Larrimores, Smoots, Scotts, McPhails, Prices, Trammells, Howards, Bashams, Orricks, Mooneys, Peters and others. On Lee's Creek the Moores, Peevehouses, Harrells, Howells, Forristers, Dodges, Blacks, Martins, Paynes, Smiths, Mobleys, Swearingens, Shannons, Barkers, Olivers and others. Among the early settlers of Crawford County may also be mentioned David Thompson, John Drennen, John Henry, Edward Cunningham, the Hindes, the Prices, Whitfield Bourne and others.

The settlers on the north side of the river were very similar in character to those who had settled on the south side; being, in fact, in some instances the same persons, and in others recruits from Lovely County who had been compelled to abandon that county upon its cession to the Indians.

Sparsely scattered over a wide extent of country, these early settlers could not enjoy all the advantages and conveniences of an older and more densely populated country, and yet they did not neglect schools, nor the moral training of the people.

The Cumberland Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists—those earliest missionaries of Christianity in the Southwest—made their advent into the country with the first settlers, and their labors bore abundant fruits in moulding and giving tone to the moral sentiments of our people.

At that early day buffalo, bear, deer, turkey and other game were abundant in Crawford County, and although our pioneers were agriculturists and relied on the cultivation of the soil for a living, yet for awhile they were to a considerable extent dependent on game for a support. Their tastes were simple and their wants few. Maj. Bradford, of the United States Army, who had in 1817 established a military post at Fort Smith, was supplied by them plentifully with buffalo meat, and he in turn supplied the settlers with luxuries to which they had long been strangers, particularly the article of flour, and they for the first time for years enjoyed the supreme felicity of eating biscuit shortened with bear's oil. While the limited supply of corn lasted, to use the expressive language of Maj. John Billingsley, "they had pound cake every day," the meaning of which was that the corn was pounded and reduced to meal in a mortar, and baked into a very palatable bread, which was facetiously called "pound cake." This primitive style of mill for manufacturing meal was soon succeeded by the steel-mill and the horse-mill.

I would here observe that while these early settlers were subjected to some of the hardships and inconveniences of frontier life, they were also exempt from some of the burdens and vexations which a more advanced stage of society has entailed upon their descendants. They were comparative strangers to taxation for the support of government. A small tax of one-fourth or one-half per cent. for county purposes was all they were called upon to pay, the other expenses of the territorial government being paid by the United States. What a contrast between that day and this!

The following description of a pioneer "camp meeting" (from a paper by Hon. Benjamin T. Duval) will serve as an excellent specimen:

In the midst of the forest, the neighbors built log huts for the accommodation of their families and visitors; these were arranged so as to form a hollow square. In the center was a large shed covered with clap-boards, and seats were made of split puncheons laid upon logs; a rude stand or pulpit was erected at one end; around, at convenient distances, scaffolds covered with dirt were put up to make pine knot fires to light the night services. Early in the fall people would gather there from a distance even of fifty miles, with their families and an abundant supply of provisions. The preachers, from four or five to ten or more, would also come from all parts, and meeting would hold a week. At night especially the scenes were impressive and exciting; after a sermon replete with startling appeals to the consciences and fears of the congregation, an invitation would be extended for mourners to come forward to be prayed for, while preachers and congregation were singing. The preachers and older members would go around exhorting, and urging sinners to come forward; after the whole congregation had become excited, members would crowd up around the pulpit, where straw had been strewn; here the mourners would kneel and crouch down, while the preachers would pray over and exhort them; the sobs and moans of the mourners, the sweet melody of the simple hymn, sung with heartfelt energy by the members, the prayers and exhortation of the preachers, with the shouts of those who "got religion," formed a scene at once striking and impressive, and especially with its surroundings. The flickering of the pine-knot fire, as it was stirred by the night breeze, caused the trees, shed, and mass of beings, swaying to and fro under an apparently invisible feeling, to give the picture a weird and unnatural appearance.

The services often continued until a late hour at night, and I have seen a large portion of the congregation shouting and exhibiting the wildest actions, in their subjection to an uncontrollable emotion. Those scenes were repeated night after night, and large numbers were admitted into the church. The opportunities for going to church in those days were rare; the circuit rider could not visit the distant settlements oftener than once a month, and these camp-meetings were seasons of refreshing, not only spiritually, but for social intercourse and friendship.

Here, as elsewhere, a generous hospitality gave the stranger and wayfarer a hearty welcome to the table of all the campers. "Uncle Buck" in those days, as I have said, was a man of might; he braved the dangers of the forests and streams; endured the vigors of the seasons in carrying the gospel tidings, as he understood and believed them, to the people scattered throughout the territory; undaunted by perils, he served the people in the cause of his Master.

A somewhat noted ante-bellum* institution of Crawford County is thus neatly described by an Argus correspondent:

Imagine yourself on a high bluff on Lee's Creek, a thousand feet above its low valleys, in a small log house with a side room, on an Indian trail, with no house in sight, and nothing to cheer your midnight hours save the owls and the Sah-wah-loh (hoe-bird), a peculiar kind of bird that utters one of the most lonely cries a little after dark, which bird can be heard a great distance. Then look a little northwest, a few hundred yards, and see a growth of wahoo, intermixed with some underbrush, witch-hazel and some tall water-oaks, across the Cherokee line, together with some moss-covered rocks on the brow of the hill, and you have something of a description of (Jonathan Roder's) Pike's Peak Saloon on the Cherokee line in Arkansas.

Later Settlers.—The greatest influx of settlers was after the Territory became a State. The settlements were chiefly along the bottoms, Frog Bayou, Lee's Creek, and the Fayetteville and Little Rock roads. The old steamer "Kentucky" brought more Indians from the east, but they passed on through. William Neal came with them. "Old Uncle" Peter Kuykendall was here on Frog Bayou in 1835, and voted on the organization of Arkansas as a State; he voted at Amstead Smoot's, where about forty votes were cast, covering a radius of about five miles. "Uncle Peter" thinks those the balmy days of hunting, when he could in a single day see 120 deer or 300 wild turkeys, and bears, panthers, wild-cats, foxes, wolves, all through the canebrake and upon the mountains. Rude farming and hunting were the occupations of these early settlers, and they were good marksmen; almost every Saturday there would be a shooting match. "We'd put up a big beef, and shoot sides for it," said "Uncle Peter," and one of the largest stakes to be won was $100 (about 1839), at a match between the Lathams, Couches, "Uncle Peter" and others, in which "Uncle Peter" won in seven shots. It is not known whether "Uncle Peter" took his defeated comrades over to Couches' "still" and cheered them with some of the peach and apple brandy that was to be found there; he didn't say. If he didn't then it would not be improbable if they had some "reels and square dances" that night, for the settlement had a "sucker fiddler" by the name of "Bill" McLaughlin, from Illinois. He might have proposed an old-fashioned "North Carliny corn-shuckin'" or a "quiltin'," but probably not, for he remembers the dances better, although it is said he was but a spectator; an observant one, too. "They wuz a heap uh perty wimmen thar," said "Uncle Peter," "and a dod-blamed perty black-eyed widder." He tells of a new-comer at one of these dances, in which it seems that the local swains looked with disfavor on intruders; but the new-comer was courageous, and concluded to win them by a frank confession of his abilities; he made a conciliatory appeal and ended up with the clincher: "I can dance as good serviceable dancin' as any man on the floor," after which, it is presumed, he had no trouble in winning the hand of the "dod-blamed perty black-eyed widdier" for a reel. "Yes, that wuz the way, son," said "Uncle Peter." James Kuykendall and Ira Smoot were here the first justices.

Keel boats and canoes were used upon the river and creeks. Capt. Pennywit owned two steamboats, "The Little Rock" and "The Arkansas." The oldest road was probably that from Old Crawford court-house up Frog Bayou, on to Cedar Creek and Lee's Creek to Washington County. Mails were carried on horse-back to Van Buren, and there distributed to Fayetteville, Fort Gibson and Fort Smith. Travel to Little Rock was often done by caravan, horses or mules packed, and four or five tied together, the second being tied to the tail of the first. Phillips' Tavern at Phillips' Point was a place for travelers. It was a two-room log house, and often, it is said, "Uncle Johnny Buck" (Buchanan) would be holding services in the front room, while a game of faro was in progress in the back room. Travelers would often have to frequent John Bostick's blacksmith shop to have their horses rhod; and upon one occasion he did such a job for "Uncle Buck," but assured the reverend old gentleman that he made "no charge except to be remembered in your prayers;" whereupon the practical "Uncle Buck" rejoined, "Come right back here and kneel down; for I don't want to be indebted to anybody!" It is said that the blacksmith withdrew his exception.

Indian trading was a considerable business, and small stores were scattered all over the county; large droves of cattle were raised in the canebrake; fine fish were caught, and beaver and other trapping was followed.

Soon after 1836 William G. Shannon and Hezekiah Taylor were on Cedar Creek, and not far distant was William Hargraves and William Whitehead. George Miller, a Mrs. Crim and her sons, and George Nettles were all on this creek.

On Mountain Fork of Lee's Creek a Mr. Larrimore owned the first mill at Natural Dam. Andrew Morton, W. Duval and another gentleman bought out Larrimore about 1838-39, and opened a store. Near Main Lee's Creek were Mr. Black, David Allen, Mr. Elmore, a merchant, Jack Hargraves, Clementine Mobley, David Mobley, John Shannon, Hiram Brodie, a Mr.

Hart, and Joe Bryant; and on the creek were Eli, Richard and William Oliver, Mr. Blackburn, Mr. Courtney. Below Natural Dam were the Widow Fort, "Bob" Harris, Jim Black, George Foster, H. Foster, Parker F. Stone, Andrew Lester, Daniel Pevyhouse, I. B. Vinsant, G. S. Foster, Thomas Walden and George Stone. On the Cedar Creek road to Van Buren were Gooding's Mill, Jesse Stewart, Abe W. Jackson, the Widow Walters, Mr. Hancock, Mr. Taber, Lucretia Mayes, Mr. Forester, "Old Man Miller," D. P. Collins and William Mussett. Old Mr. Shannon's place and Mr. William Neal's place, not far from the present site of Cedarville, were settlements, and there were but about sixty in the township. Mr. Shannon was the first justice there after the State was admitted, and Mr. Matlock was a constable. One of his cases was a levy upon the wagon of a man about to leave the county, and owing "Uncle Billy" Neal for a steer. In "the forties" a store at Henry Elmore's, on the Fayetteville road, and one at Natural Dam, were probably the only ones outside of Van Buren, and no post-offices except that of Van Buren in the county, until late in that decade at least. There were but two grist-mills—that at Natural Dam and Stewart's old mill, near the present site of Lancaster. Natural Dam is probably the oldest settlement in the county, and probably the Shannon settlement, about Cedarville's site, the next, although this is not certain. Logtown (Collinsville or North Van Buren) is an old settlement dating to the arrival of the Widow Powell, who came there from Lovely County in 1828. A Mr. Locke was the first settler about Dripping Springs, and George Matlock opened the first store there. The debts of these days were paid in trade or "peltries;" these were deer-skins with the hair shaved off, and were valued at about $3 apiece. The honesty—said to be peculiar to those times alone—is illustrated by the following custom: There would be several in a hunting party, each of whom would secure a number of pelts. These would be hung together on a tree near some frequented place to cure; one danger to the hides was bugs, so that any one who passed would feel it his duty to "bug" every hide, whether he owned any of them or not, and none were ever stolen. One little feature might be added to show that these honest settlers were human, namely, that as the peltries were sold by weight there would be an occasional forgetful memory which would leave some flesh on the hide, and work sand into it to keep it from spoiling ! Bee trees were considered public property, and no honey was wasted; a hole would be cut in the tree, and all that was needed for a sugar substitute was taken out, and a plug placed in the hole.

ORGANIZATION.

County Formation.—It is uncertain who was the first white man to enter Crawford County territory, but it is certain that only a comparatively few miles prevented that man from being the great discoverer De Soto in April, 1541. That it was a part of French Louisiana until 1762, Spanish until 1804, when it was transferred to the French and the same day became our own, affected it only in name. In 1812 it was included in the District of Arkansas in the Territory of Missouri, and on March 2, 1819, became part of the Territory of Arkansas. It can hardly be said that Crawford County was created by the first legislative body of Arkansas Territory, for the first, held at the Post of Arkansas in July and August, 1819, was composed of the governor and supreme judges; a special session, composed of the council and House of Representatives, convened in February, 1820, at the same place, and it was a special session of this body, held in the following October, in which "an act to divide Pulaski County" was passed and approved October 24, 1820. This act created a new county, composed of most of the territory now embraced in Yell, Logan, Johnson, Franklin, Scott and Sebastian Counties, and part of Indian Territory, and it was named in honor of William H. Crawford, secretary of the treasury under President Monroe. It is seen that no part of the present county of Crawford was included in this new county; by a treaty in 1809, between the Indians and the United States, the present territory of Crawford County was a part of Indian Territory.

The first seat of justice of Crawford County* was located temporarily at the house of John Jay, on the south side of the Arkansas River, half a mile above the point on the river now known as Crawford Old Court House. The commissioners appointed by act of the General Assembly of October 22, 1821, to make permanent location of the seat of justice, were Clark Sanders, John McLain and John Wilson, who, it is believed, made the location near the present residence of Mrs. John D. Arbuckle, about three miles west of Crawford Old Court House. An act of the General Assembly of October 24, 1821, enlarges the boundaries of the county on the southwest, and an act of October 30, 1823, made some changes of boundaries in what is now the Cherokee Nation, but did not materially enlarge or diminish the area of the county. By an act of October 30, 1827, all that portion of the county of Crawford known as "Lovely's Purchase," and certain adjacent territory not previously apportioned to any county in the territory, the boundaries of which were particularly described, was created into a separate county of "Lovely." The county of Lovely embraced the greater part of the Cherokee Nation, and (it is believed) the present counties of Washington, Benton and Madison, and must at that time have contained nearly or quite 5,000 inhabitants. The Western Cherokees, by treaty with the United States of 6th of May, 1828, having ceded to the latter their lands north of the Arkansas River, included in the treaty of 1817 and convention of 1819, embraced mostly in the present counties of Pope, Johnson, Franklin and Crawford, for which the United States ceded to the Cherokees the county embracing Lovely County and some other territory adjacent thereto (the present Cherokee Nation), the General Assembly, by act of October 22, 1828, attached the Indian country thus acquired from the Cherokees to and made it a part of Crawford.

A paper by Hon. Ben. T. Duval, read before the State Historical Society in 1882, says: "By treaty made at St. Louis on the 25th of September, 1825, between William Clark, governor of Missouri Territory, and a full and complete deputation of considerate men, chiefs and warriors of the Great and Little Osage Nation, the territory within the following bounds, to wit: 'Beginning at Arkansas River, at where the Osage boundary line strikes it, at the mouth of Frog Bayou; then up the Arkansas and Verdigris to the falls of the Verdigris; thence eastwardly to the said Osage line at a point twenty leagues north from the Arkansas River, and thence to the place of beginning,' was added to the United States. Lovely's name does not appear in the treaty. For this cession of territory the United States agreed to pay their own citizens the full value of such property as could be legally proven to have been stolen and destroyed by the Osages, not exceeding the sum of $4,000. This ceded territory was included in the limits of Lovely County—in fact, was Lovely County.

By an act approved October 20, 1828, it was made the duty of the "clerk of the circuit court of Lovely County to transmit to the clerk of the circuit court of Washington County all records, dockets, vouchers and other papers remaining in his office."

Since Lovely County covered a part of the present Crawford, the following letter from Col. Thomas Moore, of Franklin, Tenn.,* may throw some light on it:

I moved with my father's family to Crawford County, Ark., in 1821, and settled five miles above Crawford Court House. The names of the lawyers that I remember, who practiced in court at that time, were Col. William Quarles, William Oden, William Cummins and Robert Crittenden. Alexander McLean was clerk;* and I believe James Woodson Bates was judge of the court.† The name of the Cherokee agent was Loveless (not Lovely), and the purchase, I suppose, was made by him and named for him. His widow lived many years near the old Dwight Mission, in the Cherokee Nation, not far from Dardanelle.‡ After the white people commenced settling in the Purchase, commissioners were appointed to lay off a county seat, Gen. John Nicks being one of them. The town was laid off and named Nicksville in honor of him. I was appointed sheriff by the governor of the Territory, and John Dillard, Esq., appointed county clerk. My brother Benjamin was my deputy. We, with our families and my brother, also Dr. J. D. McGee, moved up from Crawford County in March, 1828, and settled in Nicksville (the exact spot where new Dwight Mission was founded). Not long after we moved there court was held there, and only one. I do not recollect the names of the lawyers, except Mr. Robert Crittenden, of Little Rock, and Col. Franklin Wharton. Judge James W. Bates presided. Mr. Wharton Rector was there. I don't know whether he was a lawyer or not. In May, of the same year, an edict came from the authorities at Washington City, that all settlers must leave, for the purchase had been exchanged for the Cherokee lands below, on the north side of the Arkansas River, and all males over twenty-one years of age, who had made an improvement, would be entitled to 320 acres of land to remunerate them for their losses. A rush was made by speculators and others to Loveless County to buy all the claims that they could, etc. So the newly acquired county was soon settled, and Nicksville was short-lived. I fear I have given you but little satisfaction, but it is the best I can do.

The following is taken from the address of Hon. Jesse Turner, at Alma, July 4, 1876:

By an act of November 2, 1829, the county of Pope, embracing the present county of Johnson, was formed out of the eastern part of Crawford. By an act of November 5, 1833, the county of Scott was formed out of the southern and southwestern part of Crawford, and by act of December 18, 1837, the county of Franklin was formed out of the eastern part of Crawford. The county of Sebastian embraces all that part of the county of Crawford which remained on the south side of the river, and was created into a separate county by an act of the General Assembly of 1851.

Thus we see the United States acquired the present territory of Crawford County in 1825 from the Osage Indians; that the Cherokees seemed to have been given rights of settlement in the same before 1828; that on May 6, 1828, the Cherokees relinquished this right; that it became a part of Crawford County on the following 22d day of October, and that it became the entire county in 1851.

While the boundaries of the county were undergoing repeated changes from the formation of new counties out of its territory, the seat of justice was far from being stationary. After its temporary location, it was located about the year 1823 near the present residence of Mrs. John D. Arbuckle, but was afterward at Fort Smith, McLain's Bottom (now Roseville, Crawford Old Court House, Whitsontown, on Big Mulberry, and finally at Van Buren, where the courts have been held since 1838.*

*The date 1821 or name Alexander McLean is wrong; for Henry Bradford was clerk in 1821—Ed.

The public square † was donated to Crawford County by David Thompson and John Drennen, the original owners of the town site in the year 1839, on condition that Crawford County should locate the seat of justice at Van Buren. The county, by a vote of the people, in that year did locate the seat of justice at Van Buren upon the public square. The proposition to donate this ground for public purposes was in writing, and is probably still in existence, but it is believed no formal deed to the county for the property was ever made by the donors. In 1844 or '45 the county court deeming it best to procure from the court of chancery a decree for title to this property in pursuance of said donation, employed me to institute suit for that purpose. Suit was brought, John Drennen and the Thompson estate being defendants, and they at once admitted the charges; upon this hearing the court decreed absolute title. The following is the proposition, brought to light by the efforts of Alma to secure the county seat:

TO MESSRS. BROWN, GIBSON AND KNOX, COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF CRAWFORD AND STATE OF ARKANSAS FOR LOCATING THE SEAT OF JUSTICE, ETC.:

Gentlemen: We, the undersigned, will make as a donation to the county of Crawford, Block 14, in the town of Van Buren, containing sixteen lots. Each lot contains thirty-three feet front, and 127 feet back, with a ten-foot alley running through said block. The block of lots, No. 14, agreeable to the town of Van Buren, is well situated to make a public square, and an eligible site for a court-house. According to a correct calculation, the donation will contain something upward of three acres of ground. We, the undersigned, will make a deed in fee simple for the said block of land (No. 14), provided said commissioners will place the court-house and jail of said county of Crawford, on said block of land.

Given under our hands, at Van Buren, March 15, 1839.

DAVID THOMPSON.

JOHN DRENNEN,

By his attorney in fact.

The actions of the county court, previous to 1838, would properly be treated in the histories of counties in which the county seat was then located. The destruction of the records from 1838 to 1877 make the acquirement of information concerning the organization of civil townships, polls, issuance of scrip, bridge warrants, and other county actions of importance, practically impossible. Under Judge Sangster a large amount of ten-year scrip was issued, and soon this was redeemed by bonds bearing 10 per cent, but all of these were redeemed previous to 1878. In 1873 bonds were issued for ten years bearing 8 per cent to the amount of $13,000, but these were also redeemed within five years or thereabouts. These are the most important issuances. The custom of issuing scrip or warrants for bridge building and other county purposes has long been in vogue by the county, and is still the method in use. The county has no poor-farm; land was bought for one previous to the war, but it was soon afterward sold.

On the night of the 23d inst. the Crawford County court-house, at Van Buren, was destroyed by fire, nothing remaining but the outer walls. The fire was discovered a short time after midnight; the alarm sounded. * * * * Efforts were made to save the records locked up in the county clerk's office, in the northwest corner of the building, second floor, but of no avail. No ladder was at hand, and the window could not be reached. When a ladder was secured and raised to the window, the flames had reached the rooms and rendered it impossible to effect an entrance. All the papers and records of the county, together with about $4,000 in county scrip, allowed by the county court, and issued by the clerk, but which had never been called for, were consumed in the flames. * * * * The loss of the court-house sinks into insignificance when compared with the loss of the records of the county. * * *

It was supposed to be an incendiary's work. Mass-meeting's were held and rewards offered for the offender; the city council voted a two and a half mill tax for two years, to build a joint court-house and city hall. The county court, in April, 1877, also ordered the court-house built on the old walls on the citizens' plan, and ordered a tax of one and one-half mills on the dollar for that purpose. This was not done, however, before Alma, headed by Col. M. F. Locke, had petitioned for a vote on the question, which was granted, and after an exciting fight the election was decided for Van Buren, by a vote of 1,042 to 842.

The first record of the Crawford County Court now in existence reads as follows:

APRIL 16, A. D. 1877.

WHEREAS, On the morning of the 24th day of March, A. D. 1877, the court-house of the county of Crawford, in the State of Arkansas, was burned, together with all the records, books, papers, etc., belonging and pertaining to the county court of said county, on file in the clerk's office of said court, and,
WHEREAS, On the 4th day of September, A. D. 1876, J. C. Chapin was duly elected county and probate judge of the county of Crawford, in the State of Arkansas aforesaid, and afterward was duly commissioned by the governor of said State as such judge, which commission is in words and figures as follows, together with oath of office of the said J. C. Chapin, to wit: [Here both are inserted.—Ed.]

And now on this 16th day of April, 1877, the day as established by law for holding the regular term of the county court of said county of Crawford, at the town of Van Buren, which is the county seat of said county, in a room in the Pennywit Block of said town, the said J. C. Chapin, as judge aforesaid, appeared at the hour of 9 o'clock, A. M., together with the clerk of said court and the sheriff of said county, and, by the order of said judge, said sheriff then and there proceeded to, and did in that place, open the county court of Crawford County, Ark., for the April term, A. D. 1877, whereupon the following proceedings were had, to wit: [Here follows allowances for destitute persons, preliminaries for the rebuilding of the court house, and the provision of a court-room to be used until the new building was erected.]

A half-mill tax was levied, and Samuel Martin with A. B. and Josiah Howell were appointed commissioners for the erection of the building on the old walls, and $6,500 was appropriated for that purpose. F. Adams was the architect, and R. L. King was the first contractor accepted, but he failed to file a bond.

SOCIETIES, ETC.

The Crawford County Immigration Society was organized May 3, 1877, at the court room in Van Buren, by Hon. H. F. Thomason, a county vice-president of the State Immigration Society. J. C. Chapin was chosen secretary. The members were as follows: Jesse Turner, Sr., L. C. White, Henry Pernot, M. Lynch, D. C. Williams, W. H. Gill, J. G. Peevey, C. F. Brown, W. L. Taylor, E. A. Scott, A. M. Bourland, A. O'Brien, A. Smith, S. D. Daugherty, C. F. Harvey, P. Richards, John Brodie, A. J. Ward, D. Dickson, L. Graf, Henry Shibley, George C. Thayer, J. D. Hawkins, D. W. Moore, Levi Chapman, G. Wilcox, G. Wood, J. Chapman, F. R. McKibben, W. J. Neal, J. B. Ogden, H. F. Thomason, J. M. Baxter, C. Reeve, N. F. Cornelius, J. A. Wade, J. W. Cary and J. C. Chapin. "The object of the society is to induce and facilitate immigration, by collecting and transmitting reliable information to capitalists seeking investment, and also to parties in other States desirous of seeking new homes, regarding soil, climate, different branches of business to be pursued with profit in the county of Crawford."*

This organization has been one of the greatest instruments in Crawford County development. From time to time they have shown up the resources of the county in the local and Little Rock papers, corresponded with other societies, issued pamphlets, etc., and encouraged every enterprise tending to augment the county's development.

The Patrons of Husbandry, so famous in its short life, grew to goodly proportions in Crawford County, and withered away, as it did elsewhere, and at about the same time. Crawford County Council was organized at Alma February 6, 1874, by five granges, represented by the following masters: M. F. Locke, of Alma; D. Michael, of Van Buren; C. C. Holland, of Arizona; R. Hill, of Lafayette, and J. Winters, of Prairie Grove. Van Buren and Alma were chosen as alternate places of meeting. The order was at the zenith of its prosperity and size in 1874, when the complete list of granges in Crawford County was as follows: Crawford Grange, James Sangster, M.; Mulberry Grange No. 137, Z. Hopper, M.; Sarah Grove Grange No. 61, J. S. Matlock, M.; Alma Grange No. 29, M. F. Locke, M.; Prairie Grove Grange No. 178, J. Winters, M.; Shamrock Grange No. 74, F. C. Oliver, M.; Van Buren Grange No. 38, D. Michael, M.; Lafayette Grange No. 40, R. Hill, M.; and Oliver Springs Grange No. 347, J. S. Boatright, M.

The Crawford County Agricultural Society was organized September 10, 1859, at Van Buren, Isaiah Vinsant, chairman; secretary, Gran. Wilcox. Messrs. Burrow, Hays, Woosley, Kuykendall, Brown, Thruston, Stevenson, Matthews, Heard, Walden, Dibrell, Brodie, Maxey, Southmayd, Scott, Steward and Foster were present, and the officers chosen were president, N. B. Burrow; vice-presidents, Jesse Turner and Isaiah Vinsant; treasurer, R. Pernot, and secretary, G. Wilcox. The war, of course, closed the career of this society.

The Crawford County Agricultural and Mechanical Association was organized July 10, 1869, at Van Buren. M. F. Locke was chairman and John B. Ogden, Sr., secretary. Among the organizers were J. Baxter, R. Thruston, B. J. Brown, Gran. Wilcox and C. F. Harvey.

The Crawford County Horticultural Society was organized in January, 1887, with the following officers: E. Arkbauer, president; F. Smetzer, vice-president; H. A. Meyer, secretary; H. C. Miller, treasurer. The object of the society is the encouragement of fruit growing and berry culture, and for the protection of those engaged in such culture. At their meetings reports are made as to the condition of plants, trees and vines at various seasons. There is no doubt that the society has been, and will be, a powerful influence in the promotion of this new industry.

The Crawford County Medical Society has had a variable existence, and has been organized under different names at different periods. The original society had a meeting in May, 1847, and had the following officers: President, Dr. R. Stevenson; secretary, J. H. T. Maine; censors, J. H. Bailey, J. A. Dibrell and C. F. Brown.

The Van Buren Board of Health might be mentioned in this connection. It was established in April, 1866, with the following members: Chairman, H. Pernot, and Dr. White, Dr. Bourland and Hiram Brodie as sanitary committee.

The Crawford County Medical Association was organized November 15, 1875, at the court-house, by Drs. H. Pernot, A. M. Bourland, W. T. Black, L. C. White, C. F. Brown, J. H. Decherd and W. L. Cathey. The officers chosen were President White, Vice-President Black, Treasurer Pernot and Secretary, Cathey. Resolutions were passed against quacks and non-graduates. The society afterward gave way to others.

The Van Buren Medical Society, successor to the Crawford County Medical Society, was reorganized in April, 1886, at Van Buren, by the physicians of the city: Drs. Dibrell, Brown, Hynes, White, A. M. and O. M. Bourland and Coryell. The following officers chosen are still the incumbents: President, C. F. Brown; vice-president, G. F. Hynes; treasurer and secretary, O. M. Bourland. The society have but eight members, but have had delegates to represent them in the State and national associations of their profession.

RAILROADS.

The Little Rock & Fort Smith Railway was organized in 1853, the first president of the company being John Drennen, of Van Buren. The growth of the enterprise was very slow, but the large number of stockholders in Crawford County were persistent, and the company complied with the terms of the congressional grant, and secured an immense amount of land, not only in Crawford County, but all along its line, gaining alternate even sections for six miles on each side of the track. After Col. Drennen's presidency the Hon. Jesse Turner, of Van Buren, held the office until about 1866. It is well known that Presidents Converse and Gould have since been the executives. Judge Turner became vice-president, in 1874. The first vice-president, George W. Clarke, and Secretary John B. Ogden, were Van Buren men. During the fifties Capt. Barney surveyed the route, and the bed for twenty miles south of Van Buren was prepared. The citizens of Crawford County had invested about $15,000. Work was not begun again until in 1869, and in August, 1871, 120 miles were completed, and the total stock, bonds, etc., were valued at $9,400,000. At 8:30 p. m. on June 24, 1876, the first train entered Van Buren. The road continued up the river to opposite Fort Smith, and used transfer there until the erection of the present Frisco bridge. The road has had a considerable effect in Crawford's development, but chiefly as a better substitute for river conveyance.

The Kansas & Arkansas Valley Railway, although of a later date than the Frisco, may be mentioned here, for it is really an extension of the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad. It runs directly from Van Buren to Wagner, I. T., and was completed, and the first train run from Van Buren over its line, on August 13, 1888. Its repair shops will be at Van Buren, and its control of the Indian country trade will add greatly to the business of the Crawford County seat. Judge Jesse Turner, of Van Buren, is a prominent director and stockholder. This company was first given fifteen acres by the citizens, and afterward the Van Burenites gave land on the south side of its track, 132x1,288 feet.

The St Louis & San Francisco Railway was the first successful effort of a great many to open a line from Van Buren to the trade of St. Louis and Kansas City. The Van Burenites took $10,000 of stock in this road. It was practically completed in the middle of 1882, and this led to the building of a union depot at the crossing of the roads, although the freight depot is situated at the upper end of Main Street. About the same time their splendid steel bridge, across the Arkansas River near the old ferry, was completed, at a cost of probably $400,000.

The first passenger train over the Arkansas division of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway rolled into this thriving and important trading center at 6 o'clock this evening. Nearly half the 1,500 population of the city awaited the arrival of the train at the handsome new depot. * * When the train, drawn by an engine, brave in garlands and floral decorations, pulled up at the depot, a battery stationed on the summit of the neighboring bluff boomed forth a deep-mouthed welcome, and the bells in every church tower united in a jubilant peal, announcing that the long waited and worked for hour had arrived, when St. Louis and Van Buren were united in the iron bands of free and uninterrupted commerce.*

Large numbers of excursionists from all points to Springfield were aboard, and these were welcomed by a committee composed of Hon. Jesse Turner, Sr., Hon. B. J. Brown, Capt. R. S. Hynes and Capt. H. C. Hayman, who escorted them to a banquet at the court-house. So, probably, the most important commercial event in the history of Van Buren and Crawford County's career was ushered in, and from that moment dates a remarkable revival and development in not only Van Buren and Crawford County, but all Northwestern Arkansas. It was a transformer; made the region a fruit and vegetable region equal to any in the United States; made it a sought-for home, where before it was almost unknown.

The Arkansas Northern Narrow Gauge Railroad, organized under State laws, was surveyed in 1882, from Van Buren, up Lee's Creek and bearing off toward the western State line in the direction of Joplin. Work has been attempted several times in grading, but for some reason it is still suspended.

The Northwestern Border Railway Company, chartered in March, 1867, was one of the futile efforts to open a railway taking the general course of the "Frisco Line," and several thousand dollars were subscribed. Its successor, The Arkansas Western Railway Company, chartered in May, 1870, suffered the same fate, and many other efforts came to naught.

President—Hancock, 1,138; Garfield, 974; Weaver, 48. Governor—Churchill, 1,387; Parks, 1,135. Senate—Thomason, 1,366; Creekmore, 1,153. Representatives—Nettles, 1,295; Robertson, 1,240. County Judge—Hale, 1,404; Lamb, 1,174. Sheriff—Houck, 1,285; Taylor, 1,282. Clerk—Southmayd, 1,612; Scott, 967. Treasurer—Ward, 1,297; Renfro, 1,262; Amendment—for, 1,821; against, 441.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The first officers of Crawford County were a clerk and sheriff, the former being Henry Bradford, and the latter, Jack Mills, who died and was succeeded by Mark Beane. This term was from 1821 to 1823. The next term of two years Clerk G. C. Pickett and Sheriff Mark Beane were accompanied by the first coroner, J. C. Sumner. From 1825 to 1827 Mr. Pickett and Mr. Sumner were retained, James Wilson became sheriff, and Alfred Oliver became the first county surveyor. These officers seem to have held over until 1830, when all were reinstated, except Mr. Sumner, whose successor was Elihu Joy. At this date, too, Crawford, had her first county judge, in the person of Robert Sinclair. From 1832 until 1836 the terms embraced but one year only, the two-year term continuing from 1836 onward, however. Messrs. Pickett and Sinclair were continued in 1832, but the sheriff's office was held by J. E. Brown, the coroner's by D. A. Williams, and John Harrell took charge of the tripod and chain to use them until 1842. In 1833 James Woodson Bates became judge, and that veteran clerk, Alex. McLean, picked up the clerk's quill to relinquish the same after twenty-three years of service. Messrs. Brown and Williams were retained, the latter for two more successive terms. Judge Bates retained his office until 1840, with the exception of one year, 1834, when the office seems to have been vacant. R. C. S. Brown, W. P. Moore, Jesse Miller and J. M. Randolph were the successors of J. E. Brown as the "mine host" for criminals up to 1840. On the organization of the State William Hull became the first county treasurer, and his successors up to the long service of A. J. Ward were D. P. Collins, D. R. Looney, W. Duval and W. R. Heard. Mr. Ward served from 1846 to 1860. The office of coroner found few incumbents who held it for a second term; the successors of Mr. Williams were Isaac Shannon, Thomas Hazen, D. L. Looney, Moses Kahoe, T. A. Brooking, G. W. Hawkins, H. W. Bell, T. J. Powers, D. Dickson, G. R. Bell for two terms, W. I. K. Meadows, J. Bentley, Joel Dyer, William Stovall* for two terms, Calvin Phelps, J. S. Rainwater, J. J. Hinson, Sr., H. C. Hayman, A. C. Turman, S. Pernot, W. W. Brodie, H. B. Manes and J. P. Mack in 1888. After John Harrell's long term and two terms held by John Carnall, the most persistent holder of the transit and chain is D. Dickson. This gentleman began in 1846, and has held it ever since with the following exceptions: E. G. Cader (1850 to 1852), R. C. Hattaway (1854-56), H. Bushong (1860-62), R. Allen for three terms on account of the resignation of James Bushong, George Kilgore and M. Kelleher, who divided the long term of 1868-72 between them, and J. S. Chastain. From 1868 to 1872 is the only four-year term in the history of the county. The first assessor, of which the report of the secretary of State makes mention, is D. D. Dickson; Hiram * A vacancy seems to have occurred between his two terms.

Brodie succeeded him in that office for the next two terms, and the "long term" was divided between M. W. Warden and T. G. Singleton. George Gross gave property owners opportunity to answer questions for three successive terms, and was succeeded by J. B. Vincent for two terms. J. Q. West, for two terms, was the predecessor of the present incumbent, R. B. Winfrey. The treasurer's office and the name of A. J. Ward seem almost synonymous, for his service altogether covered a period of a score and four years. George Austin served from 1860 to 1864. W. L. Meadows served one term, and the "long term" was occupied by E. Coleman and J. S. Shannon, who was followed by M. Kimes. Mr. Ward's second long service was followed by the incumbency of B. L. Orrick, for two terms, and W. T. England, who now serves. The duties of sheriff have been performed by many different persons since J. M. Randolph's term ended in 1840; Eli Bell held the jail keys for three terms, and John Carnall for two terms. S. F. Cottrell served four terms, but two terms of J. M. Brown intervened between his third and final terms. Martin Thomas came next. The term of 1864-66 was filled by William Sills, James Allison and E. G. Whitesides, and the last mentioned gentleman was retained for the succeeding term. W. S. Anderson occupied the long term, and was followed by J. P. Grady, J. F. Winfrey for two terms, W. L. Taylor for three terms, although a term by J. S. H. Houck intervened between his first and second terms. J. D. Hawkins is the present incumbent. The clerk's office has been held by but few different persons; after Mr. McLean's extended service I. W. Talkington served two terms, and then began that other veteran clerk's, E. A. Scott's, six terms of service, which were divided by the long term filled by George Devilbiss and J. A. Lockhart, also his own successor for one term. L. C. Southmayd served for three terms, beginning in 1878, and the present incumbent, Benjamin Decherd, was preceded by J. Neal. Few county judges have been their own successor since the days of Judge Bates. Judge R. S. Gibson served from 1840 to 1842; then Judge R. P. Pryor serves between two unoccupied terms, according to the report of the State secretary, and afterward served two terms more. N. A. Pryor was the incumbent from 1852 to 1854. The next incumbent, G. J. Clark, resigned, and D. N. Collins served the unexpired term. J. W. Sangster was the next judge, but for some cause R. C. Hattaway served the part of the term from November, 1856. W. B. Robinson was the next chief executive of the county, and Judge J. A. Wright followed him. R. C. Hattaway served from 1862 to 1864, and Judge Sangster again assumed the duties of the office, which he held for two terms longer. Joseph Harrell served the long term, and another of those unexplained vacancies occurred, which in one case may have been occupied by Isaiah Vinsant, who seems to have acted in the capacity of judge for a short time. D. H. Creekmore was judge in 1874-76, and Judge J. C. Chastain followed next. Ben Decherd, H. B. Hale, J. W. Matlock, W. T. Morgan and H. B. Hale were the latest occupants of the chief office of the county.

Judge Ben Johnson presided over the circuit court of Crawford County in 1831-32-33; Judge Archibald Yell, in 1834-35, and Judge R. C. S. Brown up to 1840. In 1840 it was in the Fourth Circuit under Judge J. M. Hoge; in 1844, Judge S. G. Sneed; in 1846 in the Seventh Circuit under Judge W. W. Floyd; in 1851 in the Fourth again under Judge A. B. Greenwood; in 1853 under Judge F. I. Batson; in 1859 under Judge J. M. Wilson; in 1860 under Judge J. J. Green; in 1868 in the Fifth Circuit under Judge E. D. Ham; in 1874 under Judge B. J. Brown; in the same year under Judge W. W. Mansfield, and in 1877 under Judge Rogers in the Twelfth Circuit.

In the constitutional convention of January, 1836, Crawford County was represented by J. W. Bates, John Dennen and R. C. S. Brown. The constitutional convention of March and May, 1861, had H. F. Thomason and Jesse Turner as Crawford delegates. In January, 1864, L. C. White, J. Austin, J. Howell and C. A. Harper were delegates to the constitutional convention. Crawford was represented by Thomas M. Bowen, who was president of the constitutional convention of January, 1868; and in that of July, 1874, H. F. Thomason was their delegate.

The first mention of Crawford County representation in the Legislature of Arkansas was in the Third Territorial Legislature of October, 1823, John McLean in the council and John Nicks in the House of Representatives. William Quarles in council, and John Nicks as representative, were chosen by the county for the Fourth Territorial Legislature. In the Fifth Assembly John Dillard and Mark Beane spoke for the county. The Sixth Assembly received Gilbert Marshall into the council, and three members, Mark Beane, J. L. Cravens and R. C. S. Brown, were representatives of Crawford. Robert Sinclair, with Representatives C. Wolf and R. C. S. Brown, were sent to the Seventh Legislature of the Territory; and the Eighth received Councilman Sinclair and Representatives William Whitson and B. H. Martin. The Ninth Territorial Legislature records are lost.

On the State organization in 1836 R. C. S. Brown was senator and John Drennen, John Lautor and A. Morton entered the Lower House for Crawford. Senator Brown and Representatives J. Turner, W. Duval and J. Miller were in the Second Assembly; Senator J. A. Scott and Representatives W. Duval and Tyree Mussett in the Third; Senator J. A. Scott and Representatives A. G. Mayer and William Reeves in the Fourth; Senator H. Smith and Representatives A. G. Mayer, J. S. Roane (speaker) and W. J. Duval in the Fifth; Senator Smith and Representatives Eli Bell, R. C. S. Brown and G. W. Clarke in the Sixth; Senator G. W. Clarke and Representatives G. J. Clarke, D. C. Price and T. E. Wilson in the Seventh; Senator Clarke and Representatives A. Martin, W. Russell, Jr., and H. Stewart in the Eighth; Senator Clarke and Representatives A. Morton and J. D. Shannon in the Ninth; Senator J. J. Green and Representatives J. M. Brown and A. Morton in the Tenth; Senator J. P. Humphrey and Representatives R. C. Oliver and M. B. West in the Eleventh; Senator Humphrey and Representatives J. J. Green and S. M. Hayes in the Twelfth; Senator Jesse Miller and Representatives J. M. Brown and Andrew Morton in the Thirteenth; Senator H. F. Carter and Representatives J. Harrell and R. C. Oliver in the Fourteenth; Senator L. C. White and Representatives J. Austin and J. G. Stephenson in the Fifteenth; Senator Carter and Representative R. C. Oliver in the Confederate Legislature; Senator Jesse Turner and Representatives H. F. Thomason and Gran. Wilcox in the Sixteenth; Senator Valentine Dell and Representatives J. B. C. Turman, D. H. Devilbiss, A. J. Singleton and A. Gunther in the Seventeenth; Senator Dell and Representatives

J. M. Pettigrew, C. B. Neal J. B. Stevens and J. P. Grady in the Eighteenth; Senator J. D. Arbuckle and Representatives J. A. Davis, C. E. Berry, L. C. White and S. L. Strong in the Nineteenth; Senator B. J. Brown and Representative J. F. Wheeler in the extraordinary session convened by Gov. Elisha Baxter in 1874; Senator Jesse Turner and Representative James Greig (who resigned and was succeeded by M. C. Moore) in the Twentieth; Senator H. B. Armistead and Representative J. J. Warren in the Twenty-first; Senator Armistead and Representative D. H. Creekmore in the Twenty-second; Senator H. F. Thomason and Representative R. E. Nettles in the Twenty-third; Senators Thomason and T. Comstock in the Twenty-fourth; Senator J. M. Pettigrew and Representative J. H. Huckleberry in the Twenty-fifth; and Senator Pettigrew and Representative H. F. Thomason in the Twenty-sixth Legislature.

THE COURTS.

The history of the courts of Crawford County must ever remain an uncertain quantity; the fire of 1877 destroyed the records of over a half century.

Circuit Courts.—The first circuit court was held in a little log house, having one room and a shed-room for the clerk's office. It was located near the site of the Van Buren Canning Factory, and had been hauled up from Columbus and remodeled, and was used for a few years until the present court-house was built, i. e., the walls. The first case, according to Mr. E. A. Scott, who was a juryman, was a civil case between an Eastern merchant and a citizen. The jury retired to a big cotton-wood log about fifty yards distant, and failed to agree as to the amount of damages. The judge was R. C. S. Brown.

The present court-house was built about 1842, probably, and the jail was built during the same decade. Both buildings have had the wooden parts of them burned out, and have been rebuilt on the same walls.

Under the first judge, R. C. S. Brown, was a case of gambling, and, although it occurred at Old Crawford Court-house, the chief witness was a unique old settler, John Oliver. Mr. Oliver was a witness against the players, and it was rumored that the honorable judge had a hand in the game, which, of course, lent interest to the cross-examination. The judge asked: "Mr. Oliver, did you see anyone playing cards?" "Yes, by —, I did," replied the profane old farmer. "Mr. Oliver, you must not swear in court," said his honor. "No, by —, I won't, but I'll tell you all I know," was the rejoinder. "What game were they playing?" was asked. "Don't know, Judge; one-to-me—one-to-you—one-to-me" (with the appropriate gestures), "what do you call that, Judge?" said the witness. "Mr. Oliver, I know nothing about cards," replied the Judge with some dignity. "By —, neither do I," said the wrathful witness, "but ace is master card in the deck, bet on 'im 'n' yer bound tu win." "Address yourself to the jury, Mr Oliver," interrupted his honor. "Hold on, Judge, I'll make it so plain that the biggest fool on that jury 'll understand!" said he. "Mr. Oliver, did they bet bones or money?" inquired the composed judge. "Clean truck, by —, 'n' once 'n awhile the'd say: 'Hocksplits, hocksplits, rake 'er down boys, but don't snatch!'" Mr. Oliver was dismissed.

About 1842 a peculiar case was tried under Judge R. C. S. Brown, with Judge Turner and William Walker for the prosecution, and J. S. Roane, W. S. Oldham and S. G. Sneed for the defense. It seems that James Robinson and Emily Bishop had some trouble over a "still," and Bishop's boy and dog had either purposely or accidentally injured a cow owned by Robinson. The two men were sitting on a log quarreling about the affair, and it is said that Robinson shot Bishop. Robinson was tried and convicted, but the charge stated that he was justly provoked, and the sentence was made one year in the penitentiary. The feeling in Robinson's favor was so strong, that officers and lawyers sent him alone to Little Rock, with a petition for pardon, and with his sentence. Gov. Samuel Adams received him in the evening at his home, but said: "I can't pardon you out until you get in." So the papers were arranged, and the two walked down to the prison and went through the form of locking in and pardoning, and Mr. Robinson hunted up a hotel to remain until the next morning, when he set out for Van Buren a free man.

But few cases of execution have occurred within the limits of Crawford County by order of the circuit court. In 1843 Jeduthan Day and two negroes, Frank and Dennis, were convicted of rape on a white woman, and sentenced to be hung June 9, 1843, but, by a technical point of a repealed statute, Day was released and the negroes were hung. Great indignation was expressed against such clumsy legislation.

John Kennedy was tried for the murder of John Hurley, in April, 1843, at the September term, under Judge R. C. S. Brown. William Walker was prosecuting attorney, and John F. McKinney, S. G. Sneed and James A. Simpson were counsel for defense. The result was conviction for manslaughter and fifteen years imprisonment.

In "the fifties" a case of justifiable homicide created considerable excitement. Dr. R. Thruston killed a man named Harger, and a coroner's jury returned the above verdict, but the enemies of the old hunter persecuted him until his friends asked for trial. Two grand juries refused to make an indictment, but finally, at the request of Dr. Thruston, H. F. Thomason secured a trial, and he was acquitted without argument.

During this decade two men, Proctor and Skilley, killed a man, and during the trial a false interpreter caused some trouble, but the men were convicted and hung.

About the same time W. Baldridge, with others, killed James Matoy, and was convicted, but escaped. Also "Big Nitz" killed a Mr. Bengé, but, even with sworn evidence on both sides (!), there was a failure to convict.

A noted case, said to have been the instigation of the notorious Mountain Meadows massacre, occurred during the latter part of the same decade. Parley P. Pratt, a Mormon preacher proselyting in Crawford County, influenced a Mrs. McLean with her child, to go to New Orleans at the same time he did, with the ostensible purpose of going to Mormon quarters. So Mr. McLean thought, at least, and he traced them, and had them arrested on a charge of stealing the child's clothing, merely in order to get hold of him. A preliminary trial released the man, but the McLean party followed him, and found him in front of Tealy Wynn's blacksmith shop, across Frog Bayou, and shot him; McLean was arrested, but escaped. The Mountain Meadows affair occurred afterward, and many Crawford people were in the massacred party.

A Mr. Shannon and one Dobbins, at Shannon's home, were talking over plans to steal some hogs, while near them in the room was a Mr. Williams lying drunk, and unconscious to all appearances. Williams reported the plans, and even made up some doggerel verses on the plan, which roused the ire of the Shannons and Bells (relatives), and the latter attacked Williams and his sons with pistols and knives on the streets of Van Buren. The Williamses fought with brick-bats and rocks, and one of the Bells was killed. Williams was tried and acquitted. This was about 1858.

In 1859 a slave named Willis was convicted of larceny, and was punished by private whipping, and being fastened for an hour by hands and neck in a pillory erected on the public square.

On October 13, 1860, a muster-day, Benjamin and Silas Edwards were the murderers of Jackson Covington and his son, and Rufus Covington, at Van Buren. It was some feudal trouble; Benjamin stabbed Jackson Covington, and Silas stabbed his son, and then made for Rufus and stabbed him, leaving the three dead bodies in a pile. The Edwards were imprisoned, and, when brought out for trial, and witnesses not being ready, they were being taken out of the court-yard gate, the infuriated mob shot at them and killed one and wounded the other. He was imprisoned, but later on burned his way out of jail with a candle and escaped.

On January 18, 1861, Robert Davis was executed at Van Buren, for the murder of a man and his son on the Fayetteville road.

During "the sixties" a man named Pope killed a Mr. Gregg, near the site of Mountainburg, and after trial he was convicted, but the decision was reversed by the supreme court.

In this connection might be mentioned a noted jail delivery in December, 1868, when thirteen prisoners escaped. The guards were Messrs Morse, Dabbs and O'Bryan. It appeared to be a lack of precaution on the part of Morse.

In January, 1870, James Brodie, a deputy city marshal of Van Buren, in the discharge of his duty shot Jesse Q. Morton.

The circumstances were so evidently justifiable to the deputy's action that the coroner's jury acquitted him without letting it go to the circuit court.

In November, 1870, two negroes became involved in a difficulty over an abandoned woman named Ellen Anthony, who was living with one of them, Robert Monroe. The other, Jerdon Grinder, as he said in his confession, wishing to frighten Monroe, shot into his cabin one night and killed him. Grinder was tried, and sentenced to be hung February 3, 1871, at high noon. He confessed to Rev. Rutherford, his spiritual adviser.

On May 3, 1871, was a jail delivery of seven men, who escaped by prying off rafters and climbing out and letting themselves down by rafters.

In April, 1883, William Purse, a bigamist and convict, was living near the mouth of Frog Bayou, and at the instigation of his former wife he was ordered arrested. A small posse of men found him in his field, but he was armed and drove them off. A larger posse returned and found that he had barricaded his house and run up a black flag. The men made a portable fort and moved on the house, whereupon Purse, fearing they would burn him out, escaped by the back door to the water. On dragging the river his body was found.

First Recorded Term.—The first circuit court in Crawford County of which any records exist, is that of the March term of 1877. The record in part reads:

CRAWFORD CIRCUIT COURT, MARCH TERM, A. D. 1877.

STATE OF ARKANSAS, }
COUNTY OF CRAWFORD. }

Be it remembered that on the 27th day of March, 1877, at the spring term, as fixed by law, for holding the circuit court in and for the county of Crawford, State of Arkansas, at the court-house, in the town of Van Buren, present and presiding the Hon. William W. Mansfield, judge of Fifth Judicial Circuit. * *

Since 1877 the circuit docket has increased so greatly that measures are being agitated to divide the circuit.

The Bar.—The bar of Crawford County has been a talented one almost from the first. Certainly in ante-bellum days there was no bar outside of Little Rock, probably, in Arkansas that stood higher. In its courts the greatest legal minds of the State frequently practiced. This chapter deals only with resident attorneys.

Previous to 1831 were a few resident lawyers. James H. Lucas was among the very first, if not the first. He soon removed to St. Louis, of which city he afterward became mayor. Franklin Whorton was probably the next. He was a good advocate, capable of making a strong impression on a jury. He was especially successful in criminal practice. A Mr. Quarles was another resident of Crawford county seat, and was chiefly a lawyer devoted to civil cases. John Houston, a brother of the famous Texan, Sam. Houston, was located for a time, but did little practice. One of the ablest orators and advocates of the Crawford bar was William H. Parrott, who resided in the county for a short time. His usefulness was injured by his inability to inspire moral confidence. He was well educated and had a large criminal and civil practice.

In 1831 there were but three resident lawyers at Van Buren: The Hon. Jesse Turner, Judge Richard C. S. Brown and Bennett H. Martin, and the most prominent of these is the subject of the following remarks:

"Jesse Turner is also one of the notable men of these times who still live, honored and beloved," says the Hon. Ben T. Duval, writing of famous Arkansans. "He came from North Carolina to Crawford County in 1829, and settled at old Crawford Court House, and has followed the county seat in its various changes until it finally rested at Van Buren. He now occupies the same office he built in 1840, where for more than forty years he has day by day studied and given counsel to his numerous clients.

"His culture in legal lore, his stern integrity and his undaunted courage have placed him always in the front rank of the profession. His career has been eminently successful. As a judge of the supreme court he has settled some of the most intricate questions of law. His opinions are recognized as leading authority."

*R. C. S. Brown, who resided for many years at Van Buren, and presided over the circuit court, was a man of mark and exerted great influence. His learning as a lawyer was said not to have been profound, but he had good common sense, and was prompt in his decisions. He did not seek to become an eminent jurist while judge of a circuit court. He was popular with the bar and the people. He was a Tennessean, a grandson of the famous Gov. Sevier. He was especially successful in civil law, and afterward became very prominent in State affairs. He also became agent for the Pottawottamie Indians.

Bennett H. Martin, it is thought, was a Kentuckian, who spent his early manhood as a brick-mason. It is uncertain when he began the study of law, but it was probably as late as his thirtieth year. He was one of those naturally strong-minded men who have a capability of independent study under even the most adverse circumstances; he never became more than fairly informed, however, but became a very respectable lawyer and a good advocate. His practice, too, was such as his ability and popularity deserved. In about 1842, or thereabouts, he moved to Texas, and became a district judge.

It was about 1835 (approximately) that William H. Wisner became a resident member of the bar at Van Buren. He remained probably a year only, when he returned to Tennessee.

But a few years later (about 1839) Royal T. Wheeler swelled the legal list of local Van Burenites. He was a "Hoosier," and spent but a year or thereabouts at Van Buren, and then located in Texas, where he became a supreme judge.

It was about this time that George W. Paschal, a Georgian, who had married a Cherokee lady, a member of the well-known Ridge family, located at Van Buren. He was fairly educated, and a man of more than ordinary ability. He became a supreme judge at an early age. He began practice in the supreme court at Washington after the war, and became the author of several law books, among which are "Paschal's Annotations on the Constitution." He also arranged the code of Texas.

Gov. John S. Roane, after serving one term in the Legislature from Jefferson County, went to Crawford and located as a lawyer at Van Buren. [Ed.— This was, according to Judge Turner, about 1840]. He soon engaged in politics, was elected again to the Legislature, and afterward governor of the State to fill out the unexpired term of Gov. Drew, who resigned a short time after being elected a second term. He was talented, ambitious, patriotic, genial and popular. He was a brigadier-general in the Confederate States army, and died soon after peace. He raised a company of volunteers for the Mexican War, and was elected lieutenant-colonel of the regiment commanded by Gov. Archibald Yell. After the death of the latter, at the battle of Buena Vista, he became colonel of the regiment. A difficulty grew up between him and Albert Pike, who commanded a company, which resulted in a duel. They fought, in 1846, with pistols, on the sand-bar opposite Fort Smith. Luckily, neither was hit, and the reconciliation, which took place on the field, was permanent, and they were ever afterward good friends.

About 1840 W. S. Oldham, a Tennesseean, moved to Van Buren. He was a man of good capacity and rather brilliant, with a thoroughly legal mind. He was a good general, rather than special, lawyer. It was about the same time that Mr. Pryor, of Nashville, located. His death soon occurred.

A few years later John B. Ogden came to Van Buren. His business abilities as an accountant, and his information and ability in using statistics, have made a splendid business lawyer of him. As a speaker he is striking and incisive. He has been prominent in the business affairs of the county and in its courts and offices. He was a partner of George W. Paschal for a time, and served as United States Commissioner.

Andrew Campbell was a popular man, and a partner of G. W. Paschal. The firm did a large collecting business, and Mr. Campbell, from his live, social characteristics, had charge of this department of the business. In May, 1843, he was assassinated about twelve miles north of Van Buren, for his money.

Among the lawyers of "the forties" was James H. Simpson, who was for some time a partner of Judge Turner. He was somewhat brilliant as an orator, and was an impressive advocate and pleader, Henry Wilcox was a contemporary of Mr. Simpson, and a political rival of Judge Turner. He was one of those naturally sturdy, shrewd-minded men, who began law somewhat late in life. His strong common sense, and his keen knowledge of human nature, coupled with his ability as an advocate and speaker, made him successful.

About 1859 or 1860 Granville, a son of Henry Wilcox, entered the law. He had been educated under Robert Graham, and at Princeton, N. J.; he was one of the finest orators the county ever produced. It was his ability as a writer and editor, that gave the Argus its standing throughout the Northwest, and his oratorical powers which gave him the popular title of "The Little Giant." He represented his county in the Legislature, and was district prosecuting attorney for a time. His death occurred in the early part of the present decade.

William Walker came to Van Buren about 1842. He is a fine lawyer, of a highly analytical mind, and is a genius as a special pleader; no flaw in legal papers can escape his microscopic vision, and his own papers are faultless. He is an effective speaker, of intense earnestness and feeling, and has many other strong characteristics. He is a fair writer and an aggressive worker.

Thomas McKinney came late in the forties, and for a time had some practice.

About 1850 John T. Humphreys began a fair practice in Van Buren, and could then be called a good "all around" lawyer with many excellent characteristics. He afterward went to Fort Smith.

Not far from the same time Hugh F. Thomason became a member of the Crawford bar. He is still practicing. He has a naturally strong legal mind, and is a fine, fluent, forcible orator. He is a good advocate, and is a good lawyer in all phases of the law, but is especially able as a criminal lawyer. He has been a powerful influence in State politics, and has few equals as a political speaker. He represented the State in the Montgomery Congress, and was a Union delegate to the famous Little Rock convention of 1861, in which he was prominent.

John B. Luce came about 1850, and became a partner with John B. Ogden. He remained two or three years, engaged chiefly in general collection business. He was a remarkably well-informed man.

A partner of William Walker was J. J. Green, who came about 1848. He was a fair speaker and was a man of excellent information. He was the Confederate circuit judge of Crawford.

It was about 1858 or thereabouts when B. J. Brown, still of the Van Buren bar, located there. Judge Brown has a strong natural mind, of prompt, energetic characteristics, and which, with more extensive educational advantages, would have made him still more prominent. He is a good lawyer and strong advocate.

William Alexander was a partner of Hugh F. Thomason for a time. He was well educated and a fair lawyer, but soon abandoned the profession.

Samuel Miller was a student under B. J. Brown, and grew to have a good civil and criminal practice. He was largely a self-made man.

J. H. Huckleberry came in about 1870, and has made a reputation as a good, safe, successful lawyer. His partner, a Mr. Jay, was a member of the bar for a time.

John J. Warren, a former editor of the Graphic, arrived about the same time, and has been devoted chiefly to claim and homestead cases. He has also been an influential figure in Republican politics.

Among the younger members of the bar is the son of Judge Turner, Jesse Turner, Jr. Mr. Turner has been well prepared for his profession, and has many of the cultivated social graces and natural appointments of manner, which always smooth the way for ability. He is a young man of keen mind and excellent executive capabilities.

Nimrod Turman is a self-made young lawyer of fair ability, who has grown up in the county and is becoming active in its affairs.

Mr. Pierce is another gentlemanly young member of the bar, and is arranging to make a specialty of abstracting titles and doing a loan business.

William Taylor turned to law rather late in life, but is a good business man, and is especially successful as a pension and claim lawyer. J. P. Mullen has a large practice of a civil character chiefly. J. W. Frederick is a fair speaker and a good general lawyer. W. F. Willey is a fluent speaker. E. A. Tabor practiced a short time. J. C. White did some business also.

Berkley Neal, another pupil of B. J. Brown, is a good lawyer and very successful. He has a large colored practice.

The United States District Court of the Western District of Arkansas was the result of too great a demand on the National Court at Little Rock. The jurisdiction of the latter, including the Indian Nations, was so large that its docket was always full to overflow. Congress passed "An Act to Divide the State of Arkansas into two Judicial Districts," which reads as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled, That from and after the passage of this act the counties of Benton, Washington, Crawford, Scott, Polk, Franklin, Johnson, Madison and Carroll, and all that part of the Indian country lying within the present district of Arkansas, shall constitute a new judicial district, to be styled "The Western District of Arkansas," and the residue of said State shall be and remain a judicial district, to be styled "The Eastern District of Arkansas."

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the judge of this District Court of Arkansas shall hold two terms of said court at the town of Van Buren, the county seat of Crawford County aforesaid, on the second Mondays of May and November in each and every year, and shall continue in session until all the business shall be disposed of; and he is hereby authorized and directed to hold such other special sessions as may be necessary for the dispatch of the causes in said court, at such time or times as he may deem expedient, and may adjourn such special session to any other time previous to a stated term.

SECTION 3. And be it further enacted, That the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas hereby established, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction and powers of a district court, shall, within the limits of its respective district, have jurisdiction of all causes, civil or criminal, except appeals and writs of error, which now are or hereafter may by law be made cognizable in a circuit court, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court; and an appeal or writ of error shall be prosecuted from the final decree or judgment of said district court to the supreme court of the United States, in the same manner that appeals and writs of error now are, by law, from a circuit court of the United States.

SECTION 4. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district attorney and marshal for said Western District of Arkansas, who respectively should receive the same salary and perquisites as the present district attorney and marshal of the State of Arkansas have by law; and the said district judge shall appoint a clerk of the said court hereby established. Approved March 8, 1851.

According to the best information obtained, since the records are destroyed, the May term began at Van Buren in the circuit and county court room, then in the lower story. Daniel Ringo was judge, and George W. Knox the first marshal, while Jesse Turner was appointed by President Fillmore as district attorney, and Alexander McLain was made the first clerk. The county donated the upper story of the court-house to the district court in 1854, and Judge John B. Ogden was made commissioner to furnish the room, which he did in an elegant manner, equalled by few other courts in the Southwest. Before 1861 the successors to the marshal's office were Samuel M. Hayes, Benj. J. Jacoway, and James M. Brown; and Attorney Turner's successors (his appointment being unsolicited and not desired by himself) were Alfred M. Wilson and Granville Wilcox up to about 1858. Clerk McLain was succeeded by John B. Ogden, who held office up to the convention of May, 1861. By the action of this convention Judge Daniel Ringo felt it his duty to resign his office, and the convention ordered the records into the keeping of Clerk John B. Ogden, and the court ceased to be for the period of the war. The records of the proceedings of a decade were kept by Judge Ogden, and were held by him in February, 1863, when a raid was made on Van Buren by a company of Federal soldiers under Lieut.-Col. Stewart, from the Fayetteville post, and the clerk's office was rifled, and the records and papers torn out and destroyed with one exception—namely, the records from 1855 to 1860.

This term of the court closed December 6, 1855. The following May term S. F. Cottrell was made crier, and George Gross and Elias H. Gilbert were made constables, and the grand jury embraced the following persons: G. J. Clark, foreman; I. Ripato, (?), D. Chandler, W. H. Alexander, P. V. Ray, W. T. Dollins, Allen Prasher, Isaiah Vinsant, G. S. Turrentine, A. H. Kuykendall, Andrew Panby, J. B. Strout, John Odell, Henry Powell, I. B. Huston, William B. Robinson and James S. Foster.

The chief causes during the years of this record were larceny, introducing spirituous liquors into the Indian Nation, bribery, contempt of court, assault with intent to kill, mail robbery, murder and negro stealing, the first two being largely in the majority. Among the lawyers admitted during the time covered by this record were H. Thomas Brown and B. J. Brown, in 1860. The last record, previous to the war, now extant is that of December 15, 1860, in which two cases of assault with intent to kill, two cases of murder and one of larceny were had.

At the special term of the district court of the United States, begun and held at the court room in the city of Van Buren, within and for the Western District of Arkansas, on the 31st day of August, 1865, present the Honorable Henry C. Caldwell, judge of said court. The following rules of court were adopted and ordered to be spread on the records of said court, viz.:

RULE 1. Whenever the district attorney shall file in the clerk's office a libel of information against any property, under the Revenue Confiscation laws of the United States, it shall be the duty of the clerk to issue to the marshal of the district a warrant of arrest, in the usual form, returnable on the first day of the next ensuing regular term.

RULE 2. Whenever the marshal shall receive a warrant of arrest it shall be his duty to give notice of the time and place of hearing such cause, by publication in some weekly newspaper, published in the city of Van Buren, for two weeks successively, the last of which publication shall be made at least ten days before the day of trial, and shall also post a copy of said notice in some public place in the vicinity of the place where the court is to be held, twenty days before the trial. In case no paper be published in the city of Van Buren, then the publication herein provided for shall be made in some weekly newspaper published in the city of Fort Smith, and in case no paper is published at either of said cities, the notice shall be given by posting in some public place in both of said cities, and in the county seat of the county where the property libeled is situated, or was seized, at least twenty days before the day of trial; and thereupon court adjourned until the next regular term.

HENRY C. CALDWELL, District Judge.

Luther C. White was made marshal, and E. D. Ham, Esq. became district attorney. The first regular term after the war was the May term, A. D. 1866, Judge Caldwell presiding.

On motion of E. D. Ham, Esq., it is ordered that Augustus N. Hargrove, Esq., E. J. Searle, Esq., Marshall L. Stevenson, Esq., and John M. Oliver, Esq. (it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that they are attorneys-at-law in this State) be admitted to practice as attorneys in this court on taking the oath as prescribed by act of Congress of July 2, 1862, which was then taken and respectively subscribed [to] and placed with the files of this court.

The court continued to hold regularly at Van Buren until by an act of Congress it was removed to Fort Smith in 1871. The last district court held at Van Buren was the November term of 1870. The court was then reorganized at Fort Smith by order of "an act authorizing terms of the United States district courts to be held at Helena, Arkansas, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871.

United States Commissioners held their courts at Van Buren whenever the business of the district court made it necessary. Judge J. B. Ogden and Judge J. O. Churchill were among the commissioners.

The lawyers that are mentioned in connection with the circuit court all practiced in the Federal court while it was located at Van Buren.

It is estimated by Judges Turner and Thomason that probably but one or two over a half dozen executions took place while the court remained in Van Buren, and previous to the war there were but few cases of any kind, and nothing like the stupendous proportions now assumed by the docket of the court now at Fort Smith. The little county jail now used at Van Buren was large enough for the prisoners of both courts; the executions took place near the present site of the Graphic office, and near the cemetery.

One interesting case in "the fifties" was that of the United States vs. Willis Beard, who murdered a man in the Indian county. He was executed.

Another case was that of Maj. Elijah Hurst, who killed Jack Rector with a pen-knife. He was convicted, but afterward pardoned by President Buchanan. A. M. Wilson was prosecutor, and Judges Turner and Thomason were for the defense.

A case in 1869 was that of Dave Ross for the murder of John Lytle. Messrs. Wilcox and Robinson were for the prisoner, and Messrs. Ham and Huckleberry for the United States. He was convicted, and sentenced to be hung on September 3, 1869.

John Roper was convicted of the murder of John Rogers, and sentenced to be hung on the last Friday of April, 1860. The sentence was commuted by President Buchanan.

Amos McCurtain was convicted of murder in 1869.

A case against J. S. Bostick for perjury in the "Kersey case" was nolle prose'd.

A case against Nail Randall and Dean occupied over a week in November, 1869. The indictment was for the murder of a negro called "Buck" or "Jefferson." Messrs. Rogers, Brown, Walker and Wilcox appeared for the defense, the first two speaking on Friday and the last two on Saturday. The prisoners were acquitted.

The greater number of cases were for introducing spirituous liquors into the Indian country, larceny, etc.

CITIES, TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

VAN BUREN.

The Town Site.—About 1817, when the second war with Great Britain had closed, and the Government was pushing the control of her western domains, Maj. Stephen H. Long, United States Army, was sent out to locate a fort to cover the territory of the Upper Arkansas River; his choice fell upon the bluffs that overlook the river, just above the present site of Van Buren, as the most suitable the county possessed, and he offered the owner a large price, far more than has ever since been offered. Two explanations are given of the failure to purchase the site: one gives the owner as raising his price exorbitantly far above the offered price of the Government, because the site was so desirable that he thought he would be given his own price, and thereby disgusted the Government agent, Maj. Long, who proceeded to locate at Belle Point, as is more fully set forth in the sketch of Fort Smith in this volume; the other reason given by the parties interested in the land is that the result was a mere accident, contingent on some complicated negotiations with the Washington authorities caused by the long time required to travel between this point and Washington. Whatever the reason, the result has been two cities within five miles of each other, when they would have otherwise been one, under some suitable name, which would probably not have been either Fort Smith or Van Buren.

First Residents and Business.—Thomas Martin was the first white settler on the site of Van Buren, about 1828 or 1829. He was a mere "squatter," with no title to his land except the claim of settlement. A few half transient people gathered about him, and the place became a landing, and in 1829 was dignified as a post-office, the name of which was made Van Buren, in honor of Martin Van Buren, a secretary of President Jackson, and afterward the well known President of the United States himself. In 1830 Thomas Phillips bought Mr. Martin's claim for a small amount and perfected his title otherwise; the place even then went by the name of Phillips' Landing, or Phillips' Point, for some time after. His purchase included a large tract of land extending down beyond the foot of the great sand-bar below Van Buren. There was no white woman in the settlement, and river gamblers and roughs were the larger part of the frequenters of the place. The river at this time was a much narrower one, and deeper, the north bank having since then receded many feet along the present Van Buren frontage, and many rods down where the largest part of the sand-bar rests at present. But one or two years after Phillips' purchase, the landing, now washed in the river and composing the above sand-bar, was bought by Mr. David Thompson, a land speculator of Little Rock, formerly of Nashville, Tenn., and who owned large tracts of land along the river on both sides, and his associate, Mr. John Drennen, a younger man. They established a landing and store, and gave it the name Columbus. The enterprise of these men soon made the new place rival Phillips' Point, and in 1836 they bought out Mr. Phillips. The admission of the State at this time would indicate a growing population, and Van Buren post-office gained with the rest. Dr. Mahon was the first postmaster, and Squire Henry Mahon was a merchant. The Trimble family were here at that time; Edward Cunningham was a merchant, also, and the firm, Henry & Cunningham, built the brick block now occupied by the wholesale grocers, Shibley, Bourland & Co. James A.

Scott, Turner & Chapman, and Foster & Medley were among the first merchants. Judge Jesse Turner passed through the place on his way to Fayetteville as early as May, 1831, but did not settle until the location of the county seat. Drennen & Scott had a stock in the building near the river, now owned by Robert J. Hynes. The place was growing so fast that in 1837 Messrs. Thompson & Drennen laid out the first plat of the town.

In 1839 Peter Hanger (now of Little Rock) built a large house on the river bank, and which was long used as a hotel; it is now owned by Mrs. H. Massey. A branch of the famous Arkansas Real Estate Bank was opened in it also. The Indian trade grew to be enormous, and the place became a shipping point even for Springfield, Mo. The permanent location of the county seat there, in 1838, through the influence of Messrs. Thompson & Drennen, was a great influence in its growth. The great influx of people into the territory surrounding it in the years immediately succeeding the admission of the State made its growth solid and certain; it was destined to become one of the first commercial centers of the Southwest and the greatest in all Arkansas; and its trade was especially wholesale in its character; its buildings were of good quality, many of them brick, which still stand. In 1842 the first newspaper was established—the Arkansas Intelligencer. Dr. R. Stevenson and Dr. Dibrell were there in 1843. George W. Paschal was a lawyer with Andrew Campbell, and the firm that year became (Andrew) Campbell & (Alfred W.) Arrington. W. C. Scott, Turner & Simpson, William Walker and Elkins & Linton were also legal lights. John Austin & Co., Scott, White & Co. and Henry & Cunningham were wholesale grocers. The Columbus Hotel was kept by J. S. Gross, and the Van Buren House by John Dillard (the Hanger House). John Taylor and J. S. Freeman had tailor shops. Dry goods were sold by John G. Rohr. Thomas A. Brooking dealt in farm implements, and did blacksmithing. John Drennen was postmaster. Dr. W. Richards hung out his sign about the same time. W. C. Robinson sold dry goods. Oldham & Roane came in as new attorneys, and John B. Ogden also. Whig and Democratic campaigns enlivened the burg, and in 1844 two newspapers were in the fight. The town had grown so as to become incorporated. Now churches began to be built. Austin & Clegg were a wholesale grocery firm during this year. S. G. Brownfield was a painter. Wallace & Ward opened up a general merchandise stock in 1844. Henry Wilcox was enrolled among the attorneys. The wharf business was crowded. In 1845 Mrs. E. C. McClellan opened the Hanger House. Dr. James Forman comes in. Reagan & Wilson, J. M. Terretts were attorneys. J. W. Washbourne became postmaster; Dr. D. L. Saunders in 1845. Forman & Sprott opened a drug store. Stevenson & Bell did likewise. John Bostick took charge of the Van Buren House. E. B. Bishop and Torras & Foggs had general stores. Van Buren became the meeting place of conferences, presbyteries, and other State and secular societies. Says the Intelligencer of March 1, 1845:

The place has recently become a city; has its commissioned mayor and aldermen, and in this respect is better off than Boston; second, new houses of substantial brick are constantly going up, and more are in prospective; third, this place is a great thoroughfare already for the emigration to Texas, and will become greater if that country is annexed; here these emigrants cross the Arkansas, one of the ferries even now renting at auction at $1,325 per annum.

The travel was so great that the Van Buren Bridge Company was incorporated, but they never built. J. H. Roberts appears as a jeweler in 1847. The city was prolific in societies, among which was the Van Buren Hunting Club, of 1847, of which Jesse Turner was president; George W. Clarke, vice-president; H. W. Bell, secretary, and J. J. Green, treasurer. Among other businesses Eli Newland had a saddlery depot, Marshall & Powell were a new grocery firm, and D. T. McCollum was a draper and tailor. W. R. Simmons had a hardware store. In 1848 R. P. Pryor became a Van Buren attorney. In February of that year an internal improvement convention was held at Van Buren to take measures for a turnpike to Fayetteville, and stock subscriptions were soon made up. Books were also opened at the office of John B. Ogden to start a cotton spinning factory. The Sons of Temperance was a popular organization of those years. In 1849 California emigration was agitated, and companies formed. Abbey & Doubleday opened a patent churn manufactory. The need of a market house was discussed. Willhaf, Glass & Co. had a bakery. J. J. Ogden and John B. Luce formed a law firm. Philip Pennywit's steam flouring mill was opened with a capacity of forty barrels per day. The value of merchandise taxed in the city at this time was $192,758. An editorial of September 29, 1849, says:

This place certainly has the most flattering prospects of any in the southwest. * * It now contains a thousand or twelve hundred inhabitants, and is increasing in population and business daily. There are now two brick churches, and several large brick houses for business and private residence in process of erection. On Monday, April 18, 1849, the Van Buren Emigration Association, the Washington City Mutual Mining Company, Capt. E. B. Robinson, the Louisiana California Trading Association, Capt. Pibron, the St. Joseph's California Emigrants, Capt. Shackleford, a pack-mule company, the Empire Mining Association, Capt. Hammond, a pack-mule company, left Van Buren on Gregg's route to Santa Fe.

The next decade witnessed a steady increase in the wealth and business of Van Buren. In 1859 Ward & Southmayd had a full line of general merchandise, also W. B. Heard. J. J. Green was a partner of William Walker. The new paper—the Press—said on October 21st of that year: "No town in Arkansas can boast the same number of extensive mercantile establishments, more solvent and wealthy merchants, or more substantial edifices both as stores and dwellings." In 1860 Drs. R. F. Colburn, L. C. White and M. O. Davidson were at Van Buren. Burrow & Brown was a law firm. S. J. Adler had a store, also Heard & Vinsant, P. Perkins and Frank & Eastburn. Martin Simon had a notion trade; W. Coleman sold boots and shoes; Daugherty & Glass dealt in furniture; S. Harrington and Fellmer & Graff were jewelers; hardware was handled by R. S. Roberts; S. Thompson was a tailor, and Iredell Jones was a tobacco merchant. Thursday, July 12, 1860, the first telegram was received in Van Buren over the Stebbins Western Telegraph Line. It was a message from Fayetteville, and a salute was fired in its honor. The following administrator's sale of negroes on July 2, 1860, will illustrate a species of Van Buren wealth: "Sam, twenty-nine years, $1,525; Bob, twenty-three years, $1,355; Ned, twenty-seven years, $1,376; Ned, seven years, $730; Jim, six years, $608; Angeline, twenty-seven years, and child, two years, $1,475; Betsey, twenty-five years, $1,182; Lizzy, nine years, $715; Sally, fifteen years, $1,252." W. B. Beard was postmaster during this year. Railway agitation was very considerable in the city during the year. In 1861 Hiram Brodie owned the Planters' Hotel, and Geo. W. Pendergrass, the Globe Hotel. Slack & Holman had carriage works; C. H. Drake, a brick-yard; J. A. Noble & Co. had a merchandise establishment during the decade; also Drs. C. F. Brown and J. H. Decherd were there in the latter part of the decade. In the thirteen years ending in 1860, Van Buren mortality was 464 deaths.

The war found Van Buren exceedingly flourishing. Upward then was commerce, education and society. The war almost utterly destroyed the town, as well as the adjacent country. For long years before the war Van Buren was the pleasantest, politest, richest and most attractive town in the Arkansas Valley. But the war emptied its warehouses and stores; owls and bats took possession; grass grew in its streets, and its churches and schools were ruined. * * * To-day I again tread its streets and see more evidence of recuperative power than I have seen in a thousand miles travel."*

Later Business and Events.—F. Miller & Bro. had a bakery in 1866; J. Felmer, a grocery; A. M. Calahan & Co. and E. C. Powell, stocks of merchandise. Dr. H. Pernot was located. Hayman & Scott opened the Van Buren Agricultural Works; G. W. Newland erected a new steam flouring mill and cotton gin. C. T. Ward, White & Hanley and C. F. Harvey had stores. Dr. A. B. Hoy was a dentist. Of H. C. Hayman's improved cotton plows and scrapers (invented in 1867) the Press said: "In order to make cotton raising profitable and remunerative hereafter, inventions have become necessary;" and on reconstruction feeling it urged, "Let us get strength and wealth first, and perhaps by that time everything may be 'fixed.'" Van Buren mortality for eighteen years previous to and including 1866 was 722 and 247 soldiers, making 969 as the aggregate. Immigration began to be agitated. C. G. Scott was proprietor of the steam ferry. H. L. McConnell was a lawyer, and F. M. Neal a new merchant. In November, 1871, was the first really successful fair probably ever held in the county; the best trotting was done by A. H. Carson's "Old Tom." A successful one was held in 1872, also. William Whitfield & Co. dealt in merchandise during the year 1872. Harmony Council, No. 27, Temperance Reform, was one of the societies of the year.

* Oct. 26, 1866—a Press correspondent.

Our cotton lands yield from three-quarters to a bale and a half per acre, and our cotton ranks high in the New Orleans market. All the grasses do well here, and the farmers are beginning to find out the advantage of raising grass, and many acres are being seeded down.

The Fort Smith & Little Rock Railroad is now complete to within thirty five miles of Van Buren, and work is being pressed forward. The road will be completed to this town by the 1st of July next. With this road and the Arkansas River as our trade channels, Crawford County will soon rank among the foremost counties in the State.

In Van Buren we have four churches, two good schools, two newspapers, the various mystic fraternities, and a temperance society of some 180 members.

* * * We have two large steam flouring mills, two steam cotton-gins, a steam cotton factory and a steam planing-mill.*

A complete list of business in 1878 is: General merchandise, 12; grocers, 5; furniture, 2; saloons, 7; hotels, 4; drug stores, 2; bakeries and confectioners, 2; hardware, 1; wagon factory, 1; saddlery, 1; blacksmith shops, 3; news stores, 1; newspapers, 2; gallery, 1; livery, 1; barbers, 2; butchers, 2; cooper, 1; jewelers, 1; upholsterers, 1; tailors, 1; milliners, 1; broom factory, 1; planing-mill, 1; steam cotton-gins, 2; steam flouring-mills, 3; hominy-mill, 1; shoe-shop, 1.

In 1876 a dramatic society was one of the organizations of the city. M. W. Drewery was a contractor; P. T. Devany sold boots and shoes; Dr. R. Thruston had the Van Buren nurseries; Thomas Edmondson had a bakery; F. M. Neal, a meat-market; Johnson & King, dry-goods; also D. C. Williams; J. M. Wood & Son, merchants; M. Lynch, dry goods; B. B. Thayer, grocer; A. Smith, grocer; J. S. Brodie, grocer; G. T. Maddox, grocer; J. W. Cory, hardware; E. Wall, drugs; Wilcox & Southmayd F. Adams & Co., builders and architects; Austin, Martin & Ward general merchants, and Lizzie Lockhart, postmistress. It was the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railway that caused this improvement in business. A horticultural society was organized, and the agricultural association held another successful fair. The taxable property of 1877 in Van Buren was given as $400,000, and the receipts of the city treasurer were $4,871.74. Adams & Anderson had a planing-mill and furniture factory; Shibley, Moore & Co. became merchants in 1879. The Murphy temperance work of the year was a feature of interest. In 1880 the census gave Van Buren as 1,087 in population. On January 15, 1882, at 2 o'clock in the morning, six buildings on the corner of Main and Thompson Streets were burned—the old Whitfield Block, the Eagle Block (a two-story brick), and a dwelling owned by G. Wilcox. In these were the furniture store of Mr. Glass, rooms of the athenæum, F. & A. M. and I. O. O. F. orders. The origin of the fire was never known, and of the $15,000 loss but $2,000 was insured. The completion of the "Frisco Railway" about this time gave a considerable impetus to business, and it is grown to what is given as follows:

Banking.—The Citizens' Bank of Van Buren was organized May 1, 1886, as a stock company under the State laws. Their officers have been president, B. J. Brown; cashier, U. H. Park (deceased), and cashier pro tem., O. P. Brown. Their nine directors are as follows: B. J. Brown, L. C. Southmayd, Josiah Foster, George R. Wood, B. Neal, O. P. Brown, J. D. James, W. Bowlin and J. D. White. Their capital stock at the beginning of business was $40,000, but its present proportions were assumed in May, 1887. Their statement of July 2, 1888, is as follows: Resources, loans and discounts, $127,006.48; overdrafts, $797.31; due from other banks, $16,574.18; current expenses, $20.70; furniture and fixtures, $1,476.82; cash on hand, $17,243.61; total, $163,119.10; liabilities, capital stock, $75,000; undivided profits, $83.64; notes rediscounted, $7,500; individual deposits subject to check, $80,535.46; total, $163,119.10. Their correspondents are as follows: Boatmen's Savings Bank, St. Louis; Importers' and Traders' National Bank, New York; German National Bank, Little Rock; Bank of Commerce, Memphis, and the Merchants' Bank of Fort Smith.

The Crawford County Bank, the oldest bank in the county, now organized under State laws, was opened in April, 1882, as a private bank, by William Vickery. Its capital stock was then $30,000. Mr. R. S. Hynes purchased it, however, in February, 1884, and has since been in control of its affairs as cashier. On February 15, 1887, it was incorporated by R. S. Hynes, D. W. Moore, Jesse Turner, Jr., W. T. Merrill, H. P. King, J. M. Weaver, T. M. McGee, A. Smith, J. H. Huckleberry, R. Oliver, Jacob Yoes, H. F. Meyer, F. R. McKibben, A. Gooding, Jesse Turner, Sr., and W. H. Shibley. The officers chosen were Jesse Turner, Sr., president; J. Yoes, vice-president; R. S. Hynes, cashier, all of whom are retained. Mr. S. A. Pernot is assistant cashier. The capital stock of the bank is $50,000; surplus, $6,031.88; undivided profits, $4,395; earnings, $5,162.06. An indication of their conservative policy is seen in the fact of the following firms having been their correspondents for eight years: Chase National Bank, New York; Laclede Bank, St. Louis; First National Bank, Little Rock, and the First National Bank of Fort Smith.

Associations.—The Van Buren Building and Loan Association, Perpetual, was organized in February, 1884, by sixty stockholders. The officers chosen were president, F. R. McKibben; vice-president, L. H. Southmayd; secretary and attorney, Jesse Turner, Jr., and treasurer, P. D. Scott. The directors chosen were F. R. McKibben, George Wood, A. Smith, D. W. Moore, B. Neal, J. Foster and L. H. Southmayd. The company first authorized a capital stock of $25,000, divided into 10,000 shares of $25 each, and began business with $47,700 subscribed. The company has been the means of advancing the building interests of Van Buren very materially. Their present officers are as follows: President, L. C. Southmayd; secretary, S. A. Pernot; treasurer, W. H. H. Shibley; directors, J. J. Warren, D. W. Moore, R. S. Hynes, T. M. McGee, R. W. Funk and L. H. Southmayd.

The Van Buren Building and Loan Association, Perpetual, No. 2, is one of the most thriving companies of its kind in Northwestern Arkansas. It was organized June 17, 1887, by about sixty stockholders, from whom the following officers were elected: President, A. H. Colgrove; vice-president, C. W. Jones; secretary, R. P. Allen; treasurer, George H. Williams; attorney, L. P. Sandels; directors (including the foregoing), Jesse Turner, Jr., H. F. Meyer, W. C. Lee, M. Lynch, J. P. Mack. The same officers are retained with the following exceptions: Treasurer, R. W. Quarles. The directors (including the officers) are H. C. Wood, T. S. Cox, H. F. Meyer. The company first authorized a capital stock of $500,000, with $58,000 subscribed, with which to begin business; the present subscribed stock is $68,000. Their last dividend was 50 per cent., and premiums range from 25 per cent. to 32 per cent.

Industrial Standing.—The Van Buren Canning Company was organized in February, 1877, by a number of stockholders. The firm employs about seventy-five persons, and has a capacity of about 10,000 cans daily. They began business with $7,000 paid in, but in 1888 their stock was increased to $15,000. The first annual dividend was 20 per cent. The following list of officers has been retained from the first: President, W. H. H. Shibley; vice-president, F. R. McKibben; secretary and treasurer, R. S. Hynes; directors (including the foregoing), A. Smith, Jesse Turner, Jr., J. J. Warren and D. W. Moore. The superintendent of the works is Samuel Sheets.

The Van Buren Ice and Coal Company is a local stock corporation, organized April 19, 1887. They manufacture ice in summer and deal in coal during the period of demand for that article. Their ice is formed by the De Coppett absorption system, with a capacity of five tons in twenty-four hours. They supply not only the Van Buren market, but ship up and down the railways centering here. Their officers are president, George R. Wood; vice-president, O. P. Brown; secretary, P. D. Scott; treasurer, T. W. Edmondson, and superintendent, P. D. Scott. Their paid-in capital stock is $13,000.

The Barnes Lumber Company Planing Mills, although owned by Little Rock capital, is one of Van Buren's most important enterprises, furnishing employment for a large number of persons, and a market for the timber of the surrounding country. The mills and dry-house were built in 1885, in the northern suburbs of Van Buren. They have a capacity of 80,000 feet of lumber per day. Their work is exclusively dressing all kinds of lumber for shipment. The officers of the company are L. W. Coy, president; Logan H. Roots, treasurer, and D. H. Barnes vice-president.

The Shibley, Bourland & Company Wholesale Grocery and Commission House is one of Van Buren's leading business houses. Wood Bros. & Southmayd, McKibben & Pape, Meyer, Hodges & Co., are the leading general merchandise houses; the firm of McKibben & Pape also deal extensively in furniture. Among other general merchants are C. J. Murta, N. F. Cornelius, Smith & Scott, J. Hinkle & Bro., Max Lyons and E. Gilbert, who also are large firms. The grocery trade is well handled by Wood, Edmondson & Britt, J. Fritz & Co., W. A. Briscoe, T. C. Ribling, C. F. Ward, G. T. Maddox, T. M. McGee, F. Laurent, J. F. Mathews, John Pew and J. M. Harshaw. McKinney & Kerr, W. H. Ross, W. B. Allen, H. C. Johnson and Reed & Daniel mould the drug interests of the city. The jewelers are C. C. Montague and C. M. Beard. Lynch & Hattaway have the finest cotton-gin in the State, it is said; W. J. Kerr also has a good one. The Callaban Flouring Mills, by J. R. McLean, represent that branch of business, while the Van Buren Planing Mills, by Lynch, Colgrove & Co., and the Miller & Jones Planing and Saw Mills and Wooden Box Factory fill the list in that line. J. L. Rea and C. J. Smetz are produce shippers. The marble works are owned by T. M. Mitchell, and the undertaker's establishment by Birnie Bros. Lillard & Ogden, D. Dickson and D. W. Moore deal in real estate, and C. F. Harvey in insurance. The freight agents are C. Hays and R. W. Littlejohn. Jacques Bros. have a general book-store. J. P. Hollingsworth, C. Ribling and H. C. Miller attend to the custom shoe trade. Harness and saddles are furnished by John Kerwin. Lunch rooms and restaurants are represented by Albert Logan, B. L. Orrick, J. K. P. Howell and Frank Steward. Meat markets are kept by W. T. Merrill and R. C. Rees. R. S. Roberts handles stoves, tin-ware and hardware. B. C. Covey deals in sewing machines, pianos, organs, etc. The telephone and telegraph agents are W. B. Allen, S. P. Humphrey, W. E. McKinney and Miss Annie R. Dell. The hotels and boarding houses are as follows: The Broadway Hotel, by Mr. Wentworth; the Collins House, by Samuel Collins; Central Hotel, by C. A. Campbell; St. Charles Hotel, by N. C. Cagle; Mrs. J. Williams' and Mrs. Charles Ward's boarding-houses. Col. J. M. Weaver is the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railway land agent; J. L. Rea is express agent, and P. W. Furry the Union ticket agent. T. C. Murphy is a dealer in Jersey cattle. Livery and carriage works are owned by McIlvaigh & Son, and Pernot's Livery and Sale Stables are popular. L. M. Speaker is a barber, and the Jarvis Barber-shop is another representative of that art. M. W. Drewrey and R. B. Allen have brick-yards. M. F. Reber is a contractor. Millinery is handled by Mrs. R. V. Knight, Mrs. A. H. Lacy and Mrs. E. Rea. Ward & Cummings are photographers. F. E. McCullough and Beardsley & Bro. are painters. The Van Buren Bottling Works promise to be an important industry. Among the blacksmiths are A. K. Davidson, T. M. Laws and W. Haden. H. H. Huston is a gunsmith. The legal fraternity is very large: Turner & Turner, Brown & Sandels, J. B. Ogden, Sr., H. F. Thomason, Taylor & Neal, E. B. Pierce, Bryan & Cooper, J. P. Mullen, J. R. Reeves, J. W. Frederick, N. Turman, Huckleberry & Jay, S. A. Miller and D. N. Moore. The medical profession is also well represented: Bourland & Bourland, C. F. Brown, Dr. Dibrell, H. D. Hammack, Dr. Coryell and Dr. Smith. The dentists are R. W. Quarles, H. C. Stone and E. F. Burson. The Queen City Commercial College is managed by President F. G. Delano. The Highland Fruit Farm is owned by H. C. Miller. Mr. Arkebauer is also an able nursery-man. C. E. Taylor has a billiard hall. The liquor trade has six representatives: W. T. Wallace, S. Collins, T. Wallace, L. A. Bing, J. Carson and P. R. Cravens.

Incorporation.—The first incorporation of Van Buren was, according to Mr. D. Dickson, a temporary affair in 1842, and the recorder, a Mr. McMillan, became improperly bilarious and threw the books into the river. The Intelligencer mentions "An act to incorporate the town of Van Buren, approved January 4, 1844," but the first reliable information to be found is the act of January 4, 1845. A Dr. Herrick is thought to be the first mayor, but the Intelligencer mentions A. McLean as mayor in 1845, and W. J. McMillan as recorder. About this time the council issued scrip, which was given the euphonious name "shin-plasters," and which were so largely counterfeited that it caused considerable excitement. Mr. D. Dickson and Reuben Pryor were mayors of "the forties." John B. Ogden served in 1847-48, and A. J. Ward in 1849. The records previous to 1854 are lost. It is said that about 1852 or 1853 a tax of $2.00 per foot on Main Street was levied to put down the stone pavement from Scott's store to the river. In 1854 the officers were as follows: Mayor, John Austin; recorder, J. A. Eno; aldermen, S. F. Cottrell, E. B. Bishop, George Austin, John Bostick, D. C. Williams, W. F. England and D. Dickson. At that time forty-five men were annually chosen as night patrolmen, who served in squads. Mayor Austin was followed by A. J. Ward (1855), S. F. Cottrell (1856), W. F. England, A. J. Ward (1859), Thomas Walden (1860-61), W. F. England (1862—war period), D. Dickson (1866), John T. Lytle (1869), James O. Churchill (1869-70), J. M. Wood (1871), L. C. White (1872), J. M. Wood and P. R. Johnson (1873), J. J. Burrow (1874), C. F. Harvey, F. M. Neal (1875), W. J. Alexander (1876), John B. Ogden, L. H. Southmayd (1877), F. M. Neal (1878), E. A. Scott (1879), Jesse Turner, Jr. (1880-86), J. D. Hawkins and Jesse Turner, Jr. (1886), F. M. Neal (1887), and Alvis Smith (1888).

One of the early acts of the council, said to have been as early as 1846, probably, was the leasing of the river front of John Drennen. They built a wood and rock wharf, and established wharf receipts as a fund. Mr. Drennen also gave the city ten acres for a cemetery. In 1861 the council ordered forty Hall's rifles, and the patrol were organized, into seven squads under Capt. S. F. Cottrell. On August 28, 1862, the council voted the expiration of police duties, as the city then came under martial law. After the war the council elect first met February 22, 1866, and adopted all the old laws except those referring to negroes, and soon after the first board of health was established. At a meeting of November 14, 1870, Van Buren, being less than 2,500 in population, was reincorporated under the general "Incorporation Law" of April 9, 1869, and James O. Churchill became mayor. The original city maps had been lost, and John B. Ogden was authorized to make new copies.

The Railroad.—In 1876 the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad were contracted with, to "rip-rap" a large section of the river bank. In 1880 an ordinance was passed, issuing scrip to the amount of $8,000, for the purpose of benefiting and improving said town; this was paid to citizens who had bonded themselves to aid the Kansas & Arkansas Valley Railway.

Statistics.—Van Buren handles 15,000 bales of cotton and does an annual business of about $1,000,000. The K. & A. V. Railway is making a marked improvement in her trade in the Indian country. Lots vary in price from $50 each in the suburbs to $130 per front foot on Main Street.

The indebtedness of the town November 1, 1887, was $11,150.92, and November 1, 1888, $7,422.28. The net revenue for the year 1888 was $3,728.64. The present officers are Mayor Alvis Smith, Marshal R. Creekmore, Recorder A. M. Orrick, Aldermen A. Hays, A. H. Colgrove, James O'Kane, John Thayer and F. Laurent.

Societies.—The Secularist Society at Van Buren has a following, if not membership, of thirty-eight persons about Van Buren. They are also known as Liberals, Agnostics, and the Society for Aesthetic and Ethical Culture. They are philosophic, rather than religious, and their members hold almost all shades of philosophy, from the plainest materialism up to the purest idealism; but materialism prevails. Their definition of "pure religion," as given by their most prominent representative, Dr. A. M. Bourland, is as follows: "Pure religion is that inspiration, resulting from conscientious loyalty to truth, which fills one with a sincere, earnest, abiding desire to adjust oneself wisely to the conditions of our being." By the same gentleman Virtue is thus prettily described: "Every faculty and passion of the human mind is for good; the right use of which is virtue, the abuse, vice." The first two most prominent representatives of the movement in Crawford County were D. C. Williams and Louis Graf, but it was not until after the arrival of Dr. A. M. Bourland, about 1867, or thereabouts, that anything of a society nature was attempted. An organization has recently been formed by Mr. Henry Shibley, their chief lecturer, formerly a follower of the teachings of Alexander Campbell, and lectures are held monthly at "School-house 64." Henry Addis et. al. also lecture.

Ivanhoe No. 2, K. of P., was the first lodge of this order organized in Van Buren, the date being November 20, 1872. Col. Robert Newell, D. G. C., of Arkansas, under jurisdiction of the Supreme K. of P., established it, with the following charter members: A. W. Ward, G. P. Gross, C. T. Ward, W. V. Whitfield, D. W. Brodie, John B. Ogden, Jr., S. W. Daugherty, F. M. Neal, J. D. Hawkins and Robert Newell. The first officers chosen in December were P. C., E. G. Whitesides, and William Whitfield as C. C.; Granville Wilcox was V. C.; F. M. Neal, Prelate; G. P. Gross and Charles T. Ward were respectively M. of E. and M. of F. The offices of K. of R. and S. and M. at H. were held by S. W. Daugherty and W. V. Whitfield, while Q. G. and O. G. were the titles of D. W. Brodie and John B. Ogden, Jr., respectively. The C. C.'s were W. Whitfield, G. Wilcox and J. B. Ogden, Jr. Those who have borne the title P. C. are E. G. Whitesides, J. D. Hawkins, D. W. Brodie, W. T. England, A. W. Ward, W. Whitfield, G. Wilcox, G. R. Wood and J. B. Ogden, Jr.

The next lodge was Ivanhoe 27, organized April 20, 1885, by G. C., Frank M. Thompson, with the following grand officers present: *W. E. Barnes, P. G. C.; *Robert Newell, G. V. C.; *S. M. Rutherford, G. P.; M. Jessup, G. M. of E.; J. M. Taylor, G. K. of R. and S.; *J. A. Mayer, G. M. at A.; *J. S. Fielder, G. Q. G., and *G. B. Needles, G. O. G. There were twenty-four charter members, and the following officers were elected: S. A. Miller, P. C.; G. R. Wood, C. C.; J. W. McKinney, V. C.; H. H. Pernot, Prelate; J. D. Hawkins, M. of E.; D. T. Reynolds, M. of F.; F. O. Knight, K. of R. and S.; J. B. Ogden, Jr., M. at H.; W. F. Langley, Q. G., and M. L. Weaver, O. G. Messrs. G. R. Wood, J. W. McKinney, L. H. Southmayd, L. P. Sandels, John Archer and H. C. Pernot have served as C. C. Those who have borne the title P. C. are J. D. Hawkins, W. T. England, J. B. Ogden, Jr., G. R. Wood, J. A. Stevenson, S. A. Miller, J. W. McKinney, L. H. Southmayd, H. C. Pernot, W. H. Dyer, W. F. Langley, L. P. Sandels and John Archer. Their membership is eighty-two, and their total assets, $675.

Van Buren Division No. 5, K. of P., was formed November 8, 1887, by Col. Thomas M. Gibson, with twenty-nine members. The officers elected were G. R. Wood, S. K. C.; U. H. Park, S. K. L. C.; H. C. Pernot, S. K. H.; R. W. Funk, S. K.; Treasurer, C. W. Jones, S. K. R.; J. B. Ogden, Jr., S. K. G., and J. Archer, S. K. S. They now enroll thirty-three members.

Queen City Lodge No. 24, A. O. U. W., was founded at Van Buren, August 3, 1887, by J. C. Byers, D. D. G. M. W.; J. W. Frederick, P. M. W.; L. P. Sandels, M. W.; John Archer, F.; E. G. Arkebauer, O.; W. L. Gullett, R.; John B. Ogden, Jr., Recorder; U. H. Park, Financier; T. W. Davis, G.; H. C. Miller,

I. W.; D. Lile, O. W.; W. L. Gullett, Medical Examiner; A. Hays, J. L. Rea and E. G. Arkebauer, Trustees. Henry Perry, T. W. Davis, John Alton and M. B. Roby were the first organization as to members and officers. The lodge have, in their meetings at I. O. O. F. hall, increased their membership to twenty-three. The following persons are the present incumbents of the various offices: L. P. Sandels, P. M. W.; W. L. Gullett, M. W.; M. H. Johnson, F.; S. T. Jackson, O.; W. B. Allen, R.; J. B. Ogden, Jr., Recorder; E. G. Arkebauer, Financier; S. P. Mitchell, G.; H. C. Miller, I. W.; D. Lile, O. W.; W. L. Gullett, M. E.; L. P. Sandels, A. Hays and H. C. Miller, Trustees. This is the only lodge of this order in Crawford County.

William A. Britton Post No. 48, G. A. R., was organized at Alma in October, 1887, by Deputy Commander S. K. Roberts. The charter enrolled the following names: E. B. Hassett, James Johnson, Mack Franklin, A. H. Huckleberry, J. P. Settles, Baron D. K. Martin, James Clark, J. H. Erby, M. Magness, Elisha Hartridge, John Sergeant, Richard Phillips and William Bowen. The order then chose the following officers: E. B. Hassett, P. C.; James Johnson, S. V. C.; M. C. Franklin, J. V. C.; D. K. Martin, Q.; John Gregory, Adj.; W. T. Morgan, Asst. Adj.; — Alexander, O. of D., and J. P. Settles. There has been no change in officers except in the office of Post Commander, the present incumbent being James Johnson. Their present membership embraces twenty-six persons. The Masonic hall is their place of rendezvous.

The Van Buren Local Assembly No. 6307, K. of L., was organized April 15, 1886, by D. F. Thompson, State organizer, with twenty-four charter members. The first officers chosen were J. H. Farrow, M. W.; Charles Bell, W. F.; W. H. Mitchell, W. I.; Levi Bowen, A.; W. L. H. Couch, F. S.; Horace Addis, R. S.; J. M. Harshaw, Treas.; J. Buel, Statistician; J. F. Arnold, U. K.; William O'Bryan, I. E.; S. Hunter, O. E. M. W. Drury succeeded Mr. Farrow as M. W., and was succeeded by W. F. Stoecker and J. H. Cunningham, who now officiate. A. M. Orrick is the present R. and F. S., and H. H. Dill, the district organizer. The lodge has a membership of sixty-two persons, and hold their meetings at Eugenie Hall.

The Van Buren Lodge No. 6, F. & A. M., was chartered December 3, 1840, and organized by William Stirman, M.; Henry Starr, Sr., S. W., and John Gregg, J. W. The charter and record were burned, it appears, about 1850, the minutes of meetings in 1850 appearing as copied from reports to the grand lodge, and the charter likewise being a duplicate of the original. Meetings were held under a dispensation from December 21, 1850, to February 1 of the following year, when regular meetings began. From the minutes of July 11, 1850, the following are found to have been officers: T. H. Johnson, W. M.; Jacob S. Grove, S. W.; C. F. Brown, J. W.; W. F. England, Treas.; D. C. Williams, Sec.; J. B. Ogden, S. D.; R. S. Roberts, J. D.; Henry S. Wilson, Tyler. Mr. Johnson was succeeded in the Worthy Master's functions by W. O. Chilton; then came W. F. England at several various times, as he seemed to be a very desirable executive; then came C. F. Brown, H. F. Thomason, who served three various terms; John Ingram succeeded him; H. C. Hayman served two terms at non-successive times; R. S. Roberts served in a similar manner, and likewise Granville Wilcox; J. C. Kennedy came next; W. H. H. Shibley was twice honored, and was followed by H. C. Norton and D. Spencer; A. H. Colgrove, the present incumbent, has served twice, and was preceded by L. H. Southmayd. The various offices are now filled as follows: George R. Wood, S. W.; John B. Ogden, Jr., J. W.; H. C. Johnson, Treas.; N. Turmon, Sec.; W. H. H. Shibley, S. D.; A. A. Clinkscapes, J. D.; H. C. Miller, S. S.; C. C. Brown, J. S.; Jas. R. Hewitt, Tyler. The lodge has used various places of meeting; its rooms in the Eagle Block were burned January 15, 1882, and their next home was in the Hinkle Hall. They rent from the I. O. O. F. order at present, but are negotiating for room in the new Lynch's Hall.

Van Buren Chapter No. 3, R. A. M., was chartered May 22, 1874, by the Grand Chapter R. A. C. of Arkansas, to H. F. Thomason, J. C. Kennedy, Charles F. Harvey, Hiram Brodie, J. A. Dibrell, Gran. Wilcox, Pearson Mayfield, Robert H. Love, Louis Graf, H. C. Hayman and B. J. Brown. Gen. Thomason was chosen H. P., while J. C. Kennedy and C. F. Harvey served as the first K. and S. respectively; the C. of H. was Gran. Wilcox, and B. J. Brown became Prin. Soj., while H. Brodie bore the title R. A. Capt.; the M. of Second V. and of Third V. were J. A. Dibrell and H. C. Hayman, respectively, and Louis Graf cared for the records. Gen. Thomason was succeeded by J. C. Kennedy; then followed C. F. Harvey, R. S. Roberts, A. H. Colgrove and their present honored officer, W. H. H. Shibley. With the last-named gentlemen are associated, as officers, L. Graf, K.; H. G. Haines, S.; John Hinkle, Treasurer; Henry Shibley, Secretary; A. H. Colgrove, C. of H.; S. A. Pernot, Prin Soj.; E. Arkebauer, R. A. Capt.; H. C. Hayman, J. W. Frederick and R. J. Miller are respectively M. of Third V., Second V. and First V., and John Archie, Guard. The chapter was one of the lodges burned in 1882, since which time they have occupied Hinkle's Hall, rooms in the Whitfield Block and the Edmondson Hall. Their property is estimated at about $200. They number about thirty-six members.

Newspapers.—The Arkansas Intelligencer was the first paper founded in Crawford County and probably the first in Northwestern Arkansas. At so early a date as February, 1842, one would hardly expect to find a newspaper of a high literary character so nearly on the Indian border as was Van Buren, but those were the golden days of American literature, and the people of the border, without the railway and the telegraph, took great pride in giving finished expression to their ideas in their local paper, and the Intelligencer is stamped with that leisurely literary finish not always seen in these days of the news-paper. The earliest known issue now preserved was No. 4, Volume 2, on "a small sheet, as we have not yet received our paper," the editor explains. The next full-sized folio was No. 8, Volume 2, issued April 18, 1843. Thus it must have been and was established February 19, 1842.* It seems to have been established by Francis M. Van Horne & Thomas Sterne, for they dissolved partnership December 16, 1842, and the latter continued alone. Messrs. Sterne & Wheeler were editors and proprietors in 1843, but in July George W. Clarke's pen became the chief, with Mr. Sterne as manager. Its policy was then neutral, but in March of the succeeding year Mr. Sterne withdrew to found the Western Frontier Whig, and the Intelligencer became Democratic. In April, 1845, J. W. Washbourne and C. D. Pryor assumed control, the former as editor, and so continued until March 21, 1847, when Mr. Clarke resumed the quill. During his control he had a remarkably excellent corps of contributors, that being a prominent feature of the paper, and one, a young thirteen-year-old girl of Fayetteville, sailing under the cognomen "Clementine," deserves mention as one who ought to have afterward made a literary name. The Intelligencer continued until September, 1859, when it was purchased by W. H. Mayers, of Fort Smith, and merged into the Thirty-fifth Parallel at the latter place.

The Western Frontier Whig was founded in May, 1844, as an advocate of the party whose name it bears, by Messrs. Sterne and Logan. Thomas Sterne had withdrawn from the Intelligencer, and with his new partner as chief editor expected to make a successful rival of his old paper. Among their chief contributors were the Hon. Jesse Turner, Sr., and James H. Simpson. Judge Turner tells an incident which will illustrate the editorial wars of that day: Editor Logan was a calm, imperturbable, self-possessed man, while his rival, Mr. Clarke, was brilliant, impulsive and forceful; these conditions, together with the irritation resulting from political rivalry, led the editor of the Intelligencer to christen his rival with the name of a certain comical Indian chief, "Big Mush;" Mr. Logan returned the compliment, and spoke of "Toady" Clarke. The "honorable code" was called in play forthwith, and on the "field of honor," near Fort Smith, two rifle-shots were exchanged, but the smell of powder and bad marksmanship led to reconciliation. According to Judge Turner, the paper was moved entire to Victoria, Tex., about 1845, and finally located in San Antonio.

The Van Buren Press was the third paper established in that city. On July 6, 1859, was issued its first number, by its founder, publisher and editor, J. S. Dunham, of Middletown, Conn. The fact of its more extended existence than any other paper in Crawford County, and during her most vital experience, makes it, from a historical point of view, the most valuable. In its first editorial is the following: "We believe in extending our territory peacefully by annexation, or purchase, if we can, but in any event we go for our country right or wrong." Being the only paper in the county for some time, its influence was not small, and its course seemed remarkably consistent with the principles upon which it acted. On the whole, too, it was, during a trying period, a very fair mirror of the public mind and feeling of the county. Late in 1861 and at the beginning of the following year scarcity of paper led to partial issues, until a half-sheet, issued January 23, 1862, was the last. During the chaotic period that followed that date no paper was issued in the county until the Press reappeared February 3, 1866, with the following editorial comments: "After a lapse of nearly four years, we with this number resume the publication of the Press. * * * * It is the part of wisdom to set about in earnest repairing, so far as we are able, the evils our country has suffered. * * * * We shall warmly support the reconstruction policy of the President. * * * This class (negroes) of our people have been suddenly thrown upon the community as free men, being utterly unprepared for the boon. The only question for us to discuss now is, what can we do for them to make them good citizens, and prevent them from becoming an element of strife and disturbance? Their status as free men gives them certain rights that under our form of government we cannot deny them. The privilege of voting we believe they ought not to enjoy at present, certainly, and we feel that the State has a perfect right to withhold it, because it is a privilege, and not a right; for the reason that by giving them this privilege we would introduce an element of corruption that would be highly injurious, if not ruinous, to the country by placing it in the power of wicked and disigning demagogues to eventually rule the State. The public mind, and the negro, are not yet prepared for this dangerous innovation." This gives not only the editor's ideas then, but the prevailing temper of the county at that time. Mr. Dunham has had continuous control of the paper ever since, and has at brief periods been assisted by Hon. Granville Wilcox and the editor's son, who for a short time was a partner, under the firm title J. S. Dunham & Son. Its policy on public questions has generally been characterized by conservatism, in the better sense of that term; and generally represents the more progressive wing of its party. It is ably edited and active in the county's development.

The Van Buren Argus was a child of the Brooks and Baxter War. The Press had espoused the Baxter cause, and the Brooks leaders of the county, in order to have an organ advocating their position, encouraged Messrs. George Thayer and John Cass, of Hillsboro, Ohio, and Danville, Ills., respectively, to establish the new paper, and Hon. Granville Wilcox was installed as its able editor. It made its first issue, a seven-column folio, on Christmas day of 1875; times were changed, and although ably edited, in a literary sense, it became essentially a news-paper, and exponent of the new development of the county. Mr. Wilcox's connection with the Argus was severed in 1885, a few months previous to his death, and the Thayer Brothers assumed control of all departments, as at present. The publishers and proprietors, following Thayer & Cass, were G. C. Thayer, in 1879; John A. Thayer, in 1880; Thayer & Ibbotson, in 1882, and since that the Thayer Brothers. In 1887 the Messrs. Thayer issued a daily Argus for a few months also; it was a six-column folio.

The Van Buren Graphic was founded in 1881, its first issue, a seven-column folio, bearing the date January 28, and for its title the Graphic. Its founder and editor, J. J. Warren, and its publisher, Frank Ibbotson, were associated until the latter was succeeded on September 2, 1881, by W. N. Bradbury, and the paper assumed its present full title. After Mr. Bradbury's withdrawal Mr. Warren had exclusive management of the paper until its purchase on March 12, 1888, by its present editor and proprietor, Mr. Z. Wells. The Graphic was the first effort to supply the Republican element of the county with a local organ, and its continued existence indicates a demand for it. Its course has been especially characterized as aggressive and spirited, and its life is identified with what might be called the "Frisco Period" of Crawford County's History. It published the Peoples' Protector during the brief existence of that paper.

The Arkansas Agitator was established at Van Buren in June, 1883, by the Davidson Publishing Company, with Maj. F. B. Davidson, of St. Louis, as editor. Its purpose was chiefly industrial and agricultural agitation. It was a semi-monthly, and issued but a few numbers.

The Daily Optic was another short-lived Van Buren paper, issued for a few months in 1885, by Messrs. Frank Ibbotson and G. N. Callahan.

The People's Protector, a paper managed in the interests of the colored people, ran for about eleven weeks in 1888. It was printed at the office of the Graphic, as a six-column folio. H. H. Wilburn, its first editor, was succeeded by E. W. Merchant, who soon retired in favor of G. H. Hill, under whose management it was suspended.

ALMA.

First Residents.—Alma is a beautifully situated town—the second of Crawford County business centers. Its land was entered August 3, 1836, by Ira Smoot, and continued merely farm land afterward, under the ownership of John Henry, until it was bought by Col. M. F. Locke about 1872, although this gentleman had bought other land near by in 1869. The log cabin now back of W. W. Smith's drug store was the only house on the site of the town in 1869, and but ten acres were cleared. Col. Locke built his present house the same year (1869), and also his gin. A Mr. A. W. Griffin kept the first store, and acted as postmaster for the settlement. Renfroe & Byars next built a store on Main Street. In 1870 a residence, now the McKinney House, was built by J. D. James, who also kept a livery stable and stage stand. Renfroe, L. B. Byars, J. E. Smith, followed next in building. The school-house and Masonic hall combined was the next structure erected. The land was deeded to representatives of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Christian and Baptist Churches and the Masonic order, and Col. Locke, president, and B. P. Renfroe, secretary, of a voluntary building committee of fifteen, proceeded to erect a structure at a total cost of about $1,700. After the societies erect buildings of their own this house reverts to exclusive school uses of the public schools.

The King Hotel, managed by a Mr. King, was built by Col. Locke, on the corner of Railroad Street and Fayetteville Avenue (also called Main Street), but it was burned about December, 1884, in the greatest fire which ever visited Alma, and which destroyed about seven buildings—a loss of probably $300,000. One other occurred in January, 1886, in which three or four buildings were burned by an incendiary, it is supposed, at a loss of about $25,000. Col. Locke's and also W. R. Bolling's steam mills and cotton gins, likewise a saw and flouring mill, were erected about 1874.

Later Growth.—After August, 1876, when the Little Rock Railway was completed, Alma showed the greatest signs of growth. The original roadway was a half mile south of its present bed, but through a grant of some land and $1,500 by Col. Locke the survey was secured to its present position. From this time until about 1882 Alma grew to its present proportions, since which time its development has not been so marked. The cotton trade is the controlling one, although black walnut, locust, cedar and sweet-gum timber and lumber are largely shipped. Hay is a large shipment, too, and some oats and corn. The Alma Canning and Evaporating Company was incorporated in August, 1888, by about thirty stockholders and $25,000 in stock. The officers are president, J. D. Rheinhardt; vice-president, M. F. Locke; secretary, W. Nunnally, and J. D. James, treasurer. The works are to be erected in the spring of 1889, about 100 yards east of the depot, and this is expected to draw a considerable fruit trade to Alma.

In general merchandise J. D. James does an average annual business of $120,000, and ships about 3,000 bales of cotton every year; W. R. and S. B. Locke are a large firm in this line; McKibben & Pape (a branch house), A. C. Seale, G. J. McNeely & Bro., Fry & Ford, McFall & Orme, J. G. Orme & Co. and Mrs. A. B. Sloan also represent that line. The grocery trade is managed by M. L. Wright, R. C. Lytal, A. Broome and J. A. Robertson. W. W. Smith and W. F. Baker control the drug trade. Drs. L. J. Wilson, R. H. Alvis, W. T. Black, J. C. Chaney and W. L. Wynne represent the medical fraternity, while the legal lights are J. P. Byers, W. H. Byers, W. L. McFall, J. M. Wright and D. B. Locke. Besides the mills of Mr. Bolling and Col. Locke, before mentioned, H. S. Lewers & Co. and J. K. P. Douglass have corn mills and cotton gins near the town. B. F. Thompson, M. C. Bowlden, F. J. Knight and John Richardson are blacksmiths, and R. F. Hamer has a livery and feed stable. The Howell House, by Mrs. S. E. Howell, the London Hotel, by the London Bros., and the McKinney House, by Mrs. M. E. McKinney, are the homes of the traveling public. S. Wright and M. L. Wright have restaurants, and the ladies of the churches have shown enterprise in establishing ice-cream rooms. B. P. Renfroe deals in insurance. E. R. Lee is express agent. Mr. James, the Lockes, Fry & Ford and L. B. Byars are cotton buyers, and timber is shipped by J. M. Dick. The lumber yard of the Van Buren Planing Mills is managed by Chas. Faber. O. N. Baldwin, L. T. Benton and F. J. Dorshay are builders. Miss Annie Higginbotham manages the millinery department of J. D. James, who also has an implement, wagon and undertaker's department. John London cares for the meat and ice trade, while John Maffitt and Thomas Maxwell deal in hardware and harness, respectively. The barber is H. J. Miller.

Since A. W. Griffin's postmastership his successors have been B. P. Renfroe, W. A. Britton, E. B. Hassett, Noble Bolen and H. S. Lewers.

Newspapers.—Newspaper life has been a variable thing in Alma. The Alma Herald was founded in 1877 by M. L. Yeatman, with whom a Mr. Bell was afterward associated. It was a seven-column Democratic sheet. Two years later a stock company, composed of M. F. Locke, J. T. Hollowell, L. C. Locke, D. W. Brodie, W. T. Black, B. P. Renfroe and E. B. Hassett, bought the office, and George Thayer (of the Van Buren Argus) leased it, and for two years it was independently Democratic, under the name Crawford County Democrat. John Renfroe and R. R. Wood were the next lessees, under the name of The Arkansas Farmer, and two years later a Mr. Stonecipher gave it the name Alma Leader, and Frank Ibbotson was its publisher for a few issues. It might be mentioned that Eugene Douglass and P. H. Hillyer were connected with the paper a short time in its first years, under the name Alma Independent. J. S. Renfroe used the name Leader while he had charge, and again, B. P. Renfroe had control of it under part of its present name, the Crawford County Democrat. Col. Locke took charge of it in March, 1887, and replaced "Crawford County" by "Alma," and in June, 1888, D. B. Locke and J. A. Garner assumed control.

Incorporation.—Alma has a population of over 800, located on Sections 5, 6, 7 and 8, Township 9, Range 30. It is estimated that about 15 per cent is colored population. In 1872 it was incorporated, with W. P. Brown, mayor; J. C. Betton, recorder; J. H. Gill, M. F. Locke, J. D. James, J. M. Wright and L. B. Byars as aldermen. The mayors have been G. W. Smith, J. D. James, J. C. Betton, J. M. Wright, J. A. McNeely, B. Caraway, W. C. Bostick and W. S. Byars. The present officers are mayor, J. A. McNeely; recorder, L. Black; aldermen, W. W. Smith, Joseph Ford, D. J. McNeely, R. F. Hamer and W. R. Bolling. The marshal is T. T. Byars.

The excellent churches and schools of Alma will be treated in the chapter devoted to those subjects. Alma has frequently taken the lead in such county societies as the Agricultural Association, the County Immigration Society, etc. It has three fraternities, the F. & A. M., K. of H. and G. A. R.

Lodges.—Alma Lodge No. 43, F. & A. M., was organized August 14, 1875, the date of charter being October 12, 1875. The original members and officers were H. G. Haines, W. M.; W. R. Bolling, S. W.; J. F. Bushman, J. W.; J. M. McGuffey, S. D.; J. E. Smith, J. D.; T. W. Bolling, Treas.; W. H. Byers, Sec.; T. T. Byars, Tyler; R. M. Thurston, H. C. Hill, L. Byars, R. P. Morrow, A. Toole and J. M. McKinney. Mr. Haines' successors have been J. M. McGuffey, J. A. McNeely, J. M. McKinney, S. Bolton, H. S. Lewers, E. M. Lowery, J. E. Smith, W. R. Bolling and Dr. L. J. Wilson, the present W. M. The remaining officers at present are G. J. McNeely, S. W.; J. E. Smith, J. W.; L. Nunnally, Treas.; J. H. Bolling, Sec.; William Hanners, S. D.; J. M. Hardin, J. D., and J. P. Settles, Tyler. They have forty-seven members.

Alma Lodge No. 3166, K. of H., was chartered May 26, 1888, by Mr. Futrell, of Little Rock, Ark. The charter members were J. E. Smith, James N. Patton, W. R. Bolling, O. Echols, J. M. Bates, John Matthews, A. C. Seale, Joseph Balentine, R. H. Alvis (medical examiner), W. W. Smith, G. O. Alvis, S. H. Reed, A. J. Harrell, Edmond Burton, E. T. Reed, M. M. Rinegar, John Sharp, J. D. McKumon, R. N. Anderson. The first dictator was W. R. Bolling, who was succeeded by J. E. Smith and O. Echols. The membership is now thirty-one persons.

CHESTER.

Its Early Life.—Chester is the third town in Crawford, and is located on Sections 27 and 34, Township 12, Range 30. The land was entered by Samuel Rush December 9, 1850, and Solomon Basham January 12, 1852, and by Capt. J. C. Wright in 1853. Messrs. Rush and Wright were the first settlers, and the first man to make any real improvements was Abner Scrimshire, who located at Capt. Wright's spring about 1839. He still lives in the neighborhood. Charles Howard bought the land about 1849, but since 1853 Capt. Wright has owned it, and his home was the only buildings on the site of Chester up to September, 1884.

Later Business.—Jacob Yoes followed the completion of the Frisco, and built, in 1884, a frame store, 20x50 feet, now standing near his fine two-story brick block, built in February, 1888. Capt. Wright had a little room in April, 1882, in which the post-office was opened by him, and some groceries kept. In July, 1887, the Frisco Railway opened a station, and built the present commodious depot in September. The new Yoes Block contains a dry goods store and hotel, the Chester House, which was run by W. C. Douthett and F. M. Wilhoit before the present proprietor, Mrs. M. E. Crowe, took charge. Capt. Wright built his present grocery and post-office rooms in 1887. In 1884 he put up a blacksmith shop, and employed workmen until he sold out to Jacob Yoes. He then built another in January, 1888. He also erected a barber shop, and rented it to W. Stokes and Mr. Harris, the present manager.

In July, 1887, the "Frisco" round-house and repair shops were completed, with coal-chutes and timber yard, giving employment to about 100 men. George W. Mooney built a general merchandise store in 1887, and in 1888 sold to Butler Bros. They now run a billiard hall. In 1887 was established a drug store by Dement & McGinnis, but the firm sold out to Dr. L. G. Friday, who had, in January, 1888, put a dry goods stock into the old post-office building. Dr. J. L. Dement had bought land adjoining Capt. Wright's in 1884, and has been the chief physician in Howard's Fork Valley. J. F. Parker began the family grocery business, and built his store in January, 1888, and soon after

Mrs. Mary Kindrick built a boarding house. J. W. Emerson started a saw-mill in the fall of 1887 to supply the railway company. This is what is left of the extensive lumber trade of the White River Lumber Company and the Arkansas Lumber Company during the early half of "the eighties." Ties are still a great shipment, but strawberries and produce are the leaders. Capt. Wright had four acres of the berries at one time. A. P. Brooks manages a lumber yard. J. R. Stewart has built a boarding house, and Dr. Friday has a neat new drug house. Lewis Flatoe has a dry goods store.

Capt. Wright laid out the town in March, 1887, on the east side of the railway, into nine blocks, 300x300 feet, with Front Street as the principal thoroughfare.

Lodge.—Chester Lodge, F. & A. M., No. 459, was organized in April, 1887, by the following members and officers: J. D. Hoffman, W. M.; E. P. Stafford, S. W.; J. M. Rogers, J. W.; J. M. Carter, Secretary; Capt. J. C. Wright, Treasurer; W. H. Ranken, J. D.; O. Ross, S. D.; John Furlow, Tyler; Samuel Eddy and Dr. Dement. The present officers are Dr. Dement, W. M.; Mr. Stafford, S. W.; J. R. Wilson, J. W.; F. M. Butler, Secretary; Capt. Wright, Treasurer; Mr. Hoffman, S. D.; Mr. Ranken, J. D., and Mr. Furlow, Tyler. The fraternity own half of a two-story school-house, District 65, built at a cost of about $400. The present membership is twenty-four.

MOUNTAINBURG.

Mountainburg, like other offshoots of the "Frisco Railway," is beautifully located among the mountains on Section 15, Township 11, Range 30, and its population is estimated at about 250. Its present site was entered by George Dyer about 1845, and by James C. Wright about 1883. It has sprung up in the last few years around a store and station started by Jacob Yoes, the town builder along the "Frisco" in Northwestern Arkansas. Round this has clustered a blacksmith and wagon shop, a good gin and mill, and the shipments of lumber and fruits, which have come to characterize these local points along the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway. The place also has one physician, Dr. Bushong; a Masonic hall and school-house also are institutions of the place, the latter serving also the purpose of a church, in which the Christian, Baptist and Methodist societies and others hold occasional services.

Clear Creek Local Assembly No. 9259, K. of L., was organized December 22, 1886, at Mountainburg, Ark., by D. F. Thompson, State Organizer. There were thirty-six charter members, from whom were chosen the following officers: H. B. Reamy, M. W.; Joel Miller, R. S.; H. C. Reamy, F. S.; J. W. Hatfield, Treasurer; James S. Bushong, W. F. The lodge is young, but prosperous, enrolling 100 members in good standing. The present incumbents of the various offices are as follows: J. R. Galaway, M. W.; Isaac Gilstrap, R. S.; J. H. Reamy, F. S.; W. R. Peter, W. F.; M. E. Wagner, Treasurer.

CEDARVILLE.

This is a picturesque inland village of (it is estimated) about 200 people, and is located on Sections 2 and 11, Township 10, Range 32. It was laid out in March, 1879, by Palmer and Lee Neal, Charles Crowell, Archibald Hays, James O'Bryan, Philip Howell and W. G. Nipper—the surveyor being Davidson Dickson. Eight blocks, four on each side of Main Street, was the form that spread out over the beautiful cedar-adorned Webber Valley of Lee's Creek; its boundaries were: "Beginning 32 rods east of the southeast quarter of Section 2, Township 10, Range 32; thence due south 40 rods; thence due west 110 rods; thence due north 120 rods; thence due east 110 rods; thence due south 80 rods to the place of beginning."

The most reliable information obtainable gives the first house erected as a log one, on the site of Mr. Maxey's home, by Valentine Matlock. This was in "the thirties."

Dr. Young was among the next residents. After the war H. S. Anderson secured the land under a tax title, and built the Maxey house, and gave the place its present name, Cedarville. His brother-in-law built a house also. Dr. Young's widow was enabled to secure the place next, and from her a Mr. Crowell bought it. This gentleman sold parts of the land from time to time to Palmer Neal, Jacob Shelly, Robert Crowell, Henry Crowell, Lee Neal, and others, all of whom erected business houses or homes, or both. Mr. Shelly had a shoe-shop and store during the war, and afterward James O'Bryan, a saloon and grocery; Palmer Neal, a general store; H. C. Crowell, a store, and Lee Neal & Bro. opened a drug store. At present J. F. Neal has a general store; Lee Neal & Bro., Maxey Bros. and Neal & Purcell have drugs and groceries; John Trehitt and Robert Rowell have blacksmith shops; Mr. Shelly has his shoe-shop; The C. W. Neal estate own a mill and gin; and Dr. R. G. Harrison attends the sick. Among the postmasters have been Robert Crowell, Lee Neal, C. W. Neal and M. J. Purcell. The place has one union church, in which several societies hold services, and one of the finest Masonic halls in the county. The town was incorporated in 1881, the first meeting of the council being held on October 2. W. A. Ives, Palmer Neal, Lee Neal and Dr. R. G. Harrison have served as mayors.

COVE CITY.

This is an enterprising inland village of about 150 inhabitants, situated on Section 36, Township 12, Range 32. It has two live merchants, R. C. Oliver and Isaac Briscoe; a blacksmith and wagon-shop, owned by J. J. Beale, and a grist and saw mill and cotton gin combined, the property of R. C. Oliver. Dr. P. B. Swearingen is the only physician. The town was laid out in 1880 by W. B. Shoemaker, and covers thirty acres in the form of a square, with 108 lots. The residents at that time were J. R. Reed, F. W. White, H. G. Shoemaker, C. D. Gilliam, D. P. Cox, J. J. Beale, Dr. E. G. McCormick and Albert Rainwater. The land was entered at an early date by Clem Moberly, and the first store was established about 1854, and later on a blacksmith shop and post-office, the postmaster being a Mr. Hill. Oliver and Gilliam were the merchants. Cotton and corn are the chief shipments, and Van Buren is their market. The village has a school-house erected in 1882, and D. P. Cox has charge of their schools. Cove City Lodge, F. & A. M., No. 288, and Cove City Eastern Star Chapter, W. D., are two flourishing fraternities. The place has about twenty-seven buildings.

UNIONTOWN.

This is another inland village of probably 150 people, located on Section 31, Township 11, Range 32, and Section 6, Township 10, Range 32. Its land was entered by I. Vinsant in "the forties," and by the Howell family. A mill and cotton gin was erected by Alexander Thompson before the war, and a church and school-house was built. Mr. Wood afterward opened a store, and is now the leading merchant.

Uniontown Lodge No. 395, F. & A. M., was chartered November 28, 1882. The original members were Thomas Comstock, James A. Burress, L. H. Oliver, R. G. Harrison, Henry Howell, William S. Williams, Adam Howell and William H. Remy. The officers were Thomas Comstock, W. M.; James A. Burress, Sr. W., and L. H. Oliver, J. W. The present membership of the lodge is twenty-nine.

PORTER.

This is a "Frisco" village of considerable vigor as a shipping point for lumber and fruits. It contains about 150 people, and is twenty-nine miles north of Van Buren, on Section 10, Township 12, Range 30. Edward Lee received a patent for the land on which the place is located, in 1886. The first building in the village was a store, moved there from a mill below by John Ruth-erford, but this is now destroyed. Mr. B. F. Strong's residence was next, and that was followed by Thomas Testament's store building. The depot was located and erected in 1882, and in 1885 the land was laid out in lots, which were arranged in the form of six blocks. Porter has developed rapidly, so that there are now three stores owned by Messrs. Edward Lee, Thomas Testament and M. M. Saylor, respectively; a hotel, managed by Mrs. W. T. Kimbew; railway agent, operator and postmaster, Mr. J. W. Scobey; a school, taught by Prof. H. P. Johnson, and twelve residences.

RUDY.

This is one of the most picturesquely located villages in Crawford County, and is one of the "Frisco Railway's" considerable shipping points for cotton, strawberries, peaches, apples and wild berries. Its population has been estimated at possibly 125 persons. It is located on Section 23, Township 10, Range 31. The land on which it is situated was settled by a Mr. Green about 1830, but a Mr. E. Bell entered it in 1835, and the first few buildings were of the rude log variety. It was made a station after the completion of the railway, and was laid out by Maj. Hineckley, the chief engineer of this division of the Frisco Railway. Two stores, a blacksmith shop, cotton-gin and grist-mill, embrace the business of the place. The Farmers' Alliance is a local secret order, and the Fine Spring Masonic Lodge, about two and one-half miles east of Rudy, serves as a fraternity for this village also. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is the only organized religious society in the place, and a fine district school building, about one mile to the east, serves as their public school.

SMALLER VILLAGES.

Dyer is a station on the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad, and a shipping point of importance. The land was railway land, bought in 1870 by S. M. Dyer, whose name it bears. W. U. Casey built the first dwelling, store and shop, and W. A. Dyer and Frank Hays also built homes. J. W. Moss and G. E. Dyer laid out the place in lots in 1884. The present business embraces two stores, a blacksmith shop, cotton-gin, grist-mill and saw-mill. Cotton, cotton-seed, timber and fruit are the chief shipments. The station house was recently burned. They have one public school, and the Methodist and Christian Churches are represented.

Dora is a border village on the Kansas & Arkansas Valley Railway of, it has been estimated, about 100 people. It is located on Sections 18 and 19, Township 9, Range 32. The land was entered by John Harrell at an early date. Vinsant and Hood are the leading merchants. The town is on the State line, and is the result of the railway.

Graphic is a young inland village embracing a population of about twelve families. The first store was started in October, 1886, by Isaac Smith, and the following year J. H. Walker put up a general store. Dr. E. M. Dowry opened a stock of drugs about the same time. Moore & Yoes established a general store in 1888, and were soon followed by Leonard Dyer & Bros., grocers. C. W. Smith & Son opened a dry goods store, and general merchandise received an addition to its trade through Lawry &

Son. George Weeks is the blacksmith. Lewis and Ellis Peters have a saw and grist-mill and cotton-gin. A two-story frame building, 28x50 feet, is occupied by the Masonic lodge in the upper story, and the first is used for church and school purposes. Frank Dyer is postmaster.

Lancaster is a station on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway, located on Section 6, Township 10, Range 30.

Lilly is a considerable shipping point for fruit on the "Frisco Railway," and is located on Section 35, Township 10, Range 31. The depot and a single store include its buildings.

Cross Lanes is a settlement located on Sections 4, 5, 8 and 9, Township 8, Range 30.

Natural Dam is an old and small settlement located about the noted Natural Dam, elsewhere described in this volume, and is situated on Section 9, Township 11, Range 32.

Belmont (Post-office) is located on Section 10, Township 10, Range 30. John R. Meadows is its leading spirit.

Sulphur Springs, or White Sulphur Springs, is located on Section 32, Township 11, Range 32, about the popular mineral springs there.

Eads and Anna are post-offices in the northern part of the county.

Armada ships timber and fruits. It has a store, blacksmith shop, and is headquarters for the White River Lumber Company. It is located on Section 16, Township 12, Range 30.

London Town was first started in 1853. A saw-mill, blacksmith shop and one store, a cotton-gin, and grist-mill also, includes the business. M. L. London is the leading spirit of the place. Judge H. B. Hale is their trader. They have a lodge of F. & A. M.

ADDENDUM.

Fruit.—The fruit shipments of Crawford County points along the "Frisco Railway," between April 20 and July 31, 1888, were as follows: From Van Buren, strawberries, 9,200 crates; peas, 900 boxes; beans, 1,300 boxes; apples, 1,250 boxes; tomatoes, 3,300 boxes; peaches, 3,700 boxes; raspberries, 1,108 crates; grapes, 900 crates. From Lilly, strawberries, 1,000 boxes; peaches, etc.,

2,500 boxes. From Rudy, strawberries, 900 crates; peaches, etc., 1,400 boxes. From Mountainburg, peaches, etc., 1,500 boxes. Many were also shipped from Chester and other points.

MILITARY ANNALS.

The Mexican War.—The first notice of Crawford County's interest in the Mexican War was an editorial in the Intelligencer favoring the annexation of Texas.* In August, 1845, was the first mention of war, and on June 1, 1846, pursuant to the call of Gov. Drew, the "Van Buren Avengers" were organized as a mounted company, which was afterward accepted as Company—, Sixth Arkansas Regiment. The officers were as follows: Captain, John S. Roane; first lieutenant, George S. Foster; second lieutenant, Alexander Steward; first sergeant, B. F. Ross; second sergeant, George Y. Latham; third sergeant, John Sprott; fourth sergeant, J. W. B. Davis; first corporal, John Rudy; second corporal, D. Steward; third corporal, J. Pierce; fourth corporal, D. D. Thompson; musicians, W. Quesenbury and F. A. Rector. Col. Drennen was active in furnishing the company with supplies. This was the first Arkansas company mustered in at Washington.

The Crawford Guards, organized in 1845 for frontier protection, about the same time became a cavalry company, with the following officers: Captain, John Drennen; first lieutenant, R. Stevenson; second lieutenant, George Turner; orderly-sergeant, I. M. Marshall; secretary, J. W. Washbourne. Capt. Price's mounted gun-men in Jasper and Lee's Creek Townships, Capt. Brook's in Big Creek Township and Capt. Orme's general company were other companies used chiefly for frontier protection.

The battle of Buena Vista was reported quite fully in the Intelligencer, one writer† saying: "We paid dearly for our glory. In the few minutes of the conflict Col. Yell had fallen, Capt. Porter, John Pelham, Richard Sanders, the standard bearer of Independence, and several others. Darwin Stewart rode perhaps 200 yards before he fell. I passed him, but did not know him at that time; he was upon his face, and many of our men wore similar dresses." Capt. Dillard succeeded Capt. Roane after the latter's appointment as lieutenant-colonel. The "Avengers" were in the Taylor Campaign in Northern Mexico, and rendered distinguished services. The following is a statement of the company after the campaign:

Captain, Dillard; first lieutenant, B. F. Ross; lieutenant, G. W. Foster; second lieutenants, A. Stewart and L. Willhaff; G. Y. Latham, J. W. B. Davis, D. Thompson, W. Allen, J. S. Boyd, R. B. Chew, A. Dale, O. Fogerty, J. L. Haynes, S. Knous, J. W. D. Lasater, W. R. McFarlaine, J. C. Roberts, W. F. Houck, J. Pearce, D. E. Lewis, G. R. Bell, A. J. Boyd, G. A. Chew, R. Foster, F. Houck, A. C. Ingram, M. Kelley, J. W. Little, I. Patty, W. Quesenbury, W. Stinnett, W. Capps, G. W. Peyton, B. Smith, W. C. Thomas, S. White, S. Johnson, J. H. Smith, M. Thomas, M. A. Worley, J. Story, M. H. Parker, R. Price, L. Moore, J. A. Hagwood, W. Duty, John Rudy, D. Hart, R. Smith, J. W. Taylor, D. Atkins, J. B. Compton and J. Sprott.

On the return* of the volunteers, with the body of Col. Yell, impressive ceremonies were held in the transferring of the remains to a committee from his home, Fayetteville. A barbecue reception was also prepared, and on the 29th of July, although inclement weather interfered, a successful demonstration was held. The Hon. George W. Paschal delivered an oration, and all the conviviality that attends the barbecue was indulged in thereafter, and the "Van Buren Avengers" were citizens again.

THE CIVIL WAR.

Forebodings.—Time enough had hardly passed for dust to gather on the arms of the Mexican soldier before the faint rumblings of the Civil War began to be heard. The first notice of the Abolition movement to be found in the Van Buren journals is a caustic squib on William Lloyd Garrison in the Intelligencer for February 1, 1845, and in that for June 14, of the same year, appears significant comments on the separation of Northern and Southern branches of various denominations. On June 2, 1849, a strong editorial appeared discussing the "Emancipation movement," and in several other issues are remarks on the missionaries sent South by the Northern branch of the Methodist Church, which plainly gave evidence that the Southern branch viewed the movement as an Abolition propaganda. The probabilities of abolitionism and colonization were also discussed, as if there was a presentiment that all possible solutions of a great question must be tried. An anti-slavery convention at Batesville in December, 1849, was also criticised. Then, July 6, 1859, comes the first issue of the Van Buren Press, that powerful organ of war times and reconstruction days, speaking in decisive tones, "in any event we are for our country right or wrong." The Press represents the Crawford County of those days in so masterly a style that its columns are freely quoted in these pages.

Crawford County was as unlike Washington County in their main political characteristics on this question as in the physical features of the two counties. Washington had a large element that was decisively national in its sympathies, while that element in Crawford assumed considerably less than the same proportions, although the first Northwest Arkansans, probably, to join the Federal forces were from Crawford County, as the following from the pen of Col. A. W. Bishop witnesses: "On May 10, 1862, there came to its pickets* a band of eleven Arkansans, led by Thomas J. Gilstrap and Furiben Elkins, of Crawford County," and these men gave Col. M. La Rue Harrison the first idea of a sufficient latent national following in Northwest Arkansas to warrant the organization of regiments among them. Still, within the borders of Crawford County decisive nationalists were far fewer than the followers of the Confederate cause, in comparison with her northern neighbor, and far less concerted in their action.

In Crawford, as elsewhere in the Southern States, the Brown Harper's Ferry raid seemed to be the brand that set the Southern cause aflame.

Comments of the Press.—The August issues of the Press† record the news of Abolition incendiaries in Texas and other surrounding States, and also gives evidence of a systematic Abolition party secret propaganda for arousing insurrection among the slaves in the various Southern States, a movement of which John Brown was considered an intelligent member. Public meetings were held, one on September 15, 1860, at Van Buren, to organize a county police force to ferret out horse-thieves and incendiary or insurrectionary Abolitionists. S. M. Hays was chairman and I. B. Riley, secretary. The meeting chose 117 police for the county service, thirty-eight for Van Buren Township and four for Sheppard, with others varying between. A later number of the Press says: "We are requested to give notice that hereafter all slaves found at large after the 9 o'clock bell rings will be lodged in jail." * * * It also says:* "Let it be remembered * * that Yancy, an avowed disunionist and a bold traitor to the Union, is the father and the soul of the sectional party south. That the Democratic party is pledged to resist the Abolition doctrine of Congressional intervention in the States and Territories. That the whole power of the present corrupt and tyrannical administration has been wielded in vain, to destroy the great champion of popular sovereignty, Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois. That Caleb Cushing, of Massachusetts, who presided over the Bolter's Convention, which nominated Breckenridge and Lane, voted, when in Congress, against the admission of Arkansas into the Union because she tolerated slavery. That the object of the Yancy-Breckenridge-Lane faction is to 'fire the Southern heart, instruct the Southern mind, and at the proper moment, by one organized, concerted action, to precipitate the cotton States into a revolution.' " The Press was the leading Douglas organ of Northwest Arkansas. On October 15, 1860, by order of Col. J. T. Humphrey, the Fifth Arkansas Militia met and drilled at Van Buren, and often thereafter. It comprised about 1,000 men.

The Press says†: "From our telegraph reports, which are quite full, it is certain that Abraham Lincoln, the 'rail-splitter,' is elected President for the next four years, from the 4th of March.

"With both houses of Congress opposed to him, as they are, by large majorities, we do not see, for the life of us, how he can carry out his Abolition doctrines, if he is so disposed. Give him a trial, and then, if his administration is so obnoxious that we can not honorably live under it, let us cast it off. Let us ponder well before we give up a good government, without the certainty of bettering ourselves. Examine well this subject of a Southern Confederacy, fellow citizens—carefully and practically, without prejudice, and we are willing to abide by your decision.”

The Clarksville Conference, in session at Van Buren, in November, 1860, “Resolved, That we appoint the Friday before Christmas to be observed by our church throughout the bounds of our Conference as a day of fasting and special prayer to Almighty God for the preservation of our political Union.” Rev. R. W. Hammet, P. E., Rev. G. A. Schaefer, of Van Buren, and Rev. P. Basham, of Van Buren Circuit, were among the prominent members.

“Let Arkansas, as well as every other Southern State, make preparations for any event that may transpire—let us be prepared for any and every emergency. Common prudence should dictate such a course. We cannot say what Northern fanaticism and Southern exasperation combined may bring about—but let us as a State be prepared—willing to concede, for the sake of and preservation of the Union, all that we can in honor do—but submitting to nothing beyond. Again, then, we say, let us be ‘prudent, firm and conservative,’ ” says the Press.*

The following editorial in the Press, so well represents the general public pulse at the close of 1860 that it is given entire: .

ARKANSAS AND HER DUTY.†

We are in the midst of a time, and are surrounded by events, which will form one of the most important and interesting passages in future history ever submitted to the eyes of an earnest and inquiring public. They will then see the bearings of events more clearly than we possibly can; their eyes will be freed from the veil of prejudice and passion; their reason unclouded by excitement or fanaticism. We are preparing our cause for the bar of the future. They must try us; they must acquit or condemn us. We are entrusted by our fathers with institutions and privileges attaching thereto, hallowed by events long passed, made sacred by their blood and treasure, purchased at the expense of untold sorrow, trial and privation. Our fidelity to this trust is about to be tried. The events which have occurred in the last few days speak too plainly of the trouble which is in the great womb of the future, soon to be cast upon us. At such a time as the present it is worse than useless for men to speculate—worse than useless for us to descant in long essays, or argue in wordy speeches, upon the abstract right of a State to secede from the Union. It is wholly immaterial to us now which is right—the doctrine announced by Calhoun and Haynes in their great speeches on the floor of Congress upon the legitimate significance of the word compact, or the opinion promulgated by the immortal Webster in his reply. We have to deal with abstractions no longer. As in all resolutions, abstractions are lost, and the mind naturally and necessarily seeks the tangible, the practical, the expedient. The abstract moral or legal right of our State to secede from the Union is gone for the present, and we can deal only with the other division of the question, namely, the practical. We cannot wait to solve the first part of the question, for one or two States have put in practice the thing itself, call it secession or revolution, names cannot effect the truth. The only question now in issue is, would it be expedient for Arkansas to follow in the wake of the other States that have taken it upon themselves to withdraw from the compact heretofore entered into by these sovereign States? Shall we assist in demolishing the government which is the wonder of the world—the pride of Americans? Shall we, too, retrace the bloody steps of our revolutionary heroes? Shall we undo all that a wisdom little short of inspiration has done for us, and emerge into the dark clouds of an anarchy too terrible to be even contemplated without a shudder of horror? Shall we assist in demonstrating to the civilized world that Republicanism is a whim, a folly, which only has a being in the brains of speculative politicians? Shall self-government and free liberal institutions prove a disgraceful failure? And shall we assist in bringing about the failure? These are the questions which press themselves home upon us now. And now they must be answered—their solution must be given quickly. The election of Mr. Lincoln has passed from doubt into certainty, and we behold in him a President elected by only one character of States. The free (?) States alone have had a voice in his election; but he goes into the presidential chair checkmated; he is a naught, powerless, impotent. So long as he fulfills the constitutional obligations of the oath he will take, all will be well enough, but the moment he attempts to overstep them he becomes justly ridiculous, and exhibits himself to a mocking people as an impotent puppet clothed in the robes of royalty. It is said that Mr. Lincoln intends to promulgate his line of policy, and make known the members of his future cabinet as soon as he is certain of his election, and especially intends to announce his views upon the slavery question. If this be true let us hear him, for the presumption is, and to my mind it is a violent one, that he intends to modify his hitherto expressed sentiments on that important subject, so that they may fully comport with the views entertained by the Southern people, and with the Constitution; if not, then why issue any address at all, for we certainly are fully advised as to the opinions he has heretofore held. Now if he chooses to retract his former opinions on this subject, and this is the apple of discord, and thereby turns a cold shoulder upon his radical and insane brethren, and shows every disposition to abide by the Constitution, especially the Fugitive Slave clause, and by the laws already enacted, we certainly cannot object to his going on, and to giving him a fair chance, particularly when disunion and anarchy are the alternatives. The most sensible opinion certainly is that he cannot, at all events, maintain himself in the presidential chair six months unless he does abide by the Constitution. And if he does so abide, then he will plant seeds of undying contention in the bosom of his party, and these, co-operating with the innate elements of destruction, will soon entirely destroy the Republican party. And so unblushingly corrupt is the party, that when it does go, no other party of a similar character can rise upon its ruins. All these things being true, would it not be better for Arkansas to keep perfectly cool, and not allow herself to be hastened on to destruction and treason by scheming and designing men? Let her citizens reflect upon the condition in which she will place herself by so mad a step as secession from the Union. Let the masses, the tax-paying masses, reflect that upon them and their property will fall the burdensome weight of supporting the new government, even if they succeed in forming one. They must pay taxes sufficient to keep the wheels of their government in motion—to keep up the post-office department—new and additional duties on imports, and more than likely be compelled to assist in maintaining a standing army, that instrument and companion of despotism, which will be able at any day to raise a military despot over them. These are the legitimate offshoots of revolution. There is talk of calling a convention.

If a call is to be made, let the people be on the lookout, and have their members in that convention who will express their sentiments. If they are unwilling to hazard a secession, let them elect men who are opposed to secession, and let the convention reflect the true sentiment of the people. Circumstances may become such as to force Arkansas to go with the Southern States or abolish slavery. If Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas should secede, then, of course, but two paths are open to Arkansas. She will then be forced to secede, also, or abolish slavery. It is, of course, too great a pecuniary sacrifice for her to do the latter; she must adopt the former course. And in that case she will have nothing to regret. She will then have acted wisely by keeping quiet, and allowing the current of events to take their course, and when nothing else is left her, she will fall into the tide and become a creature of destiny, for the step once taken, events become greater than men, and we all are forced to trim our sails to suit the storm, and sail onward to safety or ruin. Let us do all our thinking before we get into the power of the political maelstrom, for we may rest assured but little opportunity will be afforded us to do so afterward.

“Garrison tells us,” says the Press,* “he is in for ‘meddling with slavery everywhere, attacking it by night and by day, in season and out of season,’ in order to finally effect its overthrow; * * well knowing, also, that Abraham Lincoln is a perfect exponent of the party expressing such views, we should no longer doubt as to the expediency of immediate action.” Commercial boycott on the North was recommended.

On January 5, 1861, a mass-meeting was held at the courthouse in Van Buren. Henry Wilcox was made chairman, and John B. Ogden, secretary. A committee on resolutions were chosen, embracing Jesse Turner, Samuel Harrington, C. A. Carroll, Jacob Meadows, Josiah Harral, Robert Sutherland, Jesse Marshall, James Heard, Whitfield Bourne, Andrew Couch, Hiram Brodie, Thomas Walden and J. S. Dunham. After an eloquent address by Gen. Thomason, this committee reported the following resolutions:

Resolved, In view of the alarming crisis which is upon us, that the rights and institutions of the slave-holding States ought to be maintained and defended at every hazard, and to the last extremity.

Resolved, further, that we view the personal liberty bills of certain non-slave-holding States, passed for the purpose of defeating the fugitive slave law, not only as unfriendly in spirit, but as palpable infraction of the Federal Constitution, and gross violation of the plighted faith of these States, and that we insist on their speedy repeal, and a faithful execution of said law, as one of the conditions of fraternal relations between the slave-holding and non-slave-holding States of the Union.

Resolved, further, in view of impending dangers to our beloved country, that it is our ardent desire to preserve this Union, if it can be preserved consistently with the honor, rights and interests of the slave-holding States; and that, for the purpose of deliberation upon this momentous subject, we are in favor of a conference of all the slave-holding States, to be held at Nashville, at such a time as may be agreed upon, and if need be that a convention of all the States be held at such a time and place as may be agreed upon, in order that an effort be made to adjust and settle on a satisfactory basis all the disturbing controversies which have arisen between the slave-holding and non-slave-holding States.

Resolved, further, that in the event of a failure of the slave-holding States obtaining such guarantees of their rights in the Union as may be compatible with their honor and interests, that they then insist upon a fair and equitable division of the public property, including the common territory of the United States, they assuming their proportionate share of the public debt, and that, if this cannot be obtained, they separate from their northern confederates, not peaceably, but that they draw the sword and fight for their rights to the bitter end.

Resolved, further, that we are opposed to separate State action, and especially to the secession of Arkansas from the Federal Union, without co-operation with her sister States of the South.

Resolved, further, that in a spirit of conciliation, and in view of the calamities which, we believe, would attend a dissolution of the Union, we are willing that time should be given to the non-slave-holding States to retrace their steps, to repeal their unconstitutional laws, to depose their unprincipled leaders, and to give the South such satisfactory guarantees as will secure their rights and equalities in the Union.

Resolved, further, that while we deplore the election of Abraham Lincoln to the presidency, upon a purely sectional issue, and upon the ground of his hostility to Southern institutions, as an event justly calculated to excite our alarm, and a sufficient cause to warrant us in demanding additional guarantees for the protection of our rights and equality in the Union, yet we unhesitatingly declare that, in our opinion, it is not in itself a sufficient cause for the dissolution of the Union.

Resolved, further, that we heartily tender the thanks of this meeting to Messrs. Crittenden, Butler, Bigler, Rust and others for their patriotic and unwearied efforts in Congress to heal the unhappy dissensions which have arisen between the North and the South, and to preserve our Federal Union consistently with the rights and honor of all the States.

Resolved, further, that we are in favor of a State convention, to be held at an early day, with power to appoint delegates to a Southern conference or convention, with such other powers as legitimately belong to such a convention.

William Walker then offered resolutions recommending an increase in ad valorem tax to 45 cents on $100, to provide for State defenses. C. A. Carroll offered a minority report of a more radical tone, but it was not adopted. Isaiah Vinsant offered resolutions commendatory of Hon. Albert Rust.

Believing the conflict to be probable, local State companies were organized forthwith. In January, 1861, the Van Buren Frontier Guard was organized, with the following officers: Captain, H. Thomas Brown; first lieutenant, J. P. King; second lieutenant, Alex Lacy; third lieutenant, Granville Wilcox—from among the flower of Van Buren chivalry. The following month Minie rifles were shipped to them from Little Rock.

Little Rock Convention.—Then came the Little Rock convention, that pivotal point in the history of Arkansas. Public expression was not uncertain as to the desire of the people to have the proceedings of this body passed upon, finally, by popular ballot. Senator R. W. Johnson's and T. C. Hindman's "Address to the People of Arkansas" was published, in which they were urged to join the confederacy. A "Private Column" in the Press, controlled by D. C. Williams, of Van Buren, was a standing pathetic plea for moderation and reconciliation; it also urged the people to vote for no delegate who would not vote to refer to the people. The Hon. Jesse Turner and Henry Wilcox, Esq., the most prominent candidates, were requested to express their intention publicly; whereupon Judge Turner appeared in the Press of February 8, 1861, saying: "Denying, as I do, the constitutional right of a State to secede from the Union, and utterly denying that any adequate cause exists, justifying a resort to the extreme and original right of revolution, I should the more earnestly insist on submitting the ordinance to a direct vote of the people, before the same shall become final." He also speaks thus of the Union, saying: "It may endure for ages and ages yet to come, blessing and blessed of all our race."

In the same issue Mr. Wilcox said: "Unless some apparent injury might result to the interests of Arkansas by delay, I shall vote on a resolution to refer (to the people) in the affirmative." The election followed with no unusual incidents; and the Press announced the results exultantly in the issue of February 22d: "The People 10 to 1 for the Stars and Stripes!!! Glorious victory! Western Arkansas all right for the Union. Crawford County 740 majority for the Union candidates." The Hons. Jesse Turner and Hugh F. Thomason were the Union candidates.

Volunteers.—Meanwhile other events were happening. The Independent Light Horse Guards were organized in Richland Township and officered as follows: Captain, P. Perkins; first lieutenant, P. H. Hoyle; second lieutenant, John Ross; third lieutenant, J. Stevenson. The feeling seemed to be: "Union as long as we can, then Arkansas for herself." On Washington's birthday anniversary happened an almost pathetic incident, that in the light of succeeding events made the action of both Crawford County and the National Government seem paradoxical. It was a public mass-meeting held at the court-house in Van Buren, memorializing the United States Secretary of War not to withdraw troops from the Fort Smith garrison. It was signed by John B. Ogden, chairman, and William Whitfield, secretary. In March Capt. Jasper Pevyhouse organized a cavalry company. Many of these companies were organized with no particular purpose, except to be prepared for any emergency. It was the withdrawal of the Fort Smith garrison that precipitated the action of Crawford County in taking up arms for protection, and on April 20 the secessionist, Hon. R. W. Johnson, spoke at Van Buren, and for the first time a Confederate flag was flaunted from a pole in the court-house square. This was followed on May 1 by the appearance of the Press with its editorial column adorned with the stars and bars. The Home Guards, a company of old men, was organized April 20, 1861, with the following officers: Captain, Davidson Dickson; first lieutenant, A. J. Ward; second lieutenant, R. S. Roberts; third lieutenant, J. T. White. An organization called the "Daughters of the South" was formed in April, with Mrs. A. J. Ward as president, Mrs. George Austin, vice-president, and Mrs. William Walker as secretary. The society did some noble work in supplying their soldiers with clothing and other necessities. Capt. Charles A. Carroll's cavalry company was organized in May, with the following subordinate officers: first lieutenant, N. O. Davidson; second lieutenant, L. N. Hollis; third lieutenant, A. J. Hayes.

President Lincoln's inaugural address was received with most contradictory opinions; some thought it threw down the gauntlet, and some that it betokened no danger whatever. The convention of Little Rock at its first session chose Judge Turner as chairman of the committee on Federal relations, and the well-known result of that session, the vote of thirty-nine to thirty-five against secession, was hailed at Van Buren with a salute of thirty-nine guns, and flags innumerable, and a demonstration and serenade was tendered Judge Turner on his return. The May session followed, and events had crowded in thick and fast; during the February session, everything was resting on a pivot; during the May session, secession was sweeping the South, and the tide seemed to sweep men off their feet; the convention tale has been told; the Press of May 15, 1861, says: "One of the delegates from this county writes that 'the scene at the capitol was solemn and impressive—some rejoiced, while others wept—to me it was the saddest hour of my life, and yet a stern necessity demanded my vote for revolution.'" Gen. Hugh F. Thomason was chosen by the convention as a delegate to the Montgomery Confederate Congress. The die was cast.

First Troops.—Capt. Carroll's cavalry started for the frontier May 25, and Capt. H. Thomas Brown's "Van Buren Frontier Guards" were tendered a touching farewell at the court-house by the spirited mothers, sisters and maidens of its members. Other organizations followed fast. Brig.-Gen. N. B. Pearce took charge of the western division May 16. During the month Capt. James M. Stewart organized the Crawford Artillery Company, and Col. John T. Humphreys organized a company of riflemen, with the following subordinate officers: First lieutenant, Dupee Sadler; second lieutenant, W. R. Turner, and third lieutenant, William Rosson. Capt. Joel H. Foster's company was fitted out with complete suits by a few ladies and gentlemen, and Dr. Colburn presented each with a New Testament.

"We venture to say," reads a Press editorial,* "that no county of the same population as Crawford (being in territory one of the smallest in the State) has turned out so many volunteers for the war as ours. We now have four companies in camp, and one, the 'Crawford Artillery,' awaiting orders to march, viz.: Capt. C. A. Carroll's company of mounted riflemen, the 'Pope Walker Guards,' numbering eighty-four rank and file, well mounted, armed with Sharp's rifles and sword-bayonets—a most effective weapon. This company is made up of the best young men of the county, who have been on horseback from their youth up, and well trained in the use of arms. 'The Van Buren Guards,' Capt. H. Thomas Brown, numbering about eighty, composed mostly of young men of this city, armed with Minie muskets, is probably the best drilled company in the State. Their ranks are composed of the very elite of the city—'gentlemen all'—and one to be depended on in all situations in which they may be placed. The above two companies are now in camp in Benton County. Capt. P. Perkins' company of cavalry, numbering about sixty-five members, armed with sabres and pistols. This is a stalwart company of horsemen, now stationed at Fort Smith, and should they be so fortunate as to get into action with the enemy will give a good account of themselves. Capt. J. H. Foster's company of infantry, numbering sixty-four members, armed with good muskets, which is about as good a weapon as can be used. This is a good company, and from their gallant captain down are itching for a fight; they are stationed for the present at Fort Smith, but will soon, no doubt, be under marching orders for the Kansas and Missouri line. Last, but not least, Capt. J. M. Stewart's company, the 'Crawford Artillery,' but recently organized, is now awaiting marching orders. They have two pieces of the celebrated 'Bragg's battery;' and all who know the men of whom this company is composed, know the cry with them will be 'a little more grape, Capt. Stewart,' should they come into action. From their captain down to the lowest in ranks—if there are any lowest—they are warriors all."

Other Companies.—The Van Buren Frontier Guards, at the first organization, were officered as follows: Captain, H. Thomas

* June 5, 1861.

Brown; first lieutenant, James P. King; second lieutenant, Alex. H. Lacy; third lieutenant, Granville Wilcox; orderly-sergeant, Samuel Martin; second sergeant, John W. Wallace; third sergeant, Thomas J. Allen; fourth sergeant, J. Neal; fifth sergeant, Madison Shannon; first corporal, James Whitfield; second corporal, J. H. Hill; third corporal, B. Frank Hinkle; fourth corporal, Eli D. Oliver; fifty-six privates. The Van Buren Brass Band were the musicians for the company.

The Crawford Artillery had the following officers: Captain, James M. Stewart; first lieutenant, Fenton Sanger; second lieutenant, R. M. Bean; third lieutenant, John Winfrey, and orderly, Isaac Keller.

The assumption of command of Confederate forces by Brig.-Gen. Ben McCulloch gave great confidence to the forces already organized as State forces, and inspired a large amount of recruiting. His staff was as follows: Capt. James McIntosh, adjutant general; Lieut. J. W. Lubbeck, aid-de-camp (in Texas); Lieut. Hamilton Pike, volunteer aid; Lieut. Frank W. Armstrong, volunteer aid; Lieut. Ben Johnson, volunteer aid; Maj. George W. Clarke, brigade quartermaster; Maj. W. M. Montgomery, field quartermaster; Surgeon J. Winchester Breedlove, medical director.

In regard to the simultaneous calls of Gov. Rector for State troops, and Gen. McCulloch for Confederate troops, the Press said: "We fear it will be some time before the ten regiments under this arrangement will be made up, all in this part of the country preferring to respond to the call of Gen. McCulloch."

Meanwhile Thomas J. Davidson was elected delegate to the Confederate Provisional Congress, vice Gen. Hugh F. Thomason, resigned.

Gen. McCulloch's promptness soon opened the conflict. The Crawford Guards took charge of the Fort Smith garrison in July. The various companies were organized into regiments, among which were the Arkansas Volunteers, colonel, T. J. Churchill; lieutenant colonel, C. H. Matlock, and major, James Harper. The Third Arkansas Regiment was officered as follows: Colonel, Gratiot; lieutenant-colonel, Province; major, Ward; adjutant, Granville Wilcox; surgeon, W. C. Smith; commissary, Elias B.

Moore; sergeant-major, D. W. Moore; wagon-master, B. F. Engles; forage-master, A. J. Gross.

The Federals in South and Southwest Missouri were the objective point. The first action in which Crawford County participated was a successful attack on Neosho, Mo. Success followed success, but as in many other, all other, sections of the whole domain of the United States there were those who thought a soldier's life was parade only, and the result was the following in the July 17 issue of the Press: "$20 Reward! Stop the Deserter!"

The Action at Oak Hill.—McCulloch was encamped at Pea Ridge in July, and on August 12 the famous action at Oak Hill occurred. Col. J. R. Gratiot's captains were as follows: Company A, Capt. J. H. Sparks; Company B, Capt. Hart; Company C, Capt. Bell; Company E, Capt. Griffith; Company F, Capt. Corcoran; Company G, Capt. Brown; and Company G's casualties: Killed, Capt. H. Thomas Brown, D. B. Carr, James Adkins; wounded, J. A. Clarke, J. Neal, H. Marean, G. R. Clarke, J. H. Deshoso, T. Davis, J. L. Whitfield, J. Wallace and R. Howard. Capt. King's and Capt. Buchanan's companies were there, and that of Capt. James M. Stewart, armed as infantry, the latter's casualties being as follows: Killed, M. West Vaughan; wounded, W. T. Vincent, L. Graf, W. Coleman, F. E. Enlow, R. Lawless, S. Montgomery, James King, Lieut. F. M. Sanger and J. M. Clem. Capt. Woodruff's artillery was also with this regiment. The total casualties were as follows: Killed, twenty-six; wounded, eighty-four, and missing, one.

In Col. De Rosey Carroll's Second Regiment of Cavalry were Capt. C. A. Carroll's company, from which Private Bush was missing after the fight; Capt. Lewis' company and Capt. Armstrong's company; in Capt. P. Perkins' company P. B. Wells, B. F. Walker and W. I. Spivey were wounded; the companies of Captains McKissick, Walker, Parks and Withers were also a part of the regiment. The total casualties of the regiment were: Killed, 5; wounded 17; and missing, 2. Capt. Perkins' company secured as a trophy the hat of the brave Gen. Lyons, who fell on that field.

Says the Press: "Monday (September 2, 1861) was a grand day for Van Buren. Saturday evening our citizens were notified by telegraph that the remnants of two companies, the Frontier Guards, Capt. King, and Crawford Artillery, Capt. Stewart, would arrive at home on Monday morning. The young ladies, to the number of twenty-five or thirty, were astir at sunrise and in their saddles, and proceeded some four miles to meet them, and escort them to town. At the hill, just as they came into town, they were met by the Home Guards, who escorted them all amid the firing of artillery, waving of handkerchiefs, cheers, etc., to the Planters' Hotel, where a collation was prepared for them." Capt. Carroll's company was similarly received on Tuesday, and the funeral of D. B. Carr was duly solemnized.

On September 18, 1861, Henry Wilcox was chairman and John B. Ogden, Sr., secretary, of a meeting called to organize a county committee to furnish soldiers with supplies, especially clothing. Messrs. Ward, Austin, Lynch, Woolsey, Matlock, Stewart, Harper, Simcoe, Wright, Sheppard, Jones, Sangster, Willey, Gregg, Oliver, Heard, Morris, Howell and Winters were chosen to act in their respective townships—two in each, excepting Van Buren Township, which required three.

New Calls for Troops.—The marked successes of the troops seems to have led many of the Crawford companies—like others—to virtually disband after the results of Oak Hill; and for a time they seemed to "rest on their oars." On September 25, however, Gens. McCulloch, Hindman and Pearce simultaneously called for 3,000 men for twelve months; and Crawford began again. Capt. Dr. M. O. Davidson enlisted the "Crawford County Rangers" in September; Capt. J. T. Barlow organized the "Van Buren Rifles" in October, with the following officers: First lieutenant, Martin Simon; second lieutenant, S. Deshoso; third lieutenant, James Spooner. The papers teemed with advertisements for army supplies. The State troops of Arkansas were turned over to the Confederate government in November, and the first year closed with the armies in winter quarters. Brig.-Gen. N. B. Burrows became commander of the Van Buren post, which was the headquarters of the Third Brigade. J. B. Luce, became receiver under the "Sequestration Act," and assumed the duties of his office in November of 1861. Gen. McCulloch's staff, in charge of Col. McIntosh, made headquarters at Van Buren for a time.

With the abandonment of the publication of the only paper in Crawford County in the early part of 1862, and the meager reliable data of Confederate operations to be obtained, the succeeding events of the conflict, as far as Crawford county was concerned, are very uncertain.

The events of 1862 in Crawford that led up to the battle of Prairie Grove on the 7th of December, were born of that confidence gained in previous successes on the Confederate side, little shaken by the death of McCulloch at Pea Ridge and of less timidity among the few Federal followers. Gen. Hindman's famous "orders No. 17" appeared in June, and the bushwhacking began. Independent squads and companies began their conscription; every organization that could be was worked into the Confederate army, and the more determined Unionists among the mountains secretly stole away to the Federal pickets in Missouri and Kansas. The territory of Crawford was, of course, under the post at Fort Smith, although local commanders of a subordinate rank were in charge at Van Buren. Gen. Burrows was succeeded by Col. Monroe; and Col. Wallace and Col. Carroll were also among the commanders of the Van Buren post. Gov. Marmaduke and Gen. Price were among the number, also. S. F. Cottrell was provost-marshal for a time. All business was directed to carrying on the war; the male population of Crawford County were nearly all going or gone to active service; women and children were left and they, too, were supporting and taking care of themselves and were preparing necessities in clothing for the fathers and brothers and husbands in the camp; some were even tearing up their carpets in after days for blankets to ship to the camp; other maidens whipped their steeds across the mountains with secret dispatches of importance. "The Yanks are coming!" was a startling exclamation.

Battle of Prairie Grove—Then came the fiercely-fought action at Prairie Grove on December 7, 1862, elsewhere graphically described in this volume by Col. Pettigrew. No regiments were organized in Crawford County, but the companies organized there were placed in the various noted regiments and battalions like the Thirty-fourth Arkansas under Col. Brooks, and the Federal First Arkansas Cavalry. The well-known retreat of Gen. Hindman during the night after the battle was followed up by Gen. Blount and the gallant Herron, and the armies descended the Boston Mountain, and, passing over Crawford and through Van Buren, the former crossed the river. The waters of the Arkansas seemed to raise fears in the minds of both the opposing commanders, and after Gen. Hindman had shelled the town awhile and battered its walls somewhat, and Gen. Blount's batteries on the cliff had belched forth at an imaginary foe, in the words of Judge Ogden, of Van Buren: "The two ——— fools run from each other." Of course almost every able-bodied male Confederate in Crawford County kept to the Confederate lines, and Crawford County was in the hands of the Federals. Gen. Blount's forces soon returned, however, and sacked the county.

Sacking the County.—To realize what that means the fact must be recalled that Van Buren had been the wealthy commercial center of Northwestern Arkansas during the previous decade, as Fayetteville had been the educational center; and Van Buren was, in wealth, the flower of this region. Houses of wealthy citizens were ransacked for silver-ware, jewelry, gold; churches were rifled of their chalice; the merchants' shelves were made bare, and their contents sometimes destroyed; slaves were told that they had made their master's wealth, "You have been proclaimed free; take all you can get and go North!" and many of them did. It might be mentioned that of the large number who followed this advice, and went to Kansas, Missouri, and other States, but few ever returned, the present negro population of Crawford County being an immigration chiefly from the south and southwest. Stock was nearly all run out of the county; furniture demolished and sometimes carried off; many fences torn down and buildings burned; probably not a house within the limits of Crawford County but was at some period of the war rifled more or less—mostly more. The Unionists' homes were rifled by the Confederates and the Southern homes wrecked by the Federals, and often no distinctions were made. It was unsafe to reside without the corporate limits of Van Buren, and that city became a great camp of destitution; home-made stuffs became necessary; and the books of the city miller, H. C. Hayman, show page after page of flour orders to the destitute, so lately in affluence. The forests and fields again became the homes of deer and other wild animals; no schools, churches, courts, mails, newspapers; nothing but stern hardihood, fear and anxiety, and scarcely the bare necessities of life. Let succeeding generations dwell on such pictures, and wars will have less fascination for their hot blood.

This was not by any means wholly the result of Gen. Blount's raid, but occurred during the whole period of the war. In the Federal occupation succeeding the arrival of Gen. Blount, Van Buren was a post, and was commanded by Lieut.-Col. Wheeler, Maj. E. D. Ham and Col. Thomas Bowen. When the latter took charge the court-house was fortified, and pickets were placed just beyond the city limits. The colonel was not unsusceptible to the romance of war, and his predilections in that line led to his rashly following cupid beyond the safety of the pickets alone; a squad of "Johnny rebs" under Capt. Wright, now of Chester, one day surprised the "Fed" colonel, and carried him off and relieved him of his valuable horse and some personal effects. He was soon released, however, on a parole, whose validity was afterward questioned. The provost-marshal, Col. Johnson's office was the rooms now Dr. Bourland's office. A characteristic incident of the first "Fed" general in command may not be inopportune, since it illustrates the "bluntness" of that general. A Mr. Robinson, of Van Buren, who, before the evacuation of Fort Smith, had been a vigorous Unionist, was arrested by Gen. Blount, who had been informed that he was a prominent rebel. Mr. Robinson, wishing to prove his unionism, requested that Judge Turner might witness the fact; the Judge came, and, wishing to aid his friend, added to the confirmation asked for, "and General, this gentleman is also from Massachusetts!" Thereupon the profane old commander grew furious and exclaimed, "Some of the d—st rascals I ever saw came from Massachusetts!" Gen. Blount was from Maine. Here might follow a reference to a historic old Van Buren building, and to the picturesque situation of two important personages of Crawford County. It will be remembered that the old building now used by Judge Jesse Turner and his son is one of the oldest structures in Van Buren, and has been occupied by the venerable judge for about a half-century. The building, a low long frame, presenting its side to the street, has the judge's office in the west end, and another office in the east end; this was occupied by Henry Wilcox and his son, both of whom, it will be remembered, were decided secessionists; when to this is recalled the Unionism of Judge Turner, and their rivalry as candidates for the famous Little Rock convention, the situation is interesting.

No battles were fought on the soil of Crawford County; a few slight skirmishes and considerable bushwhacking, with a great deal of purely bandit villainy, was all that occurred, beside the Federal raids. Lieut.-Col. Steward once came down on a raid from Fayetteville to secure a lot of cotton supposed to be stored along the river; on this raid he did that unexplainable deed, the destruction of court records and papers. Five regiments of Confederate cavalry wintered in Crawford County during the winter of 1862 and part of 1863.

Summary of Troops.—The number of Crawford County men in both armies is variously estimated; Gen. H. F. Thomason however, places the Confederate representation at about 1,000 men, and Capt. William Bowlin, of Van Buren, thinks the Federal soldiers of the county ranged between 250 and 300.

The Federal troops were distributed somewhat as follows: First Arkansas Cavalry—Company A, 15; Company B, 5; Company C, 7; Company D, 28; Company E, 4; Company F, 6; Company G, 4; Company I, 4; Company K, 2; Company L, 5; Company M, 5. Second Arkansas Cavalry: Company A, 7; Company E, 7; Company F, 3; Company G, 24, having among its officers Chastain, Meadors, Rodgers and Hatley; Company H, 8; Company K, 3; Company L, 62, Capt. William Bowlin, whose other Crawford County subordinates were Second Lieut. Alvin Smith, First Sergt. John A. Davis, Quartermaster-Sergt. John Q. West, Commissary-Sergt. Benjamin Hargraves, Sergt. Charles Pense, Sergt. W. H. Bushong, Sergt. Lewis Simpson. The First Arkansas Infantry, Company I, 18, and Company K, 5. The Second Arkansas Infantry, Company F, 5, including officers London and Basham; Company G, 2; Company H, 4, and Company I, 1. Battery A, First Arkansas Light Artillery (Stark's battery), 14, including officers Alexander Thompson and Richard Dewitt. Those in the regiments of other States are not known.

The distribution of the Confederate troops of the county have been largely given in this chapter. Capt. John Ross' company of cavalry in Col. Clarkson's regiment was organized as late as 1863, so also was that of Capt. B. F. Winfrey. Capt. J. C. Wright organized Company E, of the Thirty-fourth Arkansas at Sheppard Springs; its forty-two men were officered as follows: First lieutenant, Wesley Fellows; second lieutenant, Elbert Peters; third lieutenant, Joseph Neally, succeeded by M. Vaught. The First Arkansas Mounted Infantry was officered during its career as follows: Colonels, C. A. Carroll, Rector, L. L. Thompson and A. Gordon; lieutenant-colonels, Armstrong, L. Thompson, Andrew Gordon and another; majors, Frear, L. L. Thompson, H. McConnell, Faith and Robert Wilson; captains (Company C), C. A. Carroll and J. O. Sadler; first lieutenants, J. O. Sadler, Robert Wilson and J. T. Perry; second lieutenants, Robert Wilson and J. T. Perry; third lieutenants, J. T. Perry, Jones Clark.

EDUCATION.

In educational affairs Crawford County has always taken great interest, but the excellent institutions of her sister county on the north have made the establishment of large institutions within her own territory largely unnecessary. The Far West Seminary, Cane Hill College, Ozark Institute, Miss Sawyer's school, Arkansas College, and the University have educated many of the leading men and women of Crawford County, and made no demand for schools at home much above the grammar grades, barring one attempt on the part of the Wallaces.

Private schools had for years a great hold on the minds of Crawford County, and a large and somewhat aristocratic sentiment continued for some time to delay the progress of free schools; in this respect it differed from Franklin County, where the resistance came largely from the poorest classes. The question as to when free schools were established in Arkansas is here referred to a tracing out of her school acts in connection with the history of Benton County.

First Schools.—According to the best information obtainable a Dr. Powers taught the first school in Crawford County at Van Buren, although as early as 1838 or 1839 a regular school was held on Section 36, Township 10, Range 30, by a Mr. Smith, who was succeeded by a Dr. Meyers. This was a log house, and the attendance numbered about thirty pupils. It would seem probable that the first school might have been at Van Buren, however. There were no doubt many children taught in private houses in ways that would hardly have been termed a school. Dr. E. D. Powers also taught in a private house.

Academies, Seminaries, Institutes, etc.—In March, 1842, Dr. Powers and Dr. J. S. Davis opened the Van Buren Academy, which continued a few sessions. In August, 1843, the Van Buren Seminary was opened by Rev. Daniel McManus and Thomas McKinney, and continued for some sessions. The activity of the Far West Seminary and Miss Sophia Sawyer's school at Fayetteville drew off the youth of the county largely to them during the latter part of "the forties." Between Van Buren and Fort Smith, and in Crawford, Rev. C. C. Townsend and his wife opened Prairie Female Seminary in September, 1846. This, like many others, run for a few sessions. In March, 1849, Rev. W. K. and Mrs. S. M. Marshall opened the Van Buren Female Institute, and were assisted by Miss M. C. Brigham; and in August of the same year a Dr. McCormick opened Van Buren Academy. Early in "the fifties" Mr. and Mrs. Wallace, of Van Buren, conceived the idea of founding an advanced school, which became known as the Wallace Collegiate Institute, and had a successful career during most of "the fifties" under the presidency of Rev. P. A. Moses, chiefly, and his assistants were R. W. Moses, and Rev. J. L. Denton. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace endowed the project quite liberally, but the oncoming war led to the loss of a large part of the funds, although much has been recovered and is even yet held in trust for an institution under Methodist Episcopal Church influences. None of these schools had more than ordinary school buildings, although the institute might have bloomed into a fine institution. It had an attendance of about sixty students. The Van Buren Female Academy was organized during this decade, also; among the trustees were President J. J. Green, Secretary D. C. Williams, Treasurer C. G. Scott, and J. A. Dibrell and W. F. England. The principal was a Miss Chapman; a Prof. De June assisted her in the musical phase of it. The attendance reached from eighty to ninety pupils. The faculty in 1859 was Principal I. N. Smith, A. M., Miss Ellen Phinney, Miss Julia A. Smalley, and Miss F. A. Chapman. During this year the Crawford County fund (Seminary) was $102.40. About this time Rev. P. A. Moses organized the Southern Literary Institute at White Sulphur Springs; its existence was not extended long. Prof. Smith became principal of the male division, and Mr. F. Leavenworth was at the head of the female division, in 1860. Rev. William Binet opened a school the same year; he was assisted by W. Salt.

Mr. C. K. Marshall, Jr., succeeded Rev. Moses in Wallace Institute, and he was succeeded by D. B. Carr. Miss Julia Smalley, assisted by Miss Mary J. Gross and Miss Laura Harrall, had charge of the female school, one session. The war closed the schools, and even in 1866 Van Buren had no schools for young ladies, and the first general school was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church by Principal W. J. Alexander and Mrs. A. S. Barbour. In May, 1867, the first colored school was opened, in the Episcopal Church, by a Miss Farrar. The old seminary building was a private enterprise, and had been used as barracks during the war, and it was unfit for school purposes. In February, 1867, the town council voted $150 for its repair, and the building was purchased. Mr. Alexander and Mrs. Barbour were assisted by Miss Sallie Alexander, during this year.

Public Schools.—The first really public free school meeting held in Crawford County was that in December, 1868, at the Presbyterian Church, to consider the offer of the Peabody Educational Fund agent, Dr. Sears. This was an offer of $400 annually to a free school which should accommodate 100 pupils. The result was that it was accepted, and the high-school was held in the seminary building and the primary school in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The teachers of the previous year were retained. This brings us to the inauguration of the free-school system of 1868, when Col. S. F. Cooper was trustee of Van Buren Township. Col. Henderson, the first district superintendent, began pushing the organization of the new system, and in September, 1871, he held the Crawford County Teachers' Institute at the court-house in Van Buren, and was assisted by Mr. Harrison and Prof. Bruner, et. al. Prof. J. C. Helm was principal of the Van Buren schools in 1871, and in 1872 the enrollment of that school district was 248 white and 129 colored children. H. A. Pierce became district superintendent in 1873. The cost of two white schools and one colored, with six teachers in all, was for that year to Van Buren, $4,500, $800 of which had for each of two years been received from the Peabody Fund. A school was opened in Van Buren in September, 1876, under the title "Arkansas Normal and High-school." A district normal institute, sustained by the Peabody Fund, was held in Van Buren in March, 1880, and fifteen Crawford teachers were present. The Van Buren Male and Female High-school was opened October 18, 1880, by Principal A. J. McIntosh and his assistant, Prof. W. D. C. Botefuhr. The Peabody Normal Institute was held again in Van Buren, in August, 1882, by State Supt. J. L. Denton. It was held in the Presbyterian Church, and the attendance was seventy-nine enrolled. Prof. O. F. Russell (secretary), Prof. Burrows, Mrs. Phelps, Prof. Reynolds and Mr. Scott were among the workers. During this year four-fifths of the school districts voted the 5-mill tax. The following year County Supt. Lee Neal held an institute, at which thirty-eight were enrolled. The workers were J. Wheeler, I. P. Green, W. A. Dyer, E. Scott, Profs. R. I. Guinn, Bryan and Hardy. These institutes no doubt had a great effect in moulding the feeling regarding free schools in Van Buren, and the county judge, J. J. Burrows, was the successor of Prof. T. B. Logan as a Van Buren teacher, and Miss Maggie Wood was his assistant. One school might be mentioned here, the Western Union Telegraph College, in Edmondson's Hall, which Mr. H. H. Dill organized in 1883, and continued for a year. At the institute of November, 1884, Prof. Shinn, of Little Rock, was the instructor, and Judge Turner, Rev. W. A. Sample and Dr. Hynes were lecturers. Prof. E. B. Barnes opened the North Van Buren (Collinsville or Logtown) schools about this time. In 1885 during the construction of the present school building of Van Buren, four private schools were taught, by Misses Nannie Rea and Maggie Wood, Prof. Frank Colburn, Mrs. W. C. Bostick. A colored school was also in operation.

Van Buren School District (No. 4) was organized by election August 25, 1869. John Austin, David Williams, A. M. Calahan, B. J. Brown, C. F. Harvey, and J. O. Churchill were the first directors, and Miss Lucetta Harrall was the first teacher employed by them. The first assessment, made October 11, 1869, was 1 per cent. on $295,389—the taxable property of the county; $2,500 were to be given for teachers, and $453.89 for the building. The Van Buren Academy, before mentioned, was made public by paying the principal $60, and the assistant $50 per month. Miss Mattie L. Jarvis taught the colored school in 1870, and during the same year uniform text books were adopted. August 3, 1870, a draft for $800 was received of the Peabody agent, and male principals were employed. In 1875 the lack of funds caused the schools to be suspended. Among the principals of the schools of the city have been L. C. White, D. B. Hunnicutt, Miss M. E. McBride (two years), Lewis Bryan (two years), W. J. Alexander, T. B. Logan (two years), Frank L. Colburn and Prof. T. S. Cox. No public school was had in the winter of 1882–83 on account of the accumulation of fund for building. The Bostick House was used one year as a school-house. In 1884 T. M. McGee, George R. Wood, D. W. Moore, Alvis Smith, Frank Stewart and J. J. Warren were chosen directors, and they began the erection of the present commodious building. The old Wallace Institute grounds were first chosen, but the old seminary site was finally decided upon, and a tax of $7,000 to $10,000 was provided for. The structure was finished in 1885. It is a fine red brick of two stories with mansard roof, and is capable of extension on the east side, at the junction of Broad and Main Streets. The ample hall of the entrance shows large primary rooms to the right and left, and the stairs lead to the upper floor, at the north and south ends of which are the principal's room and the grammar school, respectively. Between these is a well-arranged recitation room, with all the advanced appurtenances of the modern school. The first teachers in the new public school were Prof. F. L. Colburn, Miss Maggie Wood, Mrs. Hattie Pernot, and Miss Rose Meyer. The principal of the colored school, J. B. Mack, was assisted by Mrs. M. A. Jones. "Rules and Regulations of the Van Buren Public Schools and the Course of Study," a pamphlet, was printed, and the school graded. On the resumption of control by Prof. Cox, in 1886, he began enforcing the grading with more vigor. Nine grades, with an attendance of about 400, was the condition of things in 1886, and in 1888 the first class of five graduated, fitted to enter the first year in the university. The attendance at present, 1888, is about 450, and active efforts are making toward a larger corps of teachers and more room, as many primary pupils are compelled to be turned away. The present teachers are principal, T. S. Cox; assistant principal, Miss Kate Findley; Mrs. Bessie Quesenberry, Miss Blanche Huffman, and Miss Doggett. Nine and a half to ten months are taught annually, and the class of 1889 will probably number twelve. The only change in the directors of 1885 is the substitution of F. R. McKibben and Jesse Turner, Jr., in the places of Messrs. Wood and Stewart, respectively. Prof. Cox placed samples of the school's work in the State Exposition at Little Rock, in 1887.

The last normal institute held in Van Buren was in August, 1887, under State Supt. W. E. Thompson, with Prof. T. S. Cox as instructor. About fifty were in attendance.

The Alma Schools originated in a log house about one and a quarter miles to the southeast, about 1870. The half-mill tax has been voted in the district for over seventeen years. The first director was A. M. McKinney, and B. P. Renfro followed him for about nine years. Private schools have also been held more or less ever since the settlement of the county, and one institute was held here, in 1884, by Supt. Lee Neal. The second or present school building was erected, as has been mentioned in the settlement of Alma, before the district center was voted at Alma proper, and three teachers were employed. They enroll about 150 white pupils, and a colored school, conducted in a rented one-room frame house, has an attendance of about fifty, and was organized about 1876, after the entrance of the colored population following the completion of the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railway. Walter P. Brown and wife were the first teachers in the new district. Prof. P. McKay and Mrs. Fannie Echols had a daily attendance of from 100 to 120, in 1883. Prof. Carroll and Prof. E. D. Cochran have since had charge of the schools, and had from one to three assistants. The corps of 1887-88 were Prof. Carroll, Miss May Carroll and Mrs. Webber.

The Chester Schools trace their beginnings to about 1844, when a log house was built at the mouth of Howard's Fork, by the citizens, for a summer school for children. John Crawford was the second teacher in that building, all his predecessors but one having taught in private houses. The citizens and the society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Pleasant Grove, built a union school and church there in 1866, and B. L. Orrick was the first teacher. In 1882 the Chester people petitioned for a new district, and a union school and Masonic hall was erected on the north side of the "Frisco Railway" tracks. Mrs. M. J. Stafford was the first teacher in the new building. The schools have so increased that the attendance warrants over two teachers, although but two are now employed.

Other Schools.—The schools of other places in the county are simply large district schools, and will be treated under the general school statistics of the county. Attempts have been made in a few cases, like that of Alexander Gooding and others at Sarah Grove, to form really graded schools, but none have won any noticeable standing. John Shannon was a pioneer teacher in the neighborhood of Dripping Springs, and among other veterans of early days who graced the school-room the county is proud to mention the noted litterateur, statesman, lawyer and soldier, Albert Pike.

Educational Statistics.—The earliest report obtainable showing the condition of the schools of the county is that ending June 30, 1881, but the reports from directors to their superior officers and to the State superintendent have been so unsatisfactory and incomplete that the following statistics do not tell as much as they should:

For 1881 the white children numbered 4,505; colored, 481; total 4,986; previous year, 5,130; in orthography, 994; written arithmetic, 268; higher branches (above history) 19; whole number taught, 1,087; previous year, 2,605; male teachers, 25; female, 2; first grade, 12; second grade, 9; third grade, 6 whole salary paid, $9,777.44; previous year, $6,469.25; buildings erected during year, 5 (wooden); cost, $487; previously erected, 41; (40 wood, 1 brick); cost, $6,262 (five districts reported in 1881); total receipts, $18,952.48; total expenditures, $9,976.46; unexpended, $8,976.02.

In 1882, when probably four-fifths of the school districts voted a five-mill tax, "Flat Rock," the nom de plume of a teacher, writes: "The morning I began I found, in attempting to organize, that of the fifty students present I could form seventeen classes in reading, five in geography, six in grammar, and as many in arithmetic. Other studies were similar. Every book that had been used in the family since the boyhood days of their grandfathers was presented, and I soon had organized forty intelligent little classes, numbering from one to five in each class. Imagine, kind teacher, the perplexity of that moment! Labor for three teachers, and but one to perform it." The writer, a live teacher, soon solved the difficulty by securing uniform textbooks through the directors.

For 1882—White children, 5,226; colored, 462; total, 6,014; increase, 1,028; number districts, 64; number districts reporting, 24; white enrollment, 1,355; colored, 38; total, 1,393; average daily attendance, 321; number in orthography, 1,175; written arithmetic, 258; geography, 90; history, 20; higher branches, 1; white teachers, male, 36; female, 4; colored, 1; total, 41; average first grade salaries, male, $30.38; female, $34.33; second grade, male, $28.70; female, $24; third grade, male, $30.24; female, $30; number buildings erected during the year, 3 (wood); cost, $1,111; total (reported is meant), 11; value, $2,841; total receipts (including last year's balance), $19,745.07; total expenditures, $10,963.86; unexpended, $8,781.21. The county examiner was Mr. L. Neal.

For 1883—White children, 5,912; colored, 582; total, 6,494; increase, 480; districts, 68; number reporting, 32; white enrollment, 2,234; colored 129; total, 2,363; in orthography, 1,534; written arithmetic, 392; geography, 141; history, 45; higher branches, 26; male teachers, 45; females, 1; total, 46; average first grade salaries (for males), $37.85; females, $30; second grade, males, $32.22; number buildings erected during the year, 11 (wood); cost, $3,203.15; whole number in the county (reported), 31; value, $5,575.15; receipts, $16,402.50; expenditures, $5,274.07; unexpended, $11,130.43.

For 1884—White children, 6,052; colored, 645; total, 6,697; increase, 203; number of districts, 75; number reporting, 40; white enrollment, 2,820; colored, 147; total, 2,967; orthography, 1,856; written arithmetic, 603; geography, 296; history, 75; higher branches, 17; teachers, white males, 50; white females, 2; colored females, 5; total, 57; average first grade salaries for males, $37.65; females, $30; average second grade salaries for males, $28; females, $32.70; third grade, males, $27; number of buildings erected during the year, 8 (wood); cost, $3,093; whole number of buildings, 40 (wood); value, $9,298; receipts, $25,883.74; expenditures, $13,204.22; unexpended, $12,679.52. Mr. Lee Neal was county examiner.

For 1885—White children, 6,847; colored, 758; total, 7,605; increase, 908; number of districts, 78; number reporting enrollment, 56; white enrollment, 3,732; colored, 261; total, 3,993; in orthography, 2,664; written arithmetic, 717; geography, 322; history, 136; higher branches, 24; teachers, male, 75; females, 3; total, 78; average first grade salaries, males, $40; average third grade salaries, females, $22; number of buildings erected during the year, 5 (wood); cost, $1,259; whole number school-houses, 47 (wood); value, $1,314; receipts, $31,239.60; expenditures, $18,249.41; unexpended, $12,990.19.

For 1886—White children, 7,378; colored, 830; total, 8,207; increase, 602; number of districts, 83; number reporting, 53; white enrollment, 3,744; colored, 229; total, 3,973; in orthography, 3,316; written arithmetic, 945; geography, 390; history, 188; higher branches, 11 (other branches in proportion); teachers, males, 69; females, 5; total, 74; average first grade salaries, male, $45; female, $37.50; average second grade salaries, males, $32.50; female, $30; average third grade salaries, male, $27.50; females, $20; number of buildings erected during the year, 16 (frame); cost, $3,409; whole number in the county reported, 39 (frame); value, $12,951; receipts, including balance from previous year, $30,252.19; expenditures, $21,161.84; unexpended, $9,090.35.

Mr. N. Turmon is county examiner.

CHURCHES AND KINDRED SOCIETIES.

Earliest Religious Observances.—The earliest known religious work in Crawford County was made by the Primitive Baptists in the region of Alma, and Rev. Moses Fisher was among the first preachers. This denomination was followed closely by the Cumberland Presbyterians from Cane Hill, who held services at the home of Daniel Pevyhouse (or Pevehouse), on Lee's Creek; this was probably in 1834 or 1835. It was but a year or so later that the Methodist Church representatives came in, and Rev. John Harrell was among the first of their ministers at Van Buren and on Frog Bayou. Following them, it is thought, were the followers of Alexander Campbell's ideas, of whom Rev. William Stirman was probably the first to begin aggressive work. This was done in the Bell school-house near Fine Spring (Tarrytown), about 1842, it is thought. He was followed by Revs. Johnson, Graham, Carrollton, Polly, Strickland and others. It is not known when the Missionary Baptists began work, and the Catholic and Episcopal Churches have been confined to Van Buren, as is given more fully elsewhere. The Presbyterians also began in Van Buren. The Protestant Methodists' initiative work began with the organization of that body. In 1847 the Methodists, Cumberlands and Christians had a union church and camp-meeting outfit on Cedar Creek, on land whose deed was made to the Methodist Church. The peace of the community was suddenly broken by the advent of a minister from Illinois, who told the community of the separation of the northern and southern branches of the church, and placed the matter before them to choose; twenty-five became adherents of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and twenty gave their allegiance to the northern branch, but the deed was gained by the Southern Church. It was then time for a camp-meeting, and each branch agreed to hold these meetings at the same place, but that the Southern branch was to begin first, which they did, continuing three weeks in camp. The Northern Church, seemingly irritated at their extended time, determined to excel, and continued for four weeks; this rivalry gained large accessions to both churches, it is said. The interest in Sabbath-schools has always been vigorous. There has been no collegiate center for the dissemination of denominational doctrines as there has been in Washington County. Accounts of various churches are given in the following pages.

The Cumberland Presbyterians.—Arkansas Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church is treated more fully in the chapter on Washington County Churches. The complete list of congregations is as follows: Beersheba, Cincinnati, Cane Hill, Dripping Springs, Fayetteville, Lone Elm, Mount Vernon, Mount Comfort, Mount Pleasant, Mulberry, Ozark, Oak Ridge, Prairie, Rieff's Chapel, Southwest City (Mo.), White Oak, White River, West Fork, Wards, Salem, Mount Zion, Barker, Cove Creek, Rogers, Siloam Springs, Vineyard, Natural Dam, Van Buren, Main Fork, Mount Liberty, Salem Springs, Maysville, Bethel and Bentonville. Those in Crawford County are given as far as obtainable.

The Van Buren Cumberland Presbyterian Church is a member of Arkansas Presbytery. The society was organized December 31, 1882, by Rev. J. D. Boone, with Ben Decherd, H. C. and M. C. Miller, Dudley Bourn, L. A. Miller, M. S. Collins, Delphia Harshaw and Moseetta Bourn among the original members. The society was under the pastoral charge of Rev. J. D. Boone but a few months, when he was succeeded by Rev. E. E. Morris. Bro. G. A. Henderson and Dr. F. R. Earle preached for them next, until in October, 1887, Rev. Buchanan assumed ministerial duties of the society. They have held services in the Presbyterian Church on alternate Sabbaths, but are taking steps at this writing (summer of 1888) toward building at an early date.

Dripping Springs Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized July 11, 1840, by Rev. John Buchanan. The elders were I. Vinsant, Josiah Howell, G. M. Burris and John Shannon, and the members were W. Beach, G. Parish, J. Parish, Elizabeth Pevyhouse, Franklin Thrasher and Fata Thrasher, M. Harrall, E. R. Locke, M. Owens, Jackson Owens, J. W. Morgan, M. Butler, R. Storey, E. Reeder, Laura Copps, E. C. Batford, John Pevyhouse, Genevra Pevyhouse, Laura Killenberger, J. J. Williams, Eliza Williams, E. Block, I. Shannon, J. Shannon and Dorothy Davis. In 1841 a log building was erected, and the present frame structure was built in 1872 at a cost of $500. It was dedicated by Rev. F. R. Earle, of Cane Hill. The pastors since 1857 have been Revs. George Morrow, J. P. Russell, J. M. Brigan, P. Carnahan, Samuel Cox, John Hughes, G. Thompson, B. F. Fatten, J. W. Sullivan, F. Maloy, Allen Canada and J. T. Buchanan. The present membership is about forty persons, and the elders are A. Gooding, J. S. Matlock and B. F. Massey.

Cove Creek Cumberland Presbyterian Church has had a few scattering members, but have neither church nor pastor. About six or seven members have occasional services in the district school-house.

The Christian Church.—The Van Buren Christian Church has had a varied career, and little exact information can be gleaned concerning its history. The following letter, found in the biography of J. T. Johnson, a prominent convert of Alexander Campbell, speaks of early missionary work in Crawford County, and gives a clew to its organization:

VAN BUREN, March 7, 1848, Tuesday Morning.

BELOVED BRO. CAMPBELL: I am here, in good health, about 1,500 miles from home, laboring in the good cause of the reformation. * * The success has been far beyond the expectations of the most sanguine. * * I reached here and labored a week. The result was twelve additions. * * I visited Fayetteville, fifty-two miles north, and labored twelve days with good success. * * I returned to Van Buren and visited Oakland—a fine population, ten miles from this place. * * I expect to start in the stage in the morning for The Rock. I had one baptism here on Lord's day. I expect to organize this church to-night. * * This is a great country. * *. J. T. JOHNSON.

The society seems not to have thrived. Services were held occasionally by the then Rev. Henry Shibley, and for a time Rev. Ezell, of Fort Smith, during "the fifties." After the close of the Civil War a few active members, among them being Mr. and Mrs. S. Wood, Mrs. H. C. Hayman, Elder William Murphy and wife, Dr. (now Elder) Stone, Thomas Murphy and wife, Mrs. Farrar, Gen. H. F. Thomason, Mr. Simmons and wife, Mr. Barnes and wife, and Mrs. Ribling, reorganized at the fair ground building. A year later they met in the old seminary, which was used until the erection of the high school building. In the summer of 1887 the society rented their present rooms, known as the Old Episcopal Church. The elders have held the services, with the exception of occasional services held by the present pastor, Rev. J. Q. West. Their membership is about thirty persons.

The Alma Christian Church was organized October 13, 1877, by Rev. George W. Owen. The first members and officers were Elders A. J. Moody and L. B. Byars, Deacon J. E. Smith and E. B. Hassett, Margaret E. Renfroe, Lucy Wright, Mary A. Smith, Nannie J. Byars, Nannie E. Reed and Mary Griffith. Rev. Owen was succeeded in the pastorate by Revs. A. G. Lucas, J. Q. West, J. T. Jones, B. W. Lauderdale, J. H. Hambleton, E. C. Gillespie, J. C. Mason, Morgan Morgan and Kirk Baxter, some of whom were only temporary evangelists. The society now has 111 members, but has so far been unable to build a house. They still use the old union church and school building.

Antioch Christian Church was organized in 1855, and was first known as the Flat Rock congregation. Among its members were G. J. Clark, Russell Allen, M. H. West, Mary A. West, J. G. Stevenson, Jane Stevenson, Louis Waddle, J. T. West, Susan

Stevenson, Elizabeth Stevenson, J. Q. West, Henry Shibley, W. H. H. Shibley, Ann Allen, Mary E. West, M. T. West, John S. Shibley, Henry Coleman, William J. Neal and wife and B. Neal. Their first building was a log one, plastered with stone and mud, and was erected about 1855. The present building is about 30x50 feet and cost about $600. Elder Stirman, Revs. M. J. Robinson, Henry Shibley, — Polly, A. J. Moody, Eli Baker, J. W. Garrett and J. Q. West have been among the pastors. The membership now reaches about ninety persons.

Philadelphia Christian Church was organized by Rev. J. Q. West, assisted by J. F. Jones. They have a building about 20x36 feet, located in Jasper Township. The deacons are J. E. Slover and Noah Scott. They have about sixty members.

Cedar Grove Church was organized about twenty-five years ago by John West. They had a log building destroyed during the war, but they reorganized about 1866, and now have about seventy-five members, under the pastoral charge of Rev. J. Small-ey. The frame building now used is about 24x36 feet, and cost about $600. In 1885 Rev. Marshall and H. C. Craddock organized a Sunday-school, with a membership of about seventy-five; this has increased to 110. Lemuel Mullen is superintendent.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held the fifty-first session of its annual Conference at Fayetteville, in November, 1887. The churches of this denomination in Crawford County are in the Clarksville District, under the presiding eldership of Rev. I. L. Burrow, ex-president of the Central Collegiate Institute, at Altus, in Franklin County.

Alma and Mulberry (Franklin County) were under charge of Rev. Frank Naylor; Dyer Circuit, Rev. H. A. Storey; Van Buren Station, Rev. D. J. Weems; Van Buren Circuit, Rev. W. D. Powell; Chester Circuit, Rev. J. D. Edwards, and Ozone Circuit by Rev. A. M. Belcher. In the whole district there are nineteen churches, valued at $20,130.

Van Buren Circuit (not including Van Buren) had three local preachers, 301 white members, five Sunday-schools enrolling 300 pupils.

Chester Circuit had 151 members; one church, valued at $230; one Sunday-school of seventy-seven members.

The Van Buren Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was organized about 1846, by Rev. J. J. Roberts. Some of the earliest members are as follows: P. A. Moses and wife, N. Colburn, S. M. Hays and wife, Miss Susan Hays, S. D. Daugherty and wife, Ellen Ward, Mary E. Ward, Susan Southmayd, Miss V. Tachett, Samuel Colburn, A. K. Foster, M. J. Foster, the Misses Harrell, Mrs. Wade Cottrell, Mrs. S. Hamlin, R. S. Roberts, William Mooney, Nancy Mooney, Eliza Mooney, Charles Heart, Mrs. E. Dickson, Mrs. M. A. Bearden, A. M. Callahan, Mrs. Kate Callahan, Mary Gillespie, J. Hattaway and wife, J. Whitfield, James Brown, Mrs. Kate Brown, Isaac Austin and Mary Austin. There was a considerable general revival in 1847. The old brick church was built in 1850, and during the Civil War was so much damaged in serving as a hospital, as to be considered unsafe. This was torn down in August, 1886, and the new church was begun during the following month. It was dedicated by Dr. John Matthews, of St. Louis, the corner-stone ceremonies being performed by the Masonic fraternity, and the address delivered by the editor of the Southwestern Methodist. The structure is a fine one of brick, and second to but one other in Northwestern Arkansas. Its cost was $5,000. This was very largely the result of the efforts of Rev. D. J. Weems, who has been the pastor of the society for four years. The first pastor was succeeded by others, among whom were Revs. Pogue, Lugg, Thornberry, Lively, Burrell Lee, A. R. Winfield and F. Colburn before the late Civil War. Revs. R. W. Hammetts (P. E.), S. A. Sheaffer (none during the war), N. B. Pearson (P. E.), John Harrell, J. M. P. Hicheson (P. E.), C. H. Gregory, S. S. Key, J. J. Roberts (P. E.), S. H. Babcock (P. C.), H. R. Withers (P. E.) and Rev. Babcock in 1871 and 1872, C. H. Gregory (P. E.) and W. J. Bolling (P. C.) during 1873 and 1874, J. M. Clayton (P. E.), R. S. Hunter (P. C.), I. L. Burrow and R. S. Hunter, H. M. Granade (P. E.), B. H. Greathouse, I. L. Burrow (P. E.), B. L. Ferguson, I. L. Burrow (P. E.), Dr. J. W. Kaigler, T. J. Smith (P. E.), James A. Anderson, F. S. H. Johnson, V. V. Harlan (P. E.), G. W. Hill and D. J. Weems; the pastors since 1885 embrace all the presiding elders and pastors since 1861, except Revs. William Penn (P. E.), I. L. Burrow (P. E.), J. A. Anderson (P. E.) in 1887, and Rev. I. L.

Burrow (P. E.) in 1888. This society is, no doubt, the largest in Crawford County, its membership now being 225. Steps were taken in ante-bellum days to found a college at Van Buren, and a donation of $10,000 was made toward that object by Alfred and Martha Wallace; this fund, however, was largely lost during the late war, but about $6,000 is now in the hands of trustees.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in Crawford County has shared the fortunes of that denomination in the State, and falls within the jurisdiction of the Fort Smith District of the Arkansas Conference. The withdrawal of that society from the State in 1857 is well known, and also its return in 1868. The first session of Arkansas Conference was held at Little Rock in 1873 by Bishop Bowman, the secretary being Mr. Bushong. Intermediate sessions have since been held there and at Batesville, Russellville, Fayetteville, Fort Smith, Harrison, Waldron, Rogers and Judsonia, while that of 1889 will be held at Eureka Springs under Bishop Warren. This society is not largely represented in Crawford County.

Natural Dam Methodist Episcopal Church was organized at the residence of John Rainwater, about twenty years ago, by Elisha Robison, Caswell Mills and David McCaslin, and then belonged to the Van Buren Circuit. John S. Rainwater was class leader. They have never had a building, but services have been held at various times since by Revs. Gilcoat, Conley, Manus, A. Hyde, Obarr, Bryant, Hunt and others. The church at one time had thirty-five or forty members, but there are very few at present.

North Van Buren Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1886 by Milton Z. Brown. There had been a good society before 1856, but the political exigencies of those days led to its abandonment. The society began again in 1886, and has so flourished that they now have a neat pine structure in course of erection, and have a membership of thirty-five persons. The society is a member of the Arkansas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Their present pastor is Rev. Obarr.

The Mount Olive Methodist Episcopal Church (colored), at Van Buren, is a member of the Little Rock Conference, and began its existence in 1869. It was organized by J. G. Pollard with thirty-eight members. In 1874 the society built a frame church two blocks west of Main Street at a cost of $900, and it was dedicated the same year by Rev. T. B. Ford. Rev. Ford has been succeeded by Revs. G. W. Taylor, W. H. Crawford, R. Boon, H. Turner, A. J. Phillips, J. G. Thompson, F. Wallace, W. S. Lanford and E. Roberts. Their membership is now ninety-five. The church is preparing to erect a commodious brick house of worship.

The Methodist Protestant Church is not largely represented in Crawford County. There are but eight congregations in all.

Cedarville Methodist Protestant Church is a member of the Fort Smith Annual Conference and of the Cedarville Circuit, which embraces Shiloh Church and Whitewater Chapel. It was organized about 1884, by Rev. Leonidas Neal and Rev. Youngs Coleman, associate pastor at Cedarville. Among the first members were F. C. Oliver, Eli Oliver and wife, Youngs Coleman and wife, L. Neal and wife, M. G. England and wife, Mrs. Rosana Neal and two daughters, Misses Ruth and Hattie J. Oliver, Richard Lollis and wife, Ellen and Jane Lynn, S. Q. McCurdy, John Hubbard and wife, and E. M. Oliver and wife. Among their pastors have been Rev. Boaz Ford, the two already named, and Rev. Hiram Kimes. They have thirty members. They have a union church building and school and Masonic Hall combined, worth about $3,000.

The Shiloh Church was organized about 1885, by Rev. Youngs Coleman, and among the original members were G. W. Pittman and wife, J. A. Standridge, M. J. Purcell, William Brazuell and wife, R. J. Brazuell and wife, et al. They have about twenty-five members, and use a school building.

Whitewater Chapel was organized at Gum Springs, by Rev. George O. Hickey, probably in about 1872. Many of the members were from the Cedarville congregation.

The Anna Circuit includes three churches and the Winslow Mission.

Episcopal.—Trinity Church, of Van Buren, is one of the oldest members of the Diocese of Arkansas. The society was organized about the years 1841 or 1842 by Bishop George W. Freeman. The corner-stone of the first church was laid April 5, 1844, and the membership reached about twenty-five persons. It began under the rectorship of Rev. D. McManus, whose successors were Revs. O. Townsend, William Binet, — Littlejohn, — Matthew, and the present rector, Rev. L. F. Guerrey. The society has been independent and earnest, and although without a pastor for a time succeeded in building a brick edifice valued at $5,000 (including the cost of site). This was completed in 1887, and will be dedicated in the winter of 1888-89 by the first pastor. The present number of communicants is sixty-nine, while the congregation numbers about 150.

The Presbyterians.—The Van Buren Presbyterian Church (O. S.) is a member of Washburn (or Washbourne) Presbytery, whose organization is mentioned elsewhere in this volume. It was formerly a part of Arkansas Presbytery, which embraced the northern half of the State. The society had informal services prior to 1844, but, according to Dr. J. A. Dibrell, the society was organized probably during that year. It is thought that the first pastor, Rev. Aaron Williams, organized the church, among whose original members were Elder Calvin Phelps and wife, Elder and Mrs. Charles Stewart, Mrs. L. Gross, Mary Hinkle, Dorothy Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, Mr. and Mrs. (?) Houck, Mrs. Mary Gross, Mrs. J. B. Ogden, Mrs. Abbott, Mrs. Pryor, Mrs. George W. Paschal, et al. The present church—which was the first—was built of wood and brick by the society in 1846 at a cost of $1,200. It was dedicated by the second pastor, Rev. W. K. Marshall, D. D. The membership reached its high-water mark about 1848, when they numbered sixty persons; but the organization of the Alma Church drew off a large number who lived there. It should be mentioned also that the acoustic properties of the church building were planned by the famous Washington architect, Mills, whose great equestrian statue of Jackson is so well known. The pastors that followed Dr. Marshall are Revs. Elizur Butler, Thomas Urmston, J. C. Kennedy, G. L. Wolfe, S. B. Irvin and W. F. Sample. The present membership numbers thirty persons.

The Alma Presbyterian Church is a member of Washburn (or Washbourne) Presbytery, and was organized in 1878 by Rev. J. C. Kennedy. The members constituting the first church were

R. M. and Mrs. Alexander, W. C. and Mrs. Bostick, A. C. and Mrs. Powe and others. The officers were J. K. P. Douglass and J. H. McNeely. The present edifice is a neat frame structure, the only one owned entirely by the society. It was dedicated in December, 1886, by Rev. W. F. Sample. The pastors have been Revs. J. C. Kennedy, S. B. Irvin and W. F. Sample, the present pastor. The church is in a prosperous condition, with a membership of sixty persons. Five elders and three deacons constitute the officers.

The Catholics.—St. Michael's Catholic Church at Van Buren is the only representative of this denomination in Crawford County. It is a member of the diocese of Little Rock, and was organized at an uncertain date. The chief event of importance in their history is the erection of a church on Broad Street, which was made possible by contributions of members of the local society, the congregation at Fort Smith and the citizens of Van Buren of various societies. The building is a frame edifice of a value estimated at $2,500, and was dedicated June 7, 1873, by the Rt. Rev. Edward Fitzgerald, bishop of Little Rock. The society has since prospered under the care of two successive pastors, Rev. M. Smith, and the Rev. Father Maurell, of Fayetteville, the present incumbent of the priestly office. Their organization has a membership of about 100 persons.

Missionary Baptists.—The Clear Creek Missionary Baptist Association is an offshoot of the Dardanelle Association, from which it withdrew to organize in 1871. About nine or ten churches, seven of which withdrew from the above-mentioned association, met at Concord Church, in Crawford County, and formed the present organization, which includes churches in Crawford County, and many north of the Arkansas River, in Franklin County. They chose for moderator a prominent organizer of the association, Col. M. F. Locke, of Alma, and Rev. W. R. McLain, as clerk. The moderatorship has been held by one or the other of these two gentlemen ever since, the former serving all but about two or three terms. In 1884 the association met at Mt. Zion Church, Franklin County; in 1886 at New Prospect Church, at Mulberry, and in 1877 at Alma, Crawford County. The present officers are Col. M. F. Locke, moderator; J. M. Lawrence, clerk, and M. H. Wagner, treasurer. They have 26 ministers, 5 licentiates and 27 churches. Total membership, 1,243.

Vine Prairie Missionary Baptist Church was organized June 3, 1882, by Rev. P. A. D. Smith, with thirteen original members. The first pastor was Rev. Nathan Adams, next Rev. Horace Meaddears (or Meadors) and Rev. Payne, the present pastor. They have a neat frame building 24x40 feet, built in 1886, costing about $200.

The Oak Grove Missionary Baptist Church, a member of Clear Creek Association, was organized January 22, 1882, by J. A. D. Smith, chairman; J. M. Kimberlin, secretary; M. Adams, J. E. Hicks, L. Scott and T. J. Davis. These, with J. E., G. W., Rosanah and Telitha Cox, S. L. Looney, S. A. Boggs, A. F. Looney and Mary M. Pendergrass, constituted the original membership, which has since increased to forty persons. Rev. M. Adams, the pastor, and Deacon G. W. Cox, church clerk, embraced all the first officers. Among those who are members of the society, J. A. D. Smith and J. M. Kimberlin are ministers; Mr. Adams and Rev. J. W. Richardson, the present pastor, have been the only ones in charge. The deacons are Messrs. Hicks, Scott and Davis. The society has so far been compelled to use a school-house for worship.

The Fine Spring Missionary Baptist Church was organized July 14, 1883, as a part of the Clear Creek Missionary Baptist Association. Rev. John O. Love was the minister. C. A. Heathcock and David Reed also took part in the organization. The society meets at a school-house three miles north of Alma. Their pastors have been W. M. Hicks, C. A. Gowin and Rev. Horace Meaddears (or Meadors). The original members were J. O. Humphrey, W. F. Flowers, Julia Flowers, Daniel Allen and sister and Mary A. O'Kelley. The present membership is thirty-four.

The Alma Missionary Baptist Church was organized in August, 1873, with the following members: Rev. F. L. and Mrs. Mary Seaward, with their two daughters, Misses Laura A. and Fannie; Dr. W. L. and Mrs. Jane R. Wynne; Col. M. F. and Mrs. N. A. Locke; three members of the Broome family, Mrs. M. A., T. W. and J. E.; C. C. Adams and Mrs. Nancy Hill. Rev. F. L. Seaward was their first pastor, and services were conducted in the public school building, which is elsewhere mentioned. They were the first of the four religious societies to withdraw from that building and erect a church. In 1878 Col. M. F. Locke, Rev. F. L. Seaward, Dr. Wynne and others began the work, and soon after that they were enabled to dedicate a neat wooden structure, which has cost them about $1,600. The pastors succeeding Rev. Seaward have been Revs. F. L. Kregel, M. O. Lucas, S. I. Lee and their present minister, Rev. E. Windes. Their present membership is about eighty persons. It might be of interest to note that the most prominent moderator, Col. M. F. Locke, of the Clear Creek Missionary Baptist Association, to which this church belongs, is a member of this society.

The Van Buren Missionary Baptist Church was not successful in forming an organization until 1885, and even then their membership was small, embracing only—among the male members—J. C. Clark, Mr. Reese, Mr. Hill, G. F. Stamps, T. Funk and James Lloyd. Elder John Mayes, of Fayetteville, and Deacon Clark organized the society as a member of Clear Creek Association. There is but little to record until the year 1887, when they erected their present frame church, at a cost of about $1,800. Their membership increased under the pastoral charge of Elders O. M. Lucas and Enoch Windes, the present pastor, until it has reached the number forty-one.

The Red Bird Missionary Baptist Church, a member of Clear Creek Association, is located two miles north of Belmont, Crawford County. It was organized the third Sunday in 1884, with the following members: C. W. Smith, Justin Smith, Josiah and Louisa Baird, C. W. and Sarah Bolton, J. S., Sr., Eveline, William, Rutha, J. S., Jr., and Nancy Smith and J. W. Cain. The officers were J. W. Cain, clerk; Deacon J. S. Smith, Sr., treasurer. The society have no building, but hold services in the school-house of the district. Their pastorate has been filled by Revs. T. R. Early, Horace Meadors and the present incumbent, J. M. Payne. The membership has been as high as 115 persons, but ninety-two is their present number.

Cedar Creek Missionary Baptist Church was organized in 1873 by Elder A. P. Whit, with E. Morris as moderator and Simon Whit as clerk. Among the members were Robert Reed, George Allen, Louisiana Morris, Albert Reed, Mary Burkett, Julia Reed, Amanda Allen, John Allen, R. Reed, William Allen, Mary Lewis, Mary Larue and J. B. Lewis. They first used a log school-house on the creek in Cedar Creek Township, but in 1876 a frame structure was erected at a cost of about $500. It was dedicated by the pastor, Elder C. A. Gowin. His successors have been Elders Simon Whit, Daniel Johns, J. H. Hill, E. A. Scott, S. L. Story, C. R. Johns, and C. A. Gowin himself. They have about fifty members. The Methodist and Christian Church people hold occasional services in this church.

Mount Moriah Missionary Baptist Church, a member of Clear Creek Association, was organized October 1, 1887, by Elders C. A. Gowin and John Brim, pastor. The society had no building, but their members held meetings about a mile north of Rudy. Among these members were W. H. Walker, deacon and clerk, M. A. Walker, Charles Baker and wife, Dilley Brim, John Lamson, B. Bruner, Sarah Bruner, James and Ann Howard, Mary Mullen, Caroline Jones and Elder Joseph Hudson. Rev. John Brim is the pastor, but Elder Hudson and Deacon Winfrey have officiated in various church duties at times. They have thirty-seven members.

Union Chapel Missionary Baptist Church was organized June 10, 1883, by Elders C. A. Gowin, C. R. Johns and E. Morris, with the following members: Mary A. Davis, Lizzie Service, Sarah Spangler, Isabel Richie, Nancy E. Pesterfield, S. J. Davis, A. K. Standridge and E. H. Hanner. The pastors have been Revs. C. A. Gowin, W. D. Cox and George F. Fatum. The present membership is fifty-eight.

Zoar Missionary Baptist Church was organized in 1859 by Elders Claborne, Jones and D. C. Harrison. Their first building was a log house, erected in about 1867, eight miles northeast of Van Buren. It cost about $100. They enroll about thirty-seven members at present. The original members were Elder Jones and wife, Elder Harrison and wife, C. C. Johnson, O. B. Wallace and Elizabeth Wallace, Sarah O'Neal and Phoebe Temple.

New Prospect Missionary Baptist Church No. 2, a member of Clear Creek Association, was formed August 18, 1883, by D. W. Chambless and J. M. Lawrence. The Oak Grove school-house and church combined, a two-story building, erected in 1882 at a cost of $1,100, is their present place of worship, located four miles southeast of Van Buren. The original membership embraces S. J. N., N. E., Jesse M. and Elder Daniel W. Chambless, E. W. Houston, W. L. H. Couch, Thomas A. Hill, Sarah E. Chambless, Eliza Lemley, Christina Lemley, Mary C. Shoemaker, M. E. Houston, Mary Couch, Martha E. Hill, Mary E. Couch, S. E. Houston and Mary E. Miller, but their number has grown to seventy-four, and prospects for the construction of a building, exclusively their own, are bright. Their present church was dedicated by the only pastor they have had, the Rev. Elder D. W. Chambless. N. E. Chambless is church clerk.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Van Buren has been an important factor in both the social and political history of Crawford County. It was organized February 2, 1882, with twenty-eight members. The officers chosen were as follows: Mrs. Jesse Turner, president; Miss Mattie Southmayd, Mrs. C. M. Thompson, Mrs. W. H. H. Shibley, vice-presidents; Mrs. Lewis Bryan, recording secretary; Miss Fannie Thompson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. O'Connor, treasurer; Mrs. M. D. Garnett, librarian. In November of the same year the society made a vigorous fight for prohibition at Van Buren, under the "three-mile" law, and to all appearances succeeded. The validity of the proceedings was questioned, however, and the case was brought before the county judge. Attorneys Thomason, Turner and Brown appeared for the petitioners for prohibition, and Attorneys Neal and Huckleberry in behalf of the opposition. The petition was granted. In their efforts of a similar character afterward the society was unsuccessful, but their efforts have had a great influence on public sentiment. Mrs. W. H. H. Shibley succeeded Mrs. Turner. The present secretary is Miss Alice Brelsford, and the treasurer, Mrs. C. M. Thompson. They have a membership of about forty-five.

The Van Buren Young Men's Christian Association was organized November 27, 1887, at the Methodist Church in that city. State Secretary Bill, of the state organization of Arkansas, was present, and the following officers chosen: Gen. Hugh F. Thomason, president, and D. H. Miller, secretary. There were forty-two members at this meeting—a temporary organization; the permanent society was formed a week later, with Hon. B. J. Brown as president, G. C. Thayer and Dr. R. W. Quarles as vice-presidents, W. H. H. Shibley as secretary, and John Fritz as treasurer. The society holds weekly meetings. Its rooms are in the Edmondson Block.

POST-OFFICES AND FINANCES.

Post-offices.—The number of post-offices established in Crawford County, between the years 1829 and 1888 was fifty-eight, as follows, with names of postmasters and dates of appointment:

Akeville (late Oak Grove): T. I. Price, June 1848; discontinued September, 1849.

Alma: Alex. W. Griffin, June, 1871; George F. Bolling, April, 1872; discontinued March, 1873; re-established April, 1878, George F. Bolling; Bidkar P. Renfroe, March, 1875; William A. Britten, August, 1881; E. B. Hassett, June, 1882; Noble Bonlin, April, 1884; Hugh S. Lewers, April, 1885.

Andros: Henry H. Epperson, June, 1886.

Anna: Jeremiah M. Spencer, August, 1880.

Arkloe: Mary A. F. Bullock, April, 1880; Robert I. Glass, October, 1880; Josias B. P. Bullock, May, 1882; discontinued October, 1884; re-established July, 1885, Malissa Bullock; discontinued March, 1886.

Armada: Andrew J. Nordin, March, 1888.

Barcelona: Tom Comstock, October, 1888.

Belmont: John M. James, January, 1848; Hugh R. Frazier, July, 1852; William Steward, October, 1857; discontinued June, 1859; re-established January, 1860, Samuel S. Roberts; John R. Meaders, April, 1866.

Bidville: H. A. Hedding, September, 1883; F. S. Henry, May, 1884; re-appointed April, 1885; discontinued January, 1886; re-established January, 1880, John B. Harrison.

Britton: Harvey A. Hedding, September, 1883; Elijah J. Crider, September, 1886.

Cantonment Gibson: E. W. B. Nowland, November, 1832; discontinued July, 1839; re-established July, 1839, W. L. Wharton. Now in Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory.

Cedarville (late Spencer's shop): Henry C. Crowell, June, 1872; B. B. Thayer, September, 1872; James F. O'Bryan, February, 1874; G. B. Childus, February, 1875; George W. Crowell, July, 1875; Robert C. Crowell, January, 1876; Peter Hunt, June, 1878; Leonidas Neal, September, 1878; James Fears, August, 1881; Cornelius W. Neal, January, 1882; M. J. Purcell, October, 1887.

Cherokee Agency: Hercules T. Martin, January, 1840. Now in Washington County.

- Chester: James C. Wright, March, 1883.
- Crawford (changed to Pleasant Hill): Alexander McLean, September, 1882.
- Dora: Albert Hood, April, 1888.
- Dripping Springs: George W. Matlock, March, 1870; discontinued June, 1870; re-established May, 1872, Wallace Deffbaugh; discontinued December, 1873.
- Dyer: Walter A. Dyer, July, 1885; John W. Moss, July, 1886; Tilghman M. Layton, June, 1887; Robert N. Anderson, June, 1888.
- Eads: William C. Eads, October, 1881; William A. Briscoe, July, 1882; re-appointed August, 1882; Francis M. Clawson, May, 1887.
- Elm Springs: W. Barrington, July, 1850. Now in Washington County.
- Fort Smith: John Rogers, October, 1829. Changed to Sebastian County March, 1851.
- Frisco: Benjamin F. Strong, April, 1883; John W. Shaberg, January, 1888.
- Frog Valley: Josiah Kester, August, 1879; Paton Peters, December, 1879; discontinued February, 1880.
- Gotha: Rudolph R. Ueltzen, August, 1886; Lovelace Cliett, November, 1886; discontinued December, 1887.
- Graphic: William B. Moore, March, 1883; Archibald Y. Killingsworth, October, 1883; John B. Meek, October, 1886; Frank Dyer, February, 1888.
- Hale: Harrison B. Hale, May, 1888.
- Hansen: Alex Thompson, June, 1881; Joseph C. Howell, September, 1883; discontinued November, 1885.
- Harroldton: James F. Gooding, June, 1886.
- James Fork: Jeremiah Hackett, August, 1847; Jacob W. Bender, May, 1850; changed to Sebastian County, March, 1851.
- Lancaster: James F. Ferguson, November, 1882; re-appointed November, 1884; Samuel Steward, March, 1884.
- Lee's Creek: Thomas Shannon, January, 1832; Sanford N. Elmore, February, 1835; George W. Duval, December, 1838; changed to Natural Dam March, 1839; re-established, Hiram Bradie, March, 1854; discontinued July, 1866; re-established, William Dudley, August, 1866; James A. O'Bryan, March, 1870; Andrew P. Simon, January 1871; Sibramer R. Cox, October, 1871; Richard C. Oliver, December, 1872; John J. Beale, January, 1887.
- Leonardsville: Amasa Watson, December, 1879; Fred Sperry, April, 1882; discontinued September, 1882.
- Lock: William F. Thornton, March, 1884; James K. P. Vaught, November, 1884; discontinued September, 1886.
- Mine Prairie, changed to Vine Prairie: Thomas J. Davidson, October, 1876.
- Mountainburgh (late The Narrows): Wesley H. Gilstrap, September, 1876; Henry Remy, March, 1878; Albert Simcoe, January, 1882; Anderson O. Gilstrap, June, 1883; John B. Wright, January, 1886; John L. Dement, April, 1886.
- Mulberry: Thomas Moore, May, 1830; discontinued September, 1833.
- Natural Dam (late Lee's Creek): Washington Duval, March 1839; Andrew Norton, November, 1845; Washington Duval, January, 1846; discontinued August, 1846; re-established April, 1847, James Farris; D. C. Price, September, 1847; Andrew Morton, December, 1850; discontinued May, 1860; re-established October, 1860, Andrew Morton; Jesse W. Branson, April, 1866; Mrs. Mary E. Oliver, April, 1867; discontinued, September, 1868; re-established August, 1872, James P. Babb; Nimrod P. Rice, February, 1875; discontinued November, 1875; re-established January, 1877, Henry King.
- Oak Grove: James B. McPherson, February, 1844; changed to Akeville June, 1848.

Ozark (now in Franklin County): William Hail, December, 1886; Samuel Evans, September, 1887.

Penny Witt: A. J. Harben, March, 1854; discontinued March, 185—.

Penultima: William H. Dillard, August, 1842; James W. Bates, December, 1848; discontinued February, 1847.

Pleasant Hill (late Crawford, now in Franklin County): John Lasater, January, 1888.

Redtop: Benjamin Dyer, August, 1886; discontinued November, 1887.

Rudy: George H. Rudy, February, 1888; Douglas Allen, December, 1886; William D. Rutledge, December, 1887.

Sand Point: Lewis Keifer, June, 1879; Bartlett Irwin, April, 1880.

Short Mountain: Gilbert Marshall, February, 1880; Thomas Hixson, December, 1883; William Hull, December, 1885; Samuel Weaver, July, 1887; discontinued July, 1888.

Speir: John L. Speir, February, 1888.

Spencer's Shop: John Spencer, March, 1870; Henry C. Crowell, April 1873. Changed to Cedarville June, 1872.

Statler: John P. Stewart, June, 1882; Vincent S. Vestal, November, 1883; Josiah R. Harden, April, 1886.

Steep Hill: Samuel B. Stephens, November, 1847; Isaac H. Parish, January, 1849; discontinued June, 1849.

Stop: Nathan W. Leach, June, 1884; William H. Leach, June, 1887.

Sugar Loaf: Giles S. Brown, August, 1847; George N. Brown, June, 1849. Changed to Sebastian County March, 1851.

Tarrytown: William J. Meadows, Jr., August, 1871; Cyrus Barrier, February, 1875; William J. Meadows, April, 1876; discontinued August, 1878; re-established, David H. Creekmore, February, 1883; W. F. Flowers, July, 1886.

The Narrows: William Howard, July, 1848; Asahel L. Orrick, July, 1856; William Russell, Jr., January, 1857; James G. Marlar, July, 1857; John L. Morgan, April, 1858; discontinued July, 1866; re-established May, 1867, Andrew I. Peters; Thomas H. Simcoe, December, 1867; James S. Bushong, July, 1869; Samuel L. Strong, December, 1871; William H. Peters, November, 1872; Samuel L. Strong, May, 1874; Wesley H. Gilstrap, March, 1875. Changed to Mountainburgh September, 1876.

Uniontown: Joseph C. Wood, April, 1881.

Van Buren: Thomas Phillips, March, 1831; John Drennon, December, 1836; Josiah W. Washbourne, October, 1844; George W. Clark, June, 1846; Cornelius D. Pryor, December, 1846; Nicholas A. Pryor, August, 1849; Davidson Dickson, April, 1852; Jonathan A. Eno, July, 1852; William B. Heard, December, 1855; James S. Bushong, October, 1865; Samuel D. Dougherty, April, 1867; Julius A. Nobles, March, 1873; Mrs. Lizzie Lockhart, March, 1874; James H. Huckleberry, October, 1879; re-appointed January, 1882; Alvis Smith, August, 1883; re-appointed January, 1884; James T. Stuart, January, 1886.

Vine Prairie (late Mine Prairie): Thomas J. Davidson, October, 1876; discontinued November, 1877.

Zenobia: William H. Cate, July, 1887; Charles M. Smith, March, 1888.

The number of post-offices in Crawford County now (November, 1888,) existing is thirty, as follows: Alma, Andros, Anna, Armada, Barcelona, Belmont, Bidville, Britton, Cedarville, Chester, Dora, Dyer, Eads, Frisco, Graphic, Hale, Haroldton, Lancaster, Lee's Creek, Mountainburgh, Natural Dam, Rudy, Sandy Point, Speir, Stattler, Stop, Tarrytown, Uniontown, Van Buren, Zenobia.

Finances.—The statement of the finances of the county for the year ending June 30, 1888, is as follows: Receipts, $22,650.-95; expenditures, $24,374.50; outstanding scrip, $8,384.12. Thirteen out of eighty-eight districts, only, did not vote the five-mill tax.

HISTORY OF FRANKLIN COUNTY.

BOUNDARY, TOPOGRAPHY, ETC.

Boundary.—Franklin County is bounded by Crawford and Madison on the north, by Johnson on the east, by Logan and Sebastian on the south and by Sebastian and Crawford on the west. It is one of but four Arkansas counties lying on both sides of its great river. Of its approximate area, 400,760 acres, about 129,280 acres are south of the river. Of course all the county is directly and indirectly drained by the Arkansas River.

Topography.—The topography in the north, from the Boston Mountain on the north boundary and Mulberry Mountain to the Arkansas, is terraced somewhat similar to Crawford County, excepting that Big Mulberry Valley cuts a wide depression diagonally across the entire part from the northeastern to the southwestern corner, where it joins a similar valley depression of the Little Mulberry, lying along the western boundary. Horsehead is the main creek in the east. Another exception to Crawford topography in the north is the comparatively meager lowlands along the Arkansas, the lower cliffs in many cases almost, and in some cases, lining the river bank. In the south, for about five or six miles, parallel with the river, is a series of ridges, beyond which spread the more or less continuous prairies to the Magazine Mountains on the southern boundary. In these are some elevations like Potato Hill, a striking phenomenon. The drainage is east, north and west, and is light.

Geology.—The following treating on the geology of Franklin County is from the pen of David Dale Owen, 1859:

In the geology of Franklin County the millstone grit series prevails in the northern part of the county, composed of conglomerates and thick-bedded, coarse sandstone, flagstone and red and blue shales. Only thin beds of coal can be expected to be discovered in such materials as lie below the true productive coal measures. A slight wave in the strata carries the coal of Crawford County beneath the surface in the northern part of the county, and it is not until you reach the waters of Horsehead Creek, in Johnson County, that this coal again makes its appearance at the surface, on the north side of the Arkansas River. One and a half miles northeast of Benner's mill, near William Parker's house, there is an excellent chalybeate spring, which was found on examination to contain: A trace of free sulphuretted hydrogen, bicarbonate of lime, bicarbonate of magnesia, bicarbonate of the protoxide of iron. This water appears to contain a considerable amount of oxide of iron, and it is therefore somewhat remarkable that it should also indicate, with acetate of lead, the presence of sulphuretted hydrogen—a combination that can only exist when the oxide of iron is held in solution by a free acid. This water will have a tonic effect, combined with an action on the skin and kidneys.

At and near Mr. Parker's spring is seen the following succession of rocks: Coarse-grained sandstone, alternating with flagstones; reddish, yellow and gray shales; in all about 200 feet. In the gray shales, ten feet above the spring, there is a thin coal dirt. On Mulberry River the thick-bedded sandstone of the millstone grit series attains a thickness of more than 300 feet. From the base of one of the cliffs of this sandstone, on Mulberry River, Section 80 (?), Township 11 north, Range 28 west, there issues a saline water, from a fissure in the rock, that is known as the State Salt Spring. This spring has lately been given up by the State, and is now the property of Messrs. Basham & Ward. It contains chloride of sodium (common salt), bicarbonate of lime, bicarbonate of magnesia, bicarbonate of the protoxide of iron (and) sulphates, a trace. This is a weak brine, which might become much stronger by deep boring, as it occupies the same geological position in which the strongest brines are found in the Western States. There is another saline spring, reported to be of about the same strength, situated higher up on the Mulberry River, which I did not have an opportunity to visit. The qualitative chemical examination of a mineral water on Spirit Creek, a branch of Mulberry, Township 11 north, Range 28 (?) west, resulted as follows: Carbonate of the protoxide of iron (strong), bicarbonate of lime, bicarbonate of magnesia. This is a good chalybeate water, and its effects will be that of an active tonic. A chalybeate spring was also examined at Mr. William Hamm's, on Mulberry River. This water contains the same ingredients as the preceding, though the oxide of iron is not in such large quantities. Between Mr. Hamm's, on Mulberry River, and Ozark, the following section was obtained: Siliceous flagstone, 130 feet; siliceous iron ore, 5 to 6 feet; yellow, red and gray shales, 60 feet; coal dirt, or thin, decomposed black shale, 1 foot; space concealed to bed of creek, 60 feet; total, 257 feet.

The northern part of Franklin County, though much broken, contains a large amount of good tillable land on the creek and river bottoms, which is very productive when properly cultivated. The principal growth of timber is white, black and red oak, black jack, post oak and hickory, sweet and black gum.

Resources.—Almost all that said in regard to Crawford in its resources can be said of North Franklin, and much that will be found in the resources of Sebastian County holds good of South Franklin.

A PIONEER WINTER SCENE.

EARLY HISTORY AND SETTLEMENT.

Archæological.—The remains of Mound Builders in the present territory of Franklin are found chiefly in the Big Mulberry Valley, or rather were found, for the annual plowing over them has reduced the most of them to ordinary levels. Gen. Jesse Miller, who has taken pains to observe them, recalls having opened many of these mounds and finding in them bones, earthenware, pottery and other utensils; they were also arranged with almost, if not quite, scientific regularity. Some of these are on his own farm and on the Beneaux estate. On Gen. Miller's farm he found an old burying ground, on the mounds of which very old trees were growing, and in one part of which were rocks arranged in the form of a five-pointed star.

The Indians and Earliest White Occupants.—The earliest Indian occupation known was by the Osages in the north and the Quawpaws south of the river. The removal of these tribes is mentioned elsewhere. Contemporary with them, however it is known that there were French settlers even before 1816, as is evidenced by the fact of the deed of land on the river near Altus, given in 1816, by Jean Baptiste Dardenne, and that it was a private French survey made by himself, a survey that is still recognized. As the French had possession of ancient Louisiana no later than 1767, except for a few hours in 1804, this survey would seem to indicate a settlement of the French in Franklin territory previous to 1767, when Louisiana was under the French governorship of D'Abbadie, or before him Baron de Kelevec, or before him Marquis de Vaudreuil, or back even beyond Bienville's last term (1732 to 1741).

No evidence obtainable points to settlements by the Spaniards during the rule of any of their nine governors, from Antonio de Ulloa in 1767 to Juan Manual de Salcedo in 1803.

In 1818, two years after Jean Dardenne deeded his French survey to William Russell, Simon Miller and his son Jesse (Gen. Jesse Miller, of Mulberry City,) and others, settled in the rich Mulberry Valley, and raised one crop. This was about the region of Pleasant Hill—the oldest and best known White settlement, not only in Franklin County, but in the northwestern part of the State [see chapter on schools, and also the address of Judge Jesse Turner in the chapters on Crawford County]. The Cherokees were there, and the following year (1819) the white settlers were ordered off on account of the government arrangements with the Indians, giving the Cherokees exclusive rights of title to the territory lying between the White and Arkansas Rivers. All the White squatters who had taken up the 160 acres allowed them moved away except Jesse Bean and his family and Judge Sanders. These were allowed to remain because they were blacksmiths. Gen. Miller thinks a few others remained also. For almost a decade after that the Cherokees—a comparatively agricultural nation—had exclusive control of this region. In 1818 Webber, the chief, had a small village on Mulberry, and on the south side of the Arkansas River was an Indian “town” called “Chekelee.” No information in the form of Indian tradition of the life of these people is obtainable. It may be that they had no heart to make events. “The first memory I have of giving my sympathy to sorrow not directly my own,” says a lady writer* in a current magazine, “was in the case of the Indians of the Creek and Choctaw tribes, who had been removed to the Arkansas reservation from their homes by the banks of the lovely Coosa, one of the most romantic and beautiful streams in America. Nothing my father could tell me concerning their going could ease the keen pain their sad faces and flowing tears inflicted on my childish heart.” * * * Many burial trees were found, especially in Indian Hollow, on Horsehead Creek (East Franklin), after they left in 1828. In these were found skulls, bones, beads, gun-barrels with the wood rotted off, arrow heads, etc. At the “old Kinnibrough field” was found a defensive block-house of two stories. Their trails were rather numerous; they were also known as “buffalo traces,” and were worn about eight inches deep and a foot or two wide. The most marked “trace” was the one from Batesville to Ozark, generally following the Charleston road after crossing the river. One came from Madison County down to Horsehead Creek, and bore off east. Many deserted cabins and orchards were found.

White pioneers, previous to the Indian removal in 1828, looked upon this land much the same as the white population look upon Indian Territory—as “the promised land”—and after 1828, when it was deserted, settlers literally overflowed the region. One has but to glance at the accompanying “entry” list, to see how many came in in 1829 and 1830. Gen. Jesse Miller was one of the first to return to Mulberry Valley. Soon came Capt. Russell, the Simpsons, Barnetts, Marrs, W. H. Johnson, Quesenburys, Mayes, Moores, Maxeys and others. On White Oak were the Russels, Merediths, Ragsdales and others; about the site of Roseville were the McLeans, from which it gained its name “McLean’s Bottom;” a little before 1831 H. B. Rose, a well-informed New Orleansite bought the place and named it Roseville; an old patriarch, called Thomas Hixon, was there; he was a Kentuckian Clay Whig, and was a great enthusiast over his favorite journal, the Maysville (Ky.) Eagle, a fact that made him the butt of a good deal of laughter. The court-house, in Mr. Rose’s “residence,” was soon moved up to Old Crawford Court-house, about 1831 (the northwest corner of South Franklin County); here came Mr. Trimble, Mr. Dillard, Mr. Reed and Mr. Edmondson with families—only four families; here came Jesse Turner, B. H. Martin and R. C. S. Brown, young attorneys; there were a few log houses; the court-house was a log one 15x15 feet, with clapboard roof and puncheon floors, no hanging doors or windows. In 1832 Justin Beneaux came there with a fifteen year old boy, whom he was rearing, named J. F. Quaille, now a venerable citizen of Ozark. Mr. Beneaux had a keen eye to business as a merchant, and had been used to prompt annual settlements on the first day of a new year. At the close of his first year he prepared to receive his debtors and their coins or peltries—a pleasant method of “keeping open house”—on New Year’s Day. He waited all day and they came not, whereupon he sought Judge Turner and poured out his indignation in mixed Franco-English, saying they were “no punctu-al! no punctu-al!” It is a characteristic fact that the first attachment case before the county court was one of his cases of collection, and that the boy he reared has become one of the first financiers of the county.

A little later (about 1832, it is thought,) William Cureton had some land on the site of Ozark—then called "Cureton's Ferry." Soon the Hails came in, and the growth of Ozark follows, as may be found in the chapter on towns, villages, etc.

In 1836 the movement of the court-house to "Old man Whitson's place," up on Big Mulberry, withered Old Crawford Court-house, and for a brief period lent increased interest to the Mulberry settlement. This was not long to last, however, for although there were scattering settlers all over the present region of Franklin County (and past, too,) the great bulk of the settlement was in McLean's Bottom about Roseville, as well as in Big Mulberry Valley. Their convenience decided that Ozark should henceforth be the central and most important settlement in the county, after 1837.

The settlement of Franklin came chiefly from Mississippi, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri. During "the forties" northern settlers located on the prairies of the region about Charleston. The population of foreign birth is of a later date, and confined almost exclusively to the German settlement north of Altus.

In "the fifties" there were but three settlers in the region about the site of Altus—old Hogan Township; they were "Old Jimmy Crusin," William Hellens and Marcus Hogan, in whose honor the township was named. Crusin's horse-mill was the only mill in East Franklin as late as 1857. The settlement in the region of Charleston is mentioned in the chapter on towns. The especial periods of influx of settlers were in 1829, 1836, and 1876—opening after the Indian occupation, admission of the State, and the completion of the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroad.

Actual Settlers.—No more complete list of actual settlers can be found than such as the assessor might hand down. The assessor's book of 1839 gives the following names:*

C. B. Ake, John Ake, R. D. and O. B. Alston, W. Adams, T. Aldridge, A. L. Armstrong, John Ainsworth, D. L. Bourland, J. Barnard, C. Barnard, — Baley, G. W. Boykin, W. Berry, C. M. Blagg, H. M. Bunch, T. Berry, E. Berry, W. Berry, Jr., Justin Beneaux, James Boyd, J. B. Bourland, J. Boren, S. M. Bean, T. Booth, Rial Bryant, W. Brooks, A. H. Bryan, O. Barnet, J. Burks, J. G. Barclift, A. M. Bourland, E. D. Bourland, H. Bourland, A. Barnhill, Z.

The oldest title to be obtained for land in Franklin County is the following:

This deed, made and entered into between John Baptiste Dardenne, of the county of Arkansas, in the territory of Missouri, of the first part and party to this deed, and William Russell, of the town and county of Saint Louis, in the same territory, of the second part and party to this deed, which witnesseth that the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of sixty dollars current money of the United States of America to him in hand paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt of which payment is hereby acknowledged, hath bargained and sold, and does, by these presents, grant, bargain and sell to the said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns forever, six hundred and forty acres of land situated adjoining the Arkansas River, in the aforesaid county of Arkansas, as is supposed, being especially located at a place called "Aiaita Prairie," and otherwise by some called "Choctaw Prairie," on the said Arkansas River, and being the only claim of land of the said party of the first part in his own right in the aforesaid territory; to have and to hold the above described, granted, bargained and sold lands and premises, with all and singular of the rights, privileges and appurtenances whatever thereto belonging [here follows the formal language of a deed]. In testimony whereof the said John Baptiste Dardenne has hereunto set his hand and seal this 20th day of April, 1816.

This is on the river directly southwest of Altus; it was a private French survey made by Jean (properly) Baptiste Dardenne during the French occupation. The survey is numbered 2348, and is the only French survey in the county.

The following is a list of persons who entered land within the present limits of Franklin County previous to 1840. In a few earlier cases the section, township and range numbers, on which the land is located, are given:

George Grounds, 1829, 14-8-26; Charles Kelley, 1829, 13-9-29; James Marrs, Jr., 1830, 3-8-25; James Drake, 1830, 5-8-25; William McDonald, 1830, 7-8-25; John Marrs, Jr., 1830, 10-8-25; E. G. Harris, 1830, 17-8-25; Hugh Logan, 1830, 17-8-25; John M. Spaulding, 1830, 3-7-26; Lee Yostes, 1830, 1-8-26; James Meredith, 1830, 2-8-26; John J. Nicholson, 1830, 2-8-26; W. C. Pogue, 1830, 3-8-26; Boyd Williams, 1830, 8-8-26; Adam Harvick, 1830, 9-8-26; Aquilla Mitchell, 1830, 10-8-26; Alex Barnhill, Alden Taylor, 1830, 12-8-26; Alvin St. Clair.

1830, 14-8-26; Alex E. Ross, 1830, 15-8-26; Joseph Jeffries, 1830, 15-8-26; John Titworth, 1830, 16-8-26; David Fort, 1830, 29-8-26; James Fisher, 1830, 34-8-26; John and William Martin, 1830, 35-9-26; John Simpson, 1830, 7-10-28; Thomas Fulcher, 1831, 1-8-26; J. The earliest record of any action of a justice of the peace of Franklin to be found is the following:

This action was founded on a note of hand for the sum of $55, given December the 6th, 1837, and due the 25th of December, 1838, by A. H. Hilborn, assignee for Spencer Horner, and for the use of Joseph Tussel.

The first record of a justice court to be found is:

John Titworth,
surviving partner of Clark & Titworth,
vs.
Samuel Hixson.

} Summons issued May 24, 1838, returnable the 2d day of June.

The defendant not appearing the Court continued this case until the 9th day of June, when the parties appeared, and the defendant making no defense, it is therefore considered by the Court that judgment go against defendant for $85 and 75 cents principal; interest $12 and 5 cents, and costs; justice's account for summons 50 cents, for judgment 50 cents; constable, cost summons 50 cents, mileage, three miles, 15 cents.

Execution issued this 25th day of June, 1838.

June 26, 1838.—This day personally appeared George Grounds, and acknowledged himself jointly bound with Samuel Hixson for the pay of the above judgment and cost, provided the same shall be sustained by the circuit court.

Transcribed this 18th day of October, 1838.

A record of a case before this justice is found in which H. B. Rose appears against Amanda Childers, administratrix of John Childers, deceased; this is on December 18, 1840. Alfred Henderson, on Mulberry River, was probably one of the earliest justices within the present territory of Franklin County. The first marriage record to be found is the following:

I, M. Hogan, an acting justice of the peace in Franklin County, State of Arkansas, do, on this 7th day of September, A. D. 1849, in the county aforesaid, join in marriage Robert Skidmore and Elizabeth Gold, both of this county aforesaid, and both of lawful age, and did then and there declare them to be husband and wife.

Given under my hand this day of November, A. D. 1849.

Early Experiences.—The early industries of Franklin were very similar to those described in Crawford—the mother territory. Stock raising was largely followed, with the raising of small crops of corn, oats, wheat and cotton. The hunter's occupation was a favorite also, and the Indians often returned to hunt with them as late as "the seventies."

In the chapters on Crawford will be found illustrations of the early life and customs of Franklin County. A Van Buren incident is here inserted, which will serve to show that inns in those days were quite as matter-of-fact as at present. The landlord referred to is Mr. Gross:

A PREACHER EATING HIS HORSE.

There was no church in Van Buren. A Methodist itinerant was sent there. One house only was open to him—the tavern—and to that he went and put up. He interviewed mine host. "What is the chance for a Methodist preacher here?" The reply was that it was the same as for any other man, if he had money. "But if I have no money." The chances were bad enough. "What do you charge for board?" asked the circuit rider. The rates were given. "Look at my horse," said he; "what do you think he is worth?" The animal doubtless was good middling, for our preachers are not novices about horses, and no men have better use for them. That preliminary settled, the preacher proceeded in a very straightforward style with the host. "Sir, turn my horse into your stable, and when you think I have eat up the value of him let me know, and I will either change my quarters or provide other means of paying my bill."

He went to work—laid siege to the place in the name of the Lord—and before the horse was eat up the town capitulated. The people presented him his horse, all charges paid, and his own bill beside; fitted out "the parson" in a new suit of clothes, and from that day Christianity has had a firm footing in Van Buren. Two churches, a Methodist and an Old School Presbyterian, with good brick houses to worship in, and good congregations, furnish the Gospel and ordinances to that excellent people. The Rev. John J. Roberts, one of the oldest members of the Conference, is the man.—Bishop McTear.

There were no saw-mills in the earlier days, and floors were puncheon; roofs were laid on and weighted down with weight poles; the chimneys were made of sticks and mud. When the county was organized the only glass windows in it were two panes of glass owned by Thomas Moore, on Big Mulberry; many others obtained some by 1839. The great highways were the old Wire road north of the river and the Military road on the south.

Franklin County has not been very prolific in striking incidents; its career has been generally even and very conservative.

ORGANIZATION.

The Osage Indians relinquished all rights to Franklin County (present) territory north of the river, by the treaty of November 10, 1808, when it became subject to white settlement. In 1813 it became a part of Arkansas County, Missouri Territory. The Quawpaws relinquished their rights to the south side territory in the treaty of August, 1818. It became a part of Arkansas Territory by act of Congress March 2, 1819. The south part of present Franklin was then probably in Pulaski, and the north in Arkansas or Lawrence Counties; it is uncertain which one. At the creation of Crawford, October 23, 1820, South Franklin became Crawford Territory. North Franklin was in the territory ceded to the Cherokees, when they were first removed west of the Mississippi River, and it continued so until they relinquished their rights in 1828, and it became a part of Crawford.*

Franklin County was organized by "an act to erect and establish the county of Franklin," approved December 19, 1837; it was bounded thus:

Beginning on the northern boundary line of Scott County, in the middle of Range 29 west, and running thence, in the middle of said range, two miles beyond the southern boundary line of Township 13 north; running thence east to the range line dividing Ranges 24 and 25 west; thence south six miles; thence west to the range line dividing Ranges 25 and 26 west; thence south, with said range line, to the northern boundary line of Scott County; thence westwardly with the said northern boundary line of Scott County to the place of beginning.

The justices of the peace within those limits were, by that act, authorized to meet at Ozark on the third Monday in February, 1838, to hold county court and elect a judge. On February 16 another act was approved providing for an election to be held at Ozark on the third Monday in March, 1838, to elect all county officers not before provided for. On November 20 of that year an act was approved providing for an election of five commissioners, two of whom should be residents of the south side of the river, to permanently locate the seat of justice of the county; and each of whom should take an oath that they would locate it "impartially;" this was to be done by (after a fifteen days' notice) meeting at Ozark and choosing the site, which choice fell to Ozark. "An act defining the boundary line between the counties of Franklin and Johnson" was approved December 14, 1838; it provided that the following should be that line:

Beginning on the dividing ridge between the waters of Arkansas and White Rivers, where the line between Ranges 25 and 26 crosses the same; thence down said River to the mouth of Short Mountain Creek; thence up said creek to the line dividing Ranges 25 and 26; thence south with said line to the Scott County line.

The present boundary between Franklin and Crawford was defined in 1875. On March 22, 1871, "An act to establish and organize the county of Sarber, and for other purposes," was approved; it did not simply define, as in the case of the two above acts, but all, or a large part of Lower Township, embracing the rich lands of "McLean's Bottom" and all of Short Mountain Township, was taken; together with portions of Johnson, Yell and Scott Counties, to form Sarber, now called Logan, County; it was thus bounded:

Commencing at a point in the channel of the Arkansas River where the line dividing Ranges 21 and 22 crosses said river; thence running south on said line to the line dividing Townships 6 and 7; thence running west on said line to the boundary line between Yell and Johnson Counties; thence west and south with said boundary line to the line dividing Townships 24 and 25; thence south on said line to the line dividing 5 and 6; thence west on said line to the boundary line between Yell and Scott Counties; thence south on said boundary line to the line dividing Townships 4 and 5; thence west on said line dividing 4 and 5 to the boundary line between Scott and Sebastian Counties; thence north on the line dividing Ranges 28 and 29 to northwest corner of Township 6, Range 28; thence east on said line dividing 6 and 7 to the line dividing Ranges 28 and 27; thence north on said line dividing Ranges 28 and 27 to the line dividing Townships 7 and 8; thence east on said line dividing Townships 7 and 8 to the line dividing Ranges 25 and 26; thence north on said line dividing Ranges 25 and 26 to the channel of the Arkansas River; thence with the channel of said river to the place of beginning.*

These are the entire changes made in the territory comprising Franklin County. As to its name—Franklin—one has but to recall one great American, whose name about that time and since was used with which to honor counties and towns, and even a State.

First Officers, etc.—The first officers of Franklin County, after its organization in 1837, were judge, A. Henderson; county clerk, Samuel Evans; sheriff, George McKinney; treasurer, D. L. Bourland; coroner, William Hall, and surveyor, John Epler. The first county court was held at Ozark, but the proceedings for about ten years are lost. From 1838 to 1840, judge, J. McMurray; clerk, J. W. Pendleton; sheriff, E. Speegle; treasurer, D. L. Bourland; coroner, James Britton, and surveyor, E. M. Tatum, served the county. The first record to be found containing county court proceedings is that of the following date:

JULY TERM OF THE COUNTY COURT, 1847.

July 19, A. D. 1847.

At a county court begun and held in the town of Ozark, Franklin County, State of Arkansas, present and presiding the Hon. Thomas Aldridge, judge of said court, and assisted by Thomas McFerran and John Honea, his associates, the following proceedings were had, to wit:

And now on this day the court allowed John D. Steele (three) dollars for a county record and that scrip issue for the same.

And now on this day the court appointed David Foot on the new Short Mountain road from Clark's Ford to Middle Township line, and that C. B. Ivey apportion the hands to said overseer.

* Acknowledgment of the kindness of Judge W. W. Mansfield, in examining the records at Little Rock, is here made.

And now on this day the court appointed James Stringer overseer on the old Short Mountain road from Wolf's Ferry to where it intersects the new road, and that C. B. Ivey apportion the hands, etc.

And now on this day it is ordered that Gades E. Miller apportion the hands to all the overseers in Middle Township.

And now on this day there was a petition presented to the court by sundry citizens of White Oak Township, praying a change of the stage road from Ozark to Johnson County line, said road to run from Ozark to Mrs. Christian's old place, and from thence by Styles to intersect the old Rock road at over near Doct Hail's old place, and that James Gilbreath, Dotson Belt and John Huggins be appointed viewers on said road, and report to the next term of this court.

And now on this day the court appointed Samuel W. Cravens captain of a patrol in Lower Township, and R. E. Lambert, W. M. Woods, William Foot and W. G. Titsworth his associates.

And now, etc. [here follows report on the Preston Ferry, Gaddis E. Miller road, and appointment of I. I. Cureton as overseer; also the allowance of $2 to Overseer David C. Hall].

Ordered that court adjourn until to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

[Signed]

THOMAS ALDRIDGE,

For County Court.

This closes the first day. As a county officer's record before the county court record, the earliest is the following:

Franklin County, Ark., Surveyor's Book:

I, Thomas Booth, county surveyor of Franklin County, do certify that I have surveyed for Jeremiah Phealen, Sr., the southwest quarter of the north-west quarter of section 8, in Township 10 north, of Range 28 west, beginning at the half-mile corner on the west boundary line of said section, a white oak and elm; thence north eighty poles to a stone, a post oak eight inches in diameter bears north seven degrees, west eighteen links; thence east eighty poles and twenty-three links to a stone in a cornfield; thence south eighty poles to a black-jack seven inches in diameter, bear [ing] south twenty-seven degrees, east thirty-five links; thence west eighty poles and twenty-three links to the half-mile corner, counting forty acres. Surveyed August the 4th, 1839.

[Signed]

THOMAS BOOTH, County Surveyor.

D. L. Bourland and Messer Phealen.

The first record of an election order is that for August 21, 1847, "at the house of John Barnards," to elect a commissioner to sell the 16th Section of Township 7, Range 28 west, for school purposes. Thomas McFerran and Joseph Dunn were appointed to hold the election. The first record of grand jurors' names on October 18, 1847: J. M. Hunter, C. M. Richardson, W. Gage, N. S. Hinton, J. M. Council, G. Hill, Charles Marshall, W. P. Raney, A. T. Hampton, J. D. W. Speegle, Alex. McLaughlin, "Robert Forseman," John Brooks, S. Turner, S. Melton and W.

Campbell. The first ferry privilege record is in January, 1848, to T. C. Parks at Ozark.

In 1841 the tax valuation was $328,926, and the tax $2,013.43; in 1842, $289,488, and the tax, $1,900.31; in 1846, $264,225 and 507 polls; in 1847, $302,465 and 445 polls.

Eli Pattey made the first Franklin County statement on record January 19, 1848: "All moneys received by him to this day, amounting to $3,817.17; by scrip paid in and commissions, $3,417.79; leaving in the hands of treasurer, $399.98." On April 17, 1848, the court ordered a court-house built at Ozark, and Kendall Webb was to draw up specifications and cost. In July White Rock Township was formed, with the polls at H. Calverts. The polls of Middle Township were at James Brittain's. July 18, 1848, $3,000 was appropriated for the court-house, and on July 26, 1851, the building was accepted. It was similar to the present one, but the offices were in the second story and the court-room in the first. Six-Mile Township was organized in July, 1858, out of Middle Township, and Limestone Township was created from Boston Township April 17, 1860. In 1861 the county was in so good financial circumstances that steps were taken to build a separate clerk's office, as provided by the statutes, but the project gave way to the war. In July, 1861, Capt. J. H. Roberts was appointed over the White Oak Township Home Guards. During 1862 the records of orders for the relief of soldiers' families were very frequent. The last record before 1865 was that of November 22, 1862, in which G. H. Ross was appointed clerk, vice A. L. Berry, resigned to become a representative of Franklin County.

First Courts.—The first court of the county held after peace was that on November 6, 1865, by Judge John Boyle, and the first business performed was the grant of Ozark ferry license to Sarah A. Adams. In 1869, on July 6, plans were ordered for a court-house, and on the 22nd a jail was ordered, the latter at a cost of $1,800. Both court-house and jail had been destroyed.

The following record of a new regime explains itself:

At a meeting of the Board of Equalization (Supervisors) in pursuance of an act passed and approved April 8, 1869, for the purposes of equalization of taxes of 1869, which was begun and held in the town of Ozark, in the County of

Franklin and the State of Arkansas, present G. W. Sutherland, judge; Thomas Clark, by G. C. Alden, deputy assessor; John Pettigrew, surveyor; James Daugherty, clerk, which comprise the said board, the same being on the 11th day of October, A. D. 1869, (when) the following proceedings were had, to wit:

Here followed the appointment of J. M. Pettigrew as surveyor, of W. J. Montague for clearing the rubbish out of the court-yard, the letting the building of the jail to S. S. Matthews for $875 (the cage was to cost $1,127), and the court-house to W. W. Collins for $9,700. These figures reached $13,000 or thereabouts before the structure was completed in 1871, however. April 25, 1870, twenty feet square off the north-east corner of the court-yard were sold to Patterson & Withers for a law office. On September 8, following, Roseville, then in Franklin County, was incorporated. During 1870 the court-room was in Franklin Male Institute, corner of Commercial and Ninth Streets. A residence of P. F. Webb, and also one of his buildings north of the court-house, was used for the various purposes of the county. Two elections were held—one in 1870 and the other in 1872—to vote county aid to the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railway, but both failed to grant it. On April 17, 1871, the total indebtedness of Franklin County was $11,975.69, $2,746.65 of which was the share assumed by the county of Sabers, then recently cut off from Franklin. In April, 1872, the estate of W. W. Collins, late county treasurer then, began a litigation that grew from complications in his relations to the county as treasurer and builder; it continued for some time in the circuit court, and was finally taken to the supreme court, and a considerable amount was recovered from the county.

On April 8, 1874, the court incorporated the town of Charleston, in Township 7, Range 29 west. On July 6 of the same year Ivey Township was carved out of Mulberry, and on the 22d of the month Pond Creek and New Salem Townships were cut out of White Oak Township, but the order was repealed the following September. January 6, 1875, Pleasant Hill was incorporated as a village, and on April 19 Walker Township was organized out of White Oak, White Rock and Boston Townships. April 28 witnessed the birth of Hogan Township. It was a part of White Oak, and was the eighth township created in the county.

At this time there were fifty-three road districts. February 1, 1877, South Ozark was established, on the petition of M. F. Fleeman, in four blocks across the street west of what afterward became Webb City. On May 7, 1877, Moxey Township was formed, and Hurricane Township was created the following day out of Prairie and Mill Creek Townships. On August 29, 1877, there were twenty-nine school districts; the largest apportionment was made to No. 21, $171.55, and the smallest sum was $15.62, received by No. 24. Nos. 5, 14, 15, 17, 19 and 21 received over $100. August 25 Perry F. Webb secured the recognition of Webb City as a village, separated only by a street from South Ozark. In February, 1878, Charleston's limits were reduced. In 1878 School District No. 9 received $149.16, the largest sum received among thirty-four districts. September 11, 1880, the town of Mulberry was incorporated. At that time there were fifty school districts in the county. The first order for the use of the "three-mile law" was made October 28, 1881, to "the adult citizens living within three miles of Pleasant Ridge School-house." In 1882 the school districts numbered sixty. The limits of Mulberry City were reduced April 30, 1884.

That part of Franklin County south of the Arkansas River is cut off from easy access to Ozark not only by the river, but by the rough and ridgy region between the prairies and the river. This led to the following:

An act to establish two separate judicial districts in the county of Franklin, in the State of Arkansas, approved March 14, 1885. * * * That all that portion of Franklin County lying north of the Arkansas River, and Middle Township as now defined on the south side of the Arkansas River, shall comprise and be called the Ozark District, and the residue of said county shall comprise and be called the Charleston District.

Circuit, chancery and probate courts were to be held at both district seats, and be distinct in action, but the same officers and their deputies were to have charge. The first deputy clerk at Charleston was C. B. Winburn, and the present one is W. A. Milton. Rented rooms have thus far been used.

The indebtedness of the county reached its high-water mark under the constitution of 1868, and on July 30, 1873, the general debt was bonded as follows, the only bonding the county ever did: Sixteen $500 bonds payable in three years, fifty-one $100 bonds payable in five years, fourteen $100 bonds payable in seven years, nine $50 bonds payable in ten years and three $25 bonds payable in ten years. These were all dated July 30, 1873, and bore 8 per cent interest. These have all been paid. The present indebtedness of the county is about $8,000 in scrip that is worth about eighty cents on a dollar. The assessed value of real estate for 1888 is $1,572,247; that of personal property, $1,219,214; total, $2,791,461. The county has no poor farm.

Roads, Bridges, etc.—The highways of the county have, from the first, been those branching out from Ozark on both sides of the river. The county owns no bridges at present, and never voted any railway bonds. The Little Rock & Fort Smith Railway is the only one ever within the present territory of the county, and the chief results of that enterprise in Franklin County was to transfer its river traffic to the railway, and increase immigration into the country. D. L. Bourland, Sr., was one of the first directors of the road, the fuller history of which appears in the organization chapters on Crawford County, in this volume. The history of the county buildings will be more fully mentioned in the history of Ozark.

COUNTY OFFICERS, ETC.

The officers of Franklin County have been as is usual, except that previous to 1868 the assessor's duties were performed by the sheriff.

Judges.—A. Henderson, 1837 to 1838; J. McMurray, 1838 to 1840; T. Aldridge, 1840 to 1846; John Honea, 1846 to 1848, and 1852 to 1858; D. W. Fillingim, 1848 to 1852, and 1858 to 1864; John Boyle, 1864 to May, 1865; S. Spangler, May, 1865, to 1868; G. W. Sagely, 1848 to 1852; John Jones, 1852 to his death, in March, 1853; Alfred Coffrey, March, 1853, to 1854; S. B. Honea, 1854 to 1856; D. A. Stewart, 1856 to 1862; A. Moffit, 1862 to 1864; W. C. Adams, 1864 to 1866, and 1868 to March, 1869; C. C. Berry, March, 1869, to 1872; F. M. Elsey, 1872 to 1874; R. Q. Shores, 1874 to 1882; A. H. Sadler, 1882 to 1884; J. T. Tolleson, 1884 to 1886, and W. L. Huggins, 1886 to 1888.

County Treasurers.—D. L. Bourland, 1837 to 1844; Eli Patey, 1844 to 1850; J. T. Mileham, 1850 to 1852; H. Eichenberger, 1852 to 1856; A. B. Krider, 1856 to 1860; T. N. Lane, 1860 to 1864, and 1866 to 1868; W. W. Collins, 1864 to 1866, and 1868 to October, 1873; A. J. Woods, October, 1873, to 1874; Stephen Gage, 1874 to 1876; G. W. C. Nixon, 1876 to 1880; O. B. Alston, 1880 to 1882; W. T. Bryan (failed to qualify); C. S. McKinney, December 18, 1882, to 1884; L. R. A. Wallace, during 1886, and S. B. Ramsey, 1886 to 1888.

Coroners.—William Hall, 1837 to 1838; James Britton, 1838 to 1840; William Kelly, 1840 to 1842; J. W. Jester, 1842 to 1846; H. Eichenberger, 1846 to 1848; William Gray, failed to give bond; J. W. Mileham, February, 1849, to 1850; T. C. Tomberlin, 1850 to 1852; William Gray, 1852 to 1854; H. Sharp, 1854 to 1856; W. B. Crook, 1856 to 1858; J. Cornwell, 1858 to 1860; W. C. Crooks, 1860 to 1862; C. B. R. Smith, 1862 to 1864; 1864 to 1866, vacant; H. Hudson, 1866 to 1868; R. F. Short, 1868 to 1872; R. G. Howell, 1872 to 1874; Samuel Evans, 1874 to 1876; E. M. McCallister, 1876 to February, 1877; W. A. Carter, February, 1877, to 1880; Thomas Rabon, 1880 to 1882; W. N. Nichols, 1882 to 1884 and 1886 to 1888, and Henry V. Bond, 1884 to 1886.

Surveyors.—John Epler, 1837 to 1838; E. M. Tatum, 1838 to 1840; T. Boothe, 1840 to 1846; T. Carroll, 1846 to 1848; J. M. Christian, failed to give bond; J. M. Nixon, March, 1849, to 1850; Charles Foster, 1850 to 1822; J. M. Nixon, 1852 to 1856;

Samuel Evans, 1856 to 1858; F. M. Nixon, 1858 to 1862; J. C. Pettigrew, 1862 to 1864; 1864 to 1866, vacant; W. J. Montague, 1866 to 1868; H. F. Walters, 1868 to March, 1871; J. M. Pettigrew, March, 1871 to 1872; G. D. Butler, 1872 to 1874; J. J. McLaughlin, 1874 to February, 1877; N. D. Sadler, February, 1877, to 1880; T. A. Pettigrew, 1880 to 1882; A. M. McLain, 1882 to March 20, 1884; D. S. Harris, March 20, 1884, to 1886, and D. M. McGraw, 1886 to 1888.

Assessors.—As an office independent of the sheriff's office, assessors began in 1868. From that time they were as follows: A. J. Abernathy, 1868 to 1872; J. Williams, 1872 to 1874; J. W. Crockett, 1874 to 1876; J. F. Nixon, 1876 to 1880; W. A. Bennett, 1880 to 1884; J. F. Nixon, 1884 to 1886, and J. B. Fuls, 1886 to 1888.

The Legislature.—Senator S. Adams and Representatives E. S. Moffatt and W. Clements, November 2 to December 28, 1840—the third; Senator S. Adams and Representatives W. A. Martin and J. Miller, November 7, 1842, to February 4, 1843—the fourth; Senator J. F. Gaines and Representatives J. D. Steele and O. B. Alston, November 4, 1844, to January 10, 1845—the fifth; Senator J. F. Gaines and Representatives O. B. Alston and F. Dunn, November 2 to December 23, 1846—the sixth; Senator S. H. Chism and Representatives F. Dunn and G. C. Sadler, November 4, 1848, to January 10, 1849—the seventh; Senator S. H. Chism and Representatives G. E. Miller and J. J. Walker, November 4, 1850, to January 13, 1851—the eighth; Senator Jesse Miller and Representatives J. T. Turner, November 1, 1852, to January 12, 1853—the ninth; Senator Jesse Miller and Representative G. E. Miller, November 6, 1854, to January 22, 1855—the tenth; Senator J. P. Humphrey and Representative W. W. Mansfield, November 3, 1856, to January 15, 1857—the eleventh; Senator J. P. Humphrey and Representative Dr. Rosa Carroll, November 1, 1858, to February 21, 1859—the twelfth; Senator Jesse Miller and Representative J. P. Humphrey, November 5, 1860, to January 21, 1861—the thirteenth; November 4 to November 18, 1861, and March 5 to March 22, 1862—special sessions; Senator H. F. Carter and Representative A. L. Berry, November 5 to December 1, 1862—the fourteenth; Senator L. C. White and Representative F. M. Nixon, April 11 to June 2, 1864, November 7, 1864, to January 2, 1865, and April 3 to 22, 1865—the fifteenth; Senator H. F. Carter and Representative A. L. Berry, September 22 to October 2, 1864—a Confederate special session at Washington; Senator Jesse Turner and Representative T. D. Berry, November 5, 1866, to March 23, 1867—the sixteenth; Senator Valentine Dell and Representatives J. B. C. Turman, D. H. Divelbiss, A. J. Singleton and A. Gunther for Crawford, Franklin and Sebastian, April 2 to July 23, 1868, and November 17, 1868, to April 10, 1869—the seventeenth; Senator Valentine Dell and Representatives J. M. Pettigrew, C. B. Neal, J. B. Stevens and J. P. Grady, as before, January 2 to March 25, 1871—the eighteenth; Senator J. D. Arbuckle and Representatives J. A. Davis, C. E. Berry, L. C. White and S. L. Strong, as before, January 6 to April 25, 1873—the nineteenth; Senator B. J. Brown and Representative J. F. Wheeler, May 11 to 28, 1874—extraordinary session convened by Gov. Elisha Baxter; Senator Jesse Turner and Representative A. D. Sadler, November 10, 1874, to March 5, 1875, and November 1 to December 10, 1875—the twentieth; Senator H. B. Armistead and Representative T. D. Berry, January 8 to March 8, 1877—the twenty-first; Senator H. B. Armistead and Representative Elias Turner, January 13 to March 13, 1879—the twenty-second; Senator H. F. Thomason and Representative I. L. Fielder, January 8 to March 19, 1881—the twenty-third; the same, January 8 to March 28, 1883—the twenty-fourth; Senator J. M. Pettigrew and Representative W. R. McLain, January 12 to March 28, 1885—the twenty-fifth.

Constitutional Conventions.—W. W. Mansfield, March 4 to 21, and May 6 to June 3, 1861; Robert Hatfield, January 7 to February 18, 1868; W. W. Mansfield, July 14 to October 31, 1874. These are the only cases of such representation for Franklin County.

Population and Statistics.—The tenth census (1880) gives an approximately good view of the material condition of Franklin County at that date. The census of any previous decade would reveal far smaller figures in almost all cases, and the cencus of 1890 will give them all greatly increased. The population was 14,951, of which number 7,757 were natives, 7,003 born in other States, and but 191 claimed to be of foreign birth. The immigration and natural increase would give several thousand more at present. The census gives the following facts, also: Indian corn raised, 547,723 bushels; oats, 52,509 bushels; rye, 229 bushels; wheat, 31,809 bushels; orchard products, $30,650; cotton, 9,268 bales; Irish potatoes, 5,532 bushels; sweet potatoes, 12,793 bushels; tobacco, 2,404 pounds; hay, 215 tons; horses, about 3,080; mules and asses, 1,406; working oxen, 298; milch cows, 4,614; other cattle, 6,516; sheep, 3,530; swine, 27,578; wool, 9,149 pounds; milk, 2,355 gallons; butter, 151,357 pounds; cheese, 1,150 pounds; farms, 1,689; improved land, 59,985 acres; value of farms and fixtures, about $1,557,465; value of implements and machinery, about $73,504; value of live stock, about $327,087; cost of building and repairing fences in 1879, $18,619; cost of fertilizers purchased in 1879, $125; estimated value of all farm productions, sold, consumed or on hand in 1879, $335,866; real estate (assessed value), $761,052; personal property, $594,974; total, $1,356,026; State tax, $11,425; county tax, $13,624; city, town, village and school district tax, $4,894; total, $29,943. The shipments of cotton, peaches, apples, grapes and some other fruits will make great—very great—gains over those indicated by the foregoing; better breeds of stock have been fast replacing the former classes. In all respects the census of 1890 will show remarkable increase. The county now polls 4,163 votes.

Societies.—The only known movements toward anything like a county agricultural society was made during the present year by Judge Wilson, J. J. Eichenberger, et al., but almost nothing was accomplished, excepting that Mr. Eichenberger has on his own responsibility been agent to forward some of the famous specimens to be found in the St. Louis and Little Rock exhibitions.

The Franklin County Medical Society was organized by Drs. W. M. Dunn, J. Dunlap, E. Linthicum, H. H. Turner, W. W. Mahan, S. M. Rutherford, W. A. Linthicum, E. M. Blackburn, W. A. Carter, T. A. Carter, W. P. Johnson and Dr. Chism, on April 17, 1871. They elected president, T. A. Carter (Ozark); vice-president, W. A. Linthicum (Roseville); secretary, E. M. Blackburn (Ozark), and treasurer, W. M. Dunn (Mulberry). This scarcely more than survived its birth. In November, 1880, Drs. T. A. Carter, Amis, Fain, Hairston, Turner, Blackburn, Smith and Smithers reorganized. Among their presidents have been Drs. Turner, J. F. Blackburn, Hairston and Mahan. It has been practically defunct since 1885. Drs. Turner and Blackburn are members of the National Medical Association.

The Grange movement was the first of this kind, and began in 1873, under the organizer, Col. M. F. Locke, of Alma. They flourished less than three years. Ed. Woodruff was a prominent Granger.

The Brothers of Freedom were organized in Franklin County in 1883, chiefly by Joseph Lively, and in 1884 the order had reached the following proportions: Gar Creek Lodge, No. 119, L. W. Riddles, P., and J. S. Featherstone, S; Mount Bethel Lodge, No. 123, W. C. Phillips, P., and W. A. Blancet, S.; White Oak Lodge, No. 133, W. B. Corley, P., and W. B. Collins, S.; New Salem Lodge, W. H. Morris, P., and H. C. Hopkins, S.; Oak Hill Lodge, W. Hill, P., and J. Benson, S.; Lone Pine Lodge, No. 188, J. N. D. Campbell, P., and H. W. Mason, S.; Shiloh Lodge, A. B. Blaker, P., and J. R. Hadley, S., and Charleston Lodge, No. 125. It was an off-shoot of the old Grange idea, no doubt, and was the means of reducing the price of merchandise, it is said, and making many other points of vantage to the rural classes. They introduced the primary into the elections of the county, and in 1884 were strong enough to elect their own ticket entire, excepting the county treasurer. Its adopted organ at Ozark was, for a time, the Echo, but the order was soon merged into the Agricultural Wheel.

The Agricultural Wheel has been an organization of considerable influence in Franklin County, not only in general rural affairs, but in the politics of the county. This order originated February 15, 1882, about eight miles southwest of Des Arc, Ark., in Prairie County. W. A. Suit and W. T. McBee, two farmers of that neighborhood, and seven others, conceived the idea and organized a "Wheel;" about fifteen months later a State "Wheel" was formed near the same place, and the order spread with marvelous rapidity. In January, 1886, the organization in Franklin County was as follows: County Wheel, J. F. Burt, President (Charleston); E. T. Woodruff, V. P.; A. Parkinson, Sec. (White Rock); W. G. Merrit, Lecturer; G. W. Clapp, Treas.; W. B. Battle, C.; J. E. Cox, Chaplain; W. W. Mills and W. A. McLemore, Stewards; C. B. Phillips and L. B. Smith, the remaining officers. The following local lodges were then running: Lucien Point Wheel, No. 54, James Fisher, P., and J. E. Williams, S.; Liberty Wheel, No. 124 (Altus), A. J. Gilbreath, P., and J. M. Adcock, S.; White Oak Wheel, W. W. Mills, P., and W. B. Collins, S.; Ozark Wheel, A. J. Nichols, P., and John Gilmore, S.; Lovely Valley Wheel, No. 125 (Vista), W. H. Barrick, P., and W. Nesbitt, S.; Oak Bend Wheel, No. 152 (Webb City), C. W. McKinney, P., and E. A. Wilson, S.; Point Pleasant Wheel, J. F. Nixon, P., and Donald Swain, S. The fraternity was for a time of such vigor that it supported a paper at Ozark, but this has been discontinued, and the strength of the order has fallen off somewhat. This is chiefly due to the organization of the Union Labor lodges by W. G. Merrit. This is so recent that it has comparatively few lodges to what it promises to have.

COURTS, ETC.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The record of the first Franklin Circuit Court is as follows:

Franklin Circuit Court, June term, 1888.

At a circuit court, begun and held at the court-house, in the town of Ozark and County of Franklin, on Monday the 11th day of June, 1888, present the Hon. Joseph M. Hoge, judge of said court.

The sheriff of Franklin County returned the court the following grand jurors, to wit: William Scott, foreman; James Blackwell, Emanuel Speegle, Oliver Woods, Edward Davis, Thomas F. Kennady, Charles Whitson, Peter Ragsdale, Isaac Snodgrass, Ebenezer J. Bourland, John Huggins, Absolom Wood, Ambrose Hillborne, Johnson Campbell, Kendall Webb, John Hale and William Cureton, good and lawful men of the County of Franklin, who, having been sworn and charged by the court, enter upon their duties.

C. Rife and wife vs. A. McLaughlin.	}	And now at this term came the parties by their attorneys, and the defendant moved to quash the plaintiff's writ on the ground that there is a variance between the writ and declaration, which motion being heard and fully understood by the court, it is considered that the writ be quashed, and that the defendant have and recover of the plaintiff his costs in this behalf expended and that the plaintiff be in mercy, etc.

 vs.
 Miller Whitson. } And now at this term come the plaintiff by attorney and the defendant in his own proper person, and the defendant here in open court confesses judgment to the plaintiff in the sum of $250, with interest and cost of suit, whereupon it is considered by the court that the plaintiff have and recover of the defendant the sum of $250, his principal, and the further sum of $2.76, his interest and damages, and the further sum of his cost laid out and expended in this behalf, and that the defendant be in mercy, etc.

George Russell
 vs.
 John Armstrong,
 Jacob F. Tenni-
 son. } And now at this term [here follows the provision for giving bond to procure a continuance to the next term]. Ordered that this court adjourn until to-morrow morning, 8 o'clock. [Signed] J. M. Hogg.

So ended the first day. Most of the early cases were debt, with some cases of trespass, assault, larceny, etc. The first attachment case was that of Justin Beneaux vs. S. G. Moore. The first larceny case was against Samuel Wackard (discharged). Jesse Miller was the first deputy sheriff. The first appeal received from a justice court was Elijah Blagg vs. J. H. Blackwell. The first case of assault and battery was against John W. Hogan. The first case of affray was against Elijah Blagg (1839). The first case of a bill in chancery was Thomas, James and Phillip Maddin, vs. Sheldon Wooster and Charles Haynie. The first case of murder was against John W. Whitson, mentioned elsewhere. The first fining for contempt was in 1840, of $10 against Britton Savage for failing to recognize a jury summons. The first murder case tried (1840) was against Alford Waller (acquitted). The first case of burglary was also the first case of commitment to the penitentiary. James Miller, in 1841, plead "not guilty" to this charge, and Jesse Turner, then a young lawyer, was his counsel. The jury, S. J. Rowlin, J. A. McLain, T. F. Kennedy, A. Bronen, John Steel, James Fulton, W. B. Crook, Eli Littleton, W. Kelly, George Hawkins, Joseph Cimperlin and J. G. Barelift, found him guilty "in manner and form as charged," and "find that he be imprisoned" for three years. The first appeal to the supreme court was in the case against Alford Henderson and Robinson Waller for larceny. On September 21, 1843, occurred an "Indictment for retailing a pair of shoes to one William Ward, on Sunday;" for this John D. Steele was fined $20. In 1844 and 1845 assault and counterfeiting cases were rather common, but debt cases were most frequent, as mortgages were but little used.

The last record before 1857 is "Friday morning, 8 o'clock, March 12, 1852," in which Judge A. B. Greenwood presided.

The next record in existence is: "March term, A. D. 1857. At a circuit court, * * present Hon. Felix I. Batson, judge of the Fourth Judicial District. * *" In 1859 David Pope was given five years in the penitentiary for manslaughter. The last record before 1865 is: "Ten o'clock Tuesday morning, January the 14th, 1862, present, as on yesterday, Hon. J. J. Green. * * Adjourned until court in course." The next is: "October term, 1865, * * presiding Hon. Thomas Boles. * *" Robbery, larceny and acquitted murder cases were most frequent immediately after the war. In 1869 the case of Caleb Kirk for murder created considerable interest, but was changed to Sebastian County. In 1874 James Simpson was convicted of murder, and sentenced to twenty-one years' imprisonment. In 1877 James Crawford was "ordered hired out" to pay a $20 fine for disturbing a religious assembly. The first case of "betting on election" was against J. P. King in 1877. In 1879 the old W. W. Collins estate case with the county recovered $3,164.19 of the county for the estate. The James Howard murder case was taken to the supreme court in 1879. In 1880 Thomas Edmonds, James Youngblood and Cal. Emory were each convicted of murder. Emory, it was supposed, committed rape and killed his victim by throwing her in the river. He was given one year's imprisonment, but a mob lynched him at Dover. The Edmonds case will be found mentioned further on. Three other murder convictions occurred the same year: W. Casey, J. P. Holland, J. Burchard and J. T. Valentine. In 1882 John Holt and J. W. Smith were sentenced to ten years' and five years' imprisonment, respectively, for manslaughter, but both cases were appealed. The only memorial page on the records of Franklin County is thus explained: "At a meeting of the entire bar of Ozark, held at the office of A. H. Boles on the 7th of October, 1886, at 3 P. M., said meeting being called to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of the late John J. Walker, the following proceedings were had, to wit: Judge W. W. Mansfield was elected chairman, and J. B. Moore appointed secretary. Upon motion the chairman appointed a committee of three to prepare suitable resolutions, Messrs. Boles, Bourland and Bill, and upon motion the chairman was added to the committee. After a recess the committee reported the following resolutions: By the sudden death of Hon. J. J. Walker on the second day of October, 1886, the State has lost an eminent citizen and the bar of this court its oldest and one of its worthiest members. He had resided in the county for more than forty years, engaged in the practice of his profession, and was honored and beloved by the people of all classes. While he was modest and gentle as a child, it can be truthfully said of him, as it was of a distinguished lawyer of his native State, that "he was made of sterner stuff which forms the elements of character of the honest or fearless and the good; duty was to him the sublimest and dearest object of life; all the aspirations of his heart, and the severest study and labor of his life, were to perform his duty with ability and fidelity."* [Here follow appropriate resolutions.]

COURT-HOUSES, TRIALS, ETC.

To sketch some of the leading cases of interest in the county beginning must be made at Roseville, the first county seat within the territory of present Franklin—then a part of Crawford. This was previous to December, 1831, and court was held in the residence (log) of Mr. Rose. No record or information is obtainable of proceedings there of importance. The seat was soon moved to Crawford Old Court House (a Franklin site), which contained three or four log houses at various times used for court purposes, and one of these, according to Judge Turner, of Van Buren, stood on the present Franklin and Sebastian County line, where it touches the Arkansas River. An amusing case of international (!) importance occurred here before two justices, Ira Smoot and Elihu Joy. It was the case of an Indian, in regard to whom the point at issue was his relation to the United States. Jesse Turner took the position that he was "the ward of the nation," and consequently subject, while his rival, Bennett H. Martin, endeavored to convince their Honors Smoot and Joy that the Indian was an ambassador and not subject, and he succeeded. One or two other cases are mentioned in the chapter on Crawford County. "Court-house" was a misnomer when applied to this place, at least so thought Washington Irving, who, in an Arkansas River private expedition, got off of his boat to see the "court-house," and on being informed by Judge Turner that they had no "court-house," expressed some chagrin and returned to his boat.

In 1836 the "court-house" was moved to Whitsontown, about three miles northeast of the present site of Mulberry City, where "Old man Whitson" had a store. John Lasater wanted it at his place, a few miles further off, and the two had a quarrel, which led to his shooting Whitson in self-defense on the steps of the "court-house" (one end of Whitson's log store). The son of Mr. Whitson afterward took revenge by shooting Lasater, and escaped.

A point about three miles west of Whitsontown was the next site for a short time, and it was given the famous Arkansan name, Crittenden, by Judge Turner. This was within Franklin (present) territory, and about 150 yards from the western line. The "court-house" was in a log house on the east bank of Little Mulberry.

At Ozark probably the first execution was after 1853. It was that of Buck White, a magnificent specimen of Indian manhood, who was executed about 1854, near the river, below the canning factory site. He had followed the Indian code of avenging a friend, and his fortitude in the face of death is said to have made a great impression. Hugh F. Thomason was prosecuting attorney. (A venue case from Crawford).

A hotly contested civil case was that of Estes vs. Clinton, a case of replevin for seven negroes held by W. A. J. Clinton, on a bill of sale from J. G. Estes, who had bought the slaves from his father, Andrew Estes, in 1849 in Missouri. It was shown in the Crawford and Franklin courts (the latter after change of venue) that Andrew Estes was of unsound mind, resulting from epileptic fits, making him unfit for making a valid contract. The Franklin trial was in 1856. The supreme court afterward confirmed these verdicts.

In 1859 David Pope was tried for the murder of a Mr. Gregg, which occurred in a horse-race difficulty. Judge Gregg, a relative of the murdered man, prosecuted, with the assistance of William Walker and Judge Mansfield, and Pope was sentenced to five years for murder of the second degree.

About 1869 Wilbur Southard, a boy, killed a man near Charleston. Judge Steele prosecuted, and Attorneys Walker and Mansfield succeeded in securing his acquittal.

About 1879 a woman, Libbie Simmons, was tried for murdering her illegitimate child, which had been found dead with a bunch of leaves in its mouth. Attorney McCannon prosecuted, and Messrs. Wittich and Fielder defended her and secured her acquittal.

About 1880 a man named Howard was convicted of the murder of his wife near Altus. He had seized her by the hair in a fit of jealousy, at a dance, and dragged her home, where he so beat her that she died a few days later. He was suspected of being the cause of his own child's death, also. Attorney McCannon prosecuted. Howard was executed at Ozark.

About 1878 one of the most interesting cases ever tried in the State was held at Ozark, on a change of venue from Johnson County. A Kentuckian, a self-possessed, intelligent man, named Edmonds, was of a fine family, and had a wife and children. An orphan girl, Julia Alsbrook, was at work in the family, and between her and Edmonds sprang up such an infatuation that they ran away and located in Johnson County, Ark., on a farm. A few years later he recognized in one of his neighbors an old acquaintance, and he determined to go back to his family in Kentucky. He hired a man to haul him and his supposed wife and child down to Old Spadra, having it understood by those he met that he was going to Kentucky. The river was high, but no boat was due for many days. He staid over night near Pratt's Landing, and disappeared. A lamp, bottle, cup and two bonnets—woman's and child's—were found on the bank. Some months later, when the river was low, the skeleton of a child and woman was found near the same place, and steps were taken to secure Edmonds. He was arrested in his field at work at his old home in Kentucky. The circumstances are so intricate and so curiously convicting that the opinion of Judge English, of the supreme court, to which court it was appealed, is very interesting even to the non-professional reader. Edmonds was convicted and the verdict was not reversed at Little Rock. On the gallows at Ozark he remarked, it is said, that he never killed his wife!

The case of Thomas West, for the murder of a man in the "bottoms" about 1873, resulted in his acquittal over ten years afterward. He was defended by Col. Cravens and Judge and George Mansfield.

A later case of interest is that of Warren Sturgeon, for manslaughter. An old man named Harger, living near Altus, had a daughter between whom and young Sturgeon he suspected foul relations. One day while the young people were out horseback riding together he followed them, and the young man claimed that he shot Mr. Harger twice in self-defense. He was defended by Messrs. Mathes and Berry. He was sentenced to the penitentiary for manslaughter.

THE BAR.

The resident bar of Franklin must properly extend back to the Roseville bar, of which no information is obtainable. At Crawford Old Court House were Jesse Turner, R. C. S. Brown and Bennett H. Martin, and at Whitesontown and Crittenden Jesse Turner was the sole member. These gentlemen are mentioned at length elsewhere in this volume.

The first lawyer at Ozark was a Mr. Hemphill, who came from Kentucky. He was a brilliant and talented young man, but of delicate health, so that he was soon cut off by a severe case of fever. He was a most interesting character, and highly esteemed. The plain native rock over his grave is nearly disintegrated and gone.

A Mr. Howard came to Ozark about 1838 and began practice. He was an eccentric, but manly, character, and highly esteemed as a man. He was a fair general lawyer, and spent some years in practice during "the forties" and went to Texas.

J. J. Walker is a figure in the legal and social history of Franklin County, about which all the rest might easily cluster. He came in 1838. Although a brother of that famous Arkansan, Judge David Walker, he had no public aspirations like his brother, never, it is said, having been a candidate for any public office except one term as representative. He was a bachelor, and although generally wearing an expression of sternness, due to his sensitive modesty, was charitable to excess. To illustrate, while out on one of his customary, solitary horseback rides, he stopped near the little home of an old Irish lady, whose poverty corresponded with the circumstance that a single almost fleshless specimen of roosterhood was tied by a long string to a stick in lieu of a coop. He assured Mrs. McGregor sternly that it was blooded stock despite her protestations to the contrary, and threw her a dollar, directing her to deliver it at his office, then riding away leaving the poor lady ignorant of the charity of the deed.

It was his personal character, rather than his professional, that gave him his prominence and warm place in the hearts of Ozark and Franklin Counties, among the old and young alike. In his forty years of professional life at Ozark he was for a time a partner of Judge Mansfield. He was wholly a civil lawyer, and the best in his line. His sad accidental death, as it was shown, at the hands of a child, one of the many in Ozark on whom he delighted to lavish all the love of his lonely life, was a remarkable ending of a remarkably interesting life. On Saturday morning, followed by his faithful horse, he took his accustomed solitary walk over to the mineral spring that bears his name; at the same time two boys, who were out hunting, fired, for sport, at a tree, not knowing that Mr. Walker was near. It was during services on the following day that the community was shocked to hear of, as they supposed, the assassination of Mr. Walker. He was found with a single buckshot in his heart, and his faithful horse was standing near him. No man has ever been more mourned in Ozark, by man, woman and child, than this one, whose life seemed to be clouded by a secret sadness, in contrast to which his beaming kindness and humor gave his closing years the beautiful coloring of a sunset.

Squire Boone was a Kentuckian, and a strong minded man of considerable originality. He was not a learned man, but was logical, close in argument, and well informed in common law. He was of more than ordinary ability, and had a fine practice. He became a colonel in the Confederate army, in which he lost a leg, and died not long after the conflict closed.

William W. Mansfield ranks not only as the ablest lawyer in the history of Franklin County, but is prominent in the legal fraternity of the State. He came from Kentucky in 1853, and has ever since been the ablest member of the Ozark bar. He has a mind clear, analytical, exact and quick to discover truth. His desire for accuracy and his care would have made him a success on the supreme bench of the State, even more than as a circuit judge. His scrupulous integrity and purity of motives have always placed him above anything in the least questionable. He is a good advocate, clear, strong and able in argument, fluent but not oratorical. His high sense of justice prevented his ever giving an opinion on a case he had not thoroughly studied. His minute accuracy makes his supreme court reports and "Mansfield's Digest" models in that line, for that reason, along with the fact of his thorough information in legal literature.

John H. Mansfield (a brother of the above) came from Kentucky in 1859, and died about a year later. He was an educated man of ability and taste, and was a great social favorite. He was a good speaker for so young a man, and had qualities that promised success.

About 1872 L. L. Wittich became a member of the Ozark bar. He was bright, sharp and shrewd, and especially successful in defending criminals. He was fairly educated, a fluent speaker, and especially successful from a financial point of view. He remained but a few years.

I. L. Fielder came about 1877, and became a partner of Mr. Wittich. He also was especially successful in criminal practice, and was a bright, educated man of pleasing address and a good deal of ability. He represented the county in the Legislature. He remained in Ozark until about 1883.

J. P. Clarke, of Helena, member-elect of the State Senate, was a partner of Mr. Fielder for a time. He remained but a short time, but made an impression on the bar as a man of solid attainments and a lawyer of worth.

Elias D. Turner was admitted to the bar about 1872. He was somewhat limited in acquirements, both generally and professionally, but his abundant rugged sense made him highly popular and respected.

Judge (Dr.) H. R. Withers was a contemporary of Mr. Turner. He was here but a short time, and was appointed judge at Clarksville by Gov. Baxter. He was a brilliant man, and has since become a most eloquent minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Maj. C. J. Reagan entered the Ozark bar about 1876. He is a very fluent speaker, and a man of considerable acquirements. He is mayor at present.

J. V. Bourland is a young lawyer of a naturally good and independent mind. He is a good pleader, and a writer and editor of ability. As a speaker he is strong, forcible and informed.

T. D. Berry, although a lawyer of few acquirements, is a speaker who is very strong before a jury or justice, and on account of his knowledge of men and his pathos as a speaker is very successful. He also does a good collecting business.

J. B. Moore is an old student of J. J. Walker, and is probably not surpassed in the county as a probate and chancery lawyer, a department of which he makes a specialty. He is also very successful as a collector.

E. H. Mathes is a lawyer who has a most excellent class of business, and is what may be termed an excellent general lawyer. As a speaker he is fluent, pleasing and forcible; as a pleader, exact and careful; as a business lawyer, prompt and characterized by dispatch, and of a genial and pleasing address. He has served as special circuit judge.

C. T. Bill makes a specialty of abstracts and titles, and is a chancery lawyer of ability. He is a good speaker, and one whose earnest manliness wins the confidence and respect of all.

George A. Mansfield is an able young lawyer and a speaker of fair ability. He was admitted in 1885.

DISTRICT CIRCUIT COURT.

The first record of the district circuit court at Charleston is:

JUNE TERM, 1885, JUNE 15.

STATE OF ARKANSAS, }
COUNTY OF FRANKLIN, }
CHARLESTON DISTRICT. }

At a circuit court begun and held at a court-house—the house obtained by the sheriff of Franklin County as provided by law—in the town of Charleston, in and for the Charleston District of the Franklin Circuit Court, on the third Monday in June, the same being the 15th day of June, A. D. 1885, and the time prescribed by law for holding the June term of said court, when present and presiding the Hon. G. S. Cunningham, judge of said court, and also present J. S. Wallace, prosecuting attorney of the Fifth Judicial Circuit of Arkansas, also present A. J. Nichols, clerk of said court, and J. T. Tolleson, sheriff of Franklin County, the following proceedings were had, to wit: [Here follows the appointment of grand jurors, of whom J. P. Falconer was foreman.]

Ordered that court adjourn until to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

[Signed]

G. S. CUNNINGHAM, Judge.

The first case was one of assault with intent to kill, against O. Q. Massey, who plead guilty to simple assault and was fined $20. The only prominent cases tried in this court have been grand larceny cases. R. H. Hunter was given ten years in the penitentiary; Cab Reed, five years; Ed. Ransom, three years, and S. Wiggerton, one year.

MILITARY RECORD.

Militia.—As was the case in the early history of all of the older States, the laws of Arkansas formerly required the militia to be organized into companies, regiments, brigades, etc., for the mutual protection of the people. Officers of the militia, from generals down to lieutenants, were commissioned. In this way many men gained prominent military titles which they carried with them through life, even though they were never engaged in a single action in actual war, and many of them knew little or nothing about military tactics. It is a noticeable fact that people like to honor men with titles, and it is alike noticeable that some men are fond of being thus honored whether they merit the title or not. It is a fact, also, that in the silly custom of applying military titles to men, whether they ever held one or not, nothing below that of "Captain" is ever used—"Colonel" being the one mostly in use. The general musters of the militia were held in early times ostensibly for the purpose of teaching the settlers the tactics of military drill, but for this purpose they were an entire failure. As a rule the officers, with only a few exceptions, knew very little about military tactics, consequently they could not make it interesting for the men, and the men having no relish for the exercise, the result was that the musters on "general training day" were usually turned into fun and frolic, and a considerable quantity of twenty-five-cent per gallon whisky would be consumed, and occasionally there would be a few rounds of "fisticuffs." Wrestling, racing, shooting at a mark, and other amusements usually accompanied, and thus training day was a day of sport.

Mexican War.—At the beginning of the war between the United States and Mexico public meetings were held at Ozark and on Horsehead Creek, and at other places in Franklin County, and were addressed by David Walker, Archibald Yell and others, urging the necessity of enlisting soldiers for the army. Accordingly, the first body of soldiers organized in Franklin County for actual service in war was the company of Capt. William Preston, which was enlisted and organized in the spring of 1846 for the Mexican War. The lieutenants of this company were Thomas Tomberlin, Wyley Tomberlin and Redmund Sageley, ranking in the order here named. The company became a part of Col. Archibald Yell's regiment. It left Ozark in June, 1846, and moved first to Washington, Ark., and from there with its regiment to the field of war in Mexico, where it participated in the several battles in which the regiment was engaged, and returned home about the first of July, 1847. On the fourth day of that month the citizens of Ozark and vicinity prepared a barbecue dinner on the bank of the river below where the canning factory now stands, and there gave to the returned soldiers a public reception. About 400 persons were present. Speeches were made, toasts were given and responded to, the dinner was consumed with a relish, and a time of general rejoicing was had. Judge G. W. Sutherland, still living in the county at this writing, helped to roast the meats on this occasion. The festivities were considerably enlivened by the liberal use of "free whisky." None of the officers of this company was killed in that war, but a few privates were, among whom was A. Tomberlin.

THE CIVIL WAR.

Upon the approach of the Civil War, in 1861, the usual excitement then common to all parts of the country prevailed in Franklin County, and while a large majority of the people were in sympathy with the Southern cause, they were reluctant to sever their allegiance to the Federal Union. Still hoping that the difficulties then existing between the northern and southern sections of the country might be settled without actual war, they elected Judge W. W. Mansfield to represent the county in the Constitutional Convention called to convene at Little Rock on the 4th of March, 1861, with instructions to oppose the proposition to pass an ordinance of secession. But after Virginia and the older Southern States had seceded from the Union, and the dogs of war had been let loose at Charleston, S. C., and President Lincoln had issued his call for 75,000 troops to coerce the seceded States into obedience to the Federal Government, and it became apparently necessary to choose between union and disunion, the people of Franklin County, with but few exceptions, chose the latter, and instructed their representative to vote accordingly when the Constitutional Convention again convened, in May of that year. Meanwhile public meetings were held at Ozark and other points in the county, and were addressed by Col. DeRosey Carroll, Gen. Burrows and others in favor of secession, and on the importance of raising troops to assist in securing the independence of the so-called "Southern Confederacy."

In response to these appeals muster rolls were prepared, and men began to enlist with alacrity. In May, 1861, the first company raised in Franklin County was organized at Ozark, and officered as follows: J. J. Walker, captain; Nathaniel Whitson, Clark B. Carter and Albert Berry, lieutenants, ranking in the order here named. Riley G. Howell was a subsequent lieutenant of the company. This company belonged to the State Troops, and became a part of Col. DeRosey Carroll's First Regiment of Arkansas State Troops. It went first to Fort Smith, thence to Camp Walker, thence to Neosho, Mo., where it participated in the attack on that place, thence to Oak Hill or Wilson's Creek, and participated in the battle there, then returned to Arkansas and was mustered out at Fayetteville in Washington County. Another company of State Troops—that of Captain John T. Humphreys—was recruited mostly on Mulberry Creek, in the northwestern part of Franklin County, but was organized at Van Buren, in Crawford County. It became a part of Col. David Walker's regiment, and served in that organization until it was mustered out, soon after the battle of Oak Hill was fought. Some of the men composing these companies of State Troops, after being mustered out of the State service, enlisted in various companies that were organized for the Confederate army, some never re-enlisted, and a few joined the Federal army.

Confederate Troops.—In the spring or early summer of 1861 a company was organized at Charleston, in Franklin County. Its officers were Captain W. J. Parkes, and Lieutenants H. O. Spencer and Charles G. Newman—the name of the third lieutenant not being obtained by the writer. This company joined and served with the regiment commanded by Col. George and subsequently by Col. King. [For a sketch of the service of this regiment see same in the history of Sebastian County.]

In June, 1861, a company was raised at Ozark, and David A. Stewart became captain thereof, and Squire Boone and Wiley B. Corley were lieutenants. This company joined Col. McRea's battalion, subsequently the "Northwest Fifteenth Arkansas Infantry," commanded by Col. Boone. The company went first to Camp Walker, and from thence to Oak Hill, Mo., and participated with its battalion in the battle there, and after the battle of Elkhorn, in Benton County, it went with its command to Corinth, Miss. In February, 1862, two companies were raised at Ozark, the one being officered by Capt. A. B. Krider and Lieutenants M. F. Fleming, David Hodge and William Duncan, and the other by Capt. R. C. Tweedy and Lieutenants A. J. Ransom, George Montgomery and Matthew Pendergrass. Both of these companies went first to Pope County, and thence to Little Rock, where they were organized into Williamson's battalion, and from thence they moved by boat to Memphis, Tenn., and from there by rail to Corinth, Miss., where they arrived a short time after the date of the battle of Pittsburg Landing (Shiloh). Here they were consolidated with McRea's battalion, and the whole became the "Northwest Fifteenth Arkansas Infantry," under the following field officers: Col. Hobbs, Lieut.-Col. Squire Boone, Majs. W. W. Reynolds and David Stewart, and Adjutant Douglass. From this point the regiment went to Tupelo, Miss., thence to Iuka, and back again to Corinth, and participated in the battle of Corinth, where the Confederate army was repulsed. It then went by way of Holly Springs, Grenada, Jackson and other points to Vicksburg, then to Grand Gulf and back again to Vicksburg, where it was reorganized and consolidated with the Sixteenth Arkansas Infantry and remnants of other regiments, the whole command retaining the latter number, and being officered by Col. J. E. Cravens and Lieut.-Col. Reynolds. The regiment subsequently went into winter quarters at Washington, Ark., and remained there until January 1864, and then moved to the eastern portion of the State, and participated in the several engagements against the army of Gen. Steele, and the following year it went into quarters near Marshall, Tex., where it remained until the war closed, and then returned home and disbanded.

In 1862 the company raised by Charles A. Carroll for the regiment of which he was the first colonel, subsequently Col. Anderson Gordon's regiment of cavalry, was partially recruited in Franklin County, on the south side of the river, as was also the greater part of Capt. Newton Tittsworth's company in the same regiment. On the 7th of November, 1862, this regiment participated in the fight between the Federal Gen. Blount and Gen. Marmaduke, on Cove Creek, Washington Co., Ark., and again on the 15th of the same month in a fight at a point between Cove Creek and Brownsboro. It was also in the battle of Prairie Grove, and afterward in several skirmishes in the Indian Territory and in Arkansas, and on the 17th of October, 1863, it was engaged in the attack on the Federal forces at Pine Bluff, where the Confederates were repulsed. The following winter the regiment remained in Hempstead County, near Columbus, Ark. In the spring of 1864 the regiment was engaged in the fights at Mark's Mill, Prairie d' Ann and Poison Springs against the forces of Gen. Steele. In the fall of that year it accompanied Price's raid into Missouri, and was in several engagements in that campaign, and then returned to Arkansas, in which State and in Texas it served until the close of the war.

Among other companies that were partially raised in Franklin County were those of Capt. Knott and Capt. David Arbuckle, also an artillery company, the latter being organized at Fort Smith. Another force, known as Capt. Stone's company, consisting of about 300 men, was raised mostly on the south side of the river. It was afterward divided, and one part of it was commanded by Capt. Jesse Davis. This command, though ostensibly a Confederate force, had the reputation of carrying on a guerrilla warfare and of continuing it for a considerable time after the war closed. Its leader, Capt. Stone, finally finished his outrageous career in another county at the end of the "hangman's halter."

A short time before the battle of Prairie Grove, in Washington County was fought, Col. Albert Berry, under command of Gen. Burrow, raised a regiment of militia at Ozark, and marched it to Frog Bayou, where it remained two months, and then moved it to the crossing of the Huntsville and wire road, about five miles north of Ozark, and held it there one month and then disbanded it. Mr. E. Bourland, now of Ozark, was the quartermaster of this regiment, and during its short existence he purchased provisions for it to the amount of $11,000. He was authorized to make the purchases, but was not provided with funds to make the payments. After the regiment was disbanded he was provided with State warrants, with which he finally paid for all the provisions he purchased for the regiment.

During the late war Ozark was not made a continued military post by either of the opposing armies. About daylight on the morning of the 2d of February, 1862, a detachment of Col. J. M. Johnson's regiment of Arkansas Federal troops made a dashing raid into Ozark, and in a few minutes captured and confiscated all the horses in the town, and immediately left with their captured property. Some time after this Col. Greer's regiment of Texas Confederate troops occupied the town a short time, and later Captain Barry, with his company of Col. Dorsey's regiment of Confederates, occupied the town a short time. After the advance of the Union army to the Arkansas River, in the fall of 1863, Ozark was occupied for a short time by a body of Federal troops and then abandoned. Afterward, Federal and Confederate scouting parties frequently passed through the town, and each burned buildings to prevent the other from occupying them. This practice was carried on to such an extent that at the close of the war there was not a single business house left in the town, and among the dwellings only about five were left. When the place was held by a detachment of Federal troops, they cut port-holes through the brick walls of the old court-house, and occupied it as a fortification. After this it was burned along with other buildings.

Excesses.—Franklin County was overrun during the war by various scouting parties from both armies, and also by guerrilla and bushwhacking bands not belonging to either army, and many atrocities were committed. On the evening of January 13, 1863, Col. Speight, with his brigade of Texas troops, passed through the village of Charleston, on his way southward, and Capt. Hart, with a company of Federal Troops, pounced upon and captured some of his (Speight's) rear guard, and cut down his wagon train. Hart and his command then encamped over night at a log cabin about three-fourths of a mile west of Charleston, on the Parkes place. The next morning he moved his command into Charleston, surrounded the residence of Edmund M. Richardson, and sent three men into the house to arrest and bring Richardson out. On being brought out he was shot and killed in his own door-yard by one of Hart's men—said to have been his lieutenant, Hays. The company then separated, and one party went to the house of J. P. Purl, but the latter rode off as the party approached, and escaped. The other party went to the residence of Col. DeRosey Carroll, a few miles north of Charleston, and called him out and shot him dead in his own yard. It is claimed that Lieut. Hays fired the fatal shot. Hart's company then consolidated, and the same day moved over to the Back Bone ridge, in Sebastian County, and there found Mr. Jerry Kannady, of Fort Smith, who, with his family and others, had fled to that place for refuge from the Federal troops. Mr. Kannady was threatened severely, and it is believed that he, too, would have been killed, had not his wife, the noble woman, clung so closely to him. Hart's party then passed on to Smedley's Mill, in Scott County, where they went into camp for the night. The next morning before daylight they were captured by Col. A. V. Reiff's command. They were then taken to Fort Smith and turned over to the Confederate authorities, and Hart and Hays were there executed for their crimes. [See History of Sebastian County.]

In 1864 Jacob Bean, a citizen of Charleston, and a leading bushwhacker, was killed by a party of Federal scouts. About the same time a party of Federal bushwhackers met a party of Confederate bushwhackers and had a skirmish near Nixon's graveyard, east of Charleston, and Carroll Morrow and Albert Carden, of the first party, were killed. About this time Col. Battles, of the Confederate army, made an attack on the Federal troops then occupying Roseville (now in Logan County), and was repulsed. In this engagement a number of soldiers on both sides were wounded, but there was no surgeon at Roseville to dress their wounds. Consequently the Federal commander at Fort Smith dispatched Dr. Fairchilds under an escort of from twenty to thirty men to go at once to Roseville and attend to the wounded. When this escort had reached a point about midway between Ozark and Charleston they were attacked by Capt. Stone and his guerrillas and some scattering troops that had joined him, and were nearly all killed, and Dr. Fairchild was murdered after he had surrendered. This took place the day after Morrow and Carden were killed. The conduct of Stone and his men in this affair was condemned by all good people. About this time, or soon thereafter, a company of Federal scouts ran upon Capt. Knott's Confederate bushwhackers near Charleston, and Thomas James, Mit. Hays and James Perkins, of the latter, were killed.

The same year, 1864, John Mitchell, who lived a few miles north of Charleston, was killed by some Federal scouts, at a point about two miles from his house, while on the way with his family toward the south; and about the same time the same scouts killed R. Tittsworth and Andrew Williams in the eastern part of the county. A Mr. Pearson, living about six miles southeast of Charleston, was taken a short distance from his house and shot and killed by some Federal bushwhackers. Lieut.-Col. William Faith, a Confederate officer, was killed about five miles northeast of Ozark, by some Federal (Kansas) troops who were hunting for him. It is claimed by good authority that 150 men were killed in Franklin County during the Civil War by bushwhackers, guerrillas and scouting parties from both armies. Some men commissioned to command independent companies carried on a guerrilla warfare—that is, made it their business to murder, plunder and steal. This was true as to both armies. Other companies or roving bands were organized, without authority from either side, expressly for the purpose of robbing, stealing and otherwise obtaining property not belonging to them. These men, in their fiendish desperation, did not hesitate to murder men, and to torture others with fire or otherwise to make them tell where they had hidden their money. A detailed history of the atrocities of this kind would occupy more space than the scope of this work will permit, besides it would unnecessarily renew sad recollections.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

ROSEVILLE.

This was the most important town in Franklin County territory in early days—in Crawford days—but it is now without the limits of that county. It was laid out about 1843-44 by Messrs. Weaver and Quinn. The earlier name, "McLean's Bottoms," was replaced by "Roseville" when a Mr. Rose bought the land, and the "court-house" was in his residence (a log house).

PLEASANT HILL.

Pleasant Hill settlement on Mulberry—which later on became a village—was the oldest approach to a town, not only within the present territory of Franklin, but in the region between the Arkansas and White Rivers; it was the only one which continued during the Cherokee occupation. Jesse Bean and family, Judge Sanders and a few others were among the number. Alfred Henderson probably had the first store there, and the—to later generations—little village was a prominent point in all the north-western part of the State. Old Crawford Court-house, Whitson-town and Crittenden are mentioned elsewhere.

OZARK.

This is the first real town of Franklin County. It is said that David Walker, Archibald Yell and others were out hunting, and Judge Walker remarked to the company, as they reached the heights west of the ferry, and saw the fields and forests below them to the east, that there would be a good site for a town.

This was about the time Franklin was organized, and Messrs. Yell and Walker proceeded to buy of William Hail (or Hale or Haile, as it is often spelled,) a part of the land now about the court-yard which Hail had entered in 1836. William Cureton, who had settled on most of the present site of Ozark as early as 1832 or before, entered the site of West Ozark in 1836. Hail and Cureton had secured a landing place for boats soon after, and the former had erected a warehouse costing $170, and had sold it to Samuel Evans in which to run a store; this was near the canning factory site. A hewn log house owned by a Mr. Kennedy, and another near by, soon used as a grocery, and two log residences near the marble shops site were all there in 1837. The court-yard site was a peach orchard. Messrs. Walker, Yell and Hail concluded to lay out the town, and here a well vouched-for legend might be inserted. The town was boomed in the New Orleans papers by all concerned before it was laid out. The gilded tales concerning it had caught the fancy of Samuel Evans in that way (a fact). Cureton, Alston, Booth and the rest advertised a protracted barbecue, at which the town was to be laid out and lots sold. The barbecue was a success, but "in those good old days when nobody got drunk" (?) they had such a glorious time drinking that old Surveyor Booth, fearing after a day or so that there was no prospect of enough clear heads to help survey, soon threw a stick into the ground, exclaiming: "There, by —! I'm going to lay out the court-yard around that, and the town around the court-yard!" and the lots were sold. In March, 1838, the county court business began in Ozark in a log, doorless, windowless school-house on the site just north of J. J. Eichenberger's store; one of the hewn log houses first mentioned was afterward used also. Samuel Evans built a house (60x70 feet) on the lot just south of the Bourland Hotel, and made of it a store, hotel, post-office, etc., he being the first postmaster (1837 to 1844). Mr. Pendleton was deputy. It was the stage stand for a daily stage to Fort Gibson. David Walker built an office and a warehouse on the river bank, and Attorney Yell built a "fine" office on the site of the railroad track. Dr. Humphreys erected the first brick building on the site of Maxey's hardware store. J. F. Quaile had a log residence on the Bourland Hotel site. A Mr.

Jester kept "a very fine saloon," says "Major" Evans. Thirty-two regular steamboats were plying up and down the river at that time.* Kennedy & Hunsicker owned the first mill at the mouth of Gar Creek; Pendleton & Crain and R. D. and O. B. Alston had general stores; John Speegle was a blacksmith, and W. W. Collins a carpenter.

Here follows a period of financial ruin caused by the State banks failing. State paper so depreciated that Mr. Quaile had to pay $100 for a common suit of clothes at Van Buren. Ozark business men almost suspended. In 1841 Mr. Quaile started almost the only business on the site of the cotton-gin. The Steele Bros. erected a store near the railway tank site. Joseph Milan opened one also. The Newman House was a hotel. Business hung around the wharf. Mr. Quaile built a frame building on the post-office site (this was burned during the war; the brick was erected in 1870). There was a steady growth, so that from 1855 to 1860 might be called "the high-water mark" of Ozark business before the war, as 1870 to 1875 is since that conflict. Dr. W. A. Carter and Dr. J. A. Throckmorton, J. J. Walker and others came. During the early "fifties" a brick court-house, similar to the present one, but about four feet smaller each way, was built (two sides of the present house is built on old foundations).* A frame house on the northwest corner of the square was used while this was building. A. L. Berry, S. D. Whitley, R. C. Tweedy and George Nelson opened business during this decade. Whitley & Co. was a wholesale and retail house. Webb & Carter also began.

Dark Days of the War.—The war then came and went, and left scarcely more than three houses standing—all burned. Mr. Quaile's home, used as official headquarters, and Bourland's (commissary) store were the chief ones left. The court-house was used as a Federal magazine, and port-holes were dug in its walls; after they decamped the Confederates captured their supplies and burned the building. William Crawford, James Berry, and, for a time, Mr. Quaile, were almost the only adult male residents left to care for women and children. The women used Warner's water-mill on Gar Creek to grind corn, and when that was destroyed used a hand-mill of Mr.

Crawford's. Mr. Quaile's boy—to illustrate at once the serious and the humorous of the situation—undertook to kill one of the half-starved pigs for food, but the ribbed side of it was so poor that he cut one side off and used it as a saddle for his big dog ! Gen. Brown had charge of the post for a time, but it was practically deserted toward the close of the war.

Growth Since the War.—After peace was declared the place recuperated rapidly. E. Bourland opened a stock; Dr. W. A. Carter started a store; also P. F. Webb, Montague and Scott; Mr. Quaile began about a year later, and built a cotton-gin; Littleton became a blacksmith; Collins renewed carpentering; the business formed about the square; P. Sanders & Co. began business; and a Mr. Hatfield opened a meat market; Boyles & Alden came in before 1870; also J. C. Crudup, Berry & Elsey, Polk & Nichols in general merchandise; Young & Hutchinson was another firm. After 1870 Lotspeach & Co., Quaile & Moore, H. & J. J. Eichenberger, W. W. Jennings and others, until the present business is reached. The population now (1888) is about 1,200.

Business Interests.—The Arkansas Valley Bank is one of the leading enterprises of Ozark, and the only bank in Franklin County. It was established in July, 1887, as a private institution, by J. F. Quaile, J. B. Carter, H. C. Carter and C. S. McKinney, as owners and directors. Its officers have been J. F. Quaile, president; J. B. Carter, cashier, and A. D. Reynolds, teller. It has neat appurtenances, and its vaults are guarded by the Yale time-lock. Its business has already increased far beyond the expectations of its founders, and its original capital stock of $20,000 has been increased to $23,000. Their present surplus is $3,992.40, and the undivided profits, $544.19. The Chase National Bank, New York; Laclede Bank, St. Louis; Union and Planters' Bank, of Memphis; First National Bank, of Little Rock; the Merchants Bank, of Fort Smith, and the Crawford County Bank, of Van Buren, are their correspondents.

The Ozark Canning Company is a growing institution in Ozark business, which has packed during its first season about a quarter of a million cans of assorted goods, and has capacity for more. It was incorporated in February, 1888, with an authorized capital stock of $25,000, with $8,000 paid in. W. W. Jennings was made president; B. W. Webb, vice-president; W. C. Conatser, secretary, and J. B. Carter, treasurer. The board of directors are L. R. A. Wallace, M. F. Greer, M. B. Conatser, John Nichols, J. B. Carter, B. W. Webb and W. W. Jennings. Their commodious and convenient factory stands south of the Bourland Hotel.

The Farmers' Mercantile Association is a corporation for general merchandising, with a capital of $10,000 paid in. The officers and stockholders are as follows: D. L. Bourland, president; J. T. Tolleson, treasurer; Walter Clinton, secretary, and C. Jennings. When it was incorporated, in December, 1886, Messrs. J. N. Stanley and A. J. Nichols were also included. Its trade-mark is the symbol of the Agricultural Wheel.

The Greer Planing and Carding Mill, owned by M. F. Greer, is a leading business. The general merchants leading in that line are Webb Bros., W. W. Jennings, M. B. Conatser, J. J. Eichenberger, G. W. Melton, W. S. Garner, W. Hamm & Co., M. M. Montague; the leading grocers are R. E. Eichenberger, W. J. Glenn, B. L. Jones, J. Smith, Berry Bros., Self & Cancey, Charles Haberer, M. Braden; the drug trade has W. A. Carter, J. F. Blackburn & Co., F. M. Bourland and Dr. L. D. Hill; J. F. Maxey, W. T. Berry, and M. F. Greer deal in hardware; furniture is handled by M. F. Greer; jewelers' goods and stationery by M. Montague; millinery by Mrs. M. J. Henley and J. J. Eichenberger; saddles and harness by J. T. Arrington; boots and shoes by B. A. Hancock; confections, bakery goods, etc., by M. Braden, Mrs. Crawford and Charles Haberer. L. D. McWhirter owns the marble works; Pullen & Littleton and James Warner care for the wagon and blacksmith business; John Armstrong has the only livery; M. F. Greer owns two grist-mills, a cotton-gin, and a lumber yard; F. Hildebrandt is a tailor; D. C. Williams keeps a meat market; M. F. Greer and J. W. Stephens are contractors; real estate is handled by the Land and Coal Co., and insurance and abstracts by C. T. Bill. The legal fraternity are given in the chapter on courts. Drs. W. A. Carter, H. H. Turner, J. F. Blackburn, L. D. Hill, F. M. Bourland and Dr. Price represent the medical profession. The railway and express agent is H. E. Dowell, and the telegraph operator is J. Darrer; Bourland's Hotel, by D. L. Bourland, and the Hall House, by H. E. Hall, are travelers' homes; H. C. Carter is a prominent cotton buyer; A. W. Poole, a nursery-man and shipper; H. E. Richardson and Fred Carey have transfer businesses; the ferry is managed by M. F. Fleeman; Mr. Pierce and Mr. Daniels are barbers, and J. F. Mahaffey is a painter and paper hanger.

The first telegraph wire into Ozark was the old Confederate Government wire in 1862. In the building of the Little Rock Railroad the work in the bluffs west of Ozark was attended with considerable loss of life. The first train to enter Ozark was a freight that came in from the east about 8 o'clock one evening in January, 1876. Great crowds from the surrounding county were there to greet it.

Newspapers.—The newspapers of Ozark have been more pungent and prolific than permanent, and few have ever been preserved. Squire Boone established the first one about 1858; it was Democratic in policy, and bore the name The Southwestern. It suspended about a year later. The next paper, the Ozark Tablet, was started by W. P. Griffin about 1869, and ran until about 1871. N. W. Patterson and H. R. Withers were editors successively. A little later G. L. Brown issued the Ozark Banner, and at his death, in 1874, his wife continued it. Mr. W. Cummings, her second husband, was connected with it until it suspended, about 1876. The Ozark Democrat issued its seventh number on October 25, 1877. Webb, Fleeman & Co. were proprietors; C. C. Colburn, publisher; J. V. Bourland, editor. In January, 1878, C. C. Colburn took charge, in partnership with J. V. Bourland, but the latter soon withdrew. In 1881 it changed from a six to a nine column folio, and during the month of June the Daily Democrat was issued about one week. The paper's policy is Democratic, and gives evidence of staying qualities. In January, 1878, C. H. Gregory, who had issued an agricultural paper at Altus, in company with J. V. Bourland as political editor, started the Industrial Advocate; in June following Mr. Gregory sold his interest to J. H. Pollard, and in November, 1879, Mr. Pollard bought it all and continued until some time in 1880, when he sold out to C. C. Colburn, and the Advocate suspended. The People's Echo issued its first number in Ozark September 19, 1882, as a six-column folio. D. R. Snelling, its editor, had bought out the Eureka Springs Echo from Prof. H. A. Nickell, and proposed to make the new paper independent. In March, 1883, J. D. Parks became associate editor, and September 25, Mr. Nickell came to its assistance, and on March 4, 1884, took complete control. It suspended about the close of that year. The Weekly Sun issued its first number March 28, 1884, as a kind of successor of the Charleston Vindicator, removed to Ozark. Dr. M. Stroup was its editor, who continued it until February 4, 1887, when it was bought by C. C. Colburn. It was a well-edited sheet with Democratic principles.

The Agricultural News, by L. C. George, secured the Echo outfit and issued its fourth number on January 28, 1886. It was a vigorous champion of the Agricultural Wheel. D. R. Snelling, J. W. Head and W. G. Merrit became successive editors, and with Volume II, No. 47, the name was changed to the Labor Union Banner in November, 1886. Its aim was to be the organ of both Agricultural Wheel and the Union Labor party. August 30, 1888, it was discontinued.

Incorporation.—The first incorporation was by the county court January 3, 1850. J. T. Mileham was alderman (mayor), and the council were J. K. Whited, J. D. W. Speegle, D. W. Fillingin, J. F. Quaile and J. M. Leggett. The Legislature incorporated it by an act approved January 10, 1855, and gave it similar officers. The circuit court seems to have found it necessary to re-incorporate it September 16, 1869, and among the mayors since that time are P. Saunders, F. M. Elsey, J. W. Glenn, W. B. Moore, P. W. R. Harris, J. V. Bourland, T. D. Berry, George Mansfield and C. J. Reagan, the present mayor. The first records to be found are dated July 7, 1870. In August, 1870, the city was indebted $375, and the taxable property valuation was $250,000. Stone sidewalks on the square were put down in 1885, and two driven-wells made, costing $614.50. The "three-mile" law is in force.

Societies.—Ozark Lodge No. 79, F. & A. M., is the oldest order of the place, dating its organization back to 1851, when it was organized by Capt. Whitley, G. W. Sutherland, Kendall

Webb, Redman Sagely, A. Berry, et al. The loss of the records of the lodge during the war causes these earlier points to be uncertain, but according to Judge G. W. Sutherland and others the first officers were probably Capt. Whitley, W. M., W. J. Montague, S. W., G. W. Sutherland, Tyler, an incomplete list. The hall used was that in the old court-house. Among the successors of Capt. Whitley as Worthy Master were W. A. Carter, G. McWilliams, W. J. Montague and T. A. Carter, before the war. Mr. McWilliams had charge of the lodge property, and it is said that by some means, during the war, the books and fixtures were taken to a lodge at Rocky Comfort, and have never since been obtainable. On November 18, 1868, a charter was granted for reorganization; the document says: "This is issued in lieu of the original charter, which was lost or destroyed during the war." It bears the names Thomas A. Carter, Master; W. A. Carter, S. W., and M. F. Fleeman, J. W., who were "to open and hold a lodge designated" as above. The first minutes obtainable after that date are those of February 13, 1873, when the officers were J. Reynolds, W. M.; E. M. Blackburn, S. W.; pro tem.; L. L. Wittich, J. W.; W. D. Lacy, S. D., and J. B. Carter, J. D. Succeeding Mr. Reynolds in the Worthy Master's chair have been L. L. Wittich, T. A. Carter, W. N. Nichols, W. W. Jennings, J. B. Carter, R. W. Steele, T. P. Williams, T. A. Carter (second time), and the present Master, M. F. Fleeman. P. H. Scott and W. W. Jennings are respectively Senior and Junior Wardens, while the Senior and Junior Deacons are L. R. A. Wallace and T. H. Parks, respectively. The Tyler is T. D. Berry and C. F. Holden is Secretary. The society have about thirty-five members. They have occupied among others the halls of Messrs. Fleeman & Adams, Hamm, Huggins and Jennings.

Carter Chapter No. 58, R. A. M., was named in honor of a veteran Mason, Dr. T. A. Carter. Its charter was granted November 3, 1871, to the following members: Johnson Reynolds, T. A. Carter, W. S. Garner, W. M. Dunn, H. R. Withers, J. R. Fisher, H. Puckett, E. M. Roach, W. M. Mathis and E. J. Riggs. Mr. Reynolds was the first High Priest, an office now held by J. B. Carter. Dr. T. A. Carter has always held the office of Captain of the Host. They have about thirty-five members, but have not been very vigorous for a few years past.

Franklin Lodge No. 1354, K. of H., was organized by Grand Dictator John G. Price January 27, 1879. The following persons were the first officers and charter members: A. H. Boles, P. D.; W. W. Jennings, D.; F. M. Elsey, V. D.; J. B. Tallow, A. D.; S. R. Chew, Reporter; Louis Rosenwater, F. R.; J. D. Berry, Treasurer; A. A. Moomaw, Guide; J. W. Cary, F. G. Chew, B. A. Hancock, S. J. Hairston, Med. Exams.; E. Williams, T. D. Berry, G. O. Linebarger, Trustees; J. C. Bridges, J. Wolf, H. P. Brownrigg, E. Epstein, Charles E. Valentine. The lodge is in a flourishing condition and enrolls thirty-two members. Its present officers are B. A. Hancock, P. D.; Ed H. Mathes, D.; T. D. Berry, V. D.; John H. Wilson, A. D.; W. W. Jennings, R.; C. E. Valentine, F. R.; L. Greer, Guide; M. M. Kile, Guardian; W. H. Cole, Sentinel; J. C. Bridges, M. E.; J. F. Maxey, Chaplain. The society, like all other orders in Ozark, meets in Jennings's Hall.

Ozark Lodge No. 46, I. O. O. F., was first established by D. D. G. M. James R. Steelman, under dispensation from G. M. Peter Brugman, January 27, 1872. The names on the charter are James R. Sanders, Sylvester Berry, J. W. Carey, Charles E. Berry, H. R. Withers, Frank J. Allen and George D. Lingo. Of these the following officers were chosen: Mr. Sanders, N. G.; Mr. S. Berry, P. G.; Mr. Carey, V. G.; Mr. Allen, Secretary, and C. E. Berry, Treasurer. Mr. Sanders was succeeded in the office of Noble Grand by the following gentlemen: L. L. Wittich, J. D. Berry, H. Punckett, J. C. Elsey, A. J. Wood, J. J. Eichenberger, A. L. Eichenberger, J. W. Glenn, T. D. Berry, J. W. Carey, B. A. Hancock, W. J. Glenn, S. B. Felker, M. Sternberg, C. F. Holden, C. W. Conrad, E. Williams, J. F. Hodnett, E. E. Morrell, R. H. Strong, E. B. Moore, R. B. Moore, C. T. Bell, John Stevenson and the present incumbent, C. C. Colburn. The present officers are S. M. Wilson, V. G.; L. G. Hill, Secretary; I. E. Wilson, Assistant Secretary; W. J. Glenn, P. S., and A. L. Eichenberger, Treasurer. This has been the mother lodge of some other lodges in the county; five withdrew to form Junior Lodge No. 61, at Lone Elm, later of Pleasant Hill; but notwithstanding this, twenty-seven are still enrolled.

W. J. Glenn's hall was first used; then G. C. Alden's, L. R. A. Wallace's, P. J. Webb's, and finally that of W. W. Jennings. They have about seven hundred dollars in moneys and property.

Mystic Lodge No. 22, K. of P., is one of Ozark's best fraternities, which began with the following charter members and officers: L. L. Wittich, C. C.; T. F. Hodnett, I. G.; S. B. Felker, Prelate; W. J. Glenn, O. G.; W. W. Jennings, V. C.; L. Jones, M. of E.; A. H. Boles, P. C.; A. J. Nichols, M. at A.; H. C. Carter, K. of R. S.; W. M. Montague, M. of F.; A. H. Treadway, S. R. Chew, J. R. Taylor, T. M. Mitchell, M. F. Greer, J. H. Dacus and A. W. Poole. The lodge was organized December 6, 1882, by P. G. C. Bob Newell, P. G. C. Thomas Essex, P. C. Mr. Anderson, P. C. Mr. Pollock, P. C. Mr. Gibson, and P. C. Mr. McGuire, at Jennings' Hall. The Chancellors succeeding the first are W. W. Jennings, S. B. Felker, A. J. Nichols, W. W. Jennings (second time), J. F. Blackburn, C. T. Bill, H. C. Carter, M. Montague, M. B. Conatser and W. E. Littleton, the present incumbent of that office. Mr. Littleton's associates in office are C. A. Pullen, V. C.; B. L. Jones, Prelate; W. J. Glenn, M. of F.; R. E. Eichenberger, M. of E.; J. H. Crites, M. of A.; T. C. Moore, I. G.; W. L. Huggins, O. G. The lodge is in excellent financial condition, and has about thirty-five members. Their fund for widows and orphans, now on interest, reaches several hundred dollars.

CHARLESTON.

This town embraces a square mile (Township 7, Range 29), which was entered as follows: J. B. Thaxton, 1843 and 1844; R. C. Thaxton, 1844; C. R. Kelleam, 1844, 1846 and 1850; E. M. Richardson, 1845 and 1856; J. H. Cotton, 1848; J. Dunn, 1855, and J. E. Cotton, 1857. The first building was a double hewn log cabin built about 1848 by C. R. Kelleam on the site of Sherman & Dancy's wagon-shop. A brick store was put up near by about 1849, and a gin-mill also. Dr. Wright was an early physician. Mr. Kelleam failed, and E. M. Richardson bought the store about 1857, and soon after built a two-story frame. In 1856 H. O. and M. W. Spencer erected a frame store. This was all before the war, but even this was all burned about 1863 by Federal scouts, excepting the homes of Mrs. Richardson and Dr. Kelleam. The first store erected after peace was declared was in 1866 by Col. J. P. Falconer. Dr. E. B. Knotts, Berry & Newton and W. A. Black & Co. built places before 1870. The business men of "the seventies" were F. Younger, Baer & Joel, W. L. Kelleam, gin and mill; Redman & Langley, millers; Moore & Hudgins, blacksmiths, and J. B. Gilsinger, wagons. The town was laid out in 1870 by Col. J. M. Pettigrew for J. P. Falconer and Mrs. Susan Richardson. In 1874 an addition was laid off by J. D. Sadler for Messrs. Younger and Falconer.

Modern Growth.—With the beginning of the present decade, and the completion of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway to Fort Smith, there has been a backward move in Charleston business that nothing less than a railway outlet can materially check. The site for a town is beautiful, and the broad prairies surrounding it only seem to need a railway to develop them. The leading general merchants are Falconer & Armistead, D. Y. Berry, L. Newton, V. V. Beavers and W. A. Milton; W. P. Richardson and F. D. Proctor are grocers; drugs are handled by A. P. Richardson and D. L. Winters; Dr. W. L. Kelleam has a flour-mill and gin; R. S. Bridgman has a hardware; furniture is sold by J. D. Bolling; The Charleston House, by D. R. Whitlock, is the only inn; in the wagon, carriage and blacksmith lines are J. L. Langley, Moore & Dancy, J. E. Smith and Moore & Hodgins; Goodwin & Sons have a livery and stage stand; Richardson and Hedges are contractors; J. L. Langley has a lumber yard; the barber is J. Price; J. C. Berry and L. H. Gunter are painters. The nursery is owned by Dr. J. S. Burt. The medical profession is represented by Drs. W. L. Kelleam, R. M. Southard, R. M. Barnes, Sr., George Kidwell and J. S. Burt. R. M. Barnes, Jr., is a dentist. The eye and ear are Dr. J. M. Crandall's specialty. J. D. Parks and T. A. Pettigrew are attorneys. The population at present (1888) is about 650.

Incorporation.—On April 8, 1874, Charleston was incorporated, and the first mayor was D. Y. Sweeney, whose successors have been J. C. McKinney, H. C. Dyer, W. H. Davis, D. R. Whitlock, D. L. Winters and W. A. Black—the last about 1882.

Newspapers.—The Charleston Vindicator issued its first number June 18, 1881. It was founded by the proprietors of the Ozark Democrat, and Chas. Knoble was placed in charge. He soon bought it, and made it one of the best country newspapers in the State. Dr. M. Stroup bought it in June, 1883. "After a year's repose the Vindicator again rises," says Editor E. M. Dewey, on May 21, 1885, advocating the interest of "the new district." Bridgman Bros. secured it in September, and for some time its genial editor, R. S. Bridgman, has had control.

Societies.—Charleston Lodge No. 155, F. & A. M., began under dispensation to L. R. Pate, W. M.; R. B. Tyus, S. W.; T. H. Carter, J. W.; T. Aldridge, Treas.; J. M. Pettigrew, S.; E. M. Northum, S. D.; M. Pate, J. D., and W. D. Proctor, T. A year later (in 1859) a charter was granted to these and H. F. Carter, A. C. Barnard, W. D. Proctor, E. M. Richardson, H. Berry, W. L. Kellean, E. M. Northum, M. C. Northum and I. W. Carter. They began in Richardson's Hall, and after the war reorganized in the Union Church; their present hall was built in 1871. Its lower story is school-rooms. They have fifty-four members, and property valued at $2,500. The Masters have been T. A. Carter, H. Berry, J. M. Pettigrew, H. B. Armistead, M. Flynn, M. W. Spencer, W. J. Ponder and C. McColloch. W. J. Parks, J. W., was assassinated November, 1888, by John Bolling, a fellow Mason. The present officers are H. B. Armistead, W. M.; J. M. Pettigrew, S. W.; D. Y. Berry, Treas.; M. W. Spencer, S.; J. E. Smith, S. D.; R. Turner, J. D., and L. J. Cormack, Tyler.

Duval Chapter No. 65, R. A. M., received dispensation in 1872 and charter in 1873. The High Priests have been J. M. Pettigrew, M. Flynn and J. P. Falconer. They have about thirty members.

Charleston Lodge No. 3181, K. of H., was founded July 3, 1885, by N. Futrell, D. G. D. Its fifteen charter members and first officers are as follows: V. V. Beavers, D.; J. T. Hollingsworth, V. D.; R. A. Goodwin, A. D.; J. P. Falconer, P. D.; F. D. Proctor, R.; D. S. Richardson, F. R.; A. D. Chaney, R. S. Bridgman, A. C. Berry, L. Newton, S. Younger, O. F. Burt, M. W. Spencer, D. Y. Berry and S. R. Ramsey. Mr. Spencer was made dictator previous to the present incumbent. The lodge now has twenty-eight members, and the following are officers: J. P. Falconer, D.; T. H. Bond, V. D.; R. A. Goodwin, A. D.; V. V. Beavers, P. D.; F. D. Proctor, R., and D. S. Richardson, F. R.

MULBERRY CITY.

Mulberry City was born of a railway, like Alma, and drew largely from the old Pleasant Hill settlement, which had fair promises of becoming a town. Dr. T. A. Carter bought the land east of Main Street from the Allen Miller heirs, and the west side was purchased by R. H. Hicks. Dr. Carter's dwelling, erected about 1874, was the first house; and this was followed by a store and residence built in 1876 by Quesenbury & Co., the house now occupied by Huggins & Heard. Quaile & Carter built the next store in 1877, now called "the Old Beneaux property." A grocery was next erected by S. E. Edmonson in 1877. Many others were built in 1877-78 and almost every year since. Two of the best structures are now in course of construction—a stone store by Dix Hamm and two brick blocks (each 25x100 feet and two-story) by Bailey & Hudson.

Business Interests.—With the railway and fine country of the Mulberry Valley to support it, there is no reason why Mulberry City should not grow even more rapidly than it has. Its leading general merchants are J. Beneaux & Co., J. W. Bailey & Co., H. A. Beneaux, Dix Hamm, Henry & Co., Huggins & Heard and Forrest, Turner & Co. The drug trade is controlled by Quesenbury & Counts, Hudson & Bailey and W. A. Wilson, Sr. Hawkins & Agent, F. P. Jamison, W. M. Daily, W. E. Lawson, H. W. Jones & Co. and T. B. Harris are leaders in the grocery trade. Fred Koble owns a cotton-gin. The brick-yard is the property of J. W. Bailey. Forrest, Turner & Co. own the lumber yard. G. W. Bailey deals in jeweler's goods. The Tempel House, by Mrs. S. A. Tempel, and the Commercial House, by L. R. Hawkins, are the only hotels. The medical profession is well represented by Drs. W. C. Hudson, W. A. Wilson, Jr., E. A. Johnston and A. C. Johnston. R. H. Hicks and Charles Wells are attorneys, the former also dealing in real estate. Confections and bakery goods are handled by T. J. Rose. M. C. Campbell has a livery and feed stable. E. D. Pyle attends to transfer business. Adair's meat market and one owned by R. B. Betty supply that line. Huggins & Lawton and George Rugles are contractors. M. J. Tabor deals in millinery goods. W. Jeffers and others buy cotton. T. W. Marler deals in stock. The railway and express agent is S. B. Hawkins. A. Koble has machine repair shops. Clark & Casey and J. C. Hicks attend to wagon and blacksmith work. John Hass deals in shoes and L. W. Hayley attends to tonsorial wants.

The W. Y. Oliver Plow Works are properly a part of Mulberry business, although not located within the limits of the town. It manufactures a cotton-scraper and hiller, patented by Mr. Oliver over three years since, and is a growing factory. A canning factory project is also on foot.

Newspapers.—The Mulberry Weekly Times, the first paper issued there, was founded April 3, 1886, as a six-column folio, by Frank Ibbotson, its present editor and proprietor. It is a well-edited paper with Democratic principles.

Incorporation, etc.—The town is laid out on both sides of Main Street, and extends from the Little to the Big Mulberry River. In 1880 it was incorporated, and John Hudgens was elected its first mayor, E. D. Pyle, recorder, and James Hatch, marshal. The "three-mile" law has been in operation since 1883. On May 1, 1886, the annual receipts of the town were $409.29; expenditures, $364.88; balance, $34.38. L. R. Hawkins, H. H. Pyle, E. D. Pyle, J. T. Jeans and R. H. Hicks have been mayors since Mr. Hudgens' term. Mr. Hicks, mayor, J. W. Bailey, recorder, and Clay Agent, treasurer, are the present officers. The railway agent shipped for the year ending June, 1888, 2,560 bales of cotton and 30 cars of cotton seed, and a car load of peanuts. The population now (1888) is about 525.

Societies.—Mulberry Lodge No. 3170, K. of H., was organized by Dr. G. D. N. Futrell, June 3, 1885, with twenty-one charter members, and the following officers: J. H. Wilson, D.; E. A. Johnston, V. D.; J. P. Bledsoe, A. D.; J. T. Jeans, P. D.; R. H. Hicks, R.; C. W. Carroll, F. R.; Jas. Huggins, T.; B. C. Covey, Guide; C. L. Wright, G.; James Taylor, S. R. H. Hicks has been the only Dictator since J. H. Wilson. The present officers with him are W. M. Francis, V. D.; C. V. Bennet, A. D.;

J. P. Bledsoe, Guide; B. F. Randolph, F. R.; E. D. Pyle, R.; E. A. Johnston, G., and Jas. Huggins, T. They have fourteen members. For the last year they have been compelled to meet in the Masonic Hall at Pleasant Hill.

Junior Lodge No. 61, I. O. O. F., is a flourishing order about to build a hall soon, which will no doubt be used by the other lodges. E. A. Johnson, N. G.; W. C. Hudson, V. G., and W. S. Wagoner, S., are the present officers.

Pleasant Hill Lodge No. 233, F. & A. M., is partly a Mulberry society, but meets at Pleasant Hill lodge rooms. W. Henson, W. M., and A. H. Marlar, S., are the officers of the fraternity.

A K. of L. lodge has also been in operation here.

ALTUS.

This place was born of the railway and nursed by the Central Collegiate Institute. Its beautiful site was school land bought by U. J. Nichols in 1875, and while the railway (L. R. & F. S.) was building he erected the first house—the one now occupied by D. Fain's drug store. Old Altus, about a quarter-mile east, was the railway terminus for about one year, and "Old Buckley," Mr. Harmon and J. N. Williamson were in business, when Mr. Nichols laid out Altus and offered the railway every alternate lot, and a depot site 300x300 feet, to move the old town up there. The place is laid out in four streets about the depot as a square. Mr. Nichols' first store was followed by R. C. Hill, J. N. Williamson, Brooks & Gregory, J. L. Jackson, Bridges, Capt. Bailey, Wadkins, Logan, I. L. Burrows, Howard, Dr. Layton, O. B. Donaldson, Boyett, Crawford Bros. and T. J. Brown. Mr. Nichols built a mill and gin in 1877.

Present Business.—General merchandise: W. D. Rodman, J. H. McGehee, Donaldson & Jackman, W. W. Bailey, Miller & Nichols; in groceries, Boyett & Schriver, Crawford Bros. and W. D. Logan; in mills, the Altus Steam Mill and Gin by Balentine & Cumpton; in drugs, T. J. Fain and T. J. Brown; in commission merchandise, W. J. Brooks; in confections and shoe trade, W. M. Barnes; in millinery, Mrs. M. A. Atkins; in stationery, W. J. Crockett; in livery, F. M. Hammond; in hardware, Mike Metz; blacksmithing, T. J. Schriver; in meat marketing, Nichols & Hawkins; in real estate, G. W. Austin; in hotels, the Commercial Hotel by Mrs. M. A. Dodson, and the Hammond House by L. P. Lawton; in lumbering, J. M. Wells and D. Morrison; in nurseries, W. J. Wilson; in fruit shipping, Col. W. S. O'Kane and W. J. Wilson; in carpentering, W. H. Cooper; in tonsorial art, H. Thomas; express agent, L. B. Crenshaw; in law, Capt. W. W. Bailey, and in medicine, Drs. T. J. Fain, W. T. Brown, Dr. Layton and B. H. Cochran. Its postmasters have been Messrs. Williamson, Harmon, Hill, Scruggs, Phillips and Crockett. On September 1, 1887, the annual shipment was 7,043 bales cotton, and in 1888, 6,764 bales; this covers Logan County. Strawberries, peaches and grapes are shipped.

Newspapers.—The Altus Albion, founded in 1883, by R. C. Hill, was the first local paper after the brief existence of C. H. Gregory's agricultural paper. Prof. I. L. Burrow bought it about 1885, and a Mr. Burnett, E. M. Dewey and W. L. Jamison were afterward connected with it. B. M. Burrow then owned it, and afterward rented it to D. M. McGraw. On May 17, 1888, G. W. Austin leased it, and called it the Altus Advance, a six-column folio. From the first Altus papers have had a spasmodic existence. Mr. Austin should break the record.

Incorporation, etc.—Altus was incorporated August 31, 1888, with Dr. S. D. Price as the first mayor. The population at present (1888) is in the neighborhood of 500.

Societies.—Central Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., was chartered November 23, 1881, by J. F. Stanford, W. M.; U. G. Stokes, S. W.; H. W. More, J. W., and R. A. Baker, W. C. Phillips, I. M. Moore and J. W. Crockett. Mr. Stanford's successors have been R. A. Baker, G. W. Nichols, F. I. Smith and I. M. Moore. F. I. Smith is the present Master. They have thirty-seven members.

OTHER PLACES—POST-OFFICES.

Webb City (and South Ozark) site was erected by Capt. Preston, E. Davis and W. Cureton. Capt. Preston built the first house about 1840, and the others built later on. A Mr. Adams bought out Capt. Preston and started the first store with a Mr. Tyus about 1858; M. F. Fleeman opened the next in 1865.

later W. A. Parkes and Quaile & Moore opened stocks; T. P. Williams, J. H. Dacus and Capt. J. Taylor followed. At present Rabon & Son, Parkes & Co., C. C. Webb and T. P. Williams are general merchants; Henderson & Bryan and Mr. Kilburn deal in groceries; in drugs are M. Stroup and J. D. Meadow; W. Bryan has hardware; T. P. Williams owns a gin and mill; Parkes & Co. deal in lumber; G. Monroe and J. Beckham are blacksmiths; M. Stroup sells real estate; Thomas Rabon and J. O. Henderson keep public inns, and W. S. Jones is a cotton buyer. The physicians are Drs. H. I. Jones and A. Williams.

Sub Rosa, Vista and Alston are vigorous small business points, especially Sub Rosa, which has five business houses, seven residences, two secret societies, three religious societies, one physician and a notary public.

Post-offices.—The post-offices in Franklin County are (November, 1888,) as follows: Alston, Altus, Calvin, Cass, Cecil, Charleston, Cravens, Dahoma, Dorietta, Etna, Fern, Flowery, Gammiel, Hight, Leon, Lonelm, Mounts, Mulberry, Ozark, Pauline, Plymouth, Sub Rosa, Vesta, Vineland, Watalula, Webb City, White Rock.

EDUCATION.

Prior to the inauguration of the present free school system the laws of Arkansas made no provision for the general education of the masses of the people. True, there was a so-called or pretended system of free public schools, but it was sufficient only to entitle the State to accept and control the public lands donated by the General Government for school purposes, and not at all sufficient for the education of the masses. Under the old regime, in the days of slavery, it was considered almost a crime to educate a negro. The reason for this was obvious, the nearer the negro could be held to the condition of a brute, the more easily he could be controlled as a slave, and hence the negro was out of the question, and the children of the poor whites who were not able to employ teachers were obliged to grow up in ignorance. For a complete review of the free school system of Arkansas, see that subject in the history of Benton County. According to the custom in all frontier settlements in the United States, the first schools taught in Franklin County were those known as "subscription schools." In the towns, villages and thickly settled neighborhoods they were called academies, but they were all supported on the subscription plan, that is, each patron paid a "rate bill," or so much for each child he sent to school, and the children of those not able to pay such bills were debarred from school privileges.

First Schools and Academies.—The first school, and for years the only school, in Franklin County, was taught at the Pleasant Hill Camp Ground on Mulberry River. It was superior to the average frontier schools of that day, and had pupils in attendance from Fort Smith, Dardanelle and other settlements. It was supported on the subscription plan. The next schools were taught at Ozark and Charleston. In general the early subscription schools were taught by transient persons, and were very inferior. The terms were usually from three to five months. In 1844 schools were so scarce that Judge G. W. Sutherland, an early settler, hired a young man by the name of Henry Butts to teach his child. In 1849 James Liggett taught at Ozark in the old court-house, and Dr. Wynn taught at Ozark in 1851 and 1852, and in the latter year Mrs. Houser taught a female school in Ozark. In 1855 the Charleston Academy was established at the village of Charleston, by Prof. Elijah Northum, who taught it one year, and then Judge John M. Pettigrew (who still lives near that village) took charge of the academy and taught until 1859. Then there was a vacancy until 1867, when Pettigrew again took charge of the school, and taught until 1882. He was followed by T. A. Pettigrew, who taught two years, and in 1884–85 Henry Stroup taught the school. Since the establishment of the free public school it has been taught in connection with the academy. Prof. Hall now has charge of the school, and is assisted by his wife and Prof. Lancaster.

Just before the outbreak of the Civil War the citizens of Ozark erected a two-story brick building in the western part of the town for a male institute, but had not finished it when the war began. During that struggle the soldiers pulled out the irons that supported the walls and chimneys of the building, to get material for making horse-shoes. This caused the walls to crumble to some extent. At the close of the war the walls of the upper story were taken down, and the building was finished as a one-story house, and was used as a school-house for both sexes until the present building was erected.

Free Schools.—The law establishing the present free school system was approved July 23, 1868, and the office of the State superintendent of public instruction was opened on the first day of August following. The first biennial report for this office covered the time from the inauguration of the system to September 30, 1870, and was made by Thomas Smith, the first superintendent of public instruction.

School Statistics.—The statistics pertaining to the schools of Franklin County for the first school year, ending September 30, 1869, as given in this report, are as follows:

Scholastic population, white, males, 1,639, females, 1,476, total, 3,115; colored, males, 111, females, 90, total, 201. Total, white and colored, 3,316. Pupils enrolled, whites, males, 785, females, 753, total, 1,538; colored, males, 60, females, 40, total, 100. Total, white and colored, 1,638. Teachers employed, males, 23, females, 3, total, 26. Amount paid teachers, males, $3,419, females, $400, total, $3,819. School revenue: amount received, $10,082.20; amount expended, $10,029.20. Taxable polls, 1,082. Per capita tax collected, $.825. There were six school-houses erected in 1869, the others used having been previously erected.

The official school statistics of the county for the year ending September 30, 1879, at the end of the first ten years after the first year under the free school system, were as follows:

Scholastic population, white, males, 2,010; females, 2,331; total, 4,341; colored, males, 88; females, 65; total, 148; total, white and colored, 4,489. Pupils enrolled, whole number, 858 (race and sex not reported). Per cent of scholastic population, 19.1. Teachers employed, males, 18; females, 1; total, 19. Amount paid teachers, $854.54. School revenues, amount received, $3,459.72; amount expended, $3,100.88. There were six school-houses erected in the county during the year.

If these statistics were accepted as giving the true condition of the free schools, it would show that they had grown less, in number, than at the end of the first year, and that the system had been a failure; but such is not the fact, as the figures show that $3,100.88 was expended for the benefit of the schools. Evidently many of the subordinate school officers in the county failed to report to the superintendent of public instruction, hence the incomplete statistics. The State superintendent's report for the year ending June 30, 1882, shows that there were then sixty-four school districts in the county, and that only thirty of them reported. This is a bad showing for the district school officers.

The following statistics are taken from the report of H. A. Nickell, county examiner, for the year ending June 30, 1888:

Scholastic population, white, males, 4,085; females, 3,695; total, 7,780; colored, males, 162; females, 132; total, 294; total, white and colored, 8,074. Pupils enrolled, white, males, 2,962; females, 2,361; total, 5,323; colored, males, 103; females, 98; total, 201; total, white and colored, 5,524. Average daily attendance, males, 1,566; females, 1,382; total, 2,948. Amount paid teachers, $13,520.80. Schools taught, 97. Total number of days taught, 6,400. Whole number of school-houses, 78; value of same, $30,733.85. Number of teachers employed, white, males, 88; females, 20; colored, males, 5; female, 1; total, 109. Average wages paid to first grade teachers, males, $42 per month; females, $33; to second grade teachers, males, $32; females, $25; to third grade teachers, both sexes, $20.

There are 19 school districts in the Charleston District of the county, and 70 in the Ozark District, making a total of 89. Of the 78 school-houses in the county about seven-eighths are frame, nearly one-eighth log, and one is made of brick, it being the fine, large and handsome school building at Ozark. The following are the schools having more than one teacher, and the number in each, viz.: Ozark, 4; Charleston, 3; Oak Hill, 3; Altus, 2; Mulberry, 2; Stone Hill, 2; Grand Prairie, 2. For the last school year, 83 out of the 89 school districts in the county voted a tax for the support of their schools. This is a greater proportion of districts voting a tax than that voted in any other county in the State; consequently, in this respect, Franklin is the banner county.

The statistics for the last school year, given above, can be relied upon as being full and complete. Mr. Nickell, the county examiner, enforced the law, and compelled reports to be made from every school district. The enrollment in the schools is increasing, and the free school system is growing more and more in the estimation of the people. Much credit is due to Mr. Nickell, the present county examiner, for enforcing the law, obtaining full reports, and vastly improving the condition of the public schools. Teachers' institutes are now annually held in the county, and a growing interest in the education of the masses is being manifested. Charleston School District and District No. 22 have both applied for and received $300 each from the Peabody Fund.

Central Collegiate Institute.—This institution of learning is located at Altus, in Franklin County, Ark. Its founder, Rev.

Isham L. Burrow, the present presiding elder of the Clarksville District of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was born in Carroll County, Tenn., December 7, 1834, his parents being among the pioneer Methodists of that country. In his seventeenth year he united with the church, and soon began to prepare for the ministry. He was educated in Bethel and Andrew Colleges, and graduated in the latter in June, 1858, and subsequently became president of the same. The year that he graduated he was licensed to preach, but did not enter the itinerancy until 1860. He then traveled the Aberdeen Circuit, in Mississippi, for one year, then taught school four years, having charge of South Gibson Institute. In November, 1864, he was again admitted into the traveling connection, and was appointed to Andrew College, where he served two years, and afterward he served on the Jackson Circuit, Memphis Conference. He was transferred to the Arkansas Conference in 1869, and after having been engaged about eighteen years in educational and ministerial work, twelve of which had been spent in his native State, and the remainder in the bounds of the Arkansas Conference, finding that schools of high grade were much needed, especially those devoted to higher Christian education, and believing that the church was not ready to undertake such an enterprise, determined to undertake it alone. The first and most important step in the project was a suitable situation. After examining much of the northwestern part of the State for such a place, he selected Altus, which is, as its name imports, the highest point over which the Valley Railway runs, between Little Rock and Fort Smith. And on a plateau 150 feet above the railroad bed, and one half mile south of the same, the site for the building was selected, just in the southeast corner of Section 16, Township 9 north, Range 26 west.

In order to secure himself from real estate embarrassment in the future, he bought off the corners of the four sections meeting at the southeast corner of Section 16, the amount of 320 acres, thus giving him complete control of the immediate surroundings. Then the whole plan of the school was projected. There were at the time of this purchase but two log cabins on the land. Here in the woods, in the fall of 1875, he erected for his family a small frame house containing two rooms. Early next spring he erected a two-story frame school-house, 24x32 feet in size. But being engaged as presiding elder on the Clarksville District, he was not ready to enter the school-room until the following fall. Hence it was placed in the hands of the community to be used for a small neighborhood school, and for religious and Sunday-school purposes. The following report is quoted:

Rev. C. H. Gregory, a supernumerary member of the Arkansas Conference, preached the first sermon in the house to a small congregation about the first Sunday in May. Mr. Gregory had followed the founder of the school to the place, and secured a suitable location for establishing a nursery and fruit farm near to the college grounds. A Mr. Barry, from one of the New England States, taught the first school—a very short term. He was followed by Prof. Frank M. Lee, of this State, who taught a three months' term, with increased interest. On the 31st of October, of the same year, 1876, the centennial of American independence, the school was regularly opened by its founder, Rev. Isham L. Burrow, with a small enrollment of twenty, which increased to thirty-five by the end of the spring term. At the session of the Conference held at Yellville, Ark., the school was named Central Collegiate Institute, and the owner was appointed as its president. On the first Monday in September, 1877, the second annual session of the Institute opened with an enrollment of thirty, which increased by the close, in the first week in June following, to forty-eight. During the year Miss Lizzie A., the daughter of the proprietor, was the assistant teacher.

Toward the latter part of the first term of 1877-78, it was deemed necessary to employ a gentleman who could act as principal teacher, the president having been appointed presiding elder of Clarksville District in connection with his school work and management. Rev. H. W. Brooks, of Jackson, Tenn., a graduate from the Southwestern Baptist University of that city, who had just been admitted into the traveling connection with the Memphis Conference, then transferred to the Arkansas Conference, was secured to fill that place. The school then had three teachers in the literary department, and Miss Mary Hodges, from Van Buren, Ark., as music teacher, teaching a class connected with this, and a private class at Ozark, dividing the time between the two places. In the spring of 1878 Capt. W. J. Brooks, of Jackson, Tenn., came to Altus, and his wife, Mrs. Fanny J., was engaged as permanent music teacher, and continued in the position until June, 1888, having meanwhile maintained an increasing interest in her work. Among the students who attended in 1877-78 there was quite a number that were the best and most talented by nature of any enrolled at any time, several of whom have already taken enviable positions in business and professions.

In November, 1879, Prof. J. P. Coleman, who was educated at the Halltonian Institute, at Guthrie, Ky., was engaged as professor of mathematics, and continued as such until June, 1887, when he resigned. He was one of the best mathematicians and ablest instructors in that science that ever engaged in teaching.

Much of the credit for building up the school is due to his efforts. In 1884 Prof. W. C. Parham, from the University of Virginia, taught as professor of languages, and in 1886 and 1887 Prof. H. C. Penn, now of the University of Missouri, assisted as a teacher in the institute.

From 1878-79 on to 1884 the college gradually grew in favor with the people at home and abroad. During this time two boarding houses were built for the accommodation of the increased numbers, and also to keep the boarding department under the control of the school management. In the meantime the school had secured a charter, and sent forth its first graduates in 1883, a class of three young ladies taking the degree of M. E. L.,* viz.: Misses Alice Mahan, of Franklin, and Jennie Montgomery and Lucy Ragon, of Johnson County. The graduating class of 1884 consisted of three young ladies, and that of 1885 of five young ladies. No graduating class for 1886 is reported. The graduating class for 1887 consisted of two young men and three young ladies. During the last school year, 1887-88, there were 115 males and 59 females, a total of 174 pupils in attendance. Of these 55 were residents and 119 non-residents. Five States and thirty-five counties of Arkansas were represented. The school year is divided into two terms of five months each. The present year began September 6, 1888, and will end June 12, 1889. Rev. Burrow continued as president of the institute until June, 1887, when he resigned the office. Rev. A. C. Millar was then elected president, and still holds the position. Present faculty: Rev. A. C. Millar, A. B., president, mental and physical science; W. H. Key, vice-president, English and modern languages; W. A. Crenshaw, A. M., secretary, mathematics; J. B. Clark, A. B., Latin and Greek; Mrs. Elizabeth H. Millar, primary and penmanship; Mrs. Lalla S. Key, vocal and instrumental music; Rev. Isham L. Burrow, A. M., professor emeritus.

In 1880-81 the owner of the institute erected the present large, handsome and commodious three-story brick college building. It stands in the center of the campus containing ten acres, and has a chapel and two school-rooms in the first story, and three school-rooms each in the second and third stories. In the fall of 1884 the founder and builder of the institute (Rev. Burrow) sold and transferred it, together with the campus and property belonging to it, to the Arkansas, Little Rock and White River Conferences, for $12,500, and it is now the joint property of these three Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

CHURCHES AND KINDRED ASSOCIATIONS.

Owing to the failure to make and preserve records, it is impossible now to give a detailed history of the early individual church organizations in the county. The Primitive Baptists are believed to have been the first to organize, and soon thereafter, or about the same time, the Cumberland Presbyterians began to organize. Among the first Primitive Baptist preachers were Revs. George Horner and Turner Casey, and James Buchanan, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, occasionally visited the county and preached for the people—all about the same time. Rev. Guilford Pyeant, of the latter denomination, and Rev. Hobbs and Rev. Taylor, of the Primitive Baptists, were also pioneer ministers. The Methodists probably began holding services in the latter part of “the thirties,” and among their early ministers was Parson Stanford. [For a general history of this denomination, in this part of the country, see same in the history of Sebastian County.] Soon after this the Methodist Protestants came in. The Christian Church and the Missionary Baptists began to organize in “the forties,” and the Catholics have organized recently.

Baptist Churches.—The Missionary Baptist Church at Charleston was organized about the year 1846, by Rev. Charles R. Kelliam, who remained its pastor until his death in 1850. It then continued without a regular pastor until 1857, when Rev. Darius Buckley became its pastor. “In 1859 Rev. T. H. Compere took charge of the congregation, and preached to it until it was disorganized in 1862. It was reorganized in 1866 by Rev. E. L. Compere, who supplied it with great success for some twelve years. Its pastors since the war have been E. L. Compere, D. J. Clevinger, F. M. Kregel, Frank White, T. H. B. McAllister and L. Quinn, its present pastor. The congregation numbers about seventy-five, and holds its meetings in its own church, which is a frame building worth, with the lot upon which it stands, about $2,000. The church sustains a flourishing Sunday-school."*

Grand Prairie Missionary Baptist Church. This society was organized some years before the Civil War, and in February, 1869, it was reorganized by J. S. Ledbetter and D. H. Tolleson, with J. T. and M. A. and F. E. Mayfield, J. M. Smith, M. P. and E. Tigner, D. H. Tolleson and wife, J. S. and R. S. Ledbetter, their wives and others. The building in which the society worship stands on the northeast corner of Section 28, Township 8 north, Range 28 west, and was erected in 1878 for church and school purposes. The pastors have been Revs. Spiller, F. L. Kregel, T. H. B. McAllister and A. L. Brown, the latter being present pastor. The church has forty-nine members.

The Baptist Church of Christ at Ozark was organized in August, 1866, by Isaac Reed, with Elijah Miller, R. A. Reed, Mary B. Miller, A. J. Hudner and Agnes A. Garrett as original members. The first church edifice belonging to this organization, being its present brick edifice, was erected in the town of Ozark in 1882, and dedicated in May of that year by Elder B. R. Womack. Its pastors have been Isaac Reed, Willis Burns, F. L. Kregel, W. H. Stanton, A. S. Pettie, J. C. Crudup and J. B. Wise, the latter being present pastor. The membership of the church at this writing is eighty-one.

Oak Bend Missionary Baptist Church. This church was organized in August, 1858, by D. Buckly, J. B. Cross, P. Cross and wife, York Davis and wife, W. H. Wadkin and M. A. Wadkin, original members. Rev. Thomas Compere and Rev. Byers were the pastors before the Civil War. In 1867 Isaac Reed revived the old church, and since then the pastors have been Henry Carr, John Yealding, D. J. Clevinger, F. L. Kregel, J. N. Marshall, A. S. Jackson, R. Boilston, W. Womack and J. H. Oneal. This church has had as high as seventy or eighty members, but at this writing it has only twenty-two.

Pine Mountain Missionary Baptist Church, was organized about 1870, with W. B. Cone, W. A. Colquit, A. J. Looney, M. M. Win-ford, Fannie Cone, Jane Colquit, Angeline Cone, Mary Winford, Clementine Brown as members, and J. S. Ledbetter, moderator, and W. A. Colquit, clerk. The first church was a log house, built in 1870, and the second a frame, built about 1883. The pastors have been J. S. Ledbetter, A. J. Rippy, R. D. Boydston, Joseph Baker, J. F. Oneal, N. Marshall, T. H. B. McAlister and M. A. Pillers, the latter being the present pastor. The church has about forty members.

Mill Creek Missionary Baptist Church was organized August 10, 1878, by Elder William Bridgeman. F. A. Vanlandingham, H. D. Medlock, R. J. Pritchett, B. F. Garrett, J. C. Redding, S. H. Vanlandingham, Sisters M. A. Vanlandingham, M. R. Medlock, S. J. Garrett, Agnes Andrews, H. E. Carnahan, Mary Redding, Sarah Thurman, Martha Bennett, Sarah Bachelor, as members. Elders Clevinger, Oneal, Jackson, Mays, Briggs and A. J. Henson have been the pastors. This church has forty-five members. They worship in a public church and school-house, having no building of their own.

Altus Missionary Baptist Church was organized in July, 1887, by Elders J. M. Lawrence, A. S. Pettie and R. M. Small, the present frame church edifice having been erected the same year. J. M. Lawrence was the first and so far the only pastor. Membership, forty-six.

Oak Grove Missionary Baptist Church was organized in March, 1882, by M. Adams, J. M. Kimberland and others. They have no church edifice. The pastors have been M. Adams and J. R. Ritchison. The original members were James Cox, S. L. Luney, D. H. Hall, A. Boggs, George Cox and their wives. Present membership about thirty-eight.

Lonelm Missionary Baptist Church was organized in 1882, by W. R. McLane, J. M. Blalock, R. N. Carter and wife, J. P. Cook, S. Lumpkin, W. O. Taff and their wives, L. A. Stocton and mother, G. W. Touchstone and wife, E. L. Duncan and wife and others, as original members. They worship in the school-house connected with the Masonic hall, erected in 1882, by the Masons and the people in general. The pastors have been J. H. Blalock, J. M. Kimberland, G. W. Richardson and T. M. Merchant. Membership, thirty-six.

Prairie View Missionary Baptist Church was organized in May, 1887, with M. A. Pillers, W. R. Powell, G. W. Hill, S. C. Powell, Mary Powell, S. A. Hill, M. A. Hunt and others, as original members. They worship in the school-house in District No. 68, about four miles southeast of Charleston.

Vesta Baptist Church was organized on the 8th day of September, 1888, by T. H. B. McAllister and William Greenlee, with eight members, and two have been added since. They worship in the district school-house, two miles from the west boundary line of the county. T. H. B. McAllister is the pastor.

Of the foregoing individual churches the Prairie View, Mill Creek, Vesta, Pine Mountain and Grand View belong to the Concord Missionary Baptist Association, and Lonelm, Oak Grove, Altus and Ozark to the Clear Creek Missionary Baptist Association, and Oak Bend belongs to the Dardanelle Missionary Baptist Association. Other churches belonging to the Clear Creek Association, in the county, are Bethel, Mount Zion, New Prospect, Prairie Grove, Rehobeth, Shiloh, No. 1, White Oak.

The Corinth Free-Will Baptist Church belongs to the Arkansas Association of Free-Will Baptists. It was organized about 1872, by Rev. D. L. Bearden. The pastors have been D. L. Bearden and Y. M. Powell. The congregation worships in a school-house in Wallace Township. Membership, twenty-two. There are also two churches in the county known as the United Baptists, viz.: Union Grove and Liberty. They belong to the Mulberry Association.

Methodist Churches.—Methodist Episcopal Church. There are no organizations of this church in Franklin County, reported in the last minutes of the Arkansas Conference, but Charleston is reported as a mission in the Fort Smith District. For a general history of this denomination in Northwestern Arkansas the reader is referred to the subject in the history of Sebastian.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The Charleston Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Franklin County was organized about the year 1858, by Rev. Russel Reneau, who was its pastor for about one year, preaching once a month. Rev. M. Southard also preached monthly from 1858 to the commencement of the late war. At the close of the war the church was reorganized by Rev. M. Southard and Rev. Frank M. Moore. Since its organization it has been supplied with preaching by the itinerant ministers in charge of the Charleston Circuit. It holds its meetings in the Union Church at Charleston. The membership numbers about eighty. A flourishing Union Sunday-school is held in this church. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Ozark was organized in 1871, by Rev. H. Puckett, with forty-eight original members. The present large frame church edifice was erected in 1876, at a cost of $3,500. It was dedicated in February, 1882, by Bishop J. C. Gronberry. The constituent members were H. Puckett, B. H. Greathouse, J. Loving, H. M. Granade, D. J. Weemer and F. S. H. Johnston. The church at this writing has 120 members, having received 272 in all since its organization. There is a parsonage worth about $1,000 belonging to the church. It has been blessed with several revivals, the greatest of which was under the pastorate of Rev. G. W. Hill, in 1881. Last year it raised for all purposes $1,800. This is not the first organization of this denomination at Ozark, as it had an organization there long before the Civil War. There are a number of other organizations of this denomination in Franklin county, of which the history has not been preserved in detail, and for that reason cannot be so given. Those on the south side of the Arkansas River belong mostly—if not all of them—to the Fort Smith District, and those on the north side to the Clarksville District. The charges or circuits, each of which contains several organizations, are Charleston and Webb City, in the Fort Smith District, and Altus, Ozark, Mulberry and Alma, in the Clarksville District, and in addition to the Ozark Circuit there is also Ozark Station. The number of white members in the Charleston charge is 438, but some of these belong to the organizations of the charge outside of the county. The Webb City charge has eighty-nine members; Altus, 200; Ozark Station, 132; Ozark Circuit, 350; Mulberry, 412, and Alma, 267. Rev. Isham L. Burrow is presiding elder of the Clarksville District. Numerically the Missionary Baptist and Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are the strongest denominations in the county.

Presbyterian Churches.—The Charleston (Old School) Presbyterian Church belongs to the Washburn Presbytery, and was organized in June, 1881, by Rev. W. A. Sample, with F. G. Spears, E. Kraus, S. O. Spears, M. J. Spears, Mrs. E. Kraus, Mary and J. Kraus, Edna Cooper, Mrs. Clara Knobles and others. They worship in the Union Church at Charleston. They have had but two pastors, Rev. S. B. Erwin and J. T. Parton; have none at present. The membership is twenty-four.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Ozark was organized in 1858, by Rev. John Buchanan. E. Bourland and Elijah Hale were elected ruling elders. A neat brick house, erected in 1859, was the first church edifice. The present frame building was erected in 1876, at a cost of $3,000. It was dedicated in 1880 by Dr. S. H. Buchanan. Its pastors have been Revs. E. M. Roach, A. B. Johnson, S. H. McElvain and J. E. Johnston, the latter being the present pastor. The membership is 120 at this writing.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Charleston was organized in the summer of 1858, by the Rev. Richard Steele, who served as its pastor until the beginning of the Civil War, during which the members became scattered and the congregation disorganized. Some of the constituent members were Rev. Richard Steele, pastor; William Proctor, a ruling elder; Susan J. Proctor, Susan Richardson and Margaret F. Kelliam. The church was reorganized June 7, 1868, by the Rev. Richmond Cole, with the following members: Emily Cole, C. L. Dalton, Sarah E. Dalton, G. Cone, S. J. Proctor, S. A. Putman, Susan Richardson, Nannie Richardson, Margaret F. Kelliam, Kate S. Pettigrew, and William Proctor and W. F. McDonough, ruling elders. Rev. Richmond Cole was pastor of the church about twelve years. The following ministers have served as pastors: Revs. N. B. McNabb, S. L. Alexander, B. H. Pierson, D. D.; I. N. Gaither, J. S. Burt, S. H. McElvain and J. C. Francis, the latter being present pastor. At this time there are sixty-two members. They worship in the Union Church at Charleston.

The churches of this denomination in Franklin County, on the north side of the Arkansas River, belong to the Arkansas Presbytery, and those on the south side to the King Presbytery. Lone Elm (Lonelm), Mulberry, Ozark, Oak Ridge and White Oak are on the north side of the river. The names of those on the south side, except Charleston have not been ascertained.

Christian Church.—This society at Altus was organized in July, 1888, by F. B. Srigley, their present frame church edifice having been erected the year before. It has no regular pastor, but Elder H. H. McAfee, of Johnson County, an evangelist of this denomination, preaches for the congregation once a month. The membership of the church is about sixty-three.

Roman Catholic Church.—The Roman Catholic Church at Charleston, was organized in 1879, with seven families. The church now numbers about 200 souls. The pastors have been Rt. Revs. Doyle, Felix Rumpt, Bushor and Father Lewis Stutzer, the latter being now in charge. The property, consisting of the church and priest's residence, is worth about $3,000. The Altus Roman Catholic Church was organized in 1880, by Rev. M. B. Ziswyler. Henry Hoing, Henry Shriver, John Wiederkehr, Sigmund Wiederkehr, Jacob Zeier, Jacob Post, Joseph Lieber, L. Ziegler and others were constituent members. Their present frame church was built in 1881, at a cost of about $1,000, and was dedicated in 1882 by Bishop Fitzgerald. Rev. M. B. Ziswyler, who died July 24, 1887, was its pastor. Since his death the church has been supplied by the Benedictine Fathers of Logan County. This church includes forty-five families. There are two missions in the county.

The Franklin County Sunday-school Association.—This was organized in 1879, and held its tenth annual session at the White Oak Cross Roads Church house, five miles north of Ozark, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 20, 21 and 22, 1888. W. W. Jennings is president, and H. A. Nickell, secretary of the association. A majority of the churches in the county have organized Sunday-schools, which are conducted in connection with their Christian work. Franklin County, in proportion to its population, has a great many churches and church-going people, and is noted for its churches and Sunday-schools above most other counties in the State.

Young Men's Christian Association.—This was organized in Ozark in October, 1885, by C. T. Bill, of Ozark, the first president of the State Y. M. C. A., at Little Rock, and a young man earnestly devoted to Christian work. The original members were A. H. Treadway, Thomas Douglass, T. B. Davis, E. F. Allen, F. L. Slack, John Turner, Casper Winburne, Eugene Moore, W. C. Bill, W. J. Barclift, Mark Stanley, F. M. Bourland, J. W. Head and J. F. Maxey. The first officers of the association were C. T. Bill, president; J. F. Maxey, vice-president; T. B. Davis, secretary, and A. H. Treadway, treasurer. Mr. Bill has been president from the first. The association is the only one in the State that owns its property, viz., a lot and a one-story frame building 20x80 feet in size, with a double room, a reading room and lecture room.

HISTORY OF SEBASTIAN COUNTY.

NATURAL HISTORY.

Location and Boundary.—The county of Sebastian lies near the middle of the western tier of counties in the State of Arkansas, and is bounded on the north by the Arkansas River, which separates it from Crawford County; on the east by Franklin and Logan Counties; on the south by Scott County, and on the west by the Indian Territory. According to the system of public land surveys, it embraces portions of Townships 4 to 9 inclusive north of the base line, and portions of Ranges 29 to 32 inclusive west of the fifth principal meridian, and has an area of 520 square miles, or 332,800 acres of land, divided into the following classes: Mountain and high ridge, prairie, timbered uplands, river and creek bottom lands. The thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude passes through the southern part of the county, and the ninety-fourth degree of longitude west from Greenwich, or the seventeenth degree west from Washington, runs along or near its eastern boundary.

Climate.—The climate is mild and pleasant, and of a comparatively even temperature throughout the year. The mean average temperature of the atmosphere, as observed at the United States Signal Service Station at Fort Smith, since it was established there, has been as follows: 1883, 60 degrees Fahrenheit; 1884, 59 degrees Fahrenheit; 1885, 58 degrees Fahrenheit; 1886, 58 degrees Fahrenheit; 1887, 61 degrees Fahrenheit, thus making the average for the five years, 59½ degrees.

The mean maximum and minimum degrees of temperature for each month of the year 1887 is shown in the following table;

	Mean.	Maximum.	Minimum.
January.....	38	73	4
February.....	45	75	20
March.....	54	76	28
April.....	64	91	30
May.....	70	92	50
June.....	76	95	57
July.....	82	104	65
August.....	78	101	57
September.....	74	97	45
October.....	60	90	32
November.....	50	79	17
December.....	38	72	8

The first column shows the mean or average temperature during the month, the second the temperature of the hottest day, and the third the temperature of the coldest day. It will be observed that the two extremes were reached in the months of January and July—the mercury going four degrees below zero in January, and rising 104 degrees above it in July. These extremes each existed only for a few hours. By deduction from the above table it is found that the mean temperature for each of the four seasons was as follows: Spring,  $62\frac{2}{3}$  degrees; summer,  $78\frac{2}{3}$  degrees; fall,  $61\frac{1}{3}$  degrees; winter,  $40\frac{1}{3}$  degrees. These figures are official, and prove conclusively that the climate of this section of country is mild and pleasant. It is safe to take these figures as applicable to the counties treated of in this work lying south of the dividing ridge of the Boston Mountains. North of that ridge the climate is somewhat colder. The average annual rain-fall in this section of the country, as ascertained by the Signal Service Station at Fort Smith, is thirty-eight inches.

Topography.—The surface of Sebastian County is composed of mountain ridges, table lands, rolling prairies, undulating timbered lands and valleys. The elevation of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad track at its intersection with Garrison Avenue, in the city of Fort Smith, is 417 feet and nine inches above the level of the sea. This point is on the bank of the Arkansas River, about 350 feet therefrom, and 1,300 feet below the mouth of the Poteau River. It may be taken as the elevation of the valley of the Arkansas, while the other lands range therefrom to a height of 1,500 feet at the top of the highest mountains. The Poteau Mountain Range lies in the extreme southern part of the county, and its course is a little south of west. About six miles north of this, and mostly in Range 32 west, are the Sugar Loaf Mountains, running nearly parallel with the Poteau range. Six miles east of the Sugar Loaf Mountains is the southwestern extreme of Black Jack Ridge, which crosses Range 30 west, and lies astride of the boundary line between Sebastian and Scott Counties. Two miles north of the right of this ridge is Pleasant Ridge, which extends east and west about two miles. On and near the line between Townships 5 and 6 north, and extending through Ranges 29 and 30 west, lies the range of the White Oak Mountains. The Washburn Mountains form a ridge in the northern part of Township 6 north, Range 29 west, five miles in length, bearing a little south of west. The Backbone Ridge, the longest one in the county, commences near the center of Township 5 north, Range 31 west, and extends five miles north, bearing slightly to the west; thence thirteen miles east, bearing slightly to the north, to the eastern boundary of the county. Griffith Mountain, which is nearly round and between one and two miles in diameter, lies mostly in the southwest corner of Township 6 north, Range 31 west. Sand Ridge extends about three miles east from Hackett City. Backbone Ridge commences west of the county line, and extends into the county in an easterly direction about seven miles. It lies in the northern part of Township 6 north. River Mountains lie in the extreme northeast corner of the county, in Township 9 north, Range 29 west, and form a range with a northeasterly bearing three miles in length.

These mountain ridges, together with some smaller ones not here enumerated, are estimated to compose about 10 per cent of the area of the county, and are mostly unfit for cultivation, although some good farms are found on their tops and sides. With the exception of a portion of Backbone Ridge, the mountain ridges in the county all have nearly the same bearing, which is east, bearing slightly to the north.

Prairies.—Mazzard Prairie, only a few miles southeast of Fort Smith, is from three to four miles square. Long Prairie lies ten miles south of Fort Smith, and covers several sections of land. Hodge's Prairie lies in the northeastern part of Township 5 north, Range 31 west, and contains about five square miles. Beautiful mountain scenery can be seen from it in every direction. Sorrell's Prairie, surrounding Sugar Loaf Post-office, lies in the east central part of Township 5 north, Range 32 west, and contains about two sections of land. Cherokee Prairie, containing three sections of land, lies in the southern part of the county, in Township 4 north, Range 31 west. From it a splendid view of the Poteau Mountains can be had. "The other prairies are mostly under a square mile in extent rather than over, though possibly a few years ago they were much larger, for the timber is gradually growing into them from their borders."* The area of the prairie lands is not equal in extent to that of the ridge and mountain lands. After deducting the prairie, ridge and mountain lands, the balance of the surface of the county consists of valley lands and of what are called timbered uplands in about equal proportions. There are no real swamp lands in the county, but some tracts are subject to overflow in season of high water.

Drainage.—The natural drainage of the county is most thorough, having the Arkansas River on the north and the Poteau on the west, and their various tributaries. The James Fork of the latter river is formed by the conjunction of streams from the Poteau Mountains, and into it, from the extreme southwest portion of the county, flows West Creek, and from the valley north of Black Jack Ridge flows Prairie Creek. This fork then flows in a northwesterly direction, receiving the waters of many smaller streams, and finally leaves the county near the center of its western boundary line. It drains nearly all that portion of the county lying in Townships 4 and 5 north. Sugar Loaf, Big Branch, Cedar, Mill and other creeks flow from the western portion of the county into Poteau River. The central part of the county is drained mostly by the Vache Grass and its many tributaries. These tributaries empty into the main stream from all points of the compass. The Vache Grass empties into the Arkansas near the line dividing Ranges 30 and 31 west, also near the center of the northern boundary of the county. The eastern portion of the county north of the Washburn Mountains is drained in a northerly direction by Big Creek and its numerous tributaries. Big Creek empties into the Arkansas two miles above the northeast corner of the county. The Mazzard, Little Vache Grass and other streams also flow into the Arkansas on the north. The extreme eastern portions of the county, lying in Townships 5 and 6 north, are drained by Washburn and Little Washburn Creeks forming the head waters of the Petit Jean Creek, which empties into the Arkansas three counties below.

Chalybeate springs, from which pure, sparkling waters flow in great abundance, are found in many places throughout the county. Sulphur springs are also found in several localities. At one of the latter, on Sugar Loaf Mountain, a number of cottages have been erected and the place fitted up for a summer resort. Good well water is obtained at a depth of twenty feet and upward. In some portions of the county it is obtained at an average depth of thirty-five feet. The depth is governed more or less by the elevation of the locality where the wells are sunk. For culinary purpose, cistern water is generally preferred and considered the most healthful. Upon the whole the water supply is abundant, and of the best quality.

Forests.—The following pertaining to the forests of Sebastian County is taken from Mr. John Carnall's valuable "Notes on Western Arkansas:"

Post oak is the most common growth, and red oak and black oak are almost everywhere interspersed. There is more red and black oak on the red soil, and post oak on the yellow soil. Then we have blackjack, hickory, dogwood, etc., on all the hills, and in all the bottoms, cottonwood, sweetgum (now extensively used in making furniture), walnut, sycamore, elm, maple, cypress, white oak, ash — seventy or eighty kinds in all — specimens of nearly all of which, dressed and undressed, may be seen at the State capital.

Coal.—The following is compiled from the geological report of Prof. David Dale Owen made some years ago:

The most important locality of coal in Sebastian County lies on the southern edge of Long Prairie, known as the Jennie Lind coal, in the northwest and southeast quarters of Section 33, Township 7, Range 31 west. The following is a section of this coal as it occurs at Greene's bank in the northwest quarter of the above mentioned section of land:

Rusty, ferruginous gray shales, with segregations of iron ore, 5 feet, 6 inches.

A streak of black shale.

A few inches of coal.

A few inches of black shale.

Upper member of the main coal, 2 feet 5 inches.

Clay parting, 1 inch.

Lower member of main coal, 2 feet 2 inches.

Coal rash (a few inches).

This coal is therefore 4 feet 7 inches in thickness, and is said sometimes to attain a thickness of 5 feet and over.

The following is a chemical analysis of a specimen taken from the upper member:

Volatile matter, 13.75 (water 1.40, gas 12.35); coke, 86.25 (fixed carbon 82.25, ashes, flesh color, 4.00). This coal swells up considerably in coking.

At Long's opening, on the southeast quarter of Section 32, Township 7 north, Range 31 west, the coal has the same thickness. The only difference is that the clay parting is from half an inch to an inch thicker than at Greene's bank. The dip is nearly the same.

A specimen from this bank yielded by analysis: Volatile matter, 14.50 (water 3.80, gas 10.70); coke, 75.50 (fixed carbon 84.10, ashes, light brown, 1.40).

This coal swelled up a great deal in coking, and gave off a gas which burned with a strong flame.

These analyses prove this coal to be semi-bituminous, like some of the coals in George Creek Valley, Maryland, and are far richer in fixed carbon than most of the coals in the western States, and, therefore, of course, almost twice as durable in the fire, with proper access of air. It contains just enough volatile combustible matter to keep it ignited without the artificial blast required for anthracite. If it can be mined free from pyrites and shale, it is one of the most valuable kinds of coal that can be offered in the market, especially for manufacturing purposes, if it be properly managed under a knowledge of its composition.

The Jenny Lind coal is situated from eight to ten miles from the Arkansas River. Both its quality and thickness must exercise a most important influence on the future prospects of Sebastian County, especially in the location of lines of railroad in the valley of the Arkansas River.

On Big Creek there is a three-foot vein of coal, probably equivalent to the Jenny Lind coal, which is well spoken of by blacksmiths.

In the ridge south of Jenny Lind coal, judging by the dip of the strata and character of the rocks, the coal must run out. A sudden reversal of the dip, however, brings the coal in again on James' Fork, and in Hodge's Prairie. The summit level between Long Prairie and James Creek is 240 feet, and is composed of shale capped with sandstone, dipping at an angle of  $30^{\circ}$  south  $10^{\circ}$  to  $20^{\circ}$  east. A cellular sandstone is intercalated in the mass of the shale of this ridge, which rock I find persistent throughout this part of Arkansas, and is, undoubtedly, when deep-seated in the synclinal troughs, a siliferous or salt-bearing sandstone.

The coal on the Sand Ridge branch of James' Fork, in Section 22, Township 6, Range 33 west, is owned by G. B. Morrow on the McMurtry estate. This coal, as far as entered, is three and a half feet, and seems to be increasing in thickness as it is followed into the bank. It is divided into two members of about equal thickness, by a shale parting of one inch, and rests on a bed of white clay. The succession of the strata in the ridge between the Jenny Lind and the James' Fork coal, appears to be as follows:

Thin-bedded and flaggy sandstone.

Heavier-bedded sandstone (the Greenwood building stone).

Cellular or siliferous sandstone.

Thinner-bedded sandstone with argillaceous flakes, containing equisetaceæ and other fossil plants.

Variegated shales.

These strata, which geologically belong under the coal, must have a thickness of 500 feet or more. A measurement was made by the aneroid barometer, on June 20, 1859, of the peak of the Sugar Loaf Range, near the Line road, in the vicinity of Taylor's. It was found to be 1,230 feet above Taylor's, and 1,410 feet above Thomas Hicks'.

The structure of the mountain was found to be approximately as follows:

Schistose sandstone with intercalated bands of sandstone, 340 feet.

Conspicuous bench of heavy bedded sandstone, 90 feet.

Dark gray and variegated shales (easily decomposing), 800 feet.

From the summit of the Sugar Loaf Mountain there is an extensive prospect into the Indian country on the west, with a perfectly conical peak in the foreground, a few miles beyond the Indian boundary, of considerable greater elevation than the peak measured. On West Creek, a branch of James' Creek, a two-foot vein has been opened by the blacksmith at two different localities about two and a half miles apart.

A thick bed of coal occurs on James' Fork, one mile north of west of Sugar Creek Post-office, known as the More coal-bank. It is supposed to be six feet thick. Three and one-half miles east of More's mill there is a good coal, on the property of J. R. Smoot, on the water of James' Fork. Also at 'Squire Sorrell's, three miles south of James' Fork, of which coal there is only about one foot exposed in the bed of the stream, but extending to an unknown depth below. The probable thickness is about two feet. Here the coal dips at an angle of  $40^{\circ}$  to  $50^{\circ}$  north  $10^{\circ}$  to  $20^{\circ}$  west.

There are a number of coal banks in this vicinity, all within eight miles of each other. I had an opportunity of examining a good natural exposure of coal three-quarters of a mile below More's mill, on James' Fork. It crops out under a bank of variegated ferruginous shales, with numerous thin bands of slaty and kidney hydrated oxide of iron.

The coal is three and one-half to four feet in thickness, and dips at an angle of nearly  $10^{\circ}$ . There are block shale and coal rash, measuring about nine inches, insinuated between the coal and the fire clay. The coal lies fifteen feet above the waters of James' Creek. A section of this bank is as follows:

Sandstone with calamites.

Variegated shales with iron ore, twenty-one feet.

Coal, three feet six inches.

Block shale and coal rash, one foot.

Fire clay, one foot.

Flaggy sandstone with calamites.

This coal lies very conveniently for mining, as it can be worked without being incommoded by water, which is apt to be the case with most of the coals in this part of Sebastian County.

On the northeast part of the northwest quarter of Section 26, Township 5 north, Range 31 west, is a four-foot coal, on Cherokee Creek. This coal is covered with three or four feet of gray shale, and dips nearly 45°.

Coal also shows itself on the southeast corner of Section 24, Township 5 north, Range 31 west; also on the southwest corner of Section 23, the same township, and can be traced for about half a mile, maintaining a thickness of about four feet. On the southeast of Section 9, Township 4 north, Range 32 west, coal is again visible, on the property of Timothy Bloodworth; also on Section 27, Township 5 north, Range 31 west. This latter bank is from twenty to twenty-five feet above the bed of the creek, and has never been properly opened so as to show its whole thickness.

It is probable that the whole of Hodge's Prairie, north of these coal out-crops, is underlaid by this bed of coal, which could be reached by shafts of moderate depth.

The following, which is supplementary to the foregoing, is copied from Mr. Carnall's "Notes on Western Arkansas:" We were acquainted with Mr. Owen, afforded him some facilities for finding the beds, and got from him much valuable information; but there are now five beds open, and their thickness and extent known, where there was one when he made his reconnoissance. Numerous banks near Jenny Lind, all four to seven feet thick, are now open, and where he speaks of a thick bed of coal on James' Fork, the whole country, mountain and valley, is found to be underlaid with coal four to eleven feet thick, and we sent a block six feet thick from there to the Louisville Exposition, so that instead of Jenny Lind being the most important locality, it may be near Sugar Loaf Mountain, twenty-five miles from Fort Smith. Mr. Owen says if it can be mined free from pyrites and shale it is one of the most valuable kinds that can be offered in the market. We say it can be, and has been for twenty years, mined free from pyrites and shale, and there is no trouble to do this. Sometimes a piece of shale sticks to it, but in mining it is struck off and cast aside; and any pyrites, so far as our information extends, is in blocks or lumps, readily distinguishable by appearance and weight, and never comes to market with the coal. This coal is universally used by the people for fires, and hauled twelve miles it is cheaper than wood, if you have to cut the wood. It is used for making steam, and is, we believe, equal to the Pittsburgh coal for that purpose, and if there is any coal better for heating, steam, coking, etc., we do not happen to know it, and it has this advantage, unknown to us to be common to any other western coal, it has no smoke.

The following is an extract from the geological report of Prof. C. B. Gannaway, made in June 1883:

By reference to the table showing the mines opened, it will be seen that the coal extends throughout the entire county.

Coal banks opened are: Claybourn, thickness of coal (?) feet; Harris, 6 feet; Gwyn, 6 feet; Noblet, 3 feet; West, 3 feet; Patterson, 3 feet; Pulliam, 3 feet; Martin, 4 feet; Kersh,  $7\frac{1}{2}$  feet—200-foot tunnel, 8-foot vein, with two 3-inch shale partings; Edmonson, 6 feet; Spessard, 6 feet; Dale, 4 feet; Douglas,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  feet; Emor, 5 feet—shaft 50 feet to coal, hoisted by engine; Sparks, 5 feet; Petty,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  feet—two tunnels, 100 and 300 feet; Mendenhall, 5 feet; Smart, 4 feet; Bostic, 5 feet; Cambell  $1\frac{1}{2}$  feet.

Wells in which coal have been found: Brewster, thickness of coal, 7 feet; well near Chocoville, 8 feet; Parson Young, 4 feet; Gwyn, 16 feet; Gwyn's shaft, 7 feet; Anthony Lewis, 7 feet; Armstrong, 7 feet; James Chastine, 10 feet; Widow Clayton, 3 feet; Hackett City public well, 3 feet; Yount's, 5 feet; Izell's,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  feet; J. H. Kirby's, (?) feet; S. W. Dale's, 14 feet.

Iron.—The same authority gives the following pertaining to the iron ore deposits:

The iron deposits of Sebastian County are co-extensive with the coal. It is a rare exception to find a bed of coal that is not overlaid by numerous strata of spathos iron ore. These strata often occur in great numbers, varying in thickness from one to eight inches at cropping. These strata are separated by from one-half to ten feet of ferruginous shale. A series of strata is reported on the southwest quarter of Section 24, Township 5 north, Range 31 west, some numbers of which measure fourteen inches in thickness; number of strata not known. Skirting Mazzard Prairie is a succession of slate hills with heavy deposits of spathic iron; in fact this is the only mineral we may look to as a source of iron in this region, as iron in the presence of carbonaceous matter (coal) is invariably found in the form of carbonate. I have examined numerous specimens of clay iron stone (an argillaceous carbonate), but generally they are too poor in iron to attract the notice of an iron master. The spathos ore, occurring as black-band, is the prevailing ore, and owing to its property of easy reduction this ore is profitably worked in many sections."

Building Stone.—Prof. Gannaway further says: "The numerous ridges which traverse Sebastian County furnish the best of freestone (sandstone). In color it is from gray to blue in some localities, but the prevailing color is gray, sometimes tinged with yellow, from presence of quantities of peroxide of iron. This stone is compact, easily worked when first taken out, hardens on exposure to weather, suffers no disintegration when exposed to moisture and cold; in fact it is as staple for building purposes as the best granite. The point which attracts most universal attention is the regular form in which the stone occurs. At Greenwood, sixteen miles southeast from Fort Smith, a quarry has been opened, showing strata from one-half inch to one foot thick, having a perfectly smooth bed, requiring no dressing whatever. Each stratum is uniform in thickness, and may be taken out in regular forms containing 100 square feet of surface. Should a railroad penetrate this section flagging would be quite an item of export. Quarries have been opened south and east of Fort Smith, southeast of Salem, and, in fact, near every small town in the county."

There is on exhibition in the rooms of the chamber of commerce, in the city of Fort Smith, specimens of the different qualities of coal, iron ore, slate and other natural productions found in Sebastian County, the site of which will well repay a visit to their rooms.

Soil.—The best information concerning the soil and its productiveness is furnished by Mr. John Carnall, an old and well posted citizen of Sebastian County, in his "Notes on Western Arkansas," as follows: "Our soil from the west line of the State, extending east, say 100 miles, and from the benches of the Boston Mountains on the north to those of Poteau and other mountains on the south, say forty to fifty miles wide, and through which the Arkansas River flows, and which we call the Arkansas Valley, is most generally a light yellow, called a mulatto soil, but in many sections it is a light red. It will ordinarily produce, with good cultivation an average of three-fourths of a bale of cotton, twenty-five to thirty-five bushels of corn, ten to fifteen bushels of wheat, twenty to forty bushels of oats, two to three tons of millet hay per acre.

"This, it is to be understood, is the general upland soil of the country, not including creek or river bottoms, and there is a great similarity in it all through this valley; the woodlands and the prairies not differing greatly in quality of soil, and the level, undulating and hilly is in soil much the same, the hilly having some rock intermixed.

"The river bottom lands on the Arkansas River are among the best in the world, and will produce, with good cultivation, from  $1\frac{1}{2}$  to 2 bales of cotton, 75 to 100 bushels corn, 30 to 40 bushels wheat, 3 to 5 tons millet per acre, and the creek bottoms will average a mean between the uplands and river bottoms. A peculiar feature of the uplands of this whole country is the remarkable retentive quality of its fertility. This is owing to the sub-soil of clay, which retains the fertilizing qualities, and at the same time prevents the lands from washing. \* \* \* Many of our farmers are now making two crops a year on the same land. This is quite noticeable in and around Fort Smith, where market gardening is carried on; two crops of potatoes, two of millet, or a crop of potatoes and one of turnips, of wheat or oats, and then peas or millet, etc."

ORIGINAL OCCUPANCY.

Mound Builders.—It is believed by scientists and archæologists, that away back in the dim, shadowy past—"a time to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary"—in an age prehistoric, that this country was inhabited and occupied by a race of people known as the Mound Builders—this name being attributed to them on account of the various kinds of earthworks, and their contents which they left behind them. Evidences of the existence of such a race of people on the American continent, before it was occupied by the Indians, have been found in all portions of the United States, but the question as to whether they were a race of people that long ago became extinct cannot be discussed here, for the reason that it is not profitable to discuss a subject about which little or nothing can be definitely known. There are some earth formations in Sebastian County supposed by some to have been made by the Mound Builders, but so far as they have been explored nothing of interest leading to a certainty as to whether they were formed by nature or by man has been found.

Indians.—There is positive history, however, that the Indian or Red Man occupied this country when it was first discovered and encroached upon by the present race of white people. When the United States obtained title from France to the territory lying west of the Mississippi, it became necessary to treat with the Indians to secure their titles also, not that it was recognized that such savage, untutored beings had any title to the lands more than belonged to the wild animals that also inhabited them, but for the purpose of getting peaceable possession of them and to secure safety, if possible, for the early settlers.

That numerous and powerful tribe of Indians known as the Osages claimed the territory from the Missouri River on the north to the Red River on the south, and the Quawpaw tribe of Indians also inhabited and claimed Central or Western Arkansas, and after their removal from Georgia and other States the Choc-taws and Cherokees inhabited and claimed a part of Western Arkansas. The original Indian occupants, however, were the Osages and Quawpaws. These Indian titles were finally extinguished by treaties at the following times and places, to wit : With the Great and Little Osages on the 10th of November, 1808, at Fort Clark, on the Missouri; with the Quawpaws in August, 1818, for a portion of their claim, and again in November, 1824, for the balance; with the Choctaws on the 20th of October, 1820; and again with the Great and Little Osage tribes on the 25th of September, 1825, at St. Louis.

Wild Animals and Game.—When the settlement of the Territory composing Sebastian County began, all the wild animals native to this part of the continent were found roaming at large. The buffaloes, however, were not very numerous, and lingered only a few years after being pursued by the white hunter. Bears, wolves, panthers, catamounts, wildcats, deer, elk, antelopes and the smaller animals were here in great numbers. The bears were hunted and killed by the pioneers, who used their meat for food and their skins for bedding and raiment, but they have become almost extinct, except as one is now and then found strayed away from their mountain fastnesses in the counties farther south. The wolves have ceased to be troublesome, but still a few remain in the mountains remote from the settlements. Likewise with the other savage animals. Now and then a deer is found in the mountain retreats. In the early days they were extensively hunted and killed, and their flesh was extensively used for food, and their skins for men's clothing. The elk and antelopes have become extinct. The smaller animals remain in considerable numbers. Wild turkeys were originally very abundant, and were extensively used for food. They are now found only in limited numbers. Ducks and other wild fowl are still found along the water courses.

SETTLEMENT.

Fort Smith Military Post.—The authentic date of the first settlement of the territory now composing Sebastian County is that of the establishment of the military post at Fort Smith, in October or November, 1817. That there were white settlers, farmers and traders here before that time there is no doubt, but if so their names and history, except that of Capt. John Rogers, the first white settler on the site of Fort Smith, have not been preserved. He came soon after the battle of New Orleans terminated the War of 1812, and was afterward appointed first sutler to this post. Some of the soldiers who first came to garrison the post became permanent settlers. Among them was Aaron Barling, the father of Mrs. Jerry Kannady, now living in Fort Smith. After leaving the garrison, about the year 1828, he settled on the military road nine miles east of Fort Smith, and there for many years kept a house for the entertainment of travelers. The following letter, addressed to the committee appointed to collect historical matter for the centennial celebration held at Fort Smith in 1886, and embraced in Col. Ben T. Duval's address on that occasion, is of much interest pertaining to the settlement of this part of the country:

BILLINGSLEY P. O., ARK., June 26, 1876.

Sir: In answer to your note of June 21, I have this to say: My father, with two other families, moved from Middle Tennessee—Charles Adams and Samuel Williams, six in each family, making in all eighteen persons. It was in 1814 we came to the post of Arkansas in a flat-boat. There we found a small French and Creole village. The Quapaw Indians lived on the south side of the river. There we exchanged our flat-boat for a keel-boat with an old Indian trader; there was nothing like steamboats on the Mississippi River then. We made our way the best we could until we got to the Cadron, where we found one of my father's brothers, who had moved from Kentucky in an early day. We stayed there one year, then there was a treaty made with the Cherokees. They then lived on the Illinois and Point Remove Creeks, on the north side of the river. Some of them lived also on the south side of the river, on Shoal Creek—that is Boal's Village. They moved to Texas, to Cherokee County. Then we moved to Big Mulberry in 1816. We numbered about eighteen families, and lived there two years, in all the luxuries of life that a new country could afford, such as buffalo and bear, deer and elk meat, and fish and honey. And we had pound-cake every day, for we beat all the meal that we eat in a mortar; and the first year our corn gave out about six weeks before roasting-ears came in; the substitute for bread was venison, dried by the fire in a mortar and made in small cakes and fried in bear's oil; that hoap us out until forward Irish potatoes came in. We had all things in common. We had no doctors nor lawyers in those happy days. The first Legislature was held at the post of Arkansas. My father was a member. We had no tax to pay but county tax, the General Government paid all the balance. About that time Maj. Bradford came to Fort Smith and set up that post, and we furnished him with buffalo meat for the soldiers, and then we got some flour from him, which was a great treat to us. All the way Maj. Bradford got the mail then was by sending a soldier to the post of Arkansas in a canoe, which took him about three weeks to make the trip. Then the Government made another treaty with the Indians, and we moved to the south side of the river, and commenced settling all along the river from Fort Smith to the present seat of government; first some in McClain's Bottom. some at Dardenelle, some on Shoal Creek, and so on. And we soon got strict enough to hold camp-meetings, and everybody went and left their houses for a week at a time, and when they came back everything was all right. We then generally built our chimneys up to the mantel-piece, and hung our meat outside on the ribs of the house.

If any man had a lock on any of his doors in those days he would have been looked on with suspicion. We, about this time, began to get some mail contracts, and soon after that some law mixt in. We had some old fashioned brake-downs on a dirt floor, and if any of us lost a toe-nail we never said anything about it. You must excuse bad writing, etc. In haste,

JOHN BILLINGSLEY.

N. B. I have a little more time, and will go a little further. The county of Crawford at that time contained all of Washington and Sebastian, and the first court that was held in Crawford was at Fort Smith, by Judge Bates, of Batesville. All offices were filled by appointment of the governor. The first clerk that was appointed was George Pickett, and the first sheriff was James Wilson, and the first esquire was McClane, of McClane's Bottom. Well, the way men dressed themselves in those days was by dressing their deer-skins and making full suits of the same. There was occasionally a French trader came up the river in large canoes and brought domestics, calico and checks, and some earthenware and cutlery. We paid them 50 cents per yard for calico, 87½ cents for domestics, and 40 cents for checks. I gave $4 for the first set of teacups I ever owned, and very common at that; and $2 for a small dish, such as you get now for 50 cents, and $4 for a set of knives and forks, and common at that. We paid for all things in beaver, otter, bear and deer-skins and bear's oil and beeswax. The first settler was Capt. Rogers, and he got very rich. So I close at this time.

J. B.

Other Settlers.—In addition to the early settlers mentioned who settled in and around about Fort Smith were the following, viz.: Clark Landers, H. A. Quesenbury, the father of the eccentric genius, William Quesenbury, William Tichenal, Matthew Moore, Robert Sinclair, George S. and Charles A. Birnie, Matthew Moss, Gen. Nicks, Robert Gibson, Curry Barnett, James McDavid, Alfred Ray, Dr. David D. Williams, Stagner and William Duval, father of Col. Ben. T. Duval, who in 1825 came from Virginia, and ascended the Arkansas River in a keel-boat, and established a trading post on the land afterward owned by his son, Dr. Elias R. Duval. In 1829 he moved his family from Virginia to Fort Smith, and resided there until his death, which occurred in 1851, from an attack of cholera. In the extreme early days of Fort Smith, William Quesenbury, W. H. Rogers and Ben. T. Duval were the only boys in and about the place. Maj. Ben. Moore, from Virginia, settled in 1821, at Moore's Rock, on the Arkansas River, about eighteen miles below Fort Smith, on the farm now occupied by John B. Luce. At his own expense he cut a channel for the passage of vessels through the bed-rock which extended across the river at his place. He was the first individual who raised cotton and tobacco in this part of the county, and built the first grist-mill between Fort Smith and Little Rock. John Penn Dillard, a lawyer, came from Lynchburg, Va., in 1822, and settled at Old Crawford Court-house, and in his log cabin he entertained the lawyers who came there from a distance to attend court. In 1823 James Griggs settled near Sulphur Springs. Judge James Woodson Bates, brother of the renowned Frederick and Edward Bates, and who presided at the first court ever held at Fort Smith, settled on a farm near Moore's Rock about the year 1830, and lived there until his death, which occurred in 1846. He married a daughter of Maj. Ben. Moore, and sister of Mrs. Dillard, now of Fort Smith. Judge Hugh Knox settled on what is known as the "Knox Farm," on the Arkansas River, about eight miles below Fort Smith. Gen. Matthew Arbuckle, who, as colonel of the Seventh United States Infantry, was the second commander of the post of Fort Smith, settled on Arbuckle's Island, on the Arkansas River, twenty-five miles below Fort Smith. William Moore and Ben. Moore, Jr., settled at Moore's Rock the same time that Maj. Ben. Moore settled that place. Jack Tittsworth settled on the Little Rock road, at Short Mountain, and kept a house for the entertainment of travelers, his being the first house of entertainment on that road next below Aaron Barrings. Judge Jesse Turner, who now resides at Van Buren, was an early settler of Old Crawford Court-house, and has followed the county seat of Crawford County from place to place to its final location.

Among the later early settlers of Fort Smith were Capt. Nat. Gookin,* who was also one of the first school-teachers in the place; Jerry R. Kannady, who for many years was a prominent and much respected citizen, settled here in 1836, where he resided until his death, which occurred April 25, 1882. His widow survives him, and is still a resident of the place. Dr. Joseph H. Bailey and John Stryker were also early citizens of Fort Smith. Dr. J. H. T. Main settled here in March, 1838; and the only citizens of the place of that date who now survive with the Doctor are John Stryker, Col. Ben. T. Duval, William H. Rogers and Mrs. Jerry Kannady, and perhaps one or two other ladies. Michael Manning, a resident of Fort Smith, now over eighty years of age, and who unfortunately has lost his sight, but still has a bright intellect and a wonderful memory, hired himself to a government agent in New Orleans to come here and work on the fort. He arrived May 10, 1840, and has resided here ever since. Col. Samuel M. Rutherford, the first representative in the General Assembly from this county, and afterward judge of the county and probate courts thereof, was also an early settler. He died April 1, 1867. Maj. Elias Rector was an early settler, and a citizen of the Fort Smith vicinity for over forty years. He died at his residence in 1878. Another old settler was Joseph Armorer, who came here some time in "the thirties." W. H. Mayers came from Maryland in 1841, settled in Fort Smith, and was for many years engaged with his brother, M. Mayers, in mercantile business.

Eaton Tatum, at whose house Sebastian County was organized, came from Missouri and settled at Jenny Lind in 1843; at that time there were settlements, in addition to those named, at Greenwood, Hodge's Prairie, Mazzard Prairie and in the Sugar Loaf Valley. The only settlers then at Greenwood were Reuben Coker and his two brothers, Henry and John, and Coleman Norris, and Dr. Allen was the only one in Sugar Loaf Valley. On Mazzard Prairie were Jesse Ross and Samuel Caldwell. James J. Baker, now a merchant in Greenwood, settled at Jenny Lind in 1845. His nearest neighbors were then Maj. Tatum, of that place; John G. Little, who lived less than a mile east thereof; the widow Welty and her sons, John and Henry, who lived on the Vache Grass, two and a half miles northeast; W. O. Hunter, who lived one mile east; — Donaldson, who lived two and a half miles east; Judge James Clark, who lived the same distance northeast; Henry Ross, who lived two miles north, and Jesse Ross (already mentioned), who lived four miles north on Mazzard Prairie; and between the latter and Long Prairie, and on Long Prairie, was a little colony of Germans: Christopher Grober, Peter Euper, Casper Euper, Gottlieb Ellichen and Julius Richards. Perhaps these were not all there in 1845, at the date of Mr. Baker's settlement, but were either there then or came soon thereafter. The first settlers on Mazzard Prairie, in addition to those already named, were Jesse, Thomas and Seaburn Standifer and Samuel B. Stevens. The early settlers were very fond of horse-racing, and near the residence of Samuel Caldwell, on the south edge of Mazzard Prairie, they prepared and maintained a race-track on which they trained their horses for speed.

James Rogers settled one mile east of Greenwood, and Coleman Norris immediately south. Reuben Coker lived where Judge C. B. Neal now lives, at Greenwood; Henry Coker near by, and John, his brother, a little to the north. Anderson Tinker settled a short distance southwest of Greenwood, and John Miller two miles due south, and beyond him James Morris. The latter two were stock raisers. Jordan Smith settled one and a half miles west of Greenwood; James and Mason Fletcher three miles north; Leonard Spradling six and William McAllister eight miles north. Farther down on the Vache Grass were the settlements of W. L. Seaman, William Price, William Ward, Grandy Ake and Judge Charles Milor; the latter at the mouth of Vache Grass.

Among the early settlers in the vicinity of the present village of Salem (Witcherville) were Walter T. Woodson, who came from Virginia in 1846, and settled one-half mile southeast thereof; Ransom Pilley, who came from North Carolina in 1849, and settled one mile southeast thereof; George Maynard, a Baptist preacher, who came from Tennessee some time prior to 1850, and settled one and a half miles west of the site of the village; John Martindale, who came from Missouri, and settled one and a half miles northwest thereof; Churchill Jones, one mile south; Joel Allison, one mile northeast; John Robins, from Tennessee, two miles west, and Joseph Evans, from Alabama, between one and two miles west. All of these are dead except, probably, Joel Allison, who moved away. William J. Witcher came from Virginia in 1850, and settled on the site of Salem, and afterward established the village, and still resides there, and as a servant of Uncle Sam distributes mail to his subjects. The same year Thomas Powers came from Indiana, and settled near Witcher's place, and afterward moved to California. Benjamin French and Thomas Sprouse, some time in "the forties," came from Alabama, and settled in the same neighborhood, and afterward moved to Texas. Also in "the forties," James T. Gillim came from Tennessee, and settled where he still lives, one and a half miles west of Salem.

In 1851 Levi Barrett came from Georgia, and settled on Horse Shoe Ridge, one the site of the present town of Huntington, where he and his aged wife still reside. Eli Shackelford, James Wilson, Charles Burton and Samuel Brown, all now deceased, were among the first settlers in this vicinity. Blany Harper, deceased, settled the place south of the ridge where Joseph Martin now lives. John Nelson, now deceased, came from Tennessee, and settled two miles west of the present town of Huntington. Squire Frazier came from North Carolina, and settled where he now resides, about three miles from Huntington. Abe West, now deceased, came from Tennessee, and settled between the present towns of Huntington and Mansfield. The early settlers of the extreme southern part of Sebastian County, in the valley between the Sugar Loaf and Poteau Mountains, known as the Sugar Loaf Valley, who settled there in "the forties," were James, Jack and Ned Tucker, who came from Mississippi; Earley Bales, Glenn, Fleming, Bloodworth, Squire Stafford, Dr. Allen, Daniel Dees, Rev. Snedley, Nicholson, Casey, Gist, Hart, O'Neal, Mayes and Norton. All of these, who settled there prior to 1846, are now dead. Dr. Walker, who lives in the same valley, but in the edge of Scott County, and who now practices law at Mansfield, settled there in 1846, and is the only surviving settler who resided there at that date. Later early settlers in the vicinity of the town of Hartford were C. E. Goddard, who came from Washington County in 1858; William Barnes, John Patton, Thomas Chronnister, William Woodson and Dr. J. D. Williams.

The early settlers of the vicinity of Hackett City and of the west central portion of the county were as follows: In 1839 William Tichenal settled at the place now called Jenson, and subsequently about a mile south of the present town of Hackett, where he lived until 1851, and then went to California, where he is believed to be still living. About the year 1830 William H.

McMurtry came from Missouri and settled near the line of the Indian Territory, and two miles west of the site of Hackett City, and near the same time William Fleming settled on the James Fork, two miles south of the latter place. Fleming moved away, and about the year 1851 his place was occupied by Matthew Moore. About the year 1839 Jacob Bender, formerly a soldier in the United States Army, settled one mile west of the site of Hackett City. James Green settled on the place where Mr. McMurtry, son of William H. McMurtry, now lives, at Hackett City. Thomas Patton, a blacksmith, settled on the site of this town, on the west side of the branch, some time prior to 1845. About the year 1843 a Mr. Pulliam settled a mile and a quarter southeast of the site of Hackett City, and Thomas Patton, the blacksmith, moved onto the same place about the year 1847, and lived there until he was killed in a cyclone a few years ago. Carbon Howell settled a little farther east. Samuel Sorrells and Lewis Brewer settled on Sorrells' Prairie over fifty years ago. Jeremiah Hackett came from Ohio in 1841, and settled on the place where he now lives, one mile southwest of Hackett City. In 1851 J. M. Hicks settled on the line five miles south of Jenson, and established a trading place for the Indians, the article mostly purchased by them being whisky. The Weltys and Reasoners and Ned Moore settled at the base of the Sugar Loaf Mountain, on the north side. In 1840 Harmon Mickell settled about seven miles south of Fort Smith, and about the same time John McMurtrey settled six miles north of Hackett City. Elzie Hano settled two miles northeast of the latter place, and P. Evans about a mile farther east. The latter was a soldier under Gen. Jackson in the battle of the Horseshoe, and during the late Civil War he was killed by a Confederate soldier after he had been captured.

By reference to dates it will be observed that the settlement of the territory of Sebastian County began at Fort Smith in 1817, and then followed down the river; that the portion bordering on the river was first settled, and that the central and southern portion of the county was not settled to any considerable extent until after the year 1840. Prior to 1850 the country was settled very slowly, after that more rapidly.

Referring to the early settlers of the county Col. Duval, in his historical address of 1876, said:

In those days there was a close sympathy and brotherhood among the people. Persons living fifty miles apart were neighbors in all the term implies. A camp-meeting, a funeral or a dance would bring them together. The ladies, young and old, would often travel over a great distance, on a visit or to a dance. They had to travel on horseback, for even in my day a buggy or carriage was unknown. The young ladies would pack their party finery in a satchel or saddle-bags, mount their steeds and joyfully ride fifty miles to a dance. There are some here to-day of both sexes who have attended parties under these circumstances, and they will tell you, with the sparkle of other days in their eyes, that those dances, often prolonged till "broad daylight," and repeated for several nights, on the rude puncheons, by the light of a tallow dip or pine knot, to the music of the fiddle and tambourine, were merrier and afforded more genuine pleasure than you can enjoy with the luxurious surroundings of a full band of music in a splendid hall.*

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

Creating Act.—The act of the General Assembly creating the county of Sebastian was approved January 10, 1851, by Gov. John Seldon Roane. It provided as follows:

That all that portion of the county of Crawford lying south of the Arkansas River, and also all that portion of the counties of Scott and Polk included in the following boundaries, viz.: Beginning on the western boundary line of Crawford County at low water mark, on the south side of the Arkansas River, running south with said western boundary line to where said line intersects the northern boundary line of Scott County; thence south with the western boundary line of Scott County to where said line intersects the northern boundary line of Polk County; thence south with the western boundary line of Polk County to the base line; thence east with said base line to the range line between Ranges 30 and 31 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence north with the said range line to where it intersects the Black Jack Ridge; thence in the middle of the top of said ridge, to where said ridge is crossed by the range line between Ranges 29 and 30 west; thence north with said range line to where it intersects the township line between Townships 5 and 6 north; thence east with said township line to where it intersects the range line between Ranges 28 and 29 west; thence north with said range line to the southern boundary line of Franklin County; thence west with the said boundary line of Franklin County to where said line intersects the eastern boundary line of Crawford County; thence north with said line to the middle of the main channel of the Arkansas River; thence west up the middle of the main channel of the Arkansas River to where the main channel of said river is intersected by the western boundary line of Crawford County; thence south to the place of beginning.

*For a description of the "pioneer's cabin," "pioneer weddings" and other customs of the settlers, see "History of Benton County" elsewhere in this work.

According to this description Sebastian County originally extended clear across, and included the western part of Scott, and also a small portion of the northwestern part of Polk County. The act creating the county was drawn up by the Hon. Ben. T. Duval, one of the original surviving settlers of Fort Smith, who was at that time clerk of the House of Representatives, and was presented by Harvey Steward, a member from Crawford County. In the convention of 1861 the southern boundary of the county was fixed, by ordinance, on the top of the Poteau Mountains, and the territory taken from Scott and Polk Counties was restored. A more definite description of the boundary lines of Sebastian County, as now recognized, is as follows:

Beginning at the point where the middle of the main channel of the Arkansas River intersects the western boundary of the State of Arkansas, thence running south on said western boundary line to the township line between Townships 8 and 4 north; thence east on said township line to the range line between Ranges 30 and 31 west; thence north on said range line to the township and correction line between Townships 4 and 5 north; thence west on said township and correction line (a mile and a quarter more or less) to the corrected range line; thence north on said range line to the middle of Black Jack Ridge; thence in a northeasterly direction along the middle of said ridge to the range line between Ranges 29 and 30 west; thence north on said range line to the township line between Townships 5 and 6 north; thence east on said township line to the range line between Ranges 28 and 29 west; thence north on the range line (five miles more or less) to the southern boundary of Franklin County; thence west with the southern boundary of that county to the middle of Range 29 west; thence north on section lines and on western boundary of Franklin County to the middle of the main channel of the Arkansas River; thence up the middle of the main channel of said river to place of beginning.

Seat of Justice.—The act creating the county located the temporary seat of justice at the house of Eaton Tatum, who afterward laid out a town there, which, upon the suggestion of Charles A. Hinkley, a member of the bar, was named Jenny Lind, in honor of the celebrated songstress of that name. The county, as it was then composed, embraced Big Creek, Upper and Sugar Loaf Townships of the parent county, Crawford. The first election for county officers was held on the 27th of January, 1851, and resulted in the selection of James Clark as county judge, Samuel Brooke Stephens, sheriff, both of whom died many years ago, and John Carnall, formerly sheriff of Crawford County, as clerk. At the same time two commissioners for the county at large, and one from each civil township, were elected to select a site for and locate the county seat. John D. Arbuckle and Reuben Coker were elected at large, John Jones from Big Creek, Samuel Edmondson from Upper, and William Stafford from Sugar Loaf.

These commissioners met at Jenny Lind in May, 1851, and located the seat of justice on forty acres of land lying in Section 12, Township 6 north, Range 31 west, and donated by Reuben Coker for that purpose. They also named the place Greenwood. Fort Smith was then a rival point for the county seat, and was preferred as such by its citizens, as well as by many citizens in the northwestern part of the county. A contest immediately arose between those preferring the respective places named, as to where the public buildings should be constructed. This contest resulted, the following year, in the removal of the county seat to Fort Smith, where it remained until 1854, when it was taken back, by a majority vote of the people, to Greenwood. The following quotations are taken from the historical address of Col. Ben. T. Duval, delivered at Fort Smith July 4, 1876:

The contest over, the location of the county seat increased in bitterness, and the town and country were arrayed in open hostility to the great detriment to the public interests. It engendered mutual hatred and distrust between the sections, and had its influence upon all the elections. In 1861 John T. London, who lived at Greenwood, and myself, then as now a resident of Fort Smith, were members of the House of Representatives, and Green J. Clark, who was also a citizen of Greenwood, was the senator. We agreed upon an act dividing the county into two judicial districts. The Fort Smith District to have two terms a year of the circuit court and four terms of the probate court, to be held at Fort Smith, and a like number of each at Greenwood. This act removed the sting from the vexed question, and was accepted as a fair compromise. The county organization, as to its revenue and general business, was left intact, and the county court for the whole county was still to hold its sessions at Greenwood.

After the reconstruction in 1864, under the proclamation of President Lincoln, the circuit court was held at this place for the whole county. But, after the restoration of peace in 1865, the courts were held at both Greenwood and Fort Smith, as provided for under the act of 1861. In 1868 the county seat question was again revived, and under an act of the Legislature of that year an election was held. After an angry and bitter contest over the result, the records were removed to this place, and all the courts for the county were held here for a short time. At the session of the General Assembly of 1871 an act was passed dividing the county into two districts, with separate revenue, and, in fact, making two distinct counties in one. This act was declared by the supreme court to be unconstitutional, and they also held that the act of 1861 was still in force, notwithstanding the election of 1868. The courts were again divided. The Constitutional Convention of 1874, by a provision inserted in the Constitution, provided that this county should be divided into two judicial districts, with separate county courts, separate revenue, and each paying its own expenses. So now we have two separate districts, with county, circuit and probate courts for each as distinct as of two counties, yet under one general organization.

As divided into districts Upper Township, including the city of Fort Smith, comprises the Fort Smith District, and the Greenwood District includes all the balance of the county.

Public Buildings.—The first court-house built by Sebastian County was erected on the public square at Greenwood in 1856–57. It was a two-story frame structure, fifty feet square, with the county offices on the first floor, and the court-room above. It was built by Peter K. Beam. Prior to that time the courts were held in private houses. This court-house was burned down in 1881. The county offices, and the records that were saved from the conflagration, were moved to a mercantile building standing on the east side of the street, a short distance north of the northwest corner of the public square. The following year this building was also burned. In these conflagrations many of the early records were entirely destroyed, and others so damaged as to render them nearly worthless. Soon after this the citizens of Greenwood contributed about $2,500 toward paying for the construction of a new court-house, and the county court made an order for the erection of the present building, which cost, in its present unfinished condition, $5,555. It is a two-story brick house set upon a rock foundation, and it is in size 50x54 feet. The first story contains the hall, stairs and county offices, and the second the court-room. About the time that the first court-house was erected, a jail eighteen feet square was built for the county by Coleman Norris, the contractor. It stood where the Harper House now stands. It was constructed with three walls made of logs, and stood upon a stone foundation. The logs of the outer and inner walls were placed in a horizontal position, and those of the middle wall in a perpendicular position. These three walls were closed together, thus making a combined wall of three logs in thickness. A jail constructed in this manner, upon a rock foundation and floor, and ceiled with logs crossed in manner similar to the side walls, with the inside face of the walls and ceiling driven full of spikes, will hold prisoners as safely as any that can be composed of rock, iron and steel, and constructed with all modern facilities. This jail was used until about the year 1886, when it was abandoned, and at the present writing the county has no jail.

Prior to the building of the court-house and city hall, which is now under construction, the Fort Smith District of the county has erected no public buildings for county purposes. Prior to 1872 the officers of the district occupied rooms in a building on the corner of Walnut and Second Streets, and in 1872 this building burned down. The offices were then moved to a building on the corner of First Street and Garrison Avenue, where they remained until March, 1875, when they were moved to their present location in the Kannady Block, on the south side of Garrison Avenue. The new court-house and city hall, now nearing its completion, located on Block 515, South Sixth Street, is a two-story brick and stone building, with a basement and attic.

The walls of the basement story are made of Eureka (Ark.) stone, and the face of the brick walls above is made of St. Louis brick. The balance of the brick work is made of home-made brick. The entire building is 84x102 feet in size, and the tower extends to a height of 148 feet above ground. The tower clock has four dials, each four feet in diameter, and the dials are placed about 100 feet above ground. A massive bell on which to strike the time is attached to the clock. There are ten rooms in the first story above the basement, and eight in the second. The city of Fort Smith will occupy all of the first story except the offices of county treasurer and county recorder, and the county will occupy the balance of the building. There are three fire-proof vaults in the building for the protection of the public records. The building is to be heated by the Ruttan system of warm air. Messrs. Nier and Byram are the architects, and M. J. Brennen, Esq., is the contractor. The cost of the building completed will be $55,000. It is a magnificent structure in appearance—made for the future as well as the present—and will stand as a monument of beauty and utility, and an ornament to the city of Fort Smith.

Since the United States District Court for the Western District of Arkansas was located at Fort Smith, it has occupied the central building in the old fort, utilizing the basement story as a jail. In 1887 $75,000 was expended by the Government in the erection of a handsome and commodious jail attached to the building used by the court, and at the present writing (fall of 1888) a magnificent new court-house and post-office is being completed by the Government. It stands on the west side of the street, directly opposite the new county court-house. The contract for its erection was let to Harris & Co., of Newport, Ky., for $70,770. One hundred thousand dollars was appropriated by the Government for its construction, all of which will be required to erect the building and provide the necessary plumbing, water works, heating apparatus, etc. The building is three stories in height, besides the basement and attic. The first story will be used for post-office, and the balance for United States Court purposes.

Poor.—The county of Sebastian has never purchased a farm and fitted it up as a "poor farm" or asylum for her dependent poor, yet the poor have been cared for. At present the county court appoints a commission, which provides for the support of the paupers by contracts with individuals, who care for them at a stipulated price; and upon the order of this commission the county clerk draws his warrant upon the county treasurer for the necessary funds.

Taxation and Finances.—The taxable property of Sebastian County, in 1880, was valued for taxation as follows: real estate, $1,245,372; personal property, $836,762; total, $2,082,134.

The whole property for the year 1887 was valued for taxation as follows: Fort Smith District, real estate, $3,354,867; Fort Smith District, personal property, $788,449; total, $4,143,316. Greenwood District, real estate, $1,449,188; Greenwood District, personal property, $784,666; total, $2,233,854. Grand total of taxable property in the county, $6,377,170.

The increase of taxable property in the Fort Smith District for the year 1888 is $511,633. The amount of the increase in the Greenwood District cannot be ascertained at this writing, as the books have not yet been footed, but it is presumed to be proportionate to the increase in the Fort Smith District. These figures by no means give the real value of the taxable property of the county, for the reason that it has been assessed for taxation at only about one-third of its actual value, so to ascertain the real value when it was assessed in 1887, the total, as then given, must be multiplied by three, which produces $19,377,170, and this may be taken as a safe estimate of the actual value at that time, but the increase since makes it about $21,000,000 for the year 1888. By comparing the total amounts for which the property was assessed for the years 1880 and 1887, it will be seen that in the time intervening, only seven years, the taxable property of Sebastian County more than trebled.

"The utmost limit of taxation is two and one-half per cent, and that upon an assessment which does not exceed one-third of the true value of the property, so that if the the full taxing power under the constitution of the State were put in force the total tax on true values would only be three-quarters of one per cent.

"This taxing power is limited by the constitution as follows:

"For all State purposes, one per cent; for all county purposes, half of one per cent; for all city purposes, half of one per cent; for all special school tax, half of one per cent.

"The latter tax can only be levied in the several school districts in which a majority of the electors vote for it at the annual school elections held in the month of May, at a time when there is no political election held. At the present time the State tax is only half of one per cent, two-fifths of which are for "school purposes. It will be seen that outside of cities and towns the taxes amount to only one and one-half per cent. From this it will be seen that the taxes in the country districts (presuming that all the school districts vote for the special school tax, and as a rule they do), are on real values but forty-five one-hundredths of one per cent.

"Arkansas, however, can go still further in the statement regarding taxation. This is not only the rule now, but so it must remain so long as the present constitution of the State remains in force, for it is provided in the constitution that no town, city or county can loan its credit, or issue any interest-bearing evidences of debt. This provision prevents the counties, towns and cities from loading themselves down with debt, which the immigrant would have to contribute to pay off."

The Bonded Debt.—In 1880 the bonded debt of the county, as reported in the United States census, was $61,034, and the floating debt $17,337, making a total indebtedness of $78,371. The sinking fund reported on hand was $2,277, leaving a net debt of $76,094. The bonded debt has all been cancelled, and nearly all of the floating debt. The financial condition of the two districts composing the county, at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, was as follows: In the Greenwood District at the beginning of the year there were warrants outstanding, on account of the revenue fund, to the amount of $7,199.20, and the amount of warrants issued during the year amounted to $14,569.12, and the treasurer's fees amounted to $326.12, making a total of the liabilities of $22,094.44. There was received during the year, from taxation and other sources, the sum of $16,316.19, all of which was paid out on the liabilities, thus leaving at the end of the year only $5,778.25. In the same district at the beginning of the year there was on hand, of the common school fund, $8,569.11, which, together with the sums received during the year, amounted to $28,285.92. This was all expended for the benefit of the schools, except $10,810.31, which remained on hand at the close of the year.

The Permanent Funds.—In the Fort Smith District there was on hand, of the revenue fund, at the beginning of the year, $17,975.62, which, added to the receipts from taxation and other sources during the year, amounted to $68,538.32. At the close of the year there was currency in the treasury to the amount of $13,605.41, and the orders outstanding amounted to $7,769.32, thus leaving net cash on hand, after redeeming the outstanding orders, amounting to $5,835.09. In the same district the amount of common school fund on hand at the beginning of the year, and the receipts during the year, amounted to $11,339.27, all of which was expended for the benefit of the schools, except $2,440.62, which remained on hand at the close of the year. From these figures it will be observed that the only indebtedness of the county at the close of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1888, was the amount of the outstanding orders in the Greenwood District. By comparing the taxes collected with the vast amount of taxable property in the county, it is apparent that the rate of taxation is very low.

Population.—The population of Sebastian County at the close of the three decades prior to the present one, as shown by the United States census reports, was as follows: For 1860, white, 8,555; colored, 681; Indian, 2; total, 9,238. For 1870, white, 11,545; colored, 1,354; Indian, 41; total, 12,940. For 1880, white, 17,970; colored, 1,541; Indian, 49; total, 19,560. According to these figures it is seen that the colored population increased from 1860 to 1870 nearly 100 per cent, while the white population for the same time increased only a little over 33 per cent, and that for the next decade—from 1870 to 1880—the colored population increased a little less than 15 per cent, while the white population increased a fraction over 55 per cent. During the first decade mentioned there was a large immigration of negroes to the county, and during the latter a large immigration of white people. In 1880 the population of the county by townships was as follows: Bates, 1,090; Big Creek, 2,030; Center, 2,516; Cole, 1,100; Dayton, 975; Hartford, 1,040; Marion, 1,649; Mississippi, 671; Prairie, 927; Sugar Loaf, 1,338; Sulphur, 1,229; Upper (including Fort Smith), 4,292, and Washburn, 683, making the total of 19,560. The population of Fort Smith in 1880 was only 3,099.

The population of the county by townships and towns, as estimated and published last year in E. L. Hayes & Co.'s County Atlas, was as follows: Bates, 1,200; Beverly (unorganized), 500; Big Creek, 2,000; Bloomer (unorganized), 1,000; Center, 3,000; Greenwood (town of), 1,000; Cole, 2,500; Hackett City (town of), 1,500; Dayton, 1,000; Hartford, 1,500; Marion, 2,000; Mississippi, 750; Prairie, 1,000; Rogers (unorganized), 300; Sugar Loaf, 2,000; Sulphur, 1,500; Upper (including Fort Smith), 18,000, making an aggregate of 41,750, which is more than double the number given in the census reports of 1880. This estimate was made about a year ago, and was then probably a little too high, which would make it about right in the aggregate for the present time. The rapid developments now being made in Sebastian County, and the many natural advantages which she possesses, is rapidly bringing in a foreign population, and the prospects are that this rapid increase of population will continue until the mineral, agricultural and horticultural resources of the county will be thoroughly developed, and she becomes a very wealthy county.

Post-offices.—The following is a list of the names of the several post-offices and of the postmasters, with the dates of their appointment, in the county of Sebastian, from its earliest settlement to the present time.

ELECTIONS.

Following are the returns of the election held in 1844 for State and county officers in that part of Crawford County which was afterward cut off to form the county of Sebastian. This territory was then subdivided into three municipal townships: Big Creek, Upper (or Fort Smith) and Sugar Loaf. For governor: Thomas S. Drew (Dem.), 165; Dr. Gibson (Whig), 144. For Member of Congress: A. Yell (Dem.), 176; D. Walker (Whig), 146. State senator: Hans Smith (Dem.), 161; Jesse Turner (Whig), 151. Representatives: A. G. Mayers (Dem.), 165; John S. Roane (Dem.), 167; W. J. Duval (Dem.), 163; J. F. McKinney (Whig), 141; J. A. Simpson (Whig), 137; — Collins (Whig), 120. Sheriff: Eli Bell (Dem.), 139; J. R. Kannydy (Whig), 166, Clerk: — Gibson (Dem.), 97; A. McLean (Whig), 207.

According to these figures it seems that the Democratic candidates, except for the offices of sheriff and clerk, were successful. There were 165 votes cast for the Democratic candidate for governor, and 144 for the Whig candidate, thus making 309 votes in all, which shows that the population was then very small. Multiplying the total vote cast by five, a result of 1,545 is obtained for the population of the county; but as the whole vote was not cast it is safe to say that the population of the county at that date numbered 2,000.

In consequence of the burning of the public records and papers, it is not possible to give the result of the succeeding elections of Sebastian since its organization, but the following, which have been gleaned from the files of newspapers still preserved, will be given. In the published returns the first names of candidates have sometimes been omitted, and hence will be omitted here:

1858—For Congress: Rust, 387; Drew, 797. Prosecuting attorney: Gregg, 595; Mansfield, 424. Representatives: Mendenhall, 298; Pitman, 128; Mayers, 518; McConnell, 605; Duval, 668. Soldiers' Vote.—The following shows how the Union soldiers stationed at Fort Smith voted at the presidential election in 1864: Thirteenth Kansas Infantry: Lincoln, 347; McClellan, 3. Twelfth Kansas Infantry: Lincoln, 411; McClellan, 0. Second Kansas Cavalry: Lincoln, 211; McClellan, 0. Sixth Kansas Cavalry: Lincoln, 209; McClellan, 0. Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry: Lincoln, 179; McClellan, 0. Second Kansas Battery: Lincoln, 51; McClellan, 0. Detached men: Lincoln, 94; McClellan, 0. Eighteenth Iowa: Lincoln 404; McClellan, 0. Total: Lincoln, 1,906; McClellan, 3.

1866. The test oath prescribed by the Legislature of the State in 1864, to be taken by individuals as a qualification for voting, was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court, so that in 1866 all persons over twenty-one years of age, not otherwise disfranchised, were allowed to vote. On July 7, 1866, the Republicans of Sebastian County held a convention at Greenwood and endorsed the civil rights bill, the policy of Congress on reconstruction, and favored the free-school system. The vote of the county for that year for the public offices stood as follows: For Congress: J. M. Johnson (R), 423; A. B. Greenwood (D), 324. Representative: B. Harper (R), 383; John Carnall (D), 344; Jerre Hackett (R), 456; John King (D), 339. County judge: John Howard (R), 448; William McAllister (D), 333. Sheriff: G. F. Bethel (R), 433; W. A. Porter (D), 378. County clerk: J. N. Spradling (R), 380; J. R. A. Hendry (D), 328; S. H. Payne (R), 84. Treasurer: T. Dunn (R), 402; N. H. Osborne (D), 321. Assessor: W. A. Riley (R), 453; J. H. Reid (D), 256; N. D. Osborne (D), 78. Coroner: John Holleman (R), 402; M. Bunch (D), 56. Surveyor: W. Condon (R), 326; C. H. Drake (R), 229.

The Convention of 1866.—On December 13, 1866, a State convention was held at Fort Smith in response to what was entitled: "A call to the Loyalists and Unionists of Arkansas," etc., signed by some forty or fifty persons in Sebastian, Scott, Crawford and other northwestern counties of the State. Four hundred delegates were present, and Hon. LaFayette Gregg presided. Resolutions were adopted approving the reconstruction policy of Congress, advocating the adoption of the proposed fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, and advocating universal suffrage of loyal men, and the disfranchisement of a certain class of men who had opposed the government during the late war. On these questions political excitement was then at a high point. The Legislature of Arkansas failed to ratify the fourteenth amendment to the constitution. The feeling of many and probably the majority of the Republicans, then so familiarly called "Radicals," on the question of suffrage is best expressed in the following quotation from the Fort Smith New Era of the issue of March 13, 1867: "What we want, what the country wants, just what it wants, neither more nor less, is the disfranchisement of every man who has at any time voluntarily aided or abetted the Rebellion."

1870. The number of votes cast for the various candidates at the general election in Sebastian County, in the year 1870, was as follows: Congressman: Boles, 720; Edwards, 653. Representative: Fishback, 683; Neal, 528; White, 88; Pettigrew, 405; Hackett, 355; King, 92; Grady, 521; Abernathy, 584; Stevens, 755; Snider, 205; Patterson, 153; Pritchard, 16. Sheriff: Bethel, 370; Falconer, 305; McClure, 668. County Judge: Howard, 334; Hightower, 190. Coroner: Field, 204. Treasurer: Hendry, 235; Vaughan, 166; Tilles, 425; Rattafee, 255. The multiplicity of candidates for some of the offices shows that it was "a free for all race."

The following table shows the result of the election for county officers in Sebastian County for the same year: Representatives: William M. Fishback, 539; L. C. White, 1,005; J. B. Stevens, 563; S. L. Story, 1,007; W. R. Felker, 528; J. A. David, 1,004; G. C. Alden, 537; C. E. Berry, 1,013. Sheriff: Henry Falconer, 534; J. H. McClure, 1,011. Clerk: B. F. Hackett, 551; G. N. Spradling, 1,007. ### AGRICULTURE AND HORTICULTURE.

In reference to agricultural products in the Arkansas Valley in general, Judge John Carnall, of Fort Smith, speaks as follows, in his "Notes on Western Arkansas:"

The general products of this valley are corn and cotton. The staple production is cotton, but almost every farmer now raises wheat enough for home consumption. Oats is a universal crop; millet and sorghum are very generally raised, enough of the latter, or very nearly so, to supply the county with molasses. Tobacco is raised only to a limited extent, but we take this occasion to say, from our own personal knowledge, that it thrives very well here, and we believe it equal to Kentucky or Virginia to grow the weed. Of course, every vegetable from Maine to Texas grows and thrives here, and they are not cut short by * * * chinch bugs or grasshoppers, which are not known to Arkansas. For grapes, Italy itself is not superior. The vines grow wild all over the ridges and tops of the mountains in this country, and many wild grapes are found equal in size to the Concord. There are thousands of gallons of wine made near Fort Smith, some farmers making 100 and 200 barrels, in this county, a year.

According to the United States census, there were in Sebastian County in 1880, 2,421 farms with 72,049 acres of improved lands, valued at $1,500,976. The value of the farm implements and machinery was $85,085, and the value of the live-stock was $455,437, and the estimated value of all farm products for the year 1879 was $867,130. The cost of building and repairing fences for 1879 was $20,265, and the cost of fertilizers was $521. The vegetable production for the county, for the year 1879, were as follows: Corn, 553,513 bushels; oats, 53,976; rye, 55; wheat, 31,157; hay, 574 tons; cotton, 11,112 bales; Irish potatoes, 6,053 bushels; sweet potatoes, 8,985; tobacco, 8,576 pounds. In the production of corn Sebastian ranged as the sixth county in the State, and in the production of oats and wheat the eighth. According to the same census the number of head of live-stock in the county was as follows: Horses, 4,347, mules and asses, 1,627; working oxen, 157, milch cows, 6,486; other cattle, 11,835; sheep, 3,759; swine, 33,382. In the item of "other cattle," Sebastian County then ranked as the first in the State, and in milch cows and horses as the third.

Stock.—The raising of fine blooded horses was introduced here before Sebastian County was organized. The father of Col. Ben. T. Duval, an early settler, brought out from Virginia some thoroughbred horses. He was an ardent lover of fine stock, and was fond of regular turf racing. He laid out the race track near Fort Smith, and a jockey club was organized here. Similar clubs were organized at Van Buren and other places, at which regular spring and fall meetings, lasting several days, were held. Large purses were offered, and stables of fine horses were brought here from other States. Races of long distance were then in vogue. Maj. Rector, Col. Drennen and William Duval were then the principal raisers of fine stock in this section of country. Among the principal raisers of fine stock in Sebastian County, at this writing, are Paul Euper, J. C. Wilkinson and J. W. Pelley. An old paper published in 1843, and still preserved, contains an announcement of a race to be run on the race-course of the Fort Smith Jockey Club, on the 2d of May of that year, between horses owned respectively by A. Webster and T. G. Moore, for $300 a side, distance two miles. The next day there was to be a three-mile heat race for $1,000 a side, and on the 10th of the month a two-mile heat race was announced for sweepstakes for three-year-old colts. The announcements were signed by Samuel Caldwell. Horse racing is now usually carried on in connection with the fairs.

Crops.—The agricultural resources of Sebastian County have been but slightly developed. The virgin soil has generally yielded fair crops without having had much labor expended upon it. Shallow plowing and constant cropping, usually with the same commodity, constantly taking from the soil and returning nothing to it, has been the general practice among the farmers. When lands are not being used for cropping, they are allowed to exhaust their fertility by growing weeds. This method of farming will wear out the best of lands in the course of time. In riding over the country the observer will frequently see tracts of land that have been thus worn out, abandoned and thrown out to public. The reason for this, in part, is because the lands have been so cheap, and have been owned in such large quantities, that the farmers, after exhausting a piece of land, abandon it, and cultivate a new piece instead, and in this manner get rid of keeping their lands in order. It is, however, an expensive way of farming. But little clean farming has been done; the fence corners are generally allowed to grow up with briars, weeds and bushes. Deep plowing, clean and thorough cultivation, a rotation of crops, and the growing of the grasses and clover for re-fertilizing the soil and the feeding of more stock thereon, is what is wanted. A few individuals have recently introduced and are now practicing scientific farming, and when the masses adopt their methods and practice them, the lands will be made to grow richer instead of poorer, will produce double in return for the labor expended, and give a satisfaction to the farmer that he cannot otherwise enjoy. It seems that the wonderful resources of the county have only been recently discovered, or at least their development has only recently been commenced. This is due in a great measure to the fact that, until recently, the people have had no railroads for shipping their products to market. The soil and the climate is here, railroads have entered the county and others are under construction, and the time is not far distant when she will be rich in agriculture and horticulture, as she is also in mineral wealth.

Horticulture.—Almost every settled farmer has his fruit trees. Large orchards are not as yet very common, because there has as yet been no way of disposing of the fruit profitably. Now, since the advent of the railroads, farmers are enlarging their orchards, and we have plenty of good nurserymen who keep up with the late varieties and best sorts, and are doing a thriving business. Fruit trees grow very rapidly in this country, attaining in one season a growth of two in Illinois or Pennsylvania, and bear much earlier. A year-old grafted peach set out in November or December, and cultivated next year, will bear fruit the second summer. Many of the farmers have, however, large and well-managed orchards of best northern and southern varieties. It having been ascertained that the winter apples grown north of the middle belt of the United States are more apt to drop in our long summer than those of the middle and southern, the latter are generally preferred, but all the summer and early fall apples of the north do well here. Many new seedlings, indigenous to the southern country, and very fine and valuable, are now extensively grown in this region of the Arkansas Valley and south of here. *

Since the above extract was written, fruit evaporators and canning factories have been erected at Fort Smith, Van Buren, Ozark and many other places in Western Arkansas, and thus the market for fruits has been largely increased. There are three varieties of leading winter apples in the North, the Ben Davis, Winesap and Northern Spy, which are also raised in Western Arkansas, and do equally well here. The Shannon, a native of Arkansas, and the most popular fall apple here, is a very large greenish yellow apple, of unexcelled beauty and flavor. It is scarcely known in the North. The writer, who has attended the State fairs of Michigan and Indiana, and many county fairs, attended the fair at Fort Smith this month, October, 1888, and is free to say that at the latter place he saw a display of the largest and handsomest apples that he ever beheld. Peaches, plums, pears and nearly all the varieties of smaller fruits, such as grapes, blackberries, raspberries, strawberries, etc., can be raised in great abundance in Sebastian County. Grapes are raised in great abundance and extensively made into wine. Berries are also extensively raised and shipped to distant markets. The resources are here for the development of agriculture and horticulture to a limitless extent.

Fair Association of Western Arkansas.—This association was organized at Fort Smith in 1880, and on the 21st day of April, of that year, the following directors were elected, to wit: Gen. D. P. Upham, George Sengel, P. K. Roots, S. A. Williams, Frank Parke, J. R. Kannady, J. S. Williamson, R. S. McCarty, G. C. Falconer, G. D. Redwine, R. T. Kerr, J. H. Alexander, H. Stone, B. Baer and C. B. Neal.

P. K. Roots was chosen president; G. C. Falconer, vice-president; J. S. Williamson, secretary; H. Stone, treasurer, and Gen. D. P. Upham, superintendent. The territorial limits of the district were defined to embrace the counties of Crawford, Franklin, Logan, Scott and Sebastian, of the State of Arkansas, and the Indian Territory contiguous thereto. At the opening of the sixth annual fair October 13, 1885, Col. Duval delivered an address at the fair-grounds, from which the writer has obtained the above information. The first exhibition of the association was held in 1880, and annual exhibitions have since been held, the ninth having just closed. The present officers are Dr. J. H. T. Main, president; T. H. Barnes, vice-president; H. Stone, treasurer; C. M. Barnes, secretary; W. M. Fishback, superintendent of grounds. The directors, in addition to the officers named, are J. C. Wilkinson, S. A. Williams, John Matthews, J. H. Livingston, James A. Williams, William J. Johnston, Marshall Gaines, J. J. Little, B. T. Duval, C. M. Cook, William Breen, Thomas Rogers and Henry Kuper, Jr.

The Fair Association owns forty acres of land two and a half miles northeast from the center of Fort Smith, one-half of which is enclosed and fitted up with a first-class race track well fenced in, an ample supply of stables and sheds for animals, a large amphitheater, a large shed for the exhibition of buggies, wagons, and agricultural implements, a large art, floral and agricultural hall combined, a large octagonal hall especially for the display of fruits, and other necessary buildings.

THE COURTS.

COUNTY COURT.

Preliminaries.—Section 14 of the act of the General Assembly creating the county of Sebastian provided that the sessions of the county court should be held on the second Mondays of January, April, July and October of each year, and that the sessions of the probate court should be held on the second Tuesdays of the same months. The general law provided that the judge of the county court should be judge also of the probate court, and such has always been the case with the exception of a period of less than two years, during "the seventies," when the judge of the circuit court was given probate jurisdiction. The county and probate courts were established in accordance with the provisions of the act creating the county, and for a list of the names of the judges of these courts, see elsewhere.

Jurisdiction.—The county court has "exclusive original jurisdiction of all matters relating to county taxes; in all matters relating to roads, the appointment of viewers, receivers and overseers of roads; to order the erection of bridges, and directing the repairing of the same; to superintend all ferries, paupers, bastardy cases, vagrants and the apprenticeship of minors; to fix the places of holding elections; to designate apportioning justices; to audit, settle and direct the payment of all demands against the county; to have the control and the management of all property, real and personal, for the use of the county; to have full power and authority to purchase or receive by donation any property, real or personal, for the use of the county, and to cause to be erected all buildings and all repairs necessary for the use of the county; to sell and cause to be conveyed any real estate or personal property belonging to the county, and appropriate the proceeds of such sale for the use of the county; to disburse money for county purposes, and in all other cases that may be necessary to the internal improvement and local concerns of the respective counties." [Act February 5, 1875.]

PROBATE COURT.

The probate court has "original jurisdiction in the following cases:

"First. In all matters relating to the probate of last wills and testaments, the estate of deceased persons, executors, administrators, guardians and persons of unsound mind, and their estates.

"Second. In the settlement and allowances of accounts of executors, administrators and guardians.

"Third. To hear and determine all controversies respecting last wills and testaments, the rights of executorship, administration or guardianship.

"Fourth. To issue process and cause to come before such court all persons whom they may deem it necessary to examine, whether parties or witnesses, or who, as executors, administrators or guardians, or otherwise, shall be interested or in any wise accountable for any lands, tenements, goods, chattels, moneys or effects belonging to any minor, orphan, or person of unsound mind, or to the estate of any deceased person." [Act January 7, 1875.]

An act passed March 8, 1877, provided that the probate court for the Greenwood District of Sebastian County should be held on the third Mondays of January, April, July and October of each year, and that in the Fort Smith District it should be held on the fourth Mondays of the same months.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The sixteenth section of the act creating the county of Sebastian provided that the county should form a part of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, and that the circuit court should be held on the third Mondays of January and July of each year. Afterward, from time to time, as population increased, the State was redistricted for judicial purposes, changing the number of counties embraced in the several districts, and also changing the number of the circuits. The act of March 8, 1877, above referred to, made the Twelfth Judicial Circuit consist of the counties of Scott, Sebastian, Crawford and Logan, and so it stands at this writing. The first judge of this new circuit was J. H. Rogers, who served from April 20, 1877, to October 2, 1882, when he was succeeded by R. B. Rutherford, who served until October, 1886. The latter was succeeded by John S. Little, the present presiding judge. Judge Little was the first prosecuting attorney for the present Twelfth Judicial Circuit, and served three terms, until September 20, 1884, when he was succeeded by A. C. Lewers. The latter served until October 30, 1888, and was then succeeded by James B. McDonald, the present incumbent.

Time of Meeting.—The county court for the Greenwood District meets, under the present law, on the first Mondays of January, April, July and October of each year, and for the Fort Smith District it meets on the second Mondays of the same months. At the October terms of the county court, each year, the full quorum court, consisting of all the justices of the peace, meet in each district for the purpose of levying taxes and making appropriations. The circuit court for the Greenwood District meets on the sixteenth Mondays after the last Mondays of February and August in each year, and for the Fort Smith District it meets on the sixth Mondays after the last Mondays of the same months.

THE BAR.

The local bar of Sebastian County has always been noted for its ability and intelligence. Among its members are some of the ablest lawyers in the United States. Since the location of the Federal court, first at Van Buren and subsequently at Fort Smith, certain members of this bar have been the leading practitioners therein, and are there so constantly engaged that they have but little time to practice in the local courts. It is probably on account of the Federal court that so many lawyers are located in Fort Smith. Following is an alphabetical list of the names of the attorneys constituting the Sebastian County bar: A. H. Boles, J. J. Boles, Thomas Boles, James Brizzolara, J. K. Barnes, W. F. Blythe, T. W. M. Boone, T. L. Brown, J. C. Byers, E. C. Boudinot, P. D. Brewer, A. L. Brewster, William M. Cravens, J. H. Clendenning, W. H. H. Clayton, M. J. Casey, C. M. Cooke, W. A. Cooper, John Carroll, Ben. T. Duval, T. M. Downs, William Duncan, M. M. Edmiston, C. H. Eberle, C. J. Frederick, E. J. Fannin, J. B. Forrester, George A. Grace, J. A. Green, John T. Hurley, F. C. Humphreys, P. E. Hileman, J. L. Hendrick, T. H. Humphreys, J. M. Hill, W. J. Horton, John H. Holland, R. E. Jackson, W. C. Jackson, J. W. Johnson, R. T. Kerr, J. A. Kale, Campbell Leflore, T. B. Latham, B. Luce, Thomas Marcum, P. J. M. MacGreevy, W. M. Mellette, J. B. McDonough, W. R. Martin, W. S. Murphey, N. L. Marmon, D. C. Morgan, R. W. McFarlane, C. B. Neal, George E. Nelson, T. S. Osborn, R. T. Powell, R. B. Rutherford, James F. Read, W. B. Rutherford, James G. Ralls, R. A. Rowe, S. T. Rowe, M. H. Sandles, S. H. Sherlock, S. H. Scott (colored), Julius Silverman, B. H. Tabor, William Walker, T. P. Winchester, J. S. Wheelles, C. E. Warner, W. S. Wolfenberger, F. A. Youmans.

CRIMINAL RECORD.

Sebastian County has had her share of crimes and excesses committed within her borders, but in this respect she is no worse than the average counties in the State. A number of offenses are herein reported, but the killing of defenseless men during the war, and the fighting of duels herein mentioned, must not be charged against the character of the citizens of the county, for the reason that the persons killed within the war period was the result of that unhappy struggle, and the duels were fought by non-residents outside of the county.

Fighting Duels.—In 1844 Mr. Borden, editor of the Gazette, published at Little Rock, and Solan Borland, editor of the Banner, published at the same place, the former a Whig and the latter a Democrat, got into an altercation, and Borden challenged Borland to fight a duel. The challenge was accepted, and the parties, after choosing their seconds, boarded a steamer and took passage for the Cherokee Nation, where, on the 6th day of May of that year, they fought a duel at a point across the river directly opposite Fort Smith. Both displayed unwavering coolness throughout the affair. Mr. Borden fought in his customary dress, but Dr. Borland threw off his outer garments. Borden's pistol was fired first, the ball falling short of his antagonist, while the latter's fire took effect in Borden's person, striking the breast, and making only a slight flesh wound, from which he soon recovered. The duel was fought at a distance of twelve paces. Several citizens of Fort Smith witnessed the affair.

Another duel was fought at the same place in August, 1848, between Albert Pike (since general) and John S. Roane (since governor). Both of them had been officers in the army in the Mexican War, and after returning home one of them severely criticised the military conduct of the other. A challenge was passed and accepted. Col. Robert W. Johnson and H. M. Rector were Roane's seconds, and Dr. Philip Burton, of Little Rock, was his surgeon. Luther Chase, of Little Rock, and a gentleman from Van Buren were Pike's seconds, and Dr. Thurston, of Van Buren, was surgeon and also a second for Pike. Roane, Johnson, Burton and Rector traveled to Fort Smith on horseback, and tarried two days for rest and recreation at the house of Maj. Elias Rector, who lived in the vicinity, before the duel was fought. Both parties were considered experts with the pistol. The morning was bright and balmy; the ground was stepped off, and the positions were chosen by lot. The distance between the combatants was ten paces. Both seemed cool and collected, and three shots were exchanged by them, but neither took effect. A reconciliation then followed, and all parties adjourned to a banquet in Fort Smith. Pike and Roane were afterward friends and companions.* Happily the barbarous custom, practiced even by men such as these combatants, of settling difficulties by fighting duels, has been abandoned.

Murder of Seaburn Standifer.—In September, 1847, a man named Hadley deliberately and in cold blood shot and killed Seaburn Standifer, a citizen of the county, living about seven miles south of Fort Smith. He was tried for the offense at Little Rock and acquitted.

The Killing of Jesse Merritt.—On the 19th of February, 1848, Jesse Merritt, a pardoned convict, was killed at Fort Smith by Samuel Edmondson. Some difficulty existed between the parties, and in the morning they met and quarreled, and about 3 o'clock p. m. Merritt walked into Edmondson's office to see Esquire Hudspeth, and after getting through with his business, and being in the act of leaving, Edmondson fired at him from the outside through the back door of the office. The ball entered his right breast, and came out under the right shoulder-blade. Merritt fell upon the floor, uttered one short groan, and was dead. Edmondson fled, and went to the residence of Maj. Elias Rector, about two miles from town, where he sent for the sheriff. He was afterward tried for the murder and acquitted.

Killing of William Thompson.—In 1859 Jacob Pittman was keeping a hotel in Sebastian County, and William Thompson was one of his boarders. Pittman became jealous of Thompson, and charged him with being unduly intimate with his (Pittman's) wife. A quarrel ensued, and Pittman shot and killed Thompson. The former was arrested, tried for the offense, and found guilty. An appeal was then taken to the supreme court, and, pending the decision, James Rudd and two or three others went to the jail ostensibly for the purpose of taking him out, but really for the purpose of shooting him as his head appeared above the trap-door. But instead of putting his head up he put up his hat, at which they fired, doing him no damage. He then climbed out and escaped. He was gone until 1862, when he returned and got his family, and with them went to Texas, where he was afterward captured by the Confederates for the purpose of forcing him into the army, and was there shot by a guard. Pittman had also killed a man in Fort Smith. The man attempted to shoot him, when he cut him down in self-defense.

Killing of Barnes and Matthews.—On one Sunday evening in 1859 or 1860 John Barnes and Daniel Matthews quarreled on the street in Greenwood, and shot and killed each other with pistols. Barnes was a cattle dealer on a visit to this county from Texas.

Murder of Tyler, and Lynching of Dumas and Walls.—In 1872 Thomas Walls was indicted for the murder of William Tyler, a farmer living twelve miles south of Greenwood. Walls and Tyler were together one evening, and went to the house of one of them, where they indulged in drinking spirituous liquors. Having thus crazed their brains, they became engaged in a quarrel, and Walls struck Tyler with a gun, and broke his skull, from the effects of which he died. Walls was arrested, and put into jail at Greenwood to await trial, and was there about twelve months. Meanwhile Charles Dumas, a negro, had been arrested and put into jail for striking an old man named Garner, at Fort Smith, on the head with a rock. Having by some means obtained the necessary articles, he dressed himself as a woman, and thus made his escape, securing and taking with him the jailor's pistol. In the fracas Walls also escaped with the negro. The latter fled into the "bottoms," and was followed by Jasper Blakely, who had just been appointed deputy marshal, and, being closely pursued, turned and shot his pursuer. Two negroes were then dispatched to capture and bring Dumas in, which they succeeded in doing that same evening. Meanwhile an alarm was given by firing guns, in response to which about 200 citizens assembled, took Dumas out after he had been returned to the jail, and dragged him about fifty yards to the rear thereof, where they hung him on the limb of a walnut tree while it was yet daylight. Walls remained out a day or two before he was recaptured and returned to the jail, and, on the second night after the hanging of Dumas, the crowd (or mob) re-assembled and took him out also and hung him, and this ended the whole tragedy.

Killing a Prisoner.—In 1874 a man named Barrett had been placed in jail at Greenwood, on a charge of having stolen a suit of clothes in that town. On a certain occasion the jailor, R. T. Fuqua, took the prisoner out to empty some slops, and when the prisoner was engaged emptying the buckets the jailor shot him with a pistol. On trial before a jury of inquest the jailor claimed that the prisoner was trying to effect his escape. This was denied by witnesses, but the jury acquitted the jailor.

Killing of Dr. Waters.—A year or two after the foregoing transaction Dr. Waters, of Salem, was killed by William Belt, a merchant. Waters was a good physician, but was overbearing and troublesome when drinking. He made an attack upon Belt, who shot and killed him with a shot-gun. Belt was tried for the offense, but was acquitted on the ground of self-defense.

Other Crimes.—The first execution that took place at Fort Smith under sentence of the Federal court occurred on August 15, 1873, when John Childers, a half-breed Cherokee, was hung for the murder of Reyburn Wedding on October 14, 1870. He was arrested soon after the murder, but made his escape and was re-arrested three months later. He was brought to Van Buren, but again made his escape, with six others, on May 3, 1871. He remained at Liberty until September, when he was brought to Fort Smith, arraigned in November, and admitted to bail. He reported promptly at the May term, but the case was not tried until the following November, when he was convicted.

On October 10, 1873, two Cherokees, Young Wolf and Tunagee, were executed for the murder of two trappers on Grand River in the Cherokee Nation, whom they killed for a few traps and some other worthless articles.

The third execution occurred on April 3, 1874, when John Billy, John Painter and Isaac Fillmore paid the death penalty, for three several murders. Billy, while under arrest at Muskogee, shot and killed Perry DuVal, a guard, shot Deputy Marshal J. C. Wilkinson through the body, and Deputy Marshal Willard Ayres through the wrist, in for which he received a shot in the head. Before his execution he made a profession of religion, and was baptized into the Episcopal Church. John Painter, a young Seminole, was convicted of being accessory to the murder of a drover on Canadian River, Choctaw Nation, in the fall of 1873. Isaac Fillmore was a Choctaw boy, not more than seventeen years old, who murdered an unknown white man near Fishertown, in the Creek Nation, in June, 1873.

On January 15, 1875, a young Indian named McClish Impron was hung for the murder of an unknown white man in 1873. He confessed his guilt, and asserted that his father had urged him to commit the deed. He was the first man Judge Parker passed sentence of death upon.

On September 3, 1875, William Moore, Samuel Fooy, William Whittington, Daniel Evans, all white except Fooy, who was part Cherokee, Smoker Mankiller, a full Cherokee, and Edward Campbell, suffered death in accordance with the sentence of the court. Moore killed William Spivey on November 9, 1874. Fooy killed a man named Naff, near Webster, on July 11, 1872. Mankiller killed William Short in Flint District, Cherokee Nation, September 1, 1874, and died protesting his innocence. Dan Evans killed a young man named Seabolt, near Eufaula. Whittington, while drunk, cut the throat of an old man named Turner, and robbed him. This occurred in the Chickasaw Nation. Edward Campbell and his half brother, Edward Butler, killed a negro man and woman in the Choctaw Nation. Butler was sentenced with the others, but when being taken from the court room made a bold dash for liberty, and was shot and killed just as he reached the gate of the inclosure.

The sixth execution took place on April 21, 1876. This time five unfortunates were shot through the death trap to eternity. The victims were Aaron Wilson, a negro, for the murder of an old man named Harris, and his little son, in September, 1875, near Washita Agency; Isham Seely and Gibson Ishtanubbee both full Choctaws, for the murder of an old Indian doctor called Funny, and his cook, a colored woman; Orpheus McGee, for the murder of Robert Alexander, in the Chickasaw Nation, on April 20, 1875, and William Leach, a white man, for killing Henry Watkins, in March, 1875, in the Cherokee Nation. On September 8, 1876, Osey Sanders, Sinker Wilson, alias Flyer Wilson, alias Acorn, Sam Peters and John Valley, all Indians, were sent to the happy hunting grounds, Sanders, for the murder of Thomas Carlisle, in the Cherokee Nation, on August 16, 1875;

John Valley, for killing Eli Hatchet, in 1873, and Sam Peters, for the murder of Charity Hanson, near Stringtown, Choctaw Nation, on October 15, 1875. Sinker Wilson was convicted of the murder of Datus Cowan, at Van Buren, on November 30, 1867, and was sentenced to be hung. On December 3, of the same year, he escaped from the jail and was at large until 1875, when he was again arrested, and tried on his identity. At the time of his escape he was only about sixteen years old.

On December 20, 1878, James Diggs, a negro, and John Post Oak, an Indian, were hung. Diggs' case was a remarkable one. In the summer of 1873 he was traveling through the Indian Territory, near the Kansas border, with his employer, J. C. Gould, a stock dealer, and a fellow workman, Hiram Mann. On the night of August 4 they encamped at a deserted cabin, and early on the following morning Diggs startled some people in the vicinity by stating that two mounted Texans came to the cabin in the night and killed his companions. The bodies of the murdered men were found, showing that they had been killed with an ax. No horse tracks were to be seen, and $27 in greenbacks were found upon the negro. This led to his arrest, but as no witnesses appeared against him he was released. Five years afterward Deputy Marshal J. C. Wilkinson, hearing of the case, was convinced of Diggs' guilt, and set to work to get up evidence against him. He found that one of the supposed murdered men, Mann, after lying unconscious for thirty days, had recovered, and was living in Michigan, and upon his testimony Diggs was convicted.

On August 29, 1879, Henri Stewart and William E. Wiley, alias "Colorado Bill," were executed. The former was born in the Choctaw Nation, the son of a white man, was a graduate of Yale College and Harvard Medical College, and had traveled extensively as a ship physician. He was convicted of being accessory to the murder of Dr. Jones, at Caddo, C. N., on August 8, 1878. Wiley was an Ohian who came South during the Civil War, and led a reckless frontier life until he murdered a Cherokee named Brown, at Muscogee, on February 23, 1879. He was arrested and convicted at the following May term.

John Jacobs and Robert Massey were hung on April 13, 1883.

Jacobs, a full Choctaw, was convicted in November, 1882, of the murder of a Mexican, Lee Morralles, in December, 1881. The Mexican had stopped at Jacobs' house to spend the night, but had left before morning, taking a pair of boots belonging to his host. Jacobs and a companion followed and arrested him, but, to save the trouble of taking him back, shot him. Massey killed a young man, Edward P. Clark, in the summer of 1881. The two men went from Dodge City, Kas., to Dakota with a drove of cattle, and after making the trip started for their homes in Texas. While en route Massey killed his companion, concealed the body in a hole, burned up the clothing and saddle, turned his own horse loose, mounted his companion's horse and went on. Upon trial he put in the plea of self defense, but all the circumstances proved it to have been a cold-blooded murder.

On June 29, 1883, W. H. Finch and M. Joseph, colored, and Teolitse, a full Creek, were hung. Finch, in July, 1882, stole a horse at Fort Sill, and was arrested at Decatur, Texas, by the civil authorities. He was being taken back to Fort Sill by three negro soldiers, and on the way, while two of them were asleep and the third at a spring for water, he gained possession of a gun, killed the sleeping guards, and made his escape. He was re-arrested in Texas, and convicted at the March term, 1883. Joseph was hung for the murder of Bud Stevens and his wife in April, 1882, on Arbuckle Mountain. He had an accomplice, Henry Loftus, whom he also killed before his arrest. Teolitse killed a white man named Cochran in the Choctaw Nation, for the purpose of robbery.

Thomas L. Thompson, John Davis and Jack Womankiller were hung for murder. Thompson and James O'Haleran, neither of whom had a family, lived together near Stonewall in the Chickasaw Nation, and Thompson, to possess himself of the little property his companion had, killed him. Davis was a full Choctaw, who killed a white man named Bullock in June, 1883, for the purpose of robbery. The case of Jack Womankiller was similar. He was a full Cherokee, and killed a white man named Wyatt in the Cherokee Nation on May 10, 1883. He afterward, while drunk, boasted of the deed, and was arrested.

William Phillips, a white man, was hung for the murder of his father-in-law, William Hill. The parties lived just across the river from Fort Smith, in the Cherokee Nation, and had had some prior quarrels. Phillips had attacked Hill, and was under indictment for an assault with intent to kill him, when he went at night to Hill's cabin, and, thrusting the muzzle of a shot-gun through a crack, blew his brains out.

On June 26, 1885, William Parchmeal and James Arcine, Cherokee Indians, were hung for the murder of Henry Feigel on November 25, 1872. Feigel was a Swede, and was killed and robbed near Tahlequah. For twelve years the assassins went unpunished, but "murder will out," and in 1884 they were arrested by Deputy Marshal Andrews. Upon trial they prosecuted each other. Each attempted to clear himself by charging the murder upon the other. They were tried twice, the first jury failing to agree.

In February, 1886, seven men were sentenced to be hung on April 23, 1886, but before that day arrived the sentences of all but two had been commuted. The two unfortunates were Joseph Jackson, a negro, convicted of killing his wife at Oak Lodge, Choctaw Nation, on March 9, 1885, and James Wasson, a white man, who participated in the murder of Henry Martin in 1872, but was not apprehended until he took a hand in the killing of a man named Watkins in 1884.

At the February term, 1886, there were three convictions of murder in the first degree. Calvin James, an Indian-negro, was found guilty of the murder of Toney Love, whom he killed for four gallons of whisky. The crime was committed in the Chickasaw Nation in August, 1885, and he was hung on July 23, 1886. At the same time Lincoln Sprole, a white man, expiated the murder of Ben Clark and his son, Alexander Clark, whom he killed on May 30, 1885, in Paul's Valley, Chickasaw Nation. Kit Ross, a Cherokee half-breed, was sentenced to be hung with James and Sprole, but was respited until August 6, 1886. He killed John Davis on December 20, 1885. Two years before he had attempted to ride into Davis' house, and had been forcibly ejected. On the day of the murder they met in a store at Chateau, and without a word Ross shot Davis in the back, and ran away, but was soon captured.

On January 14, 1887, the scaffold claimed four more victims, John Stephens, a mulatto, being one. On the night of May 28, 1886, he entered the house of Mrs. Annie Kerr, who lived in the Delaware Nation, brained her and her son, Louis Winters, then went to the residence of Dr. James T. Pile, and attempted to murder the entire family. He struck the Doctor and his wife on the head with an ax, and severely injured the other inmates of the house. All recovered, however, but the Doctor. The evidence against Stephens was circumstantial, but conclusive. J. T. Echols, who met his death with Stephens, killed John Pettenridge near White Bear Hill, Chickasaw Nation, on February 16, 1886, in a cruel and wanton manner. He was mad at Pettenridge about a horse-trade, and, going to the woods where he was at work, shot him without warning. James Lamb and Albert O'Dell, the other victims of this execution, were hung for the murder of Edward Pollard, in the Chickasaw Nation, on December 26, 1885. Each charged the murder upon the other, and thus assisted in their own prosecution.

Pat McCarty, an Irishman, was sentenced to be hung on January 14, but was respited until April 8, 1887, when he was duly executed. His crime was the killing of John and Thomas Mahoney. The Mahoneys were young men who had been at work on a railroad in the Territory, and were on their way to Kansas. They had a good team and wagon, and McCarty and a companion obtained permission to ride with them. While in camp, on the second or third night, McCarty and his accomplice killed the young men, and proceeded on their journey to Kansas, where they sold the team and divided the money. When arrested McCarty stoutly declared his innocence, but the evidence, although circumstantial, was conclusive.

On October 7, 1887, Silas Hampton, a Chickasaw youth, was executed for the murder of an old man, Abner Lloyd, about ten miles from Tishomingo.

April 27, 1888, was the day set for the execution of seven men, but before that day arrived four of them had been otherwise disposed of. The three unfortunates were Jackson Crow, Owen D. Hill and George Moss. Crow was convicted of complicity in the murder of Charles B. Wilson, of Kulla Chaha, on August 7, 1884. The killing was done on the way home from an election, in the presence of some ten or twelve persons, all of whom, with two exceptions, were considered accessories. All were natives but Crow, and the Federal court had no jurisdiction over them.

Moss was a negro convicted of killing George Taff, in Red River County, Chickasaw Nation, on November 26, 1886. George Moss, Sandy Smith, Factor Jones and Dick Butler, all colored, conspired to steal a beef by killing and butchering it, but, before attempting to carry out their nefarious scheme, they entered into an agreement that they would kill whoever discovered them. Taff, a farmer of the neighborhood, chanced to ride through the bottom where the men had just killed a steer belonging to him. As he approached them Moss shot him. Jones and Butler were citizens of the Nation, and were shot by a mob there. Smith was shot while attempting to escape from the jail at Fort Smith, and died a short time before the trial.

Owen D. Hill, a negro, was hung for the murder of his wife, from whom he had previously separated.

Gus. Bogles, a white man, was hung on July 6, 1888, for complicity in the murder of J. D. Morgan, a coal miner, at Blue Tink, I. T., on June 28, 1887.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT.

The early history of the United States District Court for the Western District of Arkansas is given in that of Crawford County, elsewhere in this work. Up to the second Monday of May, 1871, it was held in the town of Van Buren, and since that time it has been held in the city of Fort Smith. Prior to its removal to this city it was a small institution in comparison with what it is now. "This is the largest court in the world, and not only has jurisdiction over Western Arkansas, but also over the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory. To run this court, with its vast array of deputy United States marshals, and posse without number, requires an annual expenditure of more than $250,000, the greater portion of which is spent in Fort Smith. As a result of the large amount of criminal business done by this court, frequent executions occur, the news of which is heralded over the country to the detriment of Fort Smith. But all the hanging done here is done by the Federal court, and the Indian Territory, which lies immediately to the west of us, furnishes all this ripe fruit for the gallows. We refer to this as it is not understood by a great many people who have not taken the trouble to investigate it, and is put down to the detriment of Fort Smith. Here life and property are secure, and the law is enforced as strictly as any place in the United States." [From Fort Smith Chamber of Commerce.]

In this connection it is proper to say that the county of Sebastian has never hung but one man, and that was a colored man named George Green, for the killing of his wife, which occurred about the year 1883. The records show that from January 1, 1873, to January 1, 1886, there were seventy convictions in the Federal court for capital offenses, forty-two executions, three died in jail, twenty-one were commuted to imprisonment for life, and two to short terms, one unconditional, one shot while attempting to escape, and one pardoned after serving a short time. Of the prisoners confined in jail at this writing, thirty are charged with murder, forty for larceny, and fifty for peddling whisky, making 120 in all, and nearly all of them are from the Indian Territory.

The officers of the Federal court are as follows: I. S. Parker, judge; M. H. Sandels, district attorney; C. M. Cook, assistant district attorney; Stephen Wheeler, clerk; I. M. Dodge, deputy clerk; J. A. Hammersly, crier; John Carroll, marshal; W. H. Cravens, chief deputy marshal; J. C. Pettigrew, jailor.

REPRESENTATIVE MEN.

Among the representative men who have been citizens of the territory composing Sebastian County it is proper to make especial mention of the following individuals, of eminent notoriety:

Judge James Woodson Bates, brother of Frederick and Edward Bates, of national notoriety, was born in Goochland County, Va., about 1788, and died at his home in Crawford (now Sebastian) County, Ark., in the year 1846. He was educated at Yale and Princeton Colleges, and graduated in the latter about 1810. When quite young he attended the trial of Aaron Burr, at Richmond, for treason. Soon after leaving college he commenced the study of law, and not long after the organization of the Territory of Arkansas, in 1820, he located at the post of Arkansas, and there commenced the practice of his profession. Soon thereafter he was elected first territorial delegate to Congress. In 1823 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated by the Hon. Henry W. Conway. After leaving Congress, Bates removed to the newly settled town of Batesville, which was named after him, and there resumed the practice of law. In November, 1825, President Adams appointed him one of the territorial judges. On the accession of Gen. Jackson to the presidency, his commission expired without renewal, and soon thereafter he removed to what is now Sebastian County, and there married a daughter of Maj. Moore, and settled on a farm, where he remained until his death. In the fall of 1835 he was elected to the constitutional convention, and contributed his ability and learning in the formation of the organic law of the State of Arkansas. Soon after the accession of John Tyler to the presidency he appointed Judge Bates register of the land office at Clarksville. He discharged every trust and all the duties devolved upon him with the utmost fidelity. He was a most gifted conversationalist, and a writer of unusual vigor. His mind was richly stored with classical learning.

Maj. Elias Rector, the youngest son of Wharton Rector, one of the nine Rector brothers who were brave soldiers in the War of 1812, was born in Virginia, September 28, 1802, and died at his home in Fort Smith, Ark., on the 22d of November, 1878. Though born in Virginia he was reared in St. Louis County, Mo., and educated at Lexington and Bardstown, Ky. He came to Arkansas in 1825, as surveyor under his uncle, Elias Rector, the surveyor-general of Illinois and Missouri, and in 1837 he moved to Fort Smith, where he resided until his death, save an interim of four years during the Civil War. He was appointed by President Jackson as United States marshal of the Indian and Arkansas Territories, and successively held the position for sixteen years, being first succeeded in 1846 by his cousin, Gov. Henry M. Rector, under President Tyler's administration. He was again appointed marshal by President Pierce.

One of his greatest achievements in life was the removal, as the agent of the Government, of the Seminole chief, Billy Bowlegs and his followers from Florida to the Indian Territory, for which service Congress voted him a resolution of thanks and $10,000. He was superintendent of Indian affairs for many years, and held that position when the Civil War broke out. Being opposed to the dissolution of the Union, and also to the taking up of arms against the people of his own section, he sought refuge in Texas, where he found shelter until the war closed, and then returned home to find a fortune lost in the wreck of war, and the Federal authorities in possession of his once princely home. Age and accumulated misfortunes came, in the winter of life, to chill his declining years, yet he met the inevitable with a moral heroism, which imparted a charm to his manhood. In the discharge of his official duties he was ever distinguished for his fidelity, his scrupulous integrity, and although millions of public money passed through his hands no one could ever say that one cent was misappropriated, or used for selfish purposes. He lived respected, and died lamented by all who knew him.*

Gen. Bonneville.—Among the most noted of the officers of the infantry stationed at the post of Fort Smith was Maj. B. L. E. Bonneville. He was of French parentage, and had been educated at West Point. His service upon the frontier had brought him into contact with Indian traders and mountain trappers, and he became so excited by their tales of wild adventure, and their accounts of vast and magnificent regions as yet unexplored, that an expedition to the Rocky Mountains became the ardent desire of his heart, and an enterprise to explore untrodden tracts the leading object of his ambition. In August, 1831, he obtained a leave of absence until October, 1833, in order that he might carry into execution his design of exploring the country to the Rocky Mountains and beyond. On the 1st of May, 1832, he took his departure from Fort Osage, on the Missouri, with a party of 110 men. He was the first to use wagons for transportation on these great inland expeditions, instead of mules and pack-horses.

On the 27th of July of the same year he reached the headwaters of the Colorado of the West, which emptied into the Pacific. He was the first to cross the Rocky Mountains with a wagon train, and was justly entitled to the credit of the discovery of the Southwest Pass. Fremont, however, afterward was accredited with its discovery. Capt. Bonneville remained in the mountains several years, and nothing was heard from him; his name was dropped from the rolls. He was subsequently restored to the army, with his proper rank, and served with distinction until he was retired with the rank of brigadier-general.

He entered a large body of valuable land near Fort Smith at an early day, and after his retirement returned to Fort Smith, where he married a young lady, a native of the city. He built a handsome house on an eminence on the prairie, beautified the grounds, and then enjoyed life with his young wife, surrounded by a large circle of pleasant and devoted friends. In 1878 he closed his long career by a peaceful and happy death, leaving his wife a large and ample fortune. His adventures in the Rocky Mountains were written by Washington Irving, and published under the title "Bonneville." It is an interesting book. In speaking of himself, upon his return from this expedition, he said: "He who, like myself, has lived almost from boyhood among the children of the forest, and over unfurrowed plains and rugged heights of the western wastes, will not be startled to know that, notwithstanding all the fascinations of the world on this civilized side of the mountain, I would fain make my bow to the splendors and gayeties of the metropolis, and plunge again amidst the hardships and perils of the wilderness." Gen. Bonneville, however, did not make another expedition. In 1849, when the first immigrants to California assembled at Fort Smith, he was assigned to the command of the troops to escort them across the continent. He came here full of pleasant anticipations of retracing the steps of his early life, but before the expedition started he was supplanted by another, and his high hopes were dashed to the ground. He was greatly beloved by the people among whom he lived, for his charity and scrupulous integrity, and his death was deeply mourned, although his life had reached beyond the allotted period.

Dr. Joseph H. Bailey, another army officer, acquired large property in and around Fort Smith, and for many years identified himself with the community. His son, also a physician, still lives there. The Doctor was a splendid physician, took an active interest in everything for the improvement of the town and country, and died respected by all who knew him.

Gen. Zachary Taylor, whose history is familiarly known by every intelligent school-boy, commanded the United States troops at the post of Fort Smith for two or more years, and left here to take command of the troops which invaded Mexico in 1846. Of him Col. Ben. T. Duval, in his historical address of 1876, spoke as follows: "Many of our citizens remember him well. He was remarkably plain and unpretending in his manners. His social and hospitable habits made him generally popular. No one, judging from his appearance, would take him for a military man. I remember a circumstance that will show how little of the pomp and circumstances of the military there was in his dress and deportment. A couple of young brevets, fresh from West Point, were attached to the army in this department, and arrived here on a steamboat about daylight. Gen. Taylor, being an early riser, went on board the boat about sunrise, as was his custom to go to the boats when they arrived to hear the news, he being a large planter in Louisiana, and our mail facilities then were limited to a semi-weekly mail. The young men had just arisen, and seeing the old gentleman, whom they took for a farmer, accosted him as follows: 'Good morning, old fellow, how's the crops?' Gen. Taylor responded, 'Purty good.' They pressed him to take a drink, and amused themselves at his expense for some time, and as he left they sung out, 'Give our love to the old woman and the gals,' which he promised to do. You can judge of their surprise when later in the day they called, in full dress, to pay their respects to the commanding general, and found him to be their 'old fellow' of the morning. Gen. Taylor presented his wife and his daughter, Miss Bessie, remarking to them, 'Here are the old woman and my gal.'"

MILITARY.

The Mexican War.—Sebastian County has not been behind in furnishing her quota of soldiers to participate in the wars of the country. A few of her early settlers were among the United States troops that garrisoned the post of Fort Smith in an early day, and two companies of soldiers for the Mexican War were raised in her territory before she became a county. One of these was organized at Fort Smith, under Capt. Felch, and joined Yell's regiment, and with it served through the war. The other was raised mostly in what was then Big Creek Township, and was organized under Capt. Brooks. The quota for the army being full, it was not received.

THE CIVIL WAR.

Preparations.—At the outbreak of the Civil War great excitement prevailed in Sebastian County, and naturally enough the great majority of the people were in full sympathy with the Southern cause. The first actual operations, or the beginning of hostilities, in this part of the State was the seizing of the United States post at Fort Smith by the State troops. On the night of April 23, 1861, the steamers "Frederick Nortrebe" and "Talequah" arrived at Van Buren from Little Rock, with about 300 State troops on board, eight pieces of artillery, and fully prepared with all the munitions of war necessary for taking possession of the post at Fort Smith, all under the command of Col. Solon Borland. He had with him a demand from Gov. Rector to Capt. Sturgis, the commander of the post, to surrender it to the State of Arkansas. Adj.-Gen. Burgevin accompanied the expedition, as did also Capt. C. C. Danley, of Little Rock. On the arrival of these boats at Van Buren the company already organized, and known as the Frontier Guards, began active preparations for joining the expedition, and, after being diligently employed all night in fitting themselves for the service, left next morning for Fort Smith. Capt. Perkins' Company of cavalry also left, or passed through Van Buren, en route to Fort Smith. The boats with the troops on board started there some time in the night, but before reaching their destination Capt. Sturgis, who had anticipated the movement, and who had kept a spy, or spies, concealed on the south side of the river below Van Buren, to inform him of the approach of any vessel or vessels with State troops on board, evacuated the fort with the garrison, and took with him all the arms and other munitions of war that he could, crossed the river and fled into the Indian Territory on his way to Fort Washita. The State troops arrived some three or four hours after the fort was evacuated, and took quiet possession, and continued to hold it. Another boat, the "Lion," arrived early on the morning of the 24th, with a body of State troops, and others soon followed, so that by that night Fort Smith was occupied with several hundred soldiers, in armed opposition to the Government of the United States.

On this same day (April 24), in response to a previous call, a large number of citizens of all parties met at Greenwood, in Sebastian County, and organized a meeting to consider what course they should pursue in connection with the war then already commenced. On motion of Mr. Fishback the Hon. Francis Dunn was called to the chair, and James A. Brown was made secretary. A committee, consisting of Messrs. William Fishback, Joseph W. Head, J. T. London, M. T. Tatum, J. H. Treadway, W. J. Witcher, J. H. Mendenhall, Dr. Swindell and J. R. Smoot, was appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of the meeting. After due deliberation the committee reported as follows:

WHEREAS, The administration of Lincoln, with a spirit of duplicity equaled only by its total disregard of every patriotic duty, has inaugurated a policy of coercion and subjugation by force of arms, arraying brothers against brothers: therefore be it,

Resolved, By the citizens of Sebastian County, of all parties, in mass assembled, that we will resist such policy on the part of the administration even to the death! And to this end we pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor!!

Following this meeting men flew to arms as if by magic, and soon several companies of soldiers were organized within the county, and as time passed, and the war progressed, the excitement increased and the bitter feeling against the Federal administration became more and more intense, as evidenced by the following article, which appeared in the Fort Smith Herald of June 17, of that year:

"It behooves every man to be ready, as all of the fighting men of the State will be needed. Get all your rifles ready, and if possible have the molds made conical and shaped like the minie ball, as the rifle will carry twice the distance with more than double the force. Let every gun and pistol in the land be put in good order, and organize guerrilla bands throughout the mountains and swamps, so that the enemy can be removed if they invade the State. Don't delay; be ready!"

Gen. McCulloch's Proclamation.—On the 27th day of June, 1861, Gen. Ben. McCulloch, the Confederate general, then in command of the Arkansas department, issued the following proclamation:

Citizens of Arkansas, rally to the defense of your frontier! The troops of Missouri are falling back upon you. If they are not now sustained your State will be invaded and your homes desolated! All who can arm themselves will at once rendezvous at Fayetteville, where they will await further orders. All those who have arms belonging to the State will march to the scene of action, or give their arms to those who will not desert their country in this hour of danger. All organized companies of infantry and cavalry which report at Fayetteville will be accepted, and at once formed into regiments and battalions. The necessary subsistence stores will be forwarded from this point. Rally promptly, then, citizens of Arkansas, and let us send this Northern horde back from whence it came!

(Signed)

BEN. McCULLOCH,

Brigadier-General Commanding.

In response to this call for troops the volunteer companies then under organization soon filled up, and the formation of others began. The first company raised in Fort Smith was known as the "Fort Smith Rifles," commanded by Capt. J. H. Sparks, with W. J. Walton as first lieutenant. The next company was the "Belle Point Guards," a German company, commanded by Capt. Hertzog. Then came "Reid's Battery," commanded by Capt. Jack Reid, assisted by — first lieutenant; M. S. Wilcox, senior second lieutenant, and James H. Reed, junior second lieutenant. About the same time another company was raised, and commanded by Capt. W. C. Corcoran; a company of cavalry was also raised, and commanded by Capt. Thomas Lewis. All of these five companies joined the State troops. The "Fort Smith Rifles" and Capt. Corcoran's company joined the Third Arkansas Infantry. "Reid's Battery" was attached to the Third Louisiana Infantry, commanded by Col. McCulloch. Capt. Lewis' company joined Col. DeRosey Carroll's regiment. All of these companies were organized in full before the close of July, 1861, and the citizens of Fort Smith and vicinity had subscribed

$1,000 per month for the support of the soldiers' families. The city then claimed a population of only 2,500; but that was probably an over-estimate. The following tribute to the ladies was published at that time in the Parallel: "Too much praise cannot be ascribed to the patriotic ladies of Fort Smith, for their untiring perseverance and zeal in the cause of Southern independence. They have made the uniforms for seven companies, and for a part of these companies they have made two suits, besides repairs and additions to uniforms of other companies. They have given every attention to the sick that ladies could personally give; they are willing to do more when an opportunity is offered."

Another company in addition to the foregoing was raised for the State service; it was a company of cavalry, commanded by Capt. H. C. Minehart. Capt. John Griffith organized a company of soldiers at Greenwood early in 1861. It went to Fort Smith in a short time after the evacuation by the Federal troops, and took charge of the fort. It belonged to the Third Arkansas, State troops. This regiment participated in the battle of Oak Hill (Wilson's Creek) August 10, 1861, and there suffered a considerable loss. Of the Fort Smith Rifles, Lieut. Walton and Privates D. Holdesby, R. Woodson, L. D. Harper, Meyer Levy, H. Goodchesux and J. C. Emmert were killed. In Capt. Corcoran's company Lieut. Donahoe was wounded; and in Capt. Griffith's company Lieut. Inge was wounded, and Henry Vought and R. J. McCytur were killed. Some other companies of this regiment suffered greater loss. J. R. Gratiott was the colonel of this regiment. The Second Arkansas State troops (Col. De-Rosey Carroll's regiment), was also in the battle of Oak Hill, and Capt. Thomas Lewis' company lost two men killed. Soon after this battle was fought the State troops were disbanded, and some of those belonging to Sebastian County, afterward, in 1862, volunteered in the organization of Capt. J. M. Ward's company of Col. Rector's, subsequently Col. King's, regiment of Arkansas volunteers in the Confederate service, and others joined various other commands.

In December, 1861, Gen. Ben McCulloch was in command of the Confederate army at Fort Smith. The following table shows the several commands composing his army, together with the FRANK ARMSTRONG, Adjutant-General of Division.

The foregoing is a recapitulation of the "morning reports" made by each respective command for that day. Such reports are made daily when an army is in camp, so that the commanding general may at all times know the number of men he has present for duty. After Capt. John Griffith's company of State troops was disbanded, he entered the First Arkansas Volunteers, and, after the battle of Elkhorn, became colonel of that regiment. Capt. Thomas Lewis, who commanded a company in Col. De-Rosey Carroll's regiment of State troops, afterward commanded another Sebastian County company, in Col. Arthur Carroll's regiment of cavalry.

Other Troops.—In May, 1862, a company was organized at Greenwood with the following officers: Elisha Meers, captain; J. O. Hawkins, first lieutenant; N. H. Osborn, second lieutenant; M. T. Tatum, third lieutenant; Jesse Crosby, orderly-sergeant. It became Company D, of the Twenty-second Arkansas Infantry. About the same time another company was organized at Fort Smith, of which John Dillard was captain, and James Ward, first lieutenant. It also joined the Twenty-second Arkansas Infantry, and was designated as Company G. Company H, of the same regiment, W. A. Parks, captain, was raised in Franklin County, but had a number of its men from Sebastian County. Capt. James Newhitt's company, of this regiment, was raised at Dardanelle, and Capt. John Wallace's at Van Buren. The other companies composing the regiment were also raised mostly in this part of the State.

The Twenty-second Arkansas Infantry was organized at Fort Smith in July, 1862, with the following officers: H. M. Rector, colonel; James George, lieutenant-colonel; James King, major. Col. Rector resigned in July, 1863, and Lieut.-Col. George was promoted colonel. About September following he resigned, and Maj. James King became colonel. King remained until the spring of 1864, when the regiment was re-organized, and new field officers were elected as follows: John Wallace, colonel; H. J. McCord, lieutenant-colonel; M. T. Tatum, major.

This regiment, upon its organization, remained at Fort Smith about two months, and then marched to Elkhorn (Pea Ridge), and remained there in camp about three months; then moved by way of Huntsville to Mulberry, on the Arkansas River, then back to Washington County, and there participated in the battle of Prairie Grove, then fell back to Fort Smith, thence to Little Rock, and from there by boat to Pine Bluff, and thence back to Little Rock, where it remained several months, and then went to Helena, and participated in the battle fought there July 4, 1863. It then moved to a point about 120 miles west of Jacksonport, but returned at once to Little Rock, where it remained until September 10, 1863, when that place was evacuated. It then moved to Arkadelphia, and thence to Camden, where it went into winter quarters. The next spring it went to Shreveport, La., thence back to Camden, thence to Jenkins' Ferry and participated in the fight at that place, losing about seventy-five in killed and wounded; then returned to Camden, and thence to Louisville, Ark., and remained there until the spring of 1865, when it went again to Shreveport, La., and thence to Marshall, Tex., and there surrendered to the Federal forces, the war having closed. Soon thereafter the regiment returned home in a body. It contained over 1,000 men when it entered the service, but returned home with only about half that number.

Other companies were raised in Sebastian County for the Confederate army, among which was one raised in June, 1863, and of this Benjamin Neal was captain, and another raised about the same time, of which J. H. Council was captain; the latter company was raised mostly in the southern part of the county. These companies both joined their regiment at Lee's Creek, in Crawford County. James Fitzwilliams, of Fort Smith, was first a captain and afterward lieutenant-colonel of a regiment which broke up at Prairie Grove. He then returned to Sebastian County, and raised a company of independent scouts. Capt. Joseph Head also raised a company of independent scouts, and the two companies ranged mostly together. Company F, First Arkansas Infantry, was partly raised in Newton County, and finished in Sebastian about August 1, 1863. John McCoy was the captain; G. W. Raymond, first lieutenant, and ——— Edmundson, second lieutenant. Company C, of Col. Brook's regiment of Arkansas Infantry, was raised in the vicinity of Salem, William J. Witcher being captain.

The foregoing companies were all in the State and Confederate service, and many individuals of the county served in companies not here enumerated. The State and Confederate forces held possession of Fort Smith from the time they occupied it in April, 1861, until September 3, 1863, the day on which the Federal troops under Gen. Blount first took possession of it. From this time until the close of the war it remained in the hands of the Union army.

The first Federal troops raised in Sebastian County was a band of forty men, who were enlisted in February, 1863, and taken to Fayetteville under Capt. G. N. Spradling, of Greenwood. The most of these men joined Company E, First Arkansas Federal Infantry, and the balance of them joined Company A of the same regiment. This regiment was raised and organized partly at Fayetteville, Ark., and partly at Springfield, Mo. The colonel was James M. Johnson, of Madison County, Ark. After being organized it moved to Fort Smith, where it was encamped most of the time until the close of the war. It was, however, encamped at short intervals at Greenwood, Waldron, Jenny Lind and Van Buren. A great many men, in addition to the forty enlisted by Capt. Spradling, subsequently enlisted in other Arkansas Federal regiments, and many joined the regiments of other States — Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, etc. There were several hundred in all who joined various commands of the Union army. The details of the part taken in the Civil War by the citizens of Sebastian County, and of the incidents that occurred here during that period, would fill a separate volume, and hence cannot be fully given here. Soon after the Union army occupied Fort Smith, on the 30th day of October, 1863, an "Unconditional Union" mass-meeting was held there.

F. W. Wolfe was called to the chair, and C. G. Foster, was made secretary. On motion, Valentine Dell and twelve others were appointed a committee to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of the meeting. After deliberation the committee reported the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That we are in favor of prosecuting the war as long as there is a rebel found in arms against the United States.

Resolved, That we will, to the full extent of our ability, support the administration in all its measures, past and present, to suppress the existing rebellion.

Resolved, That we recommend that delegates be chosen to a State convention, to be holden at Little Rock, for the purpose of re-organizing the State government. And,

WHEREAS, The institution of slavery is an incubus upon the welfare and material interests of the State, therefore be it

Resolved, That Arkansas should take her place in the Union as a Free State, and that all laws tending to establish or perpetuate the institution of slavery should be abolished.

Judge C. Milor and Dr. R. D. Swindell were then appointed delegates to the proposed State convention.

Skirmish on Mazzard Prairie.—On the 27th day of July, 1864, a force of Confederate troops under Gen. Gano, consisting of the Thirtieth and part of the Thirty-first Texas Cavalry, Col. Wells' Battalion and Folsom's and Walker's regiments of Choctaws, of Cooper's brigade, all estimated to be about 2,000 strong, made an attack on a battalion of the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, consisting of about 200 men, commanded by Maj. Mefford of that regiment, on Mazzard Prairie, about seven miles from Fort Smith. The Union soldiers fought well, retreating slowly toward town, but were at last completely surrounded and overpowered, and a number taken prisoners. In this engagement the Federal troops lost ten killed and fifteen wounded, and the Confederates twelve killed and twenty wounded. As soon as news of the fight reached headquarters Col. Judson, of the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, hastened to the scene of action with the balance of his regiment, but on arriving there found that the enemy had departed.

Execution of Copland and Others.—In April, 1864, A. J. Copland, John Norwood, William Cary, James Rowden and twenty others, dressed in Federal uniform and pretending to belong to the Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry, approached a party of ten Union soldiers, who were herding horses near Fayetteville, Ark., and, when within convenient distance, rushed upon and killed eight of them. The four persons here named were afterward captured, and put into confinement at Fort Smith, where they were finally tried by a United States military commission for the aforesaid crime, found guilty, and sentenced to be shot.

Early in the morning of July 29, 1864, the day appointed for their execution, Chaplain Francis Springer visited them in their place of confinement, and, when the hour arrived for their execution, they were taken out, released from their irons, and seated upon their coffins in wagons. A solemn procession was formed, Capt. C. O. Judson, of the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, provost marshal of the district, with his staff, taking the lead; then followed the music, and the firing party, consisting of sixty-four soldiers of the Thirteenth Kansas Infantry, the two wagons with the culprits and chaplains, and lastly a guard. Large crowds of people, in a state of subdued excitement, assembled to witness the affair. On reaching the place of execution, which was outside of the rifle-pits, the prisoners were arranged in a line, each one by the side of his coffin. Three sides of a hollow square of infantry had already been formed to keep spectators at a proper distance. The judge advocate of the district then read the charges and finding of the military commission, after which the men knelt, and the chaplain offered prayer; then all retired except the judge advocate, who remained until the eyes of the unfortunate men were bandaged, their hands tied, and all preparations completed. At the command, forty-eight of the sixty-four muskets, were discharged, and the four victims fell dead upon the ground. One-half of the guns of the firing party were loaded with balls, and the other half with blank cartridges, and no man knew whether his gun was loaded with a ball or a blank. The sixteen men who did not fire their muskets were held in reserve to complete the work in case either of the prisoners had been left standing after the forty-eight muskets were discharged. The prisoners were young men, who had deserted from the Confederate army and gone to "bushwhacking."

Skirmishes near Fort Smith.—On Sunday, July 31, 1864, a considerable force of Confederate troops appeared about four miles south of the town, and drove in the Federal pickets. A brisk fire was kept up for some time by the skirmishers, and the Confederates threw a number of shells from howitzers. A part of the Second Kansas Battery, under Capt. Smith, promptly took position about a mile in advance of Fort No. 2, supported by two companies of the First Kansas, colored troops, just in time to prevent the Confederates from occupying the same hill with their battery. The firing from Smith's guns was effective, and killed a number of the enemy, and all their battery horses except one. The Confederates then retired to the dense thickets of the Poteau bottoms, from whence they continued firing until the next day, and then left. The Union loss was one killed, one wounded and one taken prisoner. Confederate loss not ascertained.

On the first day of September, following, the Federal pickets on the Texas road were attacked by a Confederate force consisting of about 300 Indians, and one Union soldier, Henry Hirsch, was killed. On the 28th day of the same month a forage train belonging to the Federal army, supported by a portion of the Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry, was attacked at a point fourteen miles out on the Little Rock road, by a body of Indian guerrillas, and eight men of the escort were killed and one, Captain Henry, was severely wounded. Being overpowered, the balance were obliged to retreat, leaving the wagons and dead upon the ground. The dead, when found, had been stabbed and robbed.

Last Execution.—The last authorized execution that took place in Fort Smith during the war was that of Private Alexander McBroom, of the First Arkansas (Union) Infantry, who was executed April 21, 1865, for desertion, as per sentence of a court martial. He was executed under the direction of Provost Marshal Lieut. Thomas A. Pollock, Twenty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteers, witnessed by many people and the troops off duty.

Men Killed.—In the atrocities of war a number of defenseless men were killed in Sebastian County, among which were the following: Gus Rutherford, a Union man, was hung by some State or Confederate troops at or near Greenwood. One McGoins, a Union soldier, who lived in the eastern part of the county, was caught and hung near Greenwood, while in the county recruiting soldiers for the Federal army. He was charged with having led a company of Union men, who had hung a Southern sympathizer by the name of Martin, because he was reporting Union men. Logan, a boy sixteen years old, Bridges and two men named Robins, all young men, were hung. After the Union army took possession of Fort Smith, John J. Johnson, a citizen thereof, and a Confederate, was called from his house and shot in his own yard. John Roland, who lived within three miles of town, was killed by a Confederate bushwhacker lying out and watching his opportunity. John Looman and Daniel Norton, Union men, while in camp one night about a mile from Fort Smith, were killed by Confederate scouts. In June, 1864, Capt. Turner and two men belonging to the Home Guards were killed near Greenwood by bushwhackers. The same month A. Paden, Thomas Paden and George H. Hill, Union men, were killed by bushwhackers near Fort Smith, and Patrick McKinzie, an original secessionist, but who had taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, was killed eight miles southeast of Fort Smith by a bushwhacker. Jasper Kersey was shot near Salem because he had joined a company in the Nation, and came out to see his folks. Other persons not herein named were also killed. Some desperate outlaws were executed by the citizens for their mutual protection.

Execution of Capt. Hart and Lieut. Hays.—These men were Texans, and had, as it is claimed, become outlaws, and, at the head of a band of men dressed in Federal uniform, were carrying on a sort of guerrilla warfare. They and their party were surrounded and captured by Confederate forces, and brought to Fort Smith. Hart and Hays were charged and tried by a military commission, for the killing of Col. Carroll and a Mr. Richardson, both citizens of Franklin County, and both of whom were killed at or near their respective residences. According to the evidence they were found guilty as charged, and were executed early in 1863, by order of Col. Phil. Crump, then in command of the Confederate forces at Fort Smith. They were hung to the limb of a tree at the old fort. Afterward an account was published in a Union paper to the effect that Hart and Hays were loyal Texans, who were on their way to Texas to recruit soldiers for the Federal army when captured, and were executed as Federal spies. Good citizens of Fort Smith now living, who had opportunities for knowing the truth, claim that the latter account is not correct, but that Hart and Hays, at the time of their capture, did not belong to either army, and that the first account above is correct.

CITIES, TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

FORT SMITH.

The following is from the records of the War department: * A military post was established at Belle Point, Missouri Territory, in October or November, 1817, by Brevet-Maj. William Bradford, commanding Company A, rifle regiment. The site for the post was selected by Maj. Stephen H. Long, topographical engineer, and is thus described in his report to Brig.-Gen. Thomas A. Smith, commanding the Ninth Military Department, dated May 16, 1818: "This place (Belle Point) is situated in north latitude 35 degrees, 23 minutes, 12 seconds, at the junction of Poteau, 460 miles from the mouth of the Arkansas, pursuing its meanderings, and about twenty miles above the Osage boundary line.

"The situation selected for the garrison is secure and healthy, and affords a complete command of the rivers above mentioned. Its elevation is about thirty-five feet above the water, from which it is accessible by an easy ascent. The point is supported upon a basis of stratified sandstone, well adapted for building, and is surrounded by a woodland affording an abundance of excellent timber. The soil of the adjacent country is exuberant, producing corn, cotton, etc.

"In selecting the position a particular regard has been paid to your instructions, which required a site as near to the point where the Osage boundary line strikes the Arkansas as circumstances would permit."

Maj. Long's report was forwarded by Gen. Smith to the adjutant and inspector-general of the army, under date of May 16, 1818, with the following remark:

"The season being so far advanced, at the time of Maj. Bradford's arrival at the point fixed on for the occupancy of his command, that he was unable to do more than erect huts for his men last season. It is, however, to be presumed that he has by this time made considerable progress in the work, but of this I have not yet been informed." In December, 1818, the post was named Fort Smith, and July 4, 1819, the southern part of the Missouri Territory (embracing Fort Smith) was constituted the Territory of Arkansas.

The post was continuously occupied from the date of its establishment in October or November, 1817, to April, 1824. Re-occupied March 22, 1833; troops withdrawn June 16, 1834; re-occupied July 27, 1838; troops withdrawn July 2, 1850; re-occupied March 14, 1851; troops withdrawn March 1, 1858; re-occupied December 18, 1858; troops withdrawn June 10, 1859; re-occupied September 19, 1860; troops withdrawn April 23, 1861; re-occupied September 1, 1863; troops withdrawn September, 1871.

The military reservation was relinquished to the Interior Department for disposition under act of Congress approved February 24, 1871, by the War Department letter of March 25, 1871. The cemetery tract is, however, still held as a national cemetery.

The original fort was located on the bluff just below the junction of the Poteau with the Arkansas River. It was inclosed with a wooden stockade and protected by large log block houses.

Scarcely a trace of this old fort can now be discovered. It was inside of the line of the Choctaw Nation, for in the treaty with the Choctaws, in 1825, it was provided that the line between that Nation and the United States should begin "on the Arkansas 100 paces east of Fort Smith and run thence due south to the Red River." In 1838 commissioners were appointed to select a site for a new walled fort. They chose the location where the walls and other remains of Fort Smith now stand. In the same year Capt. W. G. Belknap, of the Third United States Infantry, with two companies of his regiment, built on Section 16, in Township 8 north, Range 32 west, it being the land afterward conveyed to Bishop Byrne of the Roman Catholic Church, and is now a part of the site of the city of Fort Smith. The quarters on this land were called "Camp Belknap," and were used and occupied by the troops until about the year 1842, when the buildings in the new fort were completed. After the site for the new fort was chosen, the Government purchased of Capt. John Rogers 300 acres of land, including the site. This, save the lands inclosed within the walls of the fort and the National Cemetery, has long been known as the Reservation. In 1871 it was transferred from the "War Department" to the "Interior Department," and finally, by an act of Congress approved May 13, 1884, it was donated to the city of Fort Smith "for the use and benefit of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith." [For further mention of it refer to the Fort Smith schools.] Of the original buildings erected inside of the walls of the fort, the only one that has escaped destruction by fire is the one now used by the United States District Court.

"Soon after the sale to the United States of the land upon which to erect the new fort, Capt. Rogers laid off the original town. The first buildings were erected on Front Street, which was on the river bank, and for several years all the business houses were on Front Street, or Commercial Row, as it was then called. Since then the original town has been enlarged by additional surveys of lots by Capt. Rogers, Griffith & Nicks, Dr. Elias R. DuVal and Bishop Fitzgerald. The business has extended up Garrison Avenue back from the river, and most of the residences are built on the high ground lying in the rear of the original town plat. The store-houses of Front Row have been long abandoned and gone to decay."*

The surveyor who laid out the town for Capt. Rogers was Herald, the county surveyor of Crawford County. The original town extended from the river along the line of the reservation to La Fayette or Seventh Street, thence out La Fayette to the section line, and thence to the river, and thence with the river to the place of beginning. Since the address of Col. Duval was delivered, in 1876, several additions to Fort Smith have been laid out, among which is Fishback's Addition, the Reserve Addition and others. The original town, together with the several additions thereto, now covers about three full sections of land. Among the early merchants and business men of the town were John Rogers, sutler of the garrison, William Duval, Lewis and Edward Cznarnikow, George and Charles Birnie, J. R. Kannady and George and Henry Beckel. Capt. Rogers kept the first, and for a long time the only, house of entertainment. The first church edifice (a frame building on a stone basement) was erected in 1847 as a union church, on the corner of Washington and Mulberry Streets. It finally went into the hands of the Presbyterians, who occupied it until their present church was erected. This old union church is still standing, and is now designated "Cleveland Hotel." When the town was first laid out there were various large ponds bordering on Garrison Avenue, where many business houses now stand. In winter these ponds were filled with wild geese, ducks and other wild fowl, and the early settlers had much amusement in killing them.

For many years Fort Smith controlled the principal trade of the whole Indian Territory, and was the chief depot for the supplies of western forts, and had the benefit of the trade of the officers, soldiers and employes of the garrison. However, the growth of the town was slow until some time during "the fifties," when it began to grow more rapidly. In 1852 it contained only from 400 to 500 people. Johnson & Grimes were then in the mercantile business, in a house where the railroad depot now stands. Sutton & Griffith, William J. Weaver, Michael Manning, Dotson & Lynch, R. M. Johnson and Michael Henry were merchants about that time. The latter was a wholesale merchant. R. M. Johnson was a dealer in skins, and William Walker was a leading lawyer. From this time forward to 1860 the town grew much more rapidly, as will appear from the following business directory of that year, to wit: General merchandise, Sutton & Spring, M. Sparks, Bostick, Griffith, Pennywitt & Co., Reutzel & Emrich, J. & H. Beckel, O. C. Ward & Co., E. B. Bright, Lewis & Navra, Speier & Shane, D. W. Heard, J. B. Gridley and Brooke & Latham; groceries, Lynch & Dodson; clothing, J. N. Slosson & Bro.; drugs, Hamilton Cline; furniture, A. Haglin; boots and shoes, A. M. Callahan & Co.; liquors, Walton & Bourne, J. B. Gridley, John Horn and Cullum & Robinson; jewelry, James Battersby and W. H. Seward; hardware, J. C. Atkinson and Charles A. Birnie; house painter, Fred Gerber; hotel, City Hotel by J. K. McKenzie; manufacturers of carriages and wagons, Jerry R. Kannady, Poteau Mills, Boyd & Massey; livery, — Gardners; harness and saddles, John Gardner; Fort Smith Female Seminary, N. E. Shepard, principal; Fort Smith Academy, J. M. Ward and J. C. Stanley, principals; Fort Smith Male and Female Seminary, Valentine Dell, principal; select school, Mrs. P. E. Gardner; photography, G. W. Sisson; lawyers, Ben. T. DuVal, John King, J. W. Vandever, J. H. Sparks and Josephus Dotson; physicians, J. H. T. Main, N. Spring, E. R. DuVal, J. E. Bomford, William L. Beall and A. Dunlap; dentist, J. N. Perkins; press, Fort Smith Times, by Wheeler & Sparks. In addition to the foregoing there were several mechanics' shops.

During the war the business of Fort Smith, aside from what was occasioned by the military, was generally suspended. Much of the town was destroyed, and when the war closed it presented an appearance of general desolation. During that unhappy struggle many of the citizens sought refuge in the South, and upon their return beheld the spectacle of ruined homes. This desolation, coupled with the enormous prices of the various articles of food, was enough to discourage "the bravest of the brave." The following is a list of prices current, published in the Fort Smith New Era of January 28, 1865, to wit: Flour, when there is any, $50 to $75 per barrel, or as much more as the seller's conscience will allow him to ask; other articles per pound—corn, 12 to 15 cents; corn meal, the same; sugar, $1; coffee, $1.50; bacon, $1; salt, $1; candles, $1; soda, $1.50; tobacco, 50 cents; dried apples, per bushel, $10; shoe blacking (small box), $1; whisky, 50 cents a thimble full (some say this consists three-fourths of Arkansas water); gin, same as above; beef, per pound, 7 to 10 cents; wood, per load, $3 to $5. In view of these facts, it is a wonder that the people escaped death by starvation. None but those who experienced these privations can tell how they did it. However, the town soon recovered and began to grow and prosper, but its growth was not rapid until recently. In 1880 the population of the place was 3,099, and since then it has increased to 15,000, and the principal business houses, instead of being confined to the streets near the river, as they formerly were, are now located on Garrison Avenue. This avenue is 120 feet in width, and its fine business blocks compare favorably with those of much larger cities. There are located on the avenue, and on the cross streets near by it, the following number of business houses, to wit: Grocery stores, 46; dry goods stores, 22; clothing and gents' furnishing stores, 7; drug stores, 10; hardware stores, 10; furniture stores, 6; jewelry stores, 5; wholesale flour and feed stores, 6; wholesale liquor houses, 4; saloons, 37; restaurants, 22; boot and shoe stores, 4; auction store, 1; dollar store, 1; queens-ware, 2; merchant tailors, 3; harness and saddle horses, 4; undertakers, 2; meat shops, 8; hotels—Main, Le Grande, McKibben, City, Avenue, Walton, Commercial, Iowa, West Point and a number of others; musical instrument stores, 2; livery stables, 5; barber shops, 11; gun-shops, 2; hide stores, 1; wall paper, paints, etc., 1; marble works, 3; book stores, 2; toy store, 1; book bindery, 1; bakeries, 2; lumber, sash, doors, blinds, etc., 3; banks—Merchants, National and American National; express offices—Pacific and Adams; telegraph office—Western Union. In addition to the foregoing, there are a number of smaller business houses in the suburbs of the city, and also several cigar and confectionery stores and fruit stands. The boarding houses are "too numerous to mention;" real estate and loan offices are also numerous. There are also a number of millinery stores, several photograph galleries and many other business houses.

Manufactories.—Chief among the manufactories are the works of the Fort Smith Oil and Cotton Compress Company. This company was organized in 1880, with a capital stock of $225,000, and immediately commenced the erection of its buildings. The cotton compress and oil mill is a huge stone building, 800 feet in length and 175 feet in width. The average number of bales of cotton compressed and prepared for shipment annually is 40,000. During the working season, usually from 1st of September to the 1st of April following, the company employs about 115 men. The building, containing the company's cotton gin, is also made of stone, and is 50x500 feet in size. The company gins from 10,000 to 12,000 bales of cotton per year, and in the manufacture of oil and meal they consume about 10,000 bushels of cotton-seed. The number of bales of cotton compressed by this company each year represents the amount of cotton annually handled at this point, the greater part of which is grown in Sebastian County. There are several large "cotton yards" in the city for the storage of the cotton as it is brought in from the country. One of these yards near the cotton compress reaches from First to Second Streets, and is inclosed with a high stone wall.

The Border City Ice and Coal Company was organized about 1882, with a capital stock of $50,000. The building in which they manufacture ice is made of stone, and is 60x90 feet in size, with a frame addition for the furnace and coal room. It stands between the railroads near the cotton compress. Twenty tons of ice per day are here manufactured, and sixteen men are employed during the season for manufacturing it, which is from April 1 to November 1.

The Ketchum Iron Company was organized in 1886, with a capital stock of $15,000, and their buildings were completed the same year. This establishment manufactures steam engines, boilers, saw-mills, sorghum mills, elevators, drills for boring for oil and gas, and all kinds of architectural iron work, and deals in all kinds of machinery, and gives employment to about thirty men. In consequence of the great demand for steam engines the company has begun the manufacture of fifty of these machines, ranging in capacity from twelve to thirty horse-power, to enable them to supply the increasing demand for the next few months.

On the 1st of January, 1889, the company intends to increase its capital stock to $35,000. Thomas Ketchum is president and N. L. Wickwire is secretary and treasurer. Their trade extends through Arkansas, Texas and the Indian Territory. The city is also supplied with four large saw-mills, three planing-mills, and several extensive lumber yards aside from those connected with the mills, three furniture factories, flouring mills, and many smaller manufacturing establishments and mechanical shops.

Other Items.—The city is well supplied with gas and electric lights by the Fort Smith Gas and Electric Light Company. It also has a complete system of water-works, and a fine sewer system is under construction. It has about eighteen miles of street railways built and building. Its sidewalks are principally made of flagstone. It has the largest and finest opera-house in the Southwest. It has also a large fruit evaporator and a large canning factory.

In addition to its numerous churches and religious societies it has a Young Men's Christian Association. This association has a gymnasium, reading room and parlor, all well furnished. The reading room is supplied with a valuable library of choice works and periodicals.

Natural Gas.—For some months past a company has been boring for oil or gas on Mazzard Prairie, at a point about five miles southeast of Fort Smith, Ark., and finally their hopes have been realized by finding what is believed to be an abundant supply of gas. The well was fired on Saturday evening November 24, 1888, in the presence of a multitude of the citizens of Fort Smith and the surrounding country. The citizens of Fort Smith are rejoicing in anticipation of utilizing the gas to light their city, and for other purposes. It is impossible to state the supply of the gas at this writing.

A United States Signal Service Station was established at Fort Smith in June, 1882, and is still continued there. Corporal R. Q. Grant, a competent and obliging young man, is the observer. The city is in the latitude 35° and 22' north, and in longitude 94° and 24' west.

The Fort Smith Chamber of Commerce, recently established, occupies rooms in the second story of a building on the south side of Garrison Avenue. Here may be seen specimens of the mineral, horticultural and agricultural productions of Northwestern Arkansas, the sight of which well repays the visitor to these rooms.

St. John's Hospital, at Fort Smith, was founded and established in the early summer of 1887, by Rev. George F. Degen, rector of St. John's Parish. It is under the control of a hospital guild, composed of citizens generally embracing all religious denominations, as well as having members outside of the religious denominations. "The officers of the hospital guild constitute a board of management. Any one can become a member of the guild by paying 25 cents a month, and all members have the privilege of attending its meetings and discussing its affairs. Jews and Gentiles, Roman Catholics and Protestants of every denomination represented in the city, are found in the list of members." The first annual report of the hospital was published in July, 1888, showing that the efforts of its founder and supporters were rewarded with eminent success, there having been sixty-seven patients treated during the year. A training-school for nurses is now connected with the hospital. Mrs. Florence Wilton is general manager of the hospital and school. The officers of the hospital guild are as follows: Rev. George F. Degen, master; Mrs. Edith M. Degen, superior; Miss Laura Mitchell, secretary; Mrs. Alex. Walker, treasurer.

The National Cemetery* at this place includes the original burying ground selected when the post was first established. It is beautifully located upon a hill overlooking the Poteau. Here rest in fraternal proximity the dead of both armies in the late struggle, as well as many of the citizens whose bones lie there. The cemetery is surrounded with a substantial brick wall, has a comfortable house for the quarters of the officer in charge. Under the management of a war-worn sergeant it is kept in perfect order; the graveled walks, bordered by beautiful flowers, make it a fit resting place for the heroes who lie there entombed. The quiet which hallows that lovely spot, where those who wore the blue and gray sleep peaceably side by side, should admonish the living that the war is over, and that hands and hearts should be joined in oblivion of the unhappy strife. The ex-Confederates, by the permission of the Secretary of War, have recently erected a monument over the graves of Gens. McIntosh and Steen, both of whom were killed in battle. [Gen. McIntosh was killed March 8, 1862, in the battle of Elkhorn, and Gen. Steen was killed December 7, 1862, in the battle of Prairie Grove. The Confederate soldiers were mostly buried there before the United States Army took possession of the place in September, 1863. The officer in charge makes no distinction in his care of the graves. Of the Union soldiers buried in this cemetery, 521 are known, and 1,304 unknown.]

Incorporation.—Fort Smith was incorporated by an act of the General Assembly in 1842, and the first mayor or chief officer (according to the best information now attainable) was Smith Elkins, and John R. A. Hendry, Sr., was the first recorder. The records were lost or destroyed during the Civil War, thus making it impossible to give the names of the early municipal officers in the proper order. Mr. Birnie, Joseph Bennett, John Striker, Jerry R. Kannady, R. M. Johnson, W. H. Rogers and R. P. Pulliam are remembered as having at various times held the office of mayor. The town was re-incorporated March 9, 1867, and the corporate limits were extended so as to include the additions laid out by Capt. Rogers, Dr. E. R. DuVal, and Griffith & Nicks. Since that time, as the city has improved, the corporate limits have been extended. Under a general act of the Legislature approved March 21, 1885, the city was changed from a second to a first class city. It contains four wards, and its board of aldermen consists of two from each. The present city officers are as follows: Samuel A. Williams, mayor; James H. Hamilton, city clerk; Mat. Grey, police judge; John R. McBride, city collector; J. C. Peel, city attorney; John Kennedy and W. J. Johnston, board of public affairs; Henry Schneider, city weigher; T. H. R. Johnson, city engineer; A. C. Wyman, chief of police.

Transportation.—The Arkansas River is navigable from its mouth to Fort Gibson, sixty miles above Fort Smith, but it is only navigable for boats of ordinary size for from four to six months in the year. From the early settlement until a recent date the river afforded the only means of transportation, aside from packhorses and the slow process of hauling on wheels. Prior to 1858 the mail service was very poor, as the boats did not make regular trips, even when the river was navigable. In that year the great Butterfield California Stage Line was put in operation, and thus the mail facilities were much improved. Afterward the Star Route lines were made available. Before railroads penetrated the Arkansas Valley the goods were shipped by water to the river towns, and from thence conveyed on wagons to the towns in the adjacent country. In 1876 the railroad was completed from Little Rock to Fort Smith, and thus the river towns between these points were furnished communication by rail with the "outside world." From Van Buren this railroad swung around the bend of the river, entered the Cherokee Nation, and terminated at a point on the opposite side of the river from Fort Smith. The goods and passengers were then ferried across the river to the city. A depot was built at the terminus of the road. After crossing the Cherokee line the railroad ran a distance of about a mile within that nation, the officers of which objected to its location in their territory, consequently in January, 1879, the railroad company took up the rails from Van Buren to its terminus, and moved the road to the line it now occupies on the south side of the river. They also moved the depot from the former terminus of the road to its new terminus in the city of Fort Smith. The trains were then transferred on a boat across the river at Van Buren.

The St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad was completed to Fort Smith in 1883, and for the next two years, until the bridge was built at Van Buren, the trains crossed the river on a boat. In 1887 this road was extended south to Paris, Texas, and the Mansfield branch of it was built from Jenson to Mansfield, in Sebastian County. The Kansas & Arkansas Valley Road gives Fort Smith connection with Wagoner, on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Road, giving connection with Kansas and the great Northwest. The Missouri Pacific system is building a line from Fort Smith southeast to Gurdon, on the Iron Mountain Road, and has the grading nearly completed from Fort Smith to Greenwood. The St. Louis & San Francisco has commenced building another line south of Arkansas River to Little Rock, and the Fort Smith &

Dardanelle Road is also being built. In a short time Fort Smith will be a railroad center. Several mails now arrive and depart to and from the city daily, and the Western Union and railroad telegraph lines give it "lightning" communication with all parts of the country. It also has telephonic communication with all near surrounding towns.

The Press.—In June, 1847, John F. Wheeler issued the first number of the Fort Smith Herald, a weekly newspaper, and continued its publication as sole editor and proprietor for a number of years. In 1852 he sold it to an association to be converted into a Democratic paper, and as such its publication was continued until the approach of the war. After the war it was issued again for a time as a tri-weekly, by its original founder, John F. Wheeler, and then changed back to a weekly. Mr. Wheeler remained with it until 1870, when he sold his interest to Frank Parke. Its publication was suspended in June, 1879, for want of sufficient patronage. In 1858 the Fort Smith Times was established by John F. Wheeler and William Perkins, and in March, 1861, it was consolidated with the Herald, and the new paper, the Times and Herald, was continued until some time during the war by John F. Wheeler. The latter died in March, 1880, at the age of seventy-two years. At the time of his death he was connected with the Independent.

The Thirty-fifth Parallel was established October 4, 1859, upon material of the Arkansas Intelligencer, previously published at Van Buren. The war coming on this paper also had a short life. Its editor was A. J. Mayers. About this time, or soon thereafter, the Fort Smith Daily Argus was established, but it suspended in October, 1861. Its editor was George M. Turner. On the 8th of October, 1863, which was soon after the Federal forces occupied Fort Smith, the first number of the Fort Smith New Era was published by Valentine Dell. This number was printed on the back of a sheet containing Washington's farewell address. Sometimes, until the lines of communication were opened up after the war, the paper was printed on foolscap paper, and on various other sizes. This was the first Republican paper published in the State of Arkansas. Mr. Dell continued its publication up to his death, which occurred October 10, 1885.

He was born November 8, 1829, in Baden, Germany, came to America in 1846, settled at Fort Smith in 1859, and soon thereafter opened a high-school, and continued teaching until he established his paper. After the war he held many positions of trust, among which were State senator, postmaster at Fort Smith, and United States marshal for the Western District of Arkansas. In 1861 he married Miss A. A. Hunt, who, with nine children, survives him.

The Fort Smith Standard, a Union paper containing four pages of seven columns each, was established April 2, 1867, by James V. Fitch. Its publication was not long continued. In 1872 the Herald and New Era, both tri-weekly, and the Patriot and Western Independent, both weekly, were published in Fort Smith. In March, 1873, the Herald suspended as a tri-weekly, and continued as a weekly until its final suspension, in 1879. Another paper of recent publication in Fort Smith was the Times, which suspended in October, 1888. The only papers now published in the city are the Fort Smith Elevator, the Fort Smith Journal, the Arkansas Volksblatt and the Golden Epoch. The Elevator was established by John Carnall & Co., and its first number was published November 1, 1878. It is now published weekly by Weldon & Weaver. It is a nine-column folio, and advocates Democratic principles. The Journal, issued both daily and weekly, was established in November, 1887, by the Journal Publishing Company, of which J. H. Clendening is president; Stephen Wheeler, vice-president; F. R. Conway, treasurer and manager, and James A. Miller and W. C. Van-Antwerp, editors. It is an eight-column folio, and advocates Republican principles. The Volksblatt is an independent, eight-column folio, published weekly. It was established in 1885, and is now published by Ernest Pope. The Golden Epoch, a weekly paper published more especially for the colored people, was established some years ago, at Helena, Ark., and was moved to Fort Smith in June, 1888. Messrs. Fisher & Clark (colored) are its editors and proprietors. It is a six-column folio, and advocates Republican principles.

Celebrities.—Fort Smith was once the home of the celebrated artist and sculptor, Miss Vinnie Ream. Before the Civil War her father, Robert L. Ream, was a member of the real estate firm of Carnall & Ream, at Fort Smith, Judge John Carnall being the other member. Miss Ream worked in this office and colored maps for the firm. It was here that her artistic skill was discovered, upon which Judge Carnall advised her father to send her to Italy to take lessons in the art of painting, etc. Her talents, however, were not limited to the art of painting, as she also turned her attention to sculpture, and afterward, as it is well known, made a bust of President Lincoln, for which Congress paid her a handsome price.

In 1860 Messrs. J. M. Ward and J. C. Stanley taught the Fort Smith Academy, as has been mentioned in the business directory of the city for that year. Afterward this same Stanley became captain of Company A, in Carroll's (subsequently Gordon's) Regiment of Arkansas Cavalry, and deserted therefrom at Roseville, Ark., about February, 1863. Good citizens of Fort Smith, some of whom are well posted, believe and claim that he was the veritable H. M. Stanley who has since gained so much renown for his explorations in Africa; but this, for various reasons, is extremely doubtful.

Societies.—The greater portion of the following Masonic history is taken from a pamphlet compiled by E. R. Duval and Henry Reutzel in 1871. On or about the 1st of December, 1847, A. L. 5847, a meeting of the Master Masons of Fort Smith was held at the house of Dr. Joseph H. Bailey, assistant surgeon United States army, and, after due consideration, it was determined to apply to the M. W. G. M. of the State of Arkansas for a dispensation to work. A petition was accordingly drawn up, and signed by the following Master Masons: W. Claude Jones, Leopold Loewenthal, Joseph H. Bailey, Samuel L. Griffith, John G. Reed, John Rogers and F. W. Daniels.

This petition was acted upon by Van Buren Lodge No. 6, and recommended to the Grand Master, who accordingly issued his dispensation, dated December 10, A. D. 1847, A. L. 5847, designating it Belle Point Lodge No. 20, and appointing the following officers: W. Claude Jones, W. M.; Leopold Loewenthal, S. W., and Samuel L. Griffith, J. W.

At 10 o'clock A. M., on Saturday, the 18th day of December, 1847, at the Presbyterian Church, Deputy Grand Master Thomas L. Johnson installed the officers, viz.: W. Claude Jones, W. M.; Leopold Loewenthal, S. W.; S. L. Griffith, J. W.; J. G. Reed, Secretary; George S. Birnie, Treasurer; Joseph S. Bailey, S. D.; F. W. Daniels, J. D.; C. F. L. Henne, Tyler.

The lodge held its first regular communication at the house of Joseph H. Bailey, then living in the brick quarters at the post near the town. On Tuesday, January 4, 1848, at a regular communication of the lodge, Dr. Nicholas Spring, Mitchell Sparks and Jeremiah R. Kannady were initiated.

It appears from the records and tradition that the appointment of W. Claude Jones as W. M. was unsatisfactory; so much so that the Grand Master, through his deputy, Thomas L. Johnson, authorized the lodge to make another selection; and by such authority on the 21st of March, 1848, the brethren unanimously elected Samuel L. Griffith for the position. From December 18, 1847, to November 7, 1848, the lodge met in the Quartermaster's Building, Garrison, and from the latter date until January 1, 1853, in the third story of the St. Charles Hotel, at the corner of Ozark and Walnut Streets. On January 1, 1853, the hall in the Rogers Building on Washington Street was occupied, and on May 2, 1871, the lodge room was removed to Kannady's Block. On Monday, October 29, 1888, Grand Master Gee, assisted by Belle Point Lodge, laid the corner-stone of Baer Masonic Memorial Temple, now under construction on the corner of Sixth and Sycamore Streets. When completed the building will be three stories in height, the second and third to be used by the Masons. For the construction of this temple $10,000 was donated by Bernard Baer, now deceased; $4,000 by Dr. J. H. T. Main, $500 by the First National Bank of Fort Smith, $500 by P. K. Roots and $2,000 by various members of the Masonic fraternity.

Bellevue Royal Arch Chapter No. 8 was organized on January 28, 1853, and received a charter on the 15th of November following. The first officers were R. P. Pulliam, M. E. H. P.; A. Montgomery, E. K.; R. M. Johnson, E. S.; Thomas Vernon, C. of H.; Samuel Reed, Principal Sojourner; Thomas Sparks, R. A. C.; S. L. Griffith, M. 3d V.; W. W. Perry, M. 2d

V.; F. H. Wolfe, M. 1st V. On February 3, 1853, the following members were initiated: Nicholas Spring, W. J. Weaver, C. F. L. Henne, George E. Bomford and Solomon F. Clark, and during the year there were admitted eleven others, viz.: H. McDonald, Francis N. Page, Jeremiah R. Kannady, Marcellus DuVal, W. W. Fleming, F. E. Williams, Asa Clark, Leonard Spradling, John Pearson, Nicholas Williams and A. J. Singleton.

Osiris Council No. 5, R. and S. Masters, was chartered by the Supreme Council, Twenty-third Southern Jurisdiction, on November 23, 1858, A. Dep. 2858, with the following members: R. P. Pulliam, Th. Ill. G. M.; S. L. Griffith, D. Ill. M.; N. Spring, P. C. W.; W. W. Perry, J. R. Kannady, William J. Weaver, Thomas Vernon, R. M. Johnson, C. F. L. Henne, Alex. Montgomery, F. H. Wolfe, George E. Bomford. No communications of the council took place from its organization until reorganization, December 26, 1866, but a charter was granted by the Grand Council of Arkansas on November 6, 1860. The officers at the reorganization were E. J. Brooks, Th. Ill. G. M.; R. M. Johnson, D. Ill. M.; H. E. McKee, P. C. W.

Jacques de Molay Commandery was organized under dispensation in Fort Smith, January 25, 1869. This dispensation was granted December 30, 1868, by Sir Knight William S. Gardner, Grand Master of Knights Templar of the United States, upon the petition of Sir Knights H. F. Thomason, S. L. Griffith, J. R. A. Hendry, William Byers, R. M. Johnson, A. McDonald, E. J. Brooks, H. T. Morton and S. P. Crawford, and the following officers were named by the Grand Master: Sir Edward J. Brooks, Eminent Commander; Sir Hugh F. Thomason, Generalissimo; Sir R. M. Johnson, Captain General.

Sir Knight E. H. English, Post E. C.; with Sir Knights S. L. Griffith, James A. Dibrell, Samuel W. Williams, J. M. Oliver, R. L. Dodge and Fred Kramer, of "Hugh de Payens Commandery" No. 1 of Little Rock, kindly visited Jacques de Molay," and aided in the organization of the new commandery, fully exemplifying the work in the various degrees. The first officers installed were E. J. Brooks, Eminent Commander; Hugh F. Thomason, Generalissimo; Raphael M. Johnson, Captain General; John H. T. Main, Prelate; James W. Donelley, Senior Warden; John W. Cunningham, Junior Warden; Thomas Lanning, Treasurer; John R. A. Hendry, Recorder; Constant F. Bocquin, Standard Bearer; Jonathan Vaile, Sword Bearer; Benjamin F. Atkinson, Warder, and Franklin Rounds, Sentinel.

The origin of the foregoing Masonic societies has been given for the reason that the Masons were the first to organize lodges in the county, and many of them were prominent among the early settlers.

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows was the next to organize, and among them were also many prominent early settlers of Fort Smith and vicinity. The other societies have all been organized within the last few years, and are so numerous that space will not admit of an extended mention of each. Aside from the Masonic societies already named there are now the following lodges: Amity Council No. 555, American Legion of Honor; Oklahoma Lodge No. 25, Knights of Pythias; Fort Smith Lodge, Independent Order of Bnai Brith; Border City Lodge No. 1050, Knights of Honor; Fort Smith Lodge No. 4, A. O. U. W.; Fort Smith Legion No. 2, S. K. A. O. U. W.; Border City Lodge No. 21, A. O. U. W.; Humbolt Lodge No. 22, A. O. U. W.; Robert Emmett Branch Irish Land League; Thomas Williams Post, Grand Army of the Republic; Catholic Knights of America.

GREENWOOD.

This town originated with the selection of its site for the location of the seat of justice, as heretofore stated. The land on which it was located was entered by Reuben Coker, and was in its natural uncleared state when chosen for the county seat. The first house in the town was erected by John Carnall and James J. Baker, for the office of the county clerk, Mr. Carnall occupying that position. It was a log cabin sixteen feet square, the logs being hewed flat on the outside and inside. A double log house was built in 1852, on the corner of Center and Front Streets, on the northeast corner of Block 8, and was used for some time as a court-house. Thomas Kersey opened the first store in the town, in a log building on the northeast corner of the public square. The first "tavern" was kept by John Martin, in a log house where Mrs. McDonald now lives. Betts and Phillips each had stores on the west side of the square, and Awalt & Clark had a family grocery. W. B. Manuel, Turner & Young and Hall Bros. were also early merchants in Greenwood. Dr. S. H. Payne was the first physician in the place. He was soon followed by Dr. W. F. Blakemore, who still resides there.

The growth of Greenwood was comparatively slow, but upon the breaking out of the Civil War it had attained some importance as a business point, being the next largest town to Fort Smith in the county. During the Civil War, up to September, 1863, it was occupied frequently by Confederate troops, being all that time within the Confederate lines. From that time to the close of the war it remained within the Federal line, and was occupied part of the time by Union troops. Scouting parties of both armies entered the town from time to time and burned buildings, so that at the close of the war only eighteen houses, including dwellings, were left standing. The best houses were all burned. The town has been rebuilt, and its present business directory is as follows: General merchandise, M. T. Tatum, M. S. Gaines & Co., Thomas McCord, John T. Bell, Moses & Fieble and G. N. Spradling; drugs, Dr. J. W. Nichol, J. M. Tate; groceries, R. Morrow, R. Hocott, J. J. Baker; furniture and undertaking, Cawthorn & Tatum; groceries and hardware, Meek Bros.; Thomas Kersey and M. T. Tatum are the proprietors of the Greenwood Mills, cotton gin and carding machine; J. Burton & Co. are proprietors of a grist and saw mill and cotton gin; hotels, Central House by W. P. Graham, Harper House by Thomas Harper, Capitol House by G. Loomis; livery, G. Loomis, C. A. Davis; also three blacksmith and wood shops, and some other enterprises; physicians, W. F. Blakemore, Charles Davenport, J. W. Nichol; dentist, Charles Richardson; attorneys, C. B. Neal, R. T. Fowler, R. W. McFarland, R. A. & S. T. Rowe, John Holland. In addition to the foregoing, the town contains two churches and the public school.

Greenwood was incorporated November 13, 1884, including within the corporate limits the east half of the northwest quarter, and the west half of the northeast quarter, and the north half of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 12, Township 6 north, Range 30 west.

Societies.—Greenwood Lodge No. 131, A. F. & A. M.—Upon petition of Green J. Clark, C. Norris, L. Spradling, J. Hackett, E. Spradling, John Henderson and Charles C. Burton, recommended by Belle Point Lodge No. 20, at Fort Smith, a dispensation was granted November 27, 1857, by the Grand Lodge of Arkansas to Greenwood Lodge. Under this dispensation the first meeting of the lodge was held April 20, 1858, with John Pearson, P. M., of Belle Point Lodge, presiding as W. M. The lodge continued to work under dispensation until it received its charter, dated November 10, 1859. The first officers elected under the charter were as follows: Green J. Clark, W. M.; John C. Head, S. W.; W. McAllister, J. W.; N. D. Osborn, Treas.; James A. Brown, Sec. The following is a list of the Worshipful Masters from receipt of the charter to the present time: Green J. Clark, 1859; C. B. Neal, 1860; Elisha Meers, 1861; Clark and Neal, pro tem., 1862 to 1863 (no meetings from August, 1863, to December 21, 1865); William Blalock, 1865–67; C. B. Neal, 1867–72; M. M. Hukill, 1872 to December; W. F. Blakemore, December, 1872; G. N. Spradling, 1873; W. H. Bell, 1874; M. T. Tatum, 1875; Samuel Dunn, 1876; James W. Breedlove, 1877; M. T. Tatum, 1878; J. W. Breedlove, 1880; C. B. Neal, 1881; G. N. Spradling, 1882; J. B. Forrester, 1883–84; C. B. Neal, 1885; G. N. Spradling, 1886–88. In February, 1870, a committee, consisting of M. M. Hukill, Samuel Dunn, W. F. Blakemore and Thomas Kersey, was appointed to select grounds and solicit subscriptions for the erection of a hall. The hall, consisting of a two-story frame building, the first story being for a school-room and the second for the lodge-room, was completed in 1871. Prior to this time the lodge held its meetings in the court-house. For some time the different religious denominations held their services in the school-room, but now it is used exclusively for schools. Greenwood Lodge has now about fifty members, and the present officers are G. N. Spradling, W. M.; R. T. Powell, S. W.; R. S. King, J. W.; R. Hocott, Treas.; J. M. Tate, Sec.

Greenwood Lodge No. 3184, K. of H., was instituted on July 15, 1885, by M. Futrell, with the following named officers: W. B. W. Heartsell, D.; M. D. Howk, V. D.; C. C. Stalcup, Asst.

D.; John S. Little, P. D.; R. W. Gordon, Rep.; G. N. Spradling, F. R.; W. L. Lyles, G.; T. E. Little, Guard; J. M. Davis, Sentinel; W. F. Blakemore, Med. Ex. The lodge was organized with sixteen members, and on the 1st day of January, 1888, there were twenty-three members, and at this writing there are forty-three. They have lost but one member by death. They hold their meetings in the Masonic Hall. The present officers are A. A. McDonald, D.; T. E. Little, V. D.; M. L. Gaines, A. D.; R. W. McFarland, P. D.; W. B. W. Heartsell, R.; C. C. Stalcup, F. R.; J. P. Durden, Treas.; M. T. Tatum, Chaplain; R. A. Meek, G.; R. B. Morrow, Guardian; H. M. Tate, Sentinel; Heartsell, Tatum, McFarland, J. S. Little and McDonald, Past Dictators.

Owens Post No. 20, G. A. R., was organized in 1886, with the following officers: W. J. Seamans, Post Commander; G. N. Spradling, S. V.; John A. Nichols, J. V.; J. H. Kerby, Adj.; T. J. Hanna, Q. M.; J. H. Claunts, Chaplain; F. H. Bridges, O. D.

The Press.—The Greenwood Argus was established about the year 1872 by Mr. Powell, who continued its publication a short time, and then sold it to George W. Rice and his son, P. H. Rice, lawyers. These gentlemen, in June, 1873, changed the name of the paper to the Standard, and published it about one year, and then sold it to Mr. Allison, who moved it, together with the press on which it was printed, to Waldron. The next paper was the Western World, moved from Waldron to Greenwood by W. W. Woods, who, after publishing it a short time, sold it to Messrs. Leake & Lyles, and they changed the name to that of The Plaindealer, and soon thereafter the office was burned. J. P. Leake then established the Greenwood Times, and soon thereafter sold it to Reese & Embra, who continued its publication about three years, and then sold it to R. W. McFarlane, who, in 1886, sold it to H. T. Hampton. On the first day of January, 1887, the latter changed its name to the Greenwood Democrat, and in September following he sold a half interest to Jesse A. Bell, and together, under the firm name of Hampton & Bell, they continue to publish the paper. It is a seven-column folio, Democratic in politics, and is a well-edited and neat local newspaper. The press of Greenwood has always been Democratic.

HACKETT CITY.

This town is situated in the municipal township of Cole, on the Mansfield branch of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, thirteen miles south in a direct line from Fort Smith, and one and a half miles from Jenson Junction. The first store on the present site of the village was opened about the year 1860, by A. B. Merrill. Another store was opened in 1872, or thereabouts, by B. F. Hackett and Christopher Swisher. At this time B. F. Hackett, who owned the land on which most of the town is located, conceived the idea of establishing a permanent town, and to this end he began to give away lots to individuals who would agree to erect buildings thereon, and continued thus to donate lots until about 1886, or until the town was permanently established. In 1872 the prospective town contained only one dwelling-house, one store and one blacksmith shop, and had only one mail per week, and that came from Fort Smith. In 1886 the town had a population of from 200 to 250, and it now has a population estimated by the best authority (the mayor) at 1,200. A general survey and plat of the town has recently been made by the Kansas & Texas Coal Company, now operating the coal mines of Hackett City.

Following is the present business directory of the town: General merchandise, Kansas & Texas Coal Company, McMurtrey, Akin & Co., Upchurch & Sons, Hale & Co., P. B. Cole, J. C. Welch, Doyle & Co.; groceries, by Nutter, Howell, M. W. Christopher; drugs, Savage & Son, Forbes Bros.; hardware, Buck Williams; furniture and undertaking, W. T. Quinley & Co.; restaurants, Samuel Beaty, C. T. Wilson; millinery, Mrs. McAllister and Mrs. Murphy; dress-making, Mrs. Williams; meat markets, Samuel Goode, Pruett & Son; saloons, W. L. Walker, Irvin & Co., Al. Belt, J. F. Surratt; livery, T. J. Jorden; hotels, Hackett City Hotel by J. F. Surratt, Southern Hotel by Mrs. Jorden; physicians, Gorden & McGinty, Savage, Watson, W. J. Brinks, H. W. Fannin, Forbes; dentist, J. Cash; attorneys, P. D. Brewer, J. A. Hale; real estate agents, Williams & Harrell; also one barber shop, two blacksmith and wood shops, the flouring mill and cotton-gin of Medlin & Miller, the post-office, and the planing-mill of the Bloomburg Lumber Co., who are also dealers in lumber, doors, sash and blinds. The town contains three frame church edifices, Cumberland Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, South, and Baptist, each erected at a cost of about $800, and two public school-houses.

The most important business of Hackett City is that carried on by the Kansas & Texas Coal Company. This company commenced operations early in 1887, opened up a mine and sunk a shaft 150 feet deep on the west side of the town. They employ about 125 men at this mine, and excavate and ship from ten to fifteen car loads of coal per day. They have at this writing (October, 1888) from fifteen to twenty men engaged opening a slope to another coal mine about one mile east of the town. The pay-roll of this company for the month of September last, not including the expense of running their general store, was $6,500.

Hackett City was incorporated as a town September 18, 1886. The officers at present are B. F. Hackett, mayor; M. W. Christopher, recorder; J. E. Hale, treasurer, and L. P. Davenport, marshal. The board of aldermen consists of P. D. Brewer, J. D. Bender, Thomas Eskridge, P. J. Medlin and A. H. Gorden. The financial condition of the town is good, its scrip being at par.

Societies.—Amity Lodge No. 267, A. F. & A. M., received its charter, dated November 8, 1871, from Grand Master S. W. Williams. The officers named on the charter were John McClure, W. M.; William H. Shoemaker, S. W., and Ezaas Baker, J. W. Other charter members were R. P. Pulliam, H. H. Mouser, William C. Brewer, T. A. Parrish, Samuel K. Smith, J. E. McBride and J. Windham. The present officers are James A. Williams, W. M.; P. D. Brewer, S. W.; Asa Perdue, J. W.; C. M. Bagwell, Secretary; J. D. Bender, Treasurer; I. S. Ray, Tyler. The lodge has seventy-seven members in good standing, and is out of debt and has money on hand. They own their hall, but contemplate building a new one soon.

Lone Five Lodge No. 43, I. O. O. F., was organized April 17, 1888, with Hugh Hetherington, N. G.; A. H. Gorden, Vice G., and John Milling, Secretary. It has about twenty members, meets in the Masonic Hall, and is in good financial condition.

Oklahoma Lodge No. 3362, Knights of Honor, was organized December 1, 1887, with the following named officers, to wit: H.

Clay, D.; L. W. Bryant, Past D.; W. L. Walker, V. D.; G. A. Belt, Asst. D.; M. W. Christopher, Reporter; T. F. Patterson, F. R.; E. W. Harper, Treasurer. The lodge has now twenty members, and its financial condition is good.

Horse Shoe Assembly No. 10685, Knights of Labor, was organized August 27, 1887, with E. A. Holden as Master Workman, and John M. Kelley as Secretary. It has now about 100 members.

Prairie View Agricultural Wheel, No. 596, was organized recently. It meets on the second Saturday in each month, at 1 o'clock p. m., at Roxanna Hall. James J. Short is president, and J. W. Clark, secretary.

Excelsior Wheel, No. 1749, meets at the Christian Church on the first Saturday in each month at 7 o'clock p. m. W. J. Tramell, president; J. W. Loudermilk, secretary.

The Hackett City Building and Loan Association was organized May 2, 1887, with a capital stock of $100,000. Forty thousand of this amount has been taken up, and is being paid in. The officers of the association, are T. F. Patterson, president; J. D. Bender, secretary, and B. F. Hackett, treasurer. The board of directors include the officers, and P. D. Brewer, James A. Williams, G. A. Belt and W. T. Quinley. The association is meeting with good success, and several of its members are securing homes of their own through its operations.

The Press.—The Hackett City Horse Shoe was established May 7, 1886, by Capt. James A. Williams, who still continues its publication. It is an eight-column folio, neatly printed and ably edited in the interest of Hackett City and the surrounding country. In politics it is Democratic.

HUNTINGTON.

This is a mining town, and is situated on the Mansfield branch of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, nine miles south in a direct line from Greenwood. The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Coal Company bought the site, 120 acres, of L. P. Barrett, the original owner, and surveyed and laid out the town in August, 1887. So it is only a little over a year old at this writing. Samuel Fellows, superintendent for the coal company, built the first house at Huntington, before it was laid out, in June, 1887, and opened up the coal mining works. Slope No. 19 and some surface mining was opened in August, and Slope No. 21 was commenced in December, following. Mine No. 24, one-half mile west of the town, was opened in the spring of 1888, and an addition to Slope 21 was commenced in August, 1888. Slope 19 extends into the bank nearly eighty rods. The company is now (October, 1888) working from 400 to 500 men, and ship on an average about thirty car-loads of coal per day. The vein of coal is six and a half feet, in alternate layers of slate, as follows: 1st. Coal, 2 feet; 2d. Slate, 6 inches; 3d. Coal, 6 inches; 4th. Slate, 1 foot; 5th. Coal, 4 feet.

The first store-house in Huntington was built by the coal company in the fall of 1887. It is 120 feet long by forty-eight feet wide, and forty feet of the rear is "double decked," thus making in all 160x48 feet of floor. It is constructed of stone, and is claimed to contain more store-room than any other store in the State. In addition to this store the town contains the following business houses, to wit: General merchandise, George Bros., Ben. Wolf & Co., John McKamey; groceries, J. W. Young, J. N. Lockett; drugs, McConnell & Brewster, J. W. Young, J. W. Riley, Dr. Callicoatt; hotels, "Fellows Hotel," containing twenty-six rooms, and built expressly for a hotel, Samuel Fellows, proprietor; Drummers' Home, J. N. Lockett, proprietor; clothing, J. W. B. Appleby; restaurant, kept by Mr. McGovern; restaurant and bakery, J. Renfro; meat shops, John Dagan, Vinton Goff; billiards, A. Belt & Co.; livery, R. A. Bonham; real estate agents, F. W. Tilley & Co; attorney, A. L. Brewster; physicians, T. N. Callicoatt, A. C. Brewster, R. M. Osborn. In addition to the foregoing there are two blacksmith and wood shops, two barber shops, five or six boarding houses, one boot and shoe shop, two church edifices under construction, Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal, South; and R. L. West & Co. have a planing-mill, sash, door and blind factory and lumber yard, and last, but not least, the Farmers' Alliance have established headquarters at Huntington, and have a "cotton yard" inclosed, containing a space of 200x300 feet, on which is erected a shed 14x300 feet and ten feet high, also an office, and an elevated platform on which to unload the cotton from the wagons. The Alliance have their own agent and ship their own cotton, and thus save the profits usually given to "middlemen." The cotton yard was fitted up and is owned by the coal company, but the farmers have and will have the use of it free of rent so long as they continue to use it for the purpose intended. The yard is connected with the main line of railroad by a side-track.

The Press.—The Huntington Hummer was published at Huntington from June 4 to August 20, 1888, by Charles Noble, and then suspended. The Huntington Herald was established in October, 1888, by Bedwell & Wilson.

Miscellaneous.—Martin's addition to Huntington occupies the ridge above the business part of the town, and is being rapidly built up with residences. From this ridge a splendid view of the surrounding mountains and country is obtained. Huntington has several good business buildings, some of them made of stone, and a large number of comfortable residences; its population is estimated at from 1,200 to 1,500, many being miners.

HARTFORD.

This village is situated in the municipal township of Hartford, on Section 17, Township 4 north, Range 32 west, being in the valley between Poteau and Sugar Loaf Mountains. It was established about the year 1868 by Dr. J. D. Williams. William J. Fleming and William Stevenson opened the first store in the place. It now consists of the following business houses, to wit: General merchandise—J. D. Williams & Son, J. B. Forrester, R. Y. Baldwin, J. C. White & Co.; four blacksmith shops, one boot and shoe shop. There is also a grist-mill and cotton-gin owned by J. B. Forrester, a union church edifice used respectively by the Methodists, Baptists and Cumberland Presbyterians, and a public school-house. The physicians are Drs. S. A. Brown and J. D. Williams. The population of the village is between 200 and 300. It lies in what is called the Upper Sugar Loaf Valley, and like other Sebastian County towns it is surrounded with beautiful mountain scenery. It is distant two miles from the western and three miles from the southern boundary of the county.

Society.—DuVal Lodge No. 249, A. F. & A. M., was instituted July 1, 1871, by Dr. E. R. DuVal, with the following officers: J. L. McCracken, W. M.; Sanford Berry, S. W.; W. J. Fleming, J. W.; N. A. Jackson, Treas.; C. E. Goddard, Sec.; S. M. Griffith, S. D.; W. P. Guyon, J. D.; J. P. Landers and C. H. Davis, Stewards; G. S. Tatum, Tyler.

MANSFIELD.

This town is situated at the present terminus of the Mansfield branch of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, and at the corner between Townships 4 and 5 north, and Ranges 30 and 31 west. A portion of it lies in Scott County. It was surveyed and laid out in July, 1887, by John P. Hely, C. E., for the railroad company, and J. W. Harper. The latter was the original proprietor of the land on which the town is located, but sold 100 acres to the railroad company before the town was laid out. Mansfield is in plain sight of and only two miles distant from Huntington. The first business house in the town was built in October, 1887, by J. W. Harper, and the same month D. B. Johnson opened the first store in the place. Soon thereafter McKamey & Bonham and S. E. Smith opened their stores. Other enterprises soon followed, more buildings were erected, and the new town has already grown to contain the following business houses: General merchandise, D. B. Johnson, S. E. Smith, McKamie & Bonham, J. R. Frazier, J. R. Lane; groceries, Charles Humphrey, Parks & Bryan, B. Robinson; drugs, George Remley, T. B. Richardson; millinery, Mrs. F. J. Weymouth & Co.; livery, Thomas F. Martin; blacksmith and wagon shop, William Harp & Co.; planing mill, James Sloan; hotels, Barnett House, by T. B. Barnett, Frisco House, by C. H. Hackett; boarding houses, by Thomas Cherry, William Morris; sewing machines, W. O. Martin. In addition to the foregoing Hart & Hodges have a steam power flouring and grist-mill and cotton-gin; George E. Otis & Co. are wholesale dealers in flour, salt and all heavy produce; James W. Harper deals in cotton and real estate, and Jesse Martin is a farmer and real estate agent.

Bowman Hall stands on the Scott County side of the line, as does also a large portion of the town. It was erected about the year 1874, and is a large two-story frame building, well finished, with a Masonic hall above and a church room below; the former is used by Reed Lodge No. 163, A. F. & A. M., of which mention is made in connection with the history of Salem, and the latter by the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mansfield has one physician, Dr. J. W. Gray, and one lawyer, Hon. E. T. Walker. The latter is also a physician, but devotes his attention mostly to the law. Mansfield is situated on an even plain, inclining slightly toward the east, in Sugar Loaf Valley, and is 600 feet above sea-level. The Poteau Mountains are in full view on the south, the Sugar Loaf on the west, Huntington to the north-west, and the Black Jack Ridge to the northeast, the whole constituting a magnificent view of scenery. If Mansfield continues to be the terminus of the railroad it will remain an important distributive point of trade for several towns and villages lying south, east and west of it, and will undoubtedly become a large and prosperous town. The extensive beds of coal lying near and around it will, when utilized, add much to its prosperity.

SALEM (WITCHERVILLE POST-OFFICE).

This is a very pleasant village, located in the south-central portion of the county, five miles south on a direct line from Greenwood, and near Hodge's Prairie. It is very pleasantly located, and from it a magnificent view of the Poteau and Sugar Loaf Mountains and of the Back Bone and Black Jack Ridges is obtained. William J. Witcher, the original proprietor of Salem, came from Virginia in 1850, and settled on the land where the village is located, and has resided there ever since. In 1868 he laid out the town of Salem, and he and W. Simpson erected the first store-house and opened the first store in the place. William Belt built the next house and opened the next store. In 1870 Mr. Witcher put up the first steam grist-mill and cotton-gin in the place, and in 1880 John F. Williams erected a steam flouring mill and cotton-gin.

The following is a directory of the business of Salem at the present writing: General merchandise, W. G. Graves, George A. Graves, E. M. Davenport, J. F. Marshall; groceries, J. W. Johnson, B. A. Cross; drugs, N. D. Woods; hardware, John Caldwell; grist-mill and cotton-gin, B. A. Cross; two blacksmith shops; one church; Buckner College; post-office, William J. Witcher, post-master; physicians, J. H. Foster, L. C. Greer, E. M. Davenport; attorney, J. M. Hudson; hotel, Isaac Davis. [For history of Buckner College, see article on Education.]

Societies.—Reed Lodge No. 163, A. F. & A. M., was organized in 1855, about a mile and a half southeast of the present site of Salem, and the same year a church and hall was erected there conjointly by the Masons, Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians. It was a two-story frame, and the church room was below and the hall above. Soon after the war this lodge moved across the line into Scott County, and located at the present site of Mansfield, where it still exists.

Pulliam Lodge No. 133, A. F. & A. M., was organized under a dispensation dated in January, 1875. The first officers were George W. Graves, W. M.; George H. Council, S. W.; J. K. Bell, J. W.; J. W. Sorrel, S. D. pro tem.; J. R. Ford, J. D.; R. P. Pulliam, Sec'y; W. J. Williams, Treas.; M. L. Spessard, Tyler. About the time this lodge was organized they erected a hall at Salem, consisting of a two-story frame building, with the first story fitted for a school-room and the second for the hall proper. The present officers of the lodge are J. W. Young, W. M.; G. H. Council, S. W.; J. J. Holland, J. W.; W. G. Graves, Sec'y; J. H. Caldwell, Treas. The membership of the lodge is twenty-five in good standing.

EDUCATION.

For full information pertaining to the Arkansas school system the reader is referred to that subject in the history of Benton County. No adequate system for the education of the masses existed in Arkansas before the inauguration of the present school system, consequently the children of the poor in Sebastian County, as well as those of all other counties of the State, were compelled to grow up into manhood without an education. Only the children of parents able to hire teachers on the "subscription plan" were furnished with school facilities. Fort Smith, being the first place settled in the county, opened and supported the first schools. Col. Duval, in his historical address, says: "Our first school-master was a little Irishman. He was a cripple, but of genial nature. I can well remember him, and even now fancy I can see him as he limped, singing 'Ye banks and braes o' Bonny Doon.' His name was Graham. In 1840 John Carnall, who ever since that time has been a prominent and honored citizen of the county, opened a school on the corner of Third Street and Garrison Avenue, and after teaching there for some time he opened his school in his own house, on Lot 8, in Block 17, and next he taught in a house built for the purpose on Block 22, near the present Episcopal Church. This house was afterward converted into a dwelling, and is still standing. Mr. Carnall taught from 1840 to 1846, inclusive. During the last two or three years of this time he was assisted by his sister-in-law, Mrs. Mary Pearce. In an old paper has been found one of his advertisements published in 1845, which reads as follows:

FORT SMITH ACADEMY.—The second term of this institution will commence on Monday, September 30, 1845, and continue twenty-two weeks. The instruction of the younger pupils, male and female, will be by Mrs. Mary Pearce.
* * * It has been and shall be the subscriber's endeavor to see that each pupil is thoroughly versed in everything he undertakes before he is suffered to leave it.
JNO. CARNALL.

In the spring of 1844 Prof. Melvin A. Lynde took charge of the Cane Hill School, and following Mr. Carnall he and his sister, Mrs. Sabine, taught for a time in Fort Smith.

Prairie Female Seminary was located in the country between Van Buren and Fort Smith, and was taught by Rev. and Mrs. C. C. Townsend. The third session of this school opened in September, 1846. Soon after this Rev. Townsend taught school in Fort Smith. He was at one time chaplain of the garrison at Fort Gibson. He was a minister of the Episcopal Church, and as such did a great deal of missionary work. He preached for his denomination in Fort Smith, the first services being held in the buildings in the fort. His first sermon in Fort Smith, however, was preached in the dining-room of the old City Hotel, then kept by Capt. John Rogers. The most noted individual in connection with the schools of Sebastian County, and who is entitled to the most extended notice, is Mrs. Martha J. Walker, who has recently retired from the profession of teaching, and who is still living, at an advanced age, in Fort Smith. In the spring of 1838 she came from Tennessee and located at Mulberry, in Crawford County, where she commenced teaching in the fall of that year. After remaining there about two years she moved to Beatty Prairie, in Benton County, and taught there other two years. She was then employed to teach the Union Mission School in the Cherokee Nation, at a point twenty miles above Fort Gibson, on the Arkansas River, where she remained four years. She then went to Newton County, Mo., and taught two or three years, and in the spring of 1851 she moved to Fort Smith, when the dreadful disease of cholera was prevailing there, and, not being able then and there to open a school, she went to Biswell Springs, on the Little Rock road, and there taught a school during the summer of that year. In the fall she returned to Fort Smith, and opened a school in a log house on North Fifth Street. This house was then surrounded by pecan trees and vines, and was then in the suburbs of the city. It has since been weather-boarded and enlarged, and is now occupied by Mr. Givens. Miss Armorer, a sister of Mrs. Dr. Main, was teaching in Fort Smith at this time. The following year Mrs. Walker (then Mrs. Dr. Ake), bought lots and built a residence and school-house combined on the corner of Fifth and Ash Streets. Here she taught until 1859, having meanwhile lost her husband, and subsequently married Calvin Walker, her last husband. She then moved with her husband to Bee Prairie, on the Little Rock road, and there built a school-house, and taught there and at Charleston, in Franklin County, for the next two years, and then returned to Fort Smith.

She then leased the Christian Chapel for ten years, and taught school in it from 1861 to 1870. After this she taught several terms at Oak Grove, near Greenwood, then returned again to Fort Smith in 1876, and opened a school and taught for a time in her own house again. She also taught the first public free school in the city. Her assistants in this school were Miss Bettie Wegman (now Mrs. Henry Birnie), her own daughter, Miss Pinkie Ake (afterward Mrs. Pennington), Miss Henriette Byers and Miss Katie Wolf. Only two of these assisted her at a time. The school then consisted of over 300 pupils. It was taught in the Christian Chapel. Later Mrs. Walker taught in the public schools in the country until 1887, when she retired from the profession. Among other early teachers in Fort Smith were some of the ministers of the different churches.

On the 17th day of September, 1875, when the authorities were prospecting to establish public schools in accordance with the new law, an election was held in Fort Smith on the proposition of voting a five-mill school tax, resulting in 170 votes in favor of the tax and 120 against it. The free school system then began to grow into favor. Prior to this time, viz., in 1870, the school board had purchased of John Carnall the Belle Grove property. The house on this property then was a large dwelling, which had been built by W. H. Morton, a former owner. It was converted into a school-house, and used as such until a short time before the present building was erected, and it was then torn down and removed.

In 1869 there were but two public schools in the city, one white and the other colored. The white school was taught by Prof. Burnham, with four assistants, and the colored school by Prof. Lyman.

The following letter, recently published by the Fort Smith Chamber of Commerce, is here inserted by permission of its author.

To the Chamber of Commerce:

I cheerfully comply with your request to submit an article for publication relative to the affairs of the city schools of Fort Smith. By an act of Congress the Government donated to the city of Fort Smith, for school purposes, the military reservation adjoining the city limits on the southwest. The munificence of the gift will be duly appreciated when it is understood that up to the present time, sales of lots in accordance with the act of Congress have reached the sum of $259,220.17, the number of lots sold being 582, or not quite half of the whole number as laid off by direction of the city government. Considering the fact that the property has steadily enhanced in value, and that some of the choicest lots remain on hand, I think it is no extravagant estimate that $500,000 will be realized from future sales. The special act of our State Legislature, creating the school district of Fort Smith, restricts the directors to the use of the interest arising from the reservation fund, the idea being to create and preserve a permanent endowment. After paying for school sites and buildings we have had sums loaned at 8 per cent per annum sufficient to realize $15,189.82 interest for the year ending July 1, 1888. Our school sites and buildings are as follows: Belle Grove, $60,000; Belle Point, $30,000; Peabody, 10,000; Howard (colored) $20,000; total, $120,000.

Besides these we have now under contract and in course of erection, DuVal School building, to cost $20,000 for the building alone, and plans are maturing for finishing at least four additional rooms for colored children. There were employed in the schools last year one superintendent and twenty-seven teachers, at a cost of $19,479.82.

We think our corps of teachers will compare favorably with any in the country, the policy of our board having been to secure the best talent that could be had for the salaries we were able to pay; and while in order to keep pace with the progress of the age we have drawn largely upon our sister States for teachers, home talent has not been neglected, but duly appreciated and employed wherever found. Relying upon the opinions of practical school men, with many of whom my position has brought me in contact for the past year, I do not hesitate to say that for efficient practical instruction, firm though kind government, coupled with good and sound moral influences our schools are unsurpassed by any in the West or South. Appreciating the importance of other information than that contained in text books, the initial steps have been taken for the establishment of a public school library. Our congressman (Hon. John H. Rogers) having succeeded in having this designated as a depository for public documents, many of these have been received, which, being supplemented by purchases made by the board of directors, gives us already the nucleus for a good collection of books. Beside the public schools we have two convent schools, one Lutheran school, a business college, and several other private schools.

Very respectfully,

(Signed)

JOHN L. HENDERSON,

Secretary Fort Smith School Board.

All of the school buildings mentioned in the foregoing letter, except the DuVal building, were erected in 1885 and 1886, and about $100,000 of the principal of the reservation fund was expended in their construction. The balance of this fund, about $159,000, is now accumulating interest, to be used in payment of teachers. The writer is familiar with the school systems of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Tennessee, and with amounts of permanent school funds controlled in the several counties in each of these States, but has never found a county having over $70,000 under its control, but here is a single school district, containing the city of Fort Smith, with $159,000 of a permanent school fund, and a prospect, as stated in Mr. Henderson's letter, for the additional sum of $500,000, making in all $659,000. This magnificent sum, if realized and properly managed, will in future years annually pour into the school treasury at Fort Smith, at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, the large sum of $52,720 for the benefit of the schools. All this will be realized if Fort Smith continues its present rate of growth and prosperity. It is proper to say, in this connection, that the idea of securing the military reservation to the school district of Fort Smith, for the benefit of her schools, originated with Judge John Carnall, who, with a few others, labored for many years to secure the passage of a bill by Congress to make the donation.

At this writing there are twenty-eight teachers and one superintendent, Prof. N. P. Gales, employed in the schools of this district. Seven of them are in the grade and four in the high-school department of the Belle Grove school, eight in the Belle Point school, four in the Peabody school, four in the grade and one in the high school department of the Howard (colored) school. According to the last enumeration there are 2,727 children of school age in the district, 2,138 being white, and 589 colored.

There are three school districts aside from Fort Smith District in Upper Township, or the Fort Smith District of the county, and in the Greenwood District there are over seventy school districts. In some of the districts there are more than one school, so that there are outside of the city of Fort Smith upward of 100 schools in the county. "Provision is made in the constitution of the State for the support of public schools, requiring an annual tax of 20 cents upon each $100 of taxable property, to be levied and collected for that purpose, in addition to a per capita tax of $1 upon each adult male inhabitant. In addition to the amount raised by State tax, each school district, by vote, can levy a tax not to exceed 50 cents upon the $100 for the support of its school. A large portion of the districts vote the full amount allowed by law, paying in the aggregate for this laudable purpose 70 cents on the $100 of taxable property, together with a poll tax of $1." The public fund thus raised in the country districts sustain the schools from three to four months, while in the towns and densely populated and richer districts it sustains them for a longer period. When the public funds are exhausted in the towns and villages the people usually subscribe enough in addition to maintain their schools for from six to ten months. The school district in the extreme northwest part of the county has a decided advantage over all other country districts by reason of a considerable income from the tax on the two railroads passing through it and on the railroad bridge across the Arkansas. This advantage enables the district to maintain its school six months in the year with its public fund.

Buckner College.—This college is situated at Salem (Witcherville) in a beautiful grove at the edge of Hodge's Prairie, and from its location the magnificent scenery of the Poteau and Sugar Loaf Mountains, and of the surrounding country, is beyond description. The college was founded in 1875 by Rev. E. L. Compere, a Missionary Baptist preacher, and named after Rev. Buckner, a missionary to the Cherokees. In 1883 the present college building, being a frame structure 60x120 feet in size, and three stories in height, was erected at a cost of $15,000. The money was raised upon subscription by the citizens of this and adjoining counties. The first school was opened in 1883 by Dr. A. S. Worrell, who taught four sessions. He was succeeded in 1885 by Dr. Reynolds, who taught one session. Following him Dr. R. S. James taught three sessions, and Dr. David McDonald one session, the latter closing in June, 1888. The college was erected under the supervision of the Missionary Baptists, but its use was transferred in 1887 to the Episcopal denomination. It has capacity for seating 200 students. Huntington, on the Mansfield branch of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, lies in full view three miles south from the college site. Salem is a very pleasant and healthful village, and has none of the vices and allurements common to large towns or cities, and is, consequently, a very desirable location for a college. It is also sufficiently near to railroad communication.

RELIGION.

The Methodist Episcopal Church.—Upon the division of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, in 1844, and the organization of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in May of the following year, the Methodist Episcopal Church found few adherents in Northwestern Arkansas, or, indeed, anywhere in the State. Nevertheless, there were a few ministers who refused to join the new conference. Among them were Thomas Norwood, J. K. West and James Hanan. These men, with a few of the faithful in Missouri, held a convention on Spring River, in that State, on December 25, 1845, and decided to do what they could to re-establish the Methodist Episcopal Church in these States. The next year Rev. Mark Robertson, from Missouri, attended a camp-meeting in Arkansas, and there it was agreed that J. K. West should preach on what was styled Washington Circuit, and James Hanan, on the Van Buren Circuit. In 1848 these circuits were supplied by Revs. Anthony Bewley and Mark Robertson, respectively. In their work these ministers met with great opposition, and, as the slavery agitation increased just before the war, this opposition became greater, resulting, in many instances, in their forcible expulsion from neighborhoods.

In 1852 Arkansas Conference was separated from that of Missouri, and on October 26, 1853, it convened at Fayetteville, Washington County, Bishop Morris presiding. The next year it was held at Pugh's Chapel, Sebastian County, and Bishop Ames presided.

The passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, in 1854, renewed the slavery agitation, and as the ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church were, without exception, classed among the abolitionists, their attempts to hold meetings in slave-holding communities were the signals for uprisings of the people and threats of mob violence, which, in some instances, were put into execution. The Arkansas Conference, however, still maintained an existence, and in 1858 again held its session in Fayetteville. Anthony Bewley presided, no bishop being present. At this time some work was being done in Texas, and at its next meeting the conference convened near Bonham, in that State. This was on March 11, 1859. As soon as it became known that the conference was in session, a meeting was held by the citizens of Fannin County, in Bonham, at which the following resolutions were adopted, and are here inserted, since they state the position of the people of Arkansas quite as well as of those of Texas.

WHEREAS, A secret force lurks in our midst known as the Northern Methodist Church, entertaining sentiments antagonistic to the institution of slavery, and the manifest intention of whose Northern coadjutors is to do away with slavery in these United States; and,

WHEREAS, The further growth of this enemy would be likely to endanger the perpetuity of that institution in Texas; and,

WHEREAS, Sentiments diametrically opposed to the interests of the South have this day been publicly proclaimed upon our streets by a minister of said Northern Methodist Church; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Methodist Church having separated into divisions, North and South, the organization of a Northern branch of the church in our State, as a screen behind which to hide the emissaries of a Northern political faction known as abolitionists, is dangerous to our interests, and ought not, therefore, to be tolerated by the people of Texas.

Resolved, That a suitable committee be appointed to wait on the bishop and ministers now in conference assembled on Timber Creek, in this county, and warn them to withhold the further prosecution of said conference, as its continuance will be well calculated to endanger the peace of this community.

Resolved, That our motto be, peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must.

Resolved, That we hereby bind ourselves to co-operate in the future to do all we can to suppress abolitionism in our midst, and that henceforth we will suffer no public expression of abolition doctrines or sentiments in our streets or county to go unpunished.

These resolutions were presented to the conference by a committee of fifty citizens, and on the following day the conference adjourned sine die. It met again, however, the next spring at Pleasant Hill Church in Franklin County, Ark., but the work of the conference in Arkansas was at an end for the time. All of the ministers and many lay members fled the State. In 1861 the Missouri and Arkansas Conference (the two having again united) appointed five preachers to Arkansas, namely: J. R. West, J. W. Murray, T. Reed, Hiram Hess and C. Baker, but none of them were allowed to assume charge of their circuits. Nothing more was attempted until 1865, when the Missouri and Arkansas Conference was reorganized, and Rev. Mr. Blackburn was appointed presiding elder on the Arkansas District, while W. H. Gillam was stationed at Fort Smith, and W. L. Malloy at Fayetteville. R. W. Hammett, who had been an itinerant in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, united with the conference, and at this time was located at Fort Smith. Mr. Blackburn was succeeded as presiding elder by W. H. Gillam, and in 1868 two districts were formed. Of the Little Rock District Mr. Gillam was made presiding elder, while R. W. Hammett was appointed to the Fort Smith District. In 1872 the Arkansas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was constituted by the general conference, and was organized by Bishop Thomas Bowman, at Little Rock, on January 1, 1873, J. W. Bushong, secretary. At this time there were thirty-three preachers appointed to circuits and stations, which were grouped into four districts, viz.: Southeast Arkansas District, W. H. Gillam, P. E.; Southwest Arkansas District, E. W. King, P. E.; Fayetteville District, T. B. Ford, P. E.; Batesville District, R. W. Hammett, P. E. The appointments for the Fayetteville District were as follows: Fayetteville, E. F. Reser; Bentonville, G. W. Hood; Elm Spring, to be supplied; White River, G. W. Taylor; Huntsville, to be supplied; Van Buren, O. R. Bryant; Ozark, Henry Flood; Boston Mountain, to be supplied; Arkansas, W. H. Crawford; Carrollton and Harrison, T. M. Kirkpatrick. At the close of the year there were in the district ten churches and 1,122 members. Fort Smith and Greenwood circuits were in the Southwest District. For 1874 the appointments in the Fayetteville District were as follows: Fayetteville Station, to be supplied; Fayetteville Circuit, O. R. Bryant; Bentonville, G. W. Hood; White River, G. W. Taylor; Huntsville, T. M. Kirkpatrick; Van Buren, A. N. Fields; Ozark, J. D. Stockton; Carrollton and Harrison, E. F. Reser. T. B. Ford was again the presiding elder. Of the Southwest District E. W. King was presiding elder, and Fort Smith and Greenwood Circuits, were J. W. Bushong and L. C. Aley, respectively. In February, 1875, the third annual conference was held at Russellville, and the number of districts was reduced to three. The appointments for the Fayetteville District were as follows. T. B. Ford, P. E.; Fayetteville Union, W. H. Gillam; Fayetteville (second charge) and Washington, E. Roberts; Fayetteville Circuit, L. C. Aley; Huntsville, G. W. Hood; Ozark and Bentonville, to be supplied; Van Buren, J. A. Conley; Arkansas, Henry Turner; Fort Smith, R. W. Hammett; Greenwood and Grand Prairie, J. M. McCoy; Waldron, M. S. Hyde. At the end of the year there were reported 1,098 members, 169 probationers, 23 local preachers, 17 churches valued at $6,450, and 14 Sabbath-schools with 568 officers and scholars.

The fourth session of the conference was held at Fayetteville, beginning on February 3, 1876, and to the Fayetteville District the appointments were made as follows: Fayetteville Union, W. H. Gillam; Fayetteville (second charge), T. H. Nonally; Fayetteville Circuit, M. S. Hyde and L. W. Elkins; Bentonville, W. J. Simmons; Huntsville, J. M. Kimes; Ozark, R. C. Moter; Van-Buren, W. H. Crawford; Fort Smith, R. W. Hammett; Greenwood and Grand Prairie, C. D. Fry. The fifth session of the conference was held at Fort Smith in February, 1877, Bishop Wiley presiding. At this session the State was re-districted, and the territory formerly embraced in the Fayetteville District was divided between Fort Smith and Harrison District. Among the appointments in the Fort Smith District were T. B. Ford, P. E.; R. W. Hammett, Fort Smith Station; W. H. Crawford, Van Buren; C. D. Fry, Ozark; L. C. Obar, Charleston; G. W. Hood, Witcherville. On the Harrison District O. R. Bryant was presiding elder, while J. M. McCoy was assigned to the Fayetteville Union, Henry Flood to Huntsville, and L. W. Elkins to Cincinnati. The sixth session of the conference was held at Little Rock during the last week in January, 1878, when the membership on the circuit in Northwestern Arkansas was reported as follows: Fayetteville Station (two charges), 90 members, 12 probationers; Fayetteville Circuit, 90 members, 10 probationers; Cincinnati Circuit, 81 members, 35 probationers; Huntsville Circuit, 120 members, 10 probationers; Fort Smith Charge, 90 members; Witcherville Circuit, 173 members, 23 probationers; Charleston Circuit, 52 members, 17 probationers; Ozark Circuit, 100 members, 19 probationers, and Van Buren Circuit, 77 members and 27 probationers. At this session Arkansas Conference was divided on the following lines: "Beginning at Ultima Thule, on the State line, and running thence through Locksburgh, Epperson's Mill, Caddo Gap, Hot Springs, Lewisburg, Batesville, Pocahontas, and thence north to the Missouri line." The work west of this line was designated Arkansas Conference, that east of it Little Rock Conference. The Arkansas Conference was divided into two districts. Harrison District, to which O. R. Bryant was assigned as presiding elder, and Fort Smith, to which was assigned Thomas B. Ford. In the Harrison District Jesse P. Lowry was appointed to the Harrison Circuit, R. W. Hammett to Fayetteville, Burrell D. Jones to Huntsville, and James Lokey to Cincinnati, and in the Fort Smith District, Graham W. Hood to Fort Smith, George E. Cunningham to Alma and Van Buren, and James W. Shinn to Ozark, L. C. Obar to Bloomer, William J. Simmons to Dayton.

The presiding elders of the Fort Smith District since 1879 have been as follows: G. W. Hood, 1880 and 1881; W. J. Simmons, 1882 and 1883; Robert C. Moter, 1884; O. R. Bryant, 1885-86-87; B. T. Jones, 1888.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has in Sebastian County at this writing (October, 1888,) the following stations and circuits: The Fort Smith Station, consisting of Trinity Charge and Ebenezer Church; Hackett City and Huntington Station, Dayton and Bloomer Circuits. Rev. N. B. Brashear is pastor of Ebenezer Church. Rev. R. C. Moter, pastor of Trinity Charge, has recently moved away, leaving it unsupplied with a minister. Not many years ago this charge had from forty to fifty members, but the membership has now dwindled to a nominal figure. The church edifice belonging to it burned down a few years ago. Rev. Milton T. Brown, late pastor of the Hackett City and Huntington Station, has recently moved to Chattanooga, Tenn., leaving that station to be supplied. Rev. J. T. Gideon is pastor of the Bloomer Circuit, of which the two principal charges are Ames' Chapel in Sebastian County and Hickson Ridge in Franklin County. The Dayton Circuit consists of Dayton, Oak Grove, Nixon and Mansfield. The membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Sebastian County is small, and the members are generally possessed of but little of this world's goods. The bitter feeling that was manifested against this church before the Civil War still exists to some extent, though very much modified in form.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South.—This church had its origin, as has been stated, in the withdrawal of nearly all of the Methodists in the slave-holding States from the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844 and 1845. Under the organization of the new church Sebastian County continued, as it had been under the old organization, a part of the Fayetteville District until the year 1851, when it was changed to the Clarksville District, and remained as a part thereof until 1868, and it was then constituted, as it still remains, a part of the Fort Smith District. The presiding elders of the several districts of which the county has formed a part, beginning with the year 1850, have been as follows: Thomas Stanford, 1850; William L. McAllister, 1851 and 1852; Thomas Stanford, 1853 to 1856 inclusive; L. P. Lively, 1857 to 1859 inclusive; Russel Reneaux, 1860; * * * M. B. Pearson, 1866; J. M. P. Hickerson, 1867; W. T. Noe, 1868; J. J. Roberts, 1869 and 1870; H. R. Withers, 1871; F. M. Moore, 1872; H. M. Granade, 1873 to 1875 inclusive; S. H. Babcock, 1876 to 1879 inclusive; V. V. Harlan, 1880 to 1883 inclusive; M. E. Butt, 1884 and 1885; Thomas M. C. Birmingham, 1886 and 1887; S. H. Babcock, 1888.

In 1842 Van Buren and Fort Smith Station was established by the old church, with Rev. Byers as pastor in charge. He was succeeded the next year by Rev. Mr. Moreland, and during the years 1844 and 1845 it was under the control of Rev. J. J. Roberts. His successors were Rev. Mr. Pogue in 1846, H. A. Sugg in 1847 and 1848, and J. Eastabrook in 1849 and 1850. Rev. Eastabrook was appointed to this charge again in 1851, and died from cholera on July 21 of that year. The earliest record of the Van Buren and Fort Smith Station is that of the first quarterly conference in 1850, which met in Fort Smith on January 12. Thomas Stanford, the presiding elder, and J. Eastabrook, the pastor in charge, were present. William M. Hunt was chosen recording steward, and James Maxfield, steward. At the fourth quarterly conference for this year, the presiding elder was requested to use his influence to secure a division of the Van Buren and Fort Smith Station. This was done, and Salisbury Charge was attached to the Fort Smith Station. At the quarterly conference, held December 14, 1850, a building committee was appointed, consisting of the following persons: S. D. McDonald, Harmon Mickle, William M. Hunt, William A. Jackson and Reuben Lewis. McDonald and Mickle in 1853 were replaced by John Harrell and S. S. Sanger, Sr. The corner-stone of the new building was laid by the Masonic lodge on April 15, 1853, and was completed the same year. The success of the undertaking was largely due to Rev. John Harrell, and the new building was named Harrell Chapel. From this time until the Civil War the church was prosperous.

The first report of the Sabbath-school was made in February, 1857, and was as follows: "The Sabbath-school of this station is in a healthy and prosperous condition; notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather during the last quarter the school is in a flourishing condition. We have at this time from twelve to fifteen teachers, nearly all of whom are members of the church; from sixty to seventy-five pupils, and a library of 450 to 500 volumes, 225 of which have just been received. "

From 1860 to 1866 there is no record of any quarterly conferences, and it is probable that none were held. In 1865 the conference assigned Rev. T. B. Ruble to the Fort Smith Station, and, at the first quarterly conference, J. R. A. Hendry, Francis Parks and W. H. Bailey were elected stewards. Services were held in the Presbyterian Church until Harrell Chapel, which was still in the hands of the military authorities, was delivered up. At this time only about thirty of the old members remained, and during the next two or three years the church seemed to languish. In November, 1868, Rev. H. M. Granade took charge of the work, and in a report of the condition of the church at that time said: "I find twenty members, sixteen of whom are females, and of the latter eight are widows, most of them poor in this world's goods." Mr. Granade labored with great zeal during the year, and raised the membership from twenty to forty, and since that time to the present the church has continued to prosper.

Harrell Chapel stood on Fifth Street, between Walnut and Mulberry. The lot on which it stood was sold in 1886, and the old church edifice removed. The same year the membership was divided, and the portion going out from the original church built the Central Church (frame) which stands on the corner of Thirteenth and Mulberry Streets, and the portion remaining have under completion a large and handsome brick edifice, designated First Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It stands on the corner of Seventh and Walnut Streets. This property, including the cost of the lot and building completed, cost the church $25,000. The stations and circuits of this church in Sebastian County are as follows: First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Fort Smith, Rev. James A. Anderson, pastor; Central Church, Fort Smith, Rev. J. L. Massey, pastor; Fort Smith Circuit, including the territory fifteen miles east and the same distance south of the city, containing charges at Lavaca, Spring Hill, Mazzard

Prairie, Eureka, Enterprise and perhaps other points, Rev. G. W. Damon pastor of the circuit; Greenwood Circuit, consisting of charges at Greenwood, Burnsville, Oak Grove, Center Ridge, Pierce Camp Ground, Milltown and Washburn, Rev. W. R. Gardner, pastor; Hackett City, Huntington and Mansfield Station, Rev. J. M. C. Hamilton, pastor; Hackett City Circuit, consisting of charges at Hackett City, one in the country north thereof, Bethel, Excelsior, Mt. Olive and Mt. Pleasant, Rev. J. W. DeShazo, pastor; Mansfield Circuit, with charges at Hartford, Mansfield, Salem, Center Bluff, Brewster's Chapel, Center Bluff, Center Point and Dayton, Rev. Irwin T. Harris, pastor. The Fort Smith Station, including the two churches, has a membership of 360; the Fort Smith Circuit, 375; Greenwood Circuit, 525; Hackett City Circuit, including Hackett City and Huntington Station, 400; Mansfield Circuit, 425, making an aggregate membership in the county of 2,085. The circuits as here named are as they stand in 1888, but they are subject to change at the meeting of every annual conference. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a strong denomination and is having fair success in its labors.

St. John's Episcopal Church.—The edifice of this church at Fort Smith was erected in 1859–60, on the corner of Sixth and Mulberry Streets, and the parsonage connected therewith was erected in 1886–87; both buildings are frame. A mission was established here about the year 1845, and placed under the supervision of Rev. Charles Townsend, a chaplain in the United States Army, then located at Fort Gibson. He was succeeded by Rev. Daniel McManus and others. The mission continued until the church edifice was erected; then Rev. I. Sandels became the first rector of the parish, and continued as such until March, 1863, when the church was closed on account of the war. When it was opened again, January 7, 1866, Rev. Robert B. Croes became rector for a few months, and, following him, Bishop Lay, who resided here, took temporary charge of the parish until November of that year, when Rev. Sandels returned and served as rector until 1870. Then Rev. T. B. Lee took temporary charge until 1871, when Rev. D. McManus again became rector, and remained until 1878. The same year Rev. F. B. Gilbert held the position of rector a few months, resigning in the fall. Rev. C. H. Newman became rector in August, 1879, and in September, 1880, Rev. Edward Magee succeeded him. The latter was succeeded in March, 1882, by Rev. J. S. Berne, who resigned in 1885. In December, 1886, Rev. George F. Degen assumed the rectorship, and still retains it. The parish consists of 230 members. The Sunday-school is in a prosperous condition. When Rev. Degen became rector it was composed of 115 scholars, and now (1888) it has just twice that number. The estimated value of the church and grounds is $10,000; the estimated value of rectory $1,800, and estimated value of other church property $840, making a total of $12,440, with an indebtedness of only $550. The first missionary services were held in the garrison.

The Baptist Church.—The Baptist Church at Fort Smith was organized December 1, 1859, and perhaps other churches of this denomination were organized within the county prior to the Civil War, but the organization of most of them took place since the war. The church at Fort Smith was organized with seven members, among whom were William H. Byers and wife, Mrs. M. A. Singleton and Siley Ellis. The construction of a church edifice was commenced about the same time, but not fully completed when the war broke out. Nothing further was done until after the close of the war, and then the building in its unfinished condition was given, together with the lot on which it stands, to the colored Baptists, and they continue to use it. In 1868 the church purchased Lots 1 and 2, in Block 14, in Fitzgerald's Addition, being on the corner of Thirteenth and Hickory Streets, and in 1883 the present frame church edifice was erected thereon at a cost of $3,000. The first regular minister of this organization was Rev. E. L. Compere, who served until the Civil War began, and then left. At the close of the war he returned and assumed the pastorate, which he held for several years. Others followed him until 1882, when Rev. G. W. Reeves assumed the pastorate and held it until 1884. He was succeeded a few months by Rev. John Wise, and in November, 1886, Rev. A. J. Kincaid assumed the pastorate, and continues to hold it. This church has a membership of 175, and the attendance at its Sunday-school is from 90 to 135.

In 1871 the Concord Baptist Association was organized, and soon included nearly all of the Baptist Churches in Sebastian, Franklin, Scott and Logan Counties. In 1880, a division of the association took place by a number of individual churches, among which was the one at Fort Smith, withdrawing from it. The difficulty grew out of a scandal concerning a certain minister in charge of one of the congregations belonging to the association. The association, however, has continued to hold its annual sessions, and its eighteenth session was held this month, October, 1888, at the Mazzard Prairie Church, in this county. The minutes of this session have not yet been published. The churches of this county belonging to the association, as reported in the minutes of the session held in 1887 at Union Grove, in Logan County, are the following, to wit: Prairie Grove, Sulphur Springs, Greenwood, Mount Nebo, Mazzard, Oak Valley, Union, Mount Olive, Oak Bower, West Harmony, Judson and Union Grove. G. T. Matthews was reported as pastor of Mazzard, Union, Mount Olivet, Judson and Union Grove; M. A. Pillers, of Prairie Grove; J. W. Nobles, of Sulphur Springs; D. L. Moore, of Mount Nebo; A. L. Brown, of Oak Valley; J. D. Rasbury, of Oak Bower; William Holland, of West Harmony. There are some other Baptist Churches in the county, not belonging to the Concord Association.

Presbyterian Churches.—The first church of this denomination in Sebastian County was organized at Fort Smith in 1846, by Rev. J. K. Marshall, the first pastor. The original members were John F. Wheeler, Joseph Bennett, Mrs. Margaret H. Baird and others. Of those named the latter is the only one now living, and she is believed to be the only one of the original members now living in Fort Smith. Mrs. H. B. Sparks, widow of Mitchell Sparks, joined this church in 1847, and she still lives in Fort Smith. The members of this church worshiped in the old Union Church, now known as the Cleveland Hotel, which stands on the corner of Second and Mulberry Streets, from the time of its organization until their present church was completed. The new church, which is a handsome brick edifice, was erected in 1876, at a cost of $6,000. It stands on the corner of Eighth and Mulberry Streets. Rev. Marshall served as pastor of the church one or two years, and was succeeded by Rev. Cephas Washburn, who served until 1856. In 1859 Rev. W. A. Sample became pastor, and excepting one or two intervals—the longest one being in the war period—he served as such until 1888, when he was succeeded by Rev. E. D. Gregory, the present pastor. The church has had a prosperous career. It now has a membership of about 150, and its Sunday-school is well sustained. This denomination has another organization in the county, located at Jenny Lind.

Among the most noted pioneer ministers of the gospel in this section of the country was Rev. Cephas Washburn, who came to Arkansas about the year 1830, as a missionary under the American Board to the Cherokee Indians, and lived among them until 1840, when he settled on a farm in Benton County, Ark., where he remained until 1847, and then moved to Fort Smith, where he became pastor of the church, and remained as such until 1856, and then went to Norristown, where he remained until his death, which occurred March 17, 1860. He was a man of extraordinary talents and of the highest literary attainments.

Cumberland Presbyterian Church.—At the stated meeting of Arkansas Synod in 1868 the following proceedings relative to the organization of King Presbytery were had.

WHEREAS, A petition has been received from the Arkansas Presbytery, asking for the organization of a new presbytery in that territory of the Arkansas and Ewing Presbyteries lying south of the Arkansas River;

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners be granted, and that a new presbytery be organized, to be known as the King Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, including all of the territory of Arkansas and Ewing Presbyteries lying south of the Arkansas River, and including all of the ministers and congregations in said territory.

Resolved, That the synod appoint Rev. B. H. Pierson, D. D., moderator, and Rev. Richmond Cole clerk of King Presbytery, and that the moderator be and he is hereby required to convene a presbytery at Charleston, Franklin Co., Ark., on Thursday preceding the last Sabbath in November, 1868, at 11 o'clock A. M.

The presbytery met at the appointed time, and at roll-call the following ministers answered to their names: B. H. Pierson, G. W. Williamson and Richmond Cole; W. M. Lisk was absent. The congregations represented were as follows: Charleston by W. F. McDonough, Fairview by Thomas Cauthron, Hodge's

Prairie by E. J. Wollage, Cooper Prairie by E. P. Tolkington, Long Prairie by R. S. McFarlane, Mt. Pleasant by J. H. Counsel, The congregations not represented were Greenwood, Delaware and Gum Springs. At this meeting it was ordered that a new congregation, to be known as Piney Fork, be organized within the bounds of Gum Springs congregation.

The second meeting of the presbytery was held in April, 1869, at Fairview, in Scott County, at which time Winchester and Pilot Prairie congregations were admitted. The growth of the church within the bounds of the presbytery was quite rapid, and at the end of the first year after its organization the committee on church statistics reported 96 professions, 88 accessions, 10 dismissals, 12 suspensions, 30 infant baptisms, 26 elders, 8 deacons, 3 candidates, 6 ordained ministers and 463 communicants.

In October, 1871, there were reported 15 congregations, 7 ministers, 124 accessions and 643 communicants. Two years later there were 17 congregations and 800 communicants. At the fall meeting, 1873, a petition to the synod, praying for a division of King Presbytery, and the organization of a new presbytery from the counties of Sarber, Yell and Perry, and that part of Conway south of Arkansas River, was prepared and signed by all the members of the presbytery. This petition was granted, and on November 6, 1873, the new Presbytery was organized under the name of Magazine Presbytery, with the following ministers: Richmond Cole, J. S. Burt, W. J. McDonald and J. T. Buchanan. The congregations within its bounds were Gum Springs, Piney Fork, Fairview, Six Mile, Washburn, Lavinia, Mount Pleasant, Dardanella and Delaware. There then remained in King Presbytery three ministers, B. H. Pierson, N. B. McNabb and D. B. Harrison; three licentiates, E. W. Mathes, I. A. Gaither and S. L. Alexander, and nine congregations, Coop Prairie, Hartford, Hodge's Prairie, Pilot Prairie, White Bluff, Charleston, Greenwood, Long Prairie and Winchester. These two presbyteries continued to work as separate bodies until 1876, when the synod, upon the request of both, consolidated them under the name of Union Presbytery, which held its first meeting at Fairview, Logan County, on March 1, 1877.

The statistics of the consolidated presbyteries were reported as follows: Ordained ministers, 11; licentiates, 2; candidates, 1; congregations, 24; elders, 82; deacons, 17; added by profession, 32; by letter, 13; baptisms, 24; infants, 8; total in communion, 600; officers and teachers in Sabbath-schools, 9; scholars, 232. At the October meeting of the presbytery, in 1877, a petition was sent to the synod, requesting a restoration of the old name of King Presbytery, which was granted.

In 1880 the number of congregations had increased to twenty-seven and the communicants to 852. At the same time there were 105 elders, twenty-three deacons and eleven ordained ministers. Since that time to the present writing, 1888, the number of congregations has increased to forty-six and the communicants to 1,305. There are now fifteen ordained ministers, one licentiate and 109 elders. There are 449 scholars in the Sunday-schools of the Presbytery, besides those belonging to Union Sunday-schools, and the funds contributed for Sunday-school work for the last fiscal year was $102. The church organizations in Sebastian County belonging to the presbytery are Hodge's Prairie at Salem, Long Prairie, Oak Bower at Lavaca, Hickory Grove at Hackett City, Mt. Harmony and Union Grove near Greenwood, Washburn, Fort Smith and Greenwood, aggregating a membership of about 372. The first church of this denomination organized in Sebastian County is that of Hodge's Prairie, which was organized September 13, 1860, by Rev. B. H. Pierson, with William J. Witcher and D. Belt as elders, and other members, consisting of Z. P. and John Reed, Dotson Belt, John Laster, Elijah Wallace, Martha Wallace, P. Belt, N. J. Leonard, Matilda Reed, Emily Laster, Mary E. Witcher and others. They worshiped in the building known as Reed Lodge until they built their present church house at Salem. The congregation at Fort Smith now worship in a hall, but have completed the basement story of a new stone church edifice now in process of construction on the corner of Ninth and Mulberry Streets. This building when completed will cost about $8,000. Rev. S. H. McElvane is pastor at Fort Smith, and Rev. J. C. Francis at the Hodge's Prairie Church.

Roman Catholic Church.—Michael Manning, a venerable citizen of Fort Smith, who is eighty years old to-day (October 11, 1888), engaged at New Orleans in 1840 with an officer of the Government to work on the United States fort at this place, and arrived here on May 10 of that year. He was the first Roman Catholic that became a permanent settler in Fort Smith. On arriving here he found that two Catholic missionaries, both of whom were Frenchmen, had already located in Arkansas. One of them, Father Boles, was situated at Little Rock, and among the points visited by him in his missionary work were Fort Smith and Fort Gibson, the latter being sixty miles farther up the river. The other, Father Paris, was situated at Arkansas Post, and his missionary labors were mostly with the Creoles. There were very few Catholics then in Northwestern Arkansas. In 1844 Bishop Andrew Byrne visited Fort Smith in company with Father Curry, and remained a short time at the house of Michael Manning. While here, on that occasion, he organized the first Catholic Church. A small log church edifice was immediately erected on the corner of Third and Hickory Streets, where Mr. Manning now resides. On the same lot a foundation for a rock church was laid, and some time thereafter this property was abandoned for church purposes and sold to Richard Kern, whose family still resides there, as also does Mr. Manning.

In 1847 Bishop Byrne, then of Little Rock, purchased of the school trustees, George Birnie, Elias Rector and another, Section 16, in Township 8 north, Range 32 west, for the sum of $5,250, all of which he paid in gold. A part of this section, as elsewhere explained, had previously been occupied by United States troops, and the buildings occupied by the commander and lower officers still remained on the land. About 1851, when the old church property was abandoned, the building which had been occupied by the lower officers was adopted as the house in which to worship, and in 1853 the quarters of the commanding general were converted into a convent under the control of Theresa Farrell, mother superior, and the Sisters of Mercy. This building was enlarged by the Sisters, and in December, 1875, it was destroyed by fire. The present church edifice, which stands at the head of Garrison Avenue, was constructed in 1867, and was dedicated August 18 by Bishop Fitzgerald, assisted by Father Smyth. Soon thereafter the building now used for the convent school, it being the largest one on the grounds, was erected. There is also a small school-house in which small boys are taught by the Sisters, and another house standing on Little Rock Avenue, west of the main buildings, has been used for the education of larger boys, but is now idle. It is expected to be again utilized for that purpose. In addition to the foregoing there is the convent, parsonage and other buildings, all belonging to the denomination.

The first stationed priest was Father Curry, who left when the church property on corner of Third and Hickory Streets was abandoned. He was succeeded by Fathers Welch, Monahan, Reilly, Shanahan, and Fathers L. Smyth and Michael Smyth; the latter two located at Fort Smith before the late Civil War, and have remained here ever since. The present officiating priest is Father L. Smyth. The purchase of the school section by Bishop Byrne was a very fortunate transaction for the good of the Catholic Church. From time to time the greater part of the section has been laid out into lots, streets and alleys, and is known as Fitzgerald's addition to the city of Fort Smith. About twelve acres have been reserved in the convent grounds. The business portion of the city already extends well into the addition, and the residence portion much farther. A large portion of the lots has been sold, from which the church has derived a very large revenue, which will be largely augmented by receipts from the sales of the remaining lots a tract of land a mile square in a growing city, that will soon utilize it all for business houses, manufactories and residences, is certainly a valuable property. During the Civil War the property was despoiled to some extent, much of the timber that was standing on it being cut down.

Another Roman Catholic Church, recently built, and known as the "German Catholic Church," stands on the aforesaid tract of land, on the corner of Nineteenth and Mulberry Streets.

Evangelical Lutheran Church.—An organization of this denomination was effected in Fort Smith about the year 1874, by Rev. Wyneken, and about two years later their large frame church edifice, which stands on the corner of Twelfth and Hickory Streets, was constructed at a cost of $3,000, or perhaps more. Rev. G. Germann is the pastor of the church at this writing.

There are sixty members belonging to this organization, and the average attendance at the Sunday-school is seventy-five. The members are mostly German.

Christian Church.—The church of this denomination in Fort Smith was organized about the year 1855, probably by or through the influence of Robert Graham, then president of "Arkansas College," Fayetteville, Ark. Prior to the war services were held in a small building on North Sixth Street. Elder E. M. Northam was the minister in charge in 1859. During the war period the church became disorganized. In 1871 it was reorganized, the property on Sixth Street was sold, and the building now used by the congregation, standing on the corner of Seventh and Sycamore Streets, was completed and first occupied December 25, 1886. It cost $3,500, exclusive of the lot on which it stands. The membership of the church is 120, and the number of scholars in the Sunday-school averages about fifty. Elder R. L. Lotz was engaged to take charge as pastor November 11, 1888.

Other Churches.—There are two colored Baptist and one African Methodist Episcopal Church in Fort Smith, and some other churches in the county, of which no particular mention has been made. Upon the whole the entire county is well supplied with churches.

Camp Meetings.—During the early days of the history of the county, before church edifices were erected, camp meetings were much more frequently held than they have been of later years. Then people met together in the "leafy groves," regardless of sects, to worship God. Now nearly all denominations, save the Methodists, have dispensed with the "camp meeting" mode of worship. This denomination still adheres to the old custom, and still maintains the annual camp meeting. The "Pierce Camp Ground," situated about three miles northeast of Greenwood, was established in 1885. It consists of ten acres of land, on which are two valuable springs, named respectively Wesley and Asbury. The tract has been laid out into lots, streets and alleys, and a large tabernacle and other buildings have been erected. The annual meetings are held so as to include the third Sunday in August, and are continued from six to twelve days. The original incorporators of the Camp Meeting Association, and the purchasers of the grounds, were Frank Parke, Judge J. S. Little, W. H. Bell, Maj. M. T. Tatum, W. B. W. Heartsell, M. S. Gaines, Thomas E. Little, W. T. Rye, J. R. Bassett and John A. House. The officers of the present board of trustees are J. R. Bassett, president; W. H. Bell, secretary, and S. D. Richardson, treasurer.

BIOGRAPHICAL APPENDIX.

BENTON COUNTY.

David Adams. Prominent among the progressive and successful farmers of Benton County, Ark., may be mentioned Mr. Adams, who was born and reared in Coles County, Ill., and came to Arkansas in 1886, purchasing the farm of 550 acres on which he now lives. Three hundred acres of the land are situated in the Osage Valley, and his residence is pleasantly situated on a high hill. He was born June 26, 1849, and his first presidential vote was cast for Gen. Grant, who was then running for his second term. He is a member of the I.O.O.F., and May, 1878, was married to Miss Hannah Harris, who was born and reared in Illinois. Their union has been blessed in the birth of three children: Grace, Jefferson and Fannie. Mr. Adams is a son of John J. and Nancy C. (Dryden) Adams, who were of English descent, and came from Tennessee to Illinois in 1830, assisting in the early settlement of that State. The father was a soldier in the Black Hawk and Mexican wars and the Civil War, and died in 1878. He was first married to Martha Gammil, by whom he had seven children: William E. (deceased), Elizabeth, wife of Rufus Brown; Eliza, wife of Dr. Reel, of Oakland, Ill.; Martha, wife of Thomas West; Margaret, wife of John Grimes, and John, who died during the late war, at Pocahontas, Ark. After the mother's death the father married Nancy C. Dryden, who became the mother of one child, David.

G. L. Alexander, druggist, Rogers, Ark., and one of the prominent citizens of Benton County, was born in Elbert County, Ga., in 1838. His father, Elijah Alexander, was born in Northfield, Mass., and when a young man immigrated to Georgia, where he met and married Miss Savannah Wilhight, and by her became the father of four children, G. L. Alexander being the eldest of their children. The father was a farmer by occupation, and died near Independence, Mo., on a steamboat while on his way to California; his wife in 1864, while in Georgia. G. L. Alexander was reared and educated in Georgia, and when the great Civil War broke out joined the Confederate army, and was a member of Longstreet's corps. He was quite severely wounded, and while home on furlough his mother died. After recovering from his wound he rejoined his command and served until the close of the war. He rose to the rank of first lieutenant, and afterward, for distinguished service at the battle of Fussell's Mills, he was promoted to the rank of captain, and served in this capacity with Company C, Fifteenth Georgia Regiment. Mr. Alexander has a number of interesting relics of the war in his possession, among which is a pistol with which he shot his way through a Federal regiment at the battle of Gettysburg. Two of his brothers were also Confederate soldiers, and the following are some of the battles in which they participated: Fredericksburg, Yorktown, Williamsburg, Richmond, Malvern Hill, second Manassas, Gordonville, Wilderness, Spottsylvania and numerous others of lesser note. Mr. Alexander has been married three times. The first time to Miss Emma Trenchard, who died after four years of married life. He was next married in Kansas to a Miss Early, a New York lady, and after her death was married, in Arkansas, to Miss Hattie Camden. While in Georgia Mr. Alexander dealt in cotton and other articles of merchandise, and after moving to Kansas followed various occupations for twelve years. In 1881 he came to Rogers, Ark., and engaged in the drug business, and by his honesty, energy and efforts to please has a large and paying trade. He is a staunch Democrat.

Gustavus H. Alexander, storekeeper and gauger at Siloam Springs, Ark., was born in Cumberland County, Ky., January 20, 1856, son of Joseph H. and America (Baker) Alexander. The father was born in the same county, and was a tiller of the soil. He received his final summons in 1865, in his native county, where he had passed his entire life. The mother was born in the same county, is still living there, and is fifty-four years of age. Their son, Gustavus H. Alexander, was educated at Alexander College, Burksville, Ky., also Columbia College, Adair County, Ky.; remained in his native county until sixteen years of age, when he moved to Fort Smith, Ark., where he worked on a farm and traded a great deal. He was in the United States police service for one year, and then deputy constable in Upper Township, Fort Smith. After moving to this county he was made marshal of Siloam Springs in 1884, and was afterward appointed storekeeper and gauger. He owns some property in Siloam Springs. He chose for his companion in life, October 16, 1884, Miss Susan M. Barton, who died September 8, 1885. She was of religious faith, but a member of no church. Mr. Alexander is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a member of the I. O. O. F., K. of H., and in his political views has been a Democrat all his life.

Elijah L. Allen is one of the successful farmers of Benton County, Ark., and is also engaged in grist-milling. He is of French descent, and was born in Northern Georgia July 25, 1838. His father, Matthew Allen, was born in South Carolina in 1807, and in October, 1852, left Georgia and came to Arkansas, where he died October 11, 1862. He was married to Lucinda Vaughtner, who died in Georgia in 1848, having borne nine children: James (deceased); Amanda E., wife of W. E. Smith; Elijah L.; Martha J., who became the wife of Rev. Isom Hall and died in 1854; William C. (deceased); Lindsay M., who died during the late war; Catherine (deceased wife of W. P. Henderson); Hiram S., living in Arkansas, and an infant, deceased. Elijah L. Allen came to Arkansas when nineteen years of age, and for twenty-seven years was a resident of Conway County. Since that time he has resided on his present farm of 120 acres. In 1856 he married Louisa Jones, a native of Tennessee, who died in May, 1863, leaving five children: Sarah C. (Mrs. Solomon Glenn), William A. (deceased), Mary M. (Mrs. J. A. Matthews), Lindsay A. and Laura J. (Mrs. James H. Willis). Ellen A. Townsend was married to Mr. Allen September 28, 1865, and by him became the mother of seven children: Georgia A. (Mrs. F. C. Grimsley), Hiram R., Elijah H., Isom (deceased), Fannie (deceased), T. J. (deceased), and Hattie (deceased). Mrs. Allen died August 15, 1880, and two years later Mr. Allen married Mrs. Amelia C. Willis. In 1862 Mr. Allen enlisted in the Union army, and after honorable service was discharged July 9, 1865. He was at Prairie Grove, Helena, the evacuation of Little Rock and in the Camden raid. He supports the principles of the Republican party, and his first presidential vote was cast for Fremont. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and belongs to the Masonic fraternity and the G. A. R. His wife belongs to the Methodist Church.

John Barnhouse Allensworth, merchant and postmaster at Decatur, Ark., was born in Springfield, Ohio, March 15, 1839, and is a son of Rootan and Eliza (Barnhouse) Allensworth, both of whom were born in the "Buckeye State." The father was an artisan and builder, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. John B. Allensworth grew to manhood in Harrison County, Ohio. He received his primary education in the common schools, and afterward completed his education in the McCannahan High-school at New Jefferson. He was married in Ohio, in October, 1859, and in 1860 removed to Martin County, Ind., where he met with good success as a farmer. Five years later he moved to Southern Illinois, and in 1876 to Texas, where he farmed with excellent results. He came to Benton County, Ark., in 1879, and here has since resided. About 1883 he engaged in the mercantile business at Decatur, and has a stock valued at $1,600. His wife's maiden name was Elizabeth Knouff, a daughter of John and Susan Knouff, the former of whom was a soldier in the War of 1812. To Mr. and Mrs. Allensworth ten children were born, five of whom are living: Charles C., James M., George I., John B. and Eliza J. Mr. Allensworth's paternal ancestors were of Scotch descent, and his maternal ancestors of Pennsylvania-Dutch origin. His mother was a member of the Methodist Church, and his wife was raised a Lutheran.

Walter Alley, son of David and Nancy (Ross) Alley, was born in Washington County, Mo., February 29, 1835. The father was born in Tennessee, and came to Missouri when a young man. He was here married, and here passed the remainder of his days engaged in merchandising. He died in 1861. The mother was born in Kentucky, and died in Missouri when her son Walter was quite young. The latter remained with his parents until grown, and then married Miss Elizabeth Mahan; she bore him three children, named Martha, Nancy and George W. After marriage they settled on a farm in Oregon County, Mo., where they remained until 1863, and then moved to Polk County, of the same State, where they remained three years. From there they went to Benton County, on the Illinois River, and have since lived in this vicinity. He has 155 acres under cultivation, and 320 acres in all. Mr. Walter Alley took, for his second wife, Miss Mary Carter, and one child was born to this marriage, Thomas, who is living on the river bottom farm. Mr. Alley took for his third wife Mrs. Frances (Embree) Lee, and following named children were born to this marriage: Elizabeth, William, David (deceased), Willie (deceased), Ross, Laura, Joseph, Luella and Walter. During the late war Mr. Alley was sworn in but not mustered into the Union service, having been rejected on account of being a cripple before mustering. He is a Republican in his political views, and a public-spirited and enterprising citizen. His church preference and former affiliation was with the Missionary Baptist Church, his wife being a member of the same.

D. D. Ames, who is the acknowledged fruit king of Arkansas, was born in Ohio July 14, 1840, and is a son of Lyman and Celinda Ames, who were born in the "Nutmeg" State. They became residents of Ohio in 1832, and there died only a few years ago. D. D. Ames was reared in his native State and is, by natural proclivities, a horticulturist. He was married in Ohio to Miss Emma Rinehart, and by her became the father of eight children: Emma, Alice, Burton, Walter, Ernest, Gracie, Freddie and Bessie. Mr. Ames came to Arkansas the 1st of May, 1883, with only 25 cents in money, but, with that determination, energy and intelligence which has ever characterized his actions, set to work to rebuild his fallen fortunes. He first became a traveling agent for a nursery, and his success in that capacity was exceptionally good. As soon as he had acquired sufficient means he leased seventeen acres of land of Albert Peel, and put it all in orchard and small fruits. The first crop on five acres of strawberries cleared Mr. Ames $500, and the first crop on an acre and a half of raspberries cleared $525. The enterprise had been ridiculed by the people near his home, but at this juncture their eyes began to be opened, and they began to follow his example. About this time Mr. Ames purchased eighty acres of land at Van Buren, and the first year put in twenty-two acres of small fruit, on which he has realized a large amount of money. He is now the owner of 180 acres of land, and has sixty-four acres in small fruits, which is the admiration and wonder of all who see it. Mr. Ames took for his second wife Miss Frona Callis, a member of one of the prominent and highly respected families of the county. Although quite young she is an exemplary wife and mother. They have one child, Nellie Don. Mr. Ames is a staunch Democrat.

O. I. Anderson, a prosperous farmer residing near Bentonville, Ark., was born in Lawrence County, Ala., July 5, 1831, being a son of Hugh A. and Mary A. (Anderson) Anderson. Col. Hugh A. Anderson was born at Logan Station, Ky., June 10, 1782, and was captain in the War of 1812. He moved to Alabama in 1818, and in 1836 located in Benton County, Ark. He was married January 11, 1810, and his wife died September 30, 1860. They were the parents of eight children: Louisa Ann, deceased wife of Robert W. Mecklin; Elizabeth H., deceased, first the wife of Albert Peel and afterward the wife of Judge Hiram Davis; James J., deceased; William W., deceased; Mary Jane, the deceased wife of Nathan M. Moran; Catherine, the deceased wife of A. W. Dinsmore; Hugh Allen, deceased, and Oliver I. Our subject came to Benton County, Ark., with his parents in 1836, and was married in 1856 to Mary Kelleam, a native of Arkansas, by whom he became the father of nine children: William, a farmer living in Benton County; Robert P., a stockman in Colorado; Mary Kate, wife of William Crum, a farmer of Washington County; O. P., a stockman of Idaho Territory; Bettie E., James Hugh, Nancy L., Amy Pearl and Annie W. The mother of these children died July 12, 1878, and October 13, 1880, Mr. Anderson was married to Margaret A. Stites. She was born in Missouri and reared in Texas. Mr. Anderson served in the Confederate army during the late war, and was a participant in the battle of Pea Ridge. By industry and good management Mr.

Anderson has become the owner of 688 acres of land; in his political views he is a Democrat, casting his first presidential vote for Taylor. He is also a member of the Masonic fraternity.

John C. Arthur, member of the firm of Lincoln & Arthur, dealers in clothing and gents' furnishing goods, of Bentonville, Ark., was born in Macon County, Mo., in 1840, and is the son of Lilburn Q. and Letitia G. (Saunders) Arthur, and grandson of James C. Arthur. Lilburn Q. was born in Bedford County, Va., September 26, 1814, and was a farmer, blacksmith, gunsmith and wheelwright by trade, and, in short, was a natural genius. He moved with his father to Pulaski County, Ky., when seventeen years old, was married here, and in 1839 moved to Macon County, Mo., where he passed the remainder of his life. He died January 1, 1871. The last six years of his life he was engaged in the practice of medicine. Letitia G. (Saunders) Arthur was born in Kentucky, February 24, 1821, and died March 25, 1855, in Jasper County, Mo., she and her husband having moved there in 1853. Mr. Arthur was twice married, and was the father of sixteen children, ten by the first marriage and six by the second, seven living by the first marriage and four by the second. John C. Arthur was the eldest child by the first marriage. He attained his growth on the farm, and his education was sadly neglected; what education he received was by his own efforts and self study. He remained at home until twenty-two years of age, and at the breaking out of the late Civil War he enlisted in the Union army, Company A, Twenty-seventh Missouri Infantry Volunteers, and was in the siege of Vicksburg, Jackson, Miss., Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain, Atlanta, and was with Gen. Sherman in his march to the sea. He went to Richmond and back to Washington, D. C., in the grand review. He was neither captured nor wounded during the war, and received his discharge at St. Louis. October 8, 1866, he married Miss Mary E. Dodson, who was born in Macon County, Mo., in 1846, and who became the mother of three children: Sallie, wife of W. H. Johnson, William A. and Perry W. After the war Mr. Arthur located near his birthplace and engaged in farming, which he continued until 1886, when he came to Bentonville, Ark., and with George T. Lincoln formed a partnership in the present business. Mr. Arthur was the owner of 800 acres of land in Macon County, and was one of the best citizens. The firm of Lincoln & Arthur have the only clothing and gents' furnishing store in Bentonville, and they have a large trade, having won the confidence and esteem of the community by their fair dealing. Mr. Arthur and family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and he is a Democrat in politics. He was justice of peace while in Macon County, and was also township trustee for eighteen months, resigning that office when coming to Arkansas.

Dr. C. F. Baker, a successful practicing physician of Maysville, was born in Franklin Parish, La., March 25, 1836, son of William and Sarah (Howe) Baker. William Baker was born either in Maryland or Virginia, but no positive information has been obtained as to what State he was born in. He was married in Virginia, and was also a practicing physician and a graduate of the University of Philadelphia. After receiving his diploma he returned to Virginia, and there began the practice of his profession. He continued there for a number of years, and then left for Franklin Parish, in Louisiana, where he practiced for a number of years. He then began the establishment of the Medical and Surgical Institute at Cincinnati, but had not completed the same at the time of his death. After his death Mrs. Baker was instrumental in seeing it completed, the State also taking an active part, making a large endowment, and when the work was completed Dr. A. H. Baker was made president of the institution, and professor of surgery, which positions he held until his death. Sarah (Howe) Baker was married in Virginia, also received a good education and was an accomplished musician. She is now living in Franklin Parish, La., and is ninety-two years of age. She was the mother of eight children, four now living. Dr. C. F. Baker was reared principally in Franklin Parish, La., and was educated under private tuition until fourteen years of age, when he went to Schenectady, N. Y., and there entered Union College or the University of New York. He remained there as a student for about two years, and then went to Oxford, Ohio, where he took a short course, after which he entered the Ohio Medical College and took one course of lectures. From there he went to Indianapolis, where he attended the medical department of the Asbury University, from which he graduated. He then went to Cincinnati and attended the Medical and Surgical Institute, where the degree of Doctor of Medicine was conferred at the annual commencement of this institute, and afterward having the degree conferred by a regular course of study. Dr. Baker, after finishing his medical studies, went with a number of gentlemen to Fort Smith, and organized a company for the building of the Northwestern Border Railroad, but on account of the breaking out of the war was never able to carry their plan into execution. He then returned and enlisted in Company C, Third Louisiana Regiment, but remained with that company but a short time, when, under the orders of Gen. McCullough, he started for the Indian Territory, where he organized a company of Cherokee and white scouts, and rejoined Gen. McCullough in Benton County, at Camp Walker. He was then transferred, and did duty for Gen. Price on Cow Spring Prairie under special orders. After his duties as scout had been accomplished in Missouri, he rejoined his regular command, marched to Fort Wilson Creek, and there participated in that bloody battle. He then went to Lexington with Gen. Price again under special orders, being at the capture of that city. He then returned to Springfield, and there went into winter quarters, remaining only a short time, being forced to evacuate before Gen. Curtis' army. He then went down and participated in the Pea Ridge battle, after which his army retreated to the Arkansas River and continued on down south until they reached Memphis, Tenn., where they remained a short time. From there they went to Corinth, Miss., and participated in that battle, thence to Tupelo. Dr. Baker was then ordered back to Little Rock, from there to Fort Smith, and then joined Gen. Raines. He then went to the Indian Territory, and was on general duty, after which he went to Missouri, and then drifted into Louisiana, where he was on post duty at Alexander. He was paroled at Shreveport. Dr. Baker then went to New Orleans, but returned home and subsequently went to Mississippi, and afterward to St. Louis and then to Canada, being there during the Fenian invasion, and was on military duty. He participated in the capture of Fort Erie, after which he received orders from Gen. Barry to withdraw from the British territory. Dr. Baker then returned to the United States, settled at Bentonville, but his professional work was after his location at Maysville, which was in 1867. Since that time he has been thoroughly identified with his profession. The Doctor is a member of the Masonic fraternity and is politically a people's man, being now allied with the Union Labor party, but formerly being a strong Democrat, never having voted any other ticket.

Jabez B. Banks, farmer, Benton County, Ark., was born in Alabama in 1825, and is a son of Thomas and Susannah (Jarvis) Banks, who were born July 12, 1784, and February 29, 1799, respectively. The former was a native of Virginia, and at an early day immigrated to Alabama, where he was married and resided until 1837, at which time he and his family moved to Arkansas. They were the parents of twelve children, who lived to be grown; Lydia, who became the wife of Daniel Perkins, a farmer and tanner, and died in Oregon; Verlinder, wife of Jesse Kincannon, a farmer residing in Wise County, Texas; Simon P., deceased; Rezia J., a farmer of Texas; Samuel A., deceased; Elizabeth, the wife of James S. Doggett, a Methodist minister residing in California; Tirzah, deceased; Hilkiah, a farmer of Oregon; Jabez B., farming on the old homestead; Susan Margaret, wife of Frederick Green, residing in Texas; Rhoda, residing in Texas and the wife of Lowry Davis; and Sebina, a farmer of Oregon. Jabez B. came to Arkansas at the age of twelve years, and after attaining man's estate was married to Sarah Sherrod, a native of Tennessee. The following are their children: Nancy E. (deceased), Benjamin F., Martha C. (deceased), David F., Thomas Arthur, Kilkiah Wesley (deceased), Susan Verlinda, wife of John McClusky; Margaret, wife of Wiley B. Johnson; George Lafayette and Henry Jordan (deceased). Mrs. Banks died in 1860, and in 1861 Mr. Banks married Elizabeth Gamble, and by her became the father of four children: Jabez Jefferson, Samuel Green, John Rezia and Sarah F. Mr. Banks is a Democrat in politics, and is the owner of 200 acres of valuable land, seventy-five acres being under cultivation. He is a Mason, and he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Tompkins Coleman Barney, furniture dealer of Bentonville, whose birth occurred in Woodford County, Ill., in 1845, is the son of Harlow and Amy (Wolf) Barney. Harlow Barney was born in Luzerne County, Penn., in 1800, was of Irish descent, and was a physician and surgeon by profession. He graduated from the New York Medical College, and when still a young man went to Ohio and there followed teaching, and also continued the study of medicine. In 1824 he married Miss Amy Wolf, who was born in Newark, Licking Co., Ohio, March 3, 1800. About 1844 they moved to Woodford County, Ill., and here lived for some time at Lacon and Spring Bay, and here Dr. Barney devoted his entire attention to the practice of medicine. His wife was of Scotch descent, and died in 1855, just three months previous to the death of her husband. They were the parents of nine children, four now living: Carey, farmer in Monroe County, Mo.; Allen, in the Rocky Mountains; Tompkins C., and Wirth W., who is a painter and contractor in Bentonville, Ark. Tompkins C. Barney was but ten years old when his parents died, and he was taken to Richland County, Ohio, and reared by his mother's sister, Mrs. Phoebe A. Coleman, and remained with his aunt until seventeen years of age. About this time the war broke out, and young Barney donned his blue uniform and enlisted in Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry, under Col. D. P. Greer. He was in the battle of Arkansas Post, Champion Hill, Black River Bridge, siege of Vicksburg, Red River campaign, siege and capture of Mobile. He was discharged at Springfield, Ill., at the close of the war. He then located at Bolivar, Polk Co., Mo., and invested in one-half interest in the Bolivar Sentinel. This interest he sold out in 1867 and went into Kansas, where he assisted in the survey of that State west of Wichita, and one year later returned to Bolivar, Mo. Here, in 1868, he married Miss Cornelia Evans, who was born in Polk County, Mo., in 1849. They have four children: Margaret, Frank, Lillard and Gracie. Soon after his marriage Mr. Barney moved to Quincy, Ill., and hired as baggage and express agent on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad from Quincy to Louisiana, Mo. In 1878 he returned to Southwestern Missouri, and worked in the woolen mills at Springfield for two years. He then went to Eureka Springs and clerked in the Southern Hotel a short time. He afterward became manager, and occupied this position eighteen months. August, 1886, he moved to Bentonville, Ark., and established himself in the furniture business, which he has since continued. He is a Republican in politics; is a member of the K. of P.; Mrs. Barney is a member of the Baptist Church.

Benjamin S. Beach is one of the enterprising and intelligent young business men of Benton County, Ark., and has a large general merchandise store at Osage Mills. He is a native of Benton County, and was born February 8, 1855, and was educated in the common schools. Besides his store he is postmaster at Osage Mills, and is the owner of forty acres of land. He is a Democrat, and Tilden received his first presidential vote. He is a Mason, and a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. In 1880 he was married to Miss Sallie Simmons, who died in 1882, having borne one child, John E. She was born in Tennessee in 1858, and came to Arkansas when quite small. Mr. Beach is a son of Elam J. and Rachel J. (Gambill) Beach. The father was born in Georgia, and came to Arkansas when a young man, and was married in 1853 to Miss Gambill, who was born in Tennessee January 8, 1835. She came with her parents to Arkansas when about six years of age, and she and Mr. Beach became the parents of the following family: Benjamin S.; Mollie, wife of J. W. Livesay; Ella, wife of T. J. Simmons (Mrs. Simmons is now a widow, her husband having died in 1877); Alice, deceased; Sallie, Nettie, Robert Lee and Rosa. The father was a soldier in the Confederate army during the late war, and in 1863 was taken prisoner and kept at Fort Delaware until the cessation of hostilities. He died in 1883.

Dr. A. R. Bills, son of Pascal W. and Drusilla (Barlow) Bills, was born June 12, 1850, in Bourbon County, Ky. The father was born in the same county, and there grew to manhood. He was well educated, having attended Millersburg Academy of Kentucky, but never completed his course. While in that State he taught school for a number of years, and afterward graduated at Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College. He then kept books for Waide, Ertine & Co., wholesale druggists of Cincinnati, for two years, after which he went to New Orleans and kept books in that city for some time. He had traveled quite extensively, going through Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee as collecting agent. Mr. Bills then returned to Kentucky, and was married to Miss Drusilla Barlow August 23, 1849. To them were born seven children, six now living: Alvin R., Mrs. Ann Eliza Rheinhardt, John H., Mrs. Mary L. Burney, Mrs. Lillie O. Bird, Laura and Mary (deceased). After marriage Mr. Bills taught school, and in connection carried on farming in Bourbon County, Ky., until 1854, when he removed to Cass County, Mo., settled about three miles from Lone Jack, and there he has since lived. His wife was also born and reared in Bourbon County, Ky., and like her husband received a good education, being educated at North Middleton. Alvin W. Bills, grandfather of Dr. A. R. Bills, was born in North Carolina in 1806, but immigrated to Tennessee with his parents when but a lad. He was there educated, and was a classmate of James K. Polk. After graduation he began the study of medicine at Lexington, Ky., graduated from the Transylvanian College, and then followed his profession in that State until his death, which occurred in 1848. His wife, the grandmother of Dr. A. R. Bills, Mary N. (Simms) Bills, was born in Culpeper County, Va., and when about twelve or fourteen years of age removed to Kentucky, and was there afterward married. The maternal grandparents, Alvin W. and Mary (Fisher) Barlow, were both natives of Kentucky, and the grandfather was a soldier in the War of 1812. Dr. A. R. Bills remained at home until ten years of age, and was then placed in school, where he remained until the breaking out of the war. During that eventful period he remained at home and made himself generally useful around the farm, carrying provisions to the army. After the close of hostilities he returned to his books and entered the school at Lone Jack, Mo., where he remained from 1866 to 1867. He then began teaching, and this continued for eight years in the public schools of Jackson, Cass, Lafayette and Johnson Counties, Mo., teaching ten months out of each year, and in three years had taught thirty-three months. During that time Dr. Bills began the study of medicine, teaching himself, but under the preceptorship of Dr. Andrew O'Conner. He took one course of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Kansas, and then took one course at the Medical Department of the University of Kansas City, graduating in March, 1882. Dr. Bills then removed to Maysville, Ark., and began the practice of his profession. Here he has since lived, and has built up a large and successful practice. He became a member of the County and State Medical Societies shortly after removing to Maysville, and has since retained his membership. November 7, 1871, he married Miss Johanna Jones, a native of Scott County, Ky., and the daughter of Joseph and Rachel A. Jones. To this marriage were born three children: Ethelyne, John Warren and Beulah. The doctor is a stanch Democrat in politics, is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and he and wife are members of the Christian Church.

John Black, clerk of the county court of Benton County, Ark., is a native of Warren County, Tenn., born in 1831, son of Alexander and Mary (Smith) Black, and grandson of Samuel Black. Alexander Black was born in Kentucky, was of Scotch-Irish descent, and a merchant by occupation. When a small boy he went to McMinnville, Tenn., and here in later years followed merchandising. He died in East Tennessee in 1856. His wife was born in Roane County, and was of Scotch-Irish descent also. To their marriage were born seven children, all of whom lived to be grown: Samuel (deceased), John, Dr. Thomas, Mrs. Mary L. Mason, Robert, Alexander and Marawether Smith Black. John Black was educated in McMinnville, Tenn., and at the age of nineteen began the study of law. He soon entered the law department of Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tenn., and here remained fifteen months. In 1851 he was admitted to the bar, and the year following he immigrated to Carroll County, Ark., located at Carrollton, where he entered upon his practice. July 10, 1855, he married Miss Sophia A. Greenwood, who was born in Georgia in 1837. She bore him six children: Alexander G. (deputy clerk of Benton County), Kittle, John S., Mary L. (widow of William Tinnin, deceased), Carrie (wife of Clinton Crouch) and Hugh D. In 1856 he was appointed agent of the Poney Indians of Nebraska, and held that position for two years. During the war his sympathies were with the Confederate States, and in 1862 he enlisted in Company F, Thirty-fourth Regiment Arkansas Infantry. He was in service in Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas for about three and a half years. He surrendered at Fort Smith, Ark., and after peace had been declared he returned to his home and to his practice. This he continued until 1869 or 1870, when he was appointed county attorney. In 1872 he was appointed clerk of Benton County, and was clerk of the county court, probate court and recorder, it being the best office in the State. From 1876 to 1880 he was re-elected to the same office. In 1882 the office was divided, and Mr. Black was clerk of the county court, and was re-elected in 1884 and 1886. He now holds that position. Mr. Black is one of the old and much respected citizens of Benton County, is a man of much public spirit and a man of good character. He has been in public office for the past eighteen years, and during that time has escaped without a stain or blot upon his public or private life. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, Royal Arch and Council Degree, and he and Mrs. Black are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

J. A. C. Blackburn, who is the recognized "lumber king" of Northwestern Arkansas, was born in War Eagle Township, Benton Co., Ark., in 1841, and is a son of Rev. Sylvanus and Catherine Blackburn, both of whom were born in 1809, in Georgia and North Carolina, respectively. They became residents of Arkansas in 1832, and are still living. J. A. C. Blackburn is their sixth child, and his boyhood days were spent in assisting his father in the grist-mill. In 1861 he joined the Confederate army, and was a faithful soldier for four years, and in 1865 returned to Arkansas; here he engaged in the peaceful pursuit of farming, succeeded in accumulating some money, which, in partnership with his father, he invested in a general mercantile store, and at the end of six months bought his father's interest. Here he remained from 1867 till 1873, and then moved his stock of goods to War Eagle and erected the mills at that place, and also continued to carry on merchandising. He continued in the saw and grist milling business at War Eagle until 1884, when he succeeded Peter Van Winkle as proprietor of the Van Winkle Saw and Planing Mills. He has been so successful in the management of these mills that he has often been called the "lumber king" of Northwestern Arkansas. His principal mill is situated nine miles east of Rogers. The engine is 150-horse power, the cylinder 22x30 inches and the balance wheel is twenty feet in diameter and weighs 20,000 pounds. He has three large boilers, each twenty-four feet long and forty-two inches in diameter, with four 12-inch flues, and has one circular saw, two rip saws, three cut-off saws, one gang lath machine, one shingle machine, two planers, two moulding machines, one scroll saw, one mortising machine and one automatic emery wheel. He has another mill in Madison County, which is twenty-five horse power, with a capacity of 20,000 feet of lumber per day. Besides this he has two other mills cutting lumber for him by the thousand. He handles 3,000,000 feet of lumber per annum, and owns in connection with his mills 15,000 acres of fine timber lands. There has not been an enterprise started in Benton County in which he has not taken a deep interest, and in the majority of cases become a heavy stockholder, the Stock Bank, Fair Association, Roller Mills and Water Works being some of the enterprises in which he has been interested. He was first married to Miss Ellen Van Winkle, who died November 10, 1884, having borne three children: Carrie, Lucy M. and Laura May. Mrs. Belle Harris, widow of Mack Harris and daughter of C. Petross, became his second wife. Mr. Blackburn is a Democrat and an A. F. & A. M. of the highest order, and belongs to the Knights of Honor.

Thomas K. Blake, merchant, and one of the old and influential citizens of Bentonville, Ark., is a native of Roane County, Tenn., born 1813, and the son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Owen) Blake. Thomas Blake was born in Georgia, and was of English origin. He went to North Carolina when a young man, and from there to Tennessee in 1799. He was a speculator in lands, and did a great deal of trading. He was the owner of a number of mills, and was a good business man. His wife was born in Alabama, and died in 1829. She was the mother of seven children, Thomas K. being the only one now living. He remained at home until after his mother's death, and then went to Alabama, where he lived among his mother's people a number of years, and worked at machinery in various kinds of mills. In 1836 he married Miss Clara Chitty, who was born in North Carolina in 1819, and seven children were born to this union: Jesse C., in Whitesburgh; Tex.; Missouri E., wife of J. E. Russell; Larkin L., in the Chickasaw Nation; William A., killed in the battle of Pea Ridge; Paulina J., deceased; Thomas T., an extensive lumber merchant at Bentonville, Ark.; John Y. F., in New Mexico, a United States officer, and a graduate of West Point with the rank of first lieutenant, and Clara F., wife of F. W. Derrickson. Thomas K. Blake resided in Alabama until 1841, when he immigrated to Polk County, Mo., and in 1859 he went to Denton County, Tex. In 1868 he became a citizen of Bentonville, Ark. While in Missouri he was the owner of two woolen mills, and while in the Lone Star State he was engaged in merchandising, dealt in stock and was also engaged in milling. After coming to Bentonville he and Josiah Claypool erected a flouring-mill, and they were also the proprietors of two mercantile establishments in Bentonville. Previous to the erection of the grist-mill, Mr. Blake erected a woolen-mill, and afterward he and Mr. Claypool became partners in this mill, and it was attached to the grist-mill. Mr. Blake and Mr. Claypool were partners for about three years, when they sold the mills; each took a store, and after this each man did business on his own responsibility. Mr. Blake also erected a lumber mill in Carroll County, and was the proprietor of it for one year, when he moved it to Huntsville, Ark., and converted it into a flouring-mill, which he turned over to his sons, Larkin L. and Thomas T. Mr. Blake followed merchandising in Bentonville for about fifteen years, and was successful in his business transactions. He erected the Western Hotel, and the large block occupied by L. J. Laughlin. He has also erected a large number of private dwellings and other business houses in Bentonville, and has been of much benefit to that city. Although starting with little or no means, Mr. Blake has, by attending strictly to the business on hand, and by his honesty, become one of the solid, substantial merchants of Bentonville. For the past five years he has lived a retired life. He lost his wife in 1859. Mr. Blake is a Democrat in politics, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and also a member of the I. O. O. F. He was proprietor of the Western Hotel for six years, and followed merchandising at the same time. While residing in Texas he had 187 horses stolen from him by the Indians, and he thinks he will yet get pay for them from the United States Government.

M. R. Blevins, son of Allen and Clara (Owens) Blevins, was born in Bradley County, Tenn., May, 1887. The father was born in Sullivan County, Tenn., received a common-school education here, and was here married. He afterward moved to Bradley County while the Indians were still there, and assisted in banding them together to take them to the reservation set apart for them. Mr. Blevins continued to live in Tennessee until 1851, when he immigrated to Independence County, Ark., where he died the same year. His wife, Clara Blevins, was born in North Carolina, her parents leaving that State when she was but a small girl. She was married to Mr. Blevins in Meigs County, and became the mother of eleven children, seven now living: John, Michael R., Gideon T., Mrs. Lorinda Tunnel, Mrs. Malinda Millsap, Mrs. Myra Teal and Mrs. Mary Wood. Those deceased are William, Allen, Catherine and an infant. M. R. Blevins was but twelve years of age when his parents moved to Arkansas, and his father dying soon after, the support of the family was largely dependent upon his efforts. He only received a common-school education, and remained with his mother until twenty-one years of age, when he married Miss Elizabeth Wakefield, daughter of William and Jane Wakefield, who were originally from Mason County, Tenn. This union, which has been a long and happy one, was blessed by the birth of eleven children, nine now living: Allen, James, Charles, Mike, Robert, Mrs. Amanda Copeheart, Mattie, Clara and Ida. The two children deceased were named Florence and Annie May. Mr. and Mrs. Blevins live on the farm that they first settled, and raised their first crop with the aid of a yoke of cattle. During the war Mr. Blevins enlisted in Company A, First Cherokee Volunteer Cavalry, Confederate Army, and was in the battles of Honey Springs, Fort Wayne, Newtonia and others of less importance. During his absence Mrs. Blevins carried on the farm, doing the greater part of the work herself, and often went a distance of forty miles to mill. She was energetic and determined and kept her family from want. Returning home after his term of service had expired, he and twenty-three others, including his captain, took a trip through Old and New Mexico and into Colorado, where they remained until the close of the war. He then came home and resumed farming and stock raising, and handled cattle for about eighteen years. He has now an excellent farm of 340 acres, 140 under cultivation, and has good buildings on the same. It was largely through Mr. Blevins' influence and efforts that the district school building was erected, and his children are all blessed with a good common-school education. Mr. Blevins is a strong Democrat, politically, and cast his first presidential vote for Breckenridge. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and his wife is a member of the Baptist Church.

Samuel Box, farmer, machine agent and postmaster at Hico Post-office, was born near Bolivar, in Polk County, Mo., March 1, 1845, and is the son of William P. and Hannah (Cantwell) Box. William P. Box was born near Knoxville, Tenn., August 1, 1825. His parents were born in the Carolinas, and on his father's side the family is of Dutch descent, and Scotch on the mother's side. William P. Box was educated in the common schools of Tennessee, and in 1842 he removed with his parents to Polk County, Mo., and here married Mrs. H. Slagle, in 1844. They were among the early pioneers of Polk County, Mo. In 1863 he and family removed to Cooper County, Mo., and in 1870 they moved from there to Benton County, Ark. Mr. Box is still living, and is residing near Hico Post-office. Mrs. Box was born in Jackson County, Ohio, August 9, 1820. Her parents were natives of Ohio, and of Scotch descent. Mrs. Box was the mother of two children by a previous marriage with John Slagle. They were named as follows: John and Conrad. By her union with Mr. Box she became the mother of four children: Samuel, Thomas (deceased), Pleasant and Joseph. Samuel Box, the eldest child born to the second marriage, enlisted in the Confederate service, October 11, 1864, at Boonville, Mo., in Company C (Capt. Norman's) Third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, Col. Smith commanding, and remained until the close of the war. He was in the engagements at Sedalia, Lexington, Independence, Westport, Fort Scott and Newtonia. He was in Shelby's brigade until the close of hostilities, and refusing to accept the terms of surrender he left the United States, and took refuge in Old Mexico; was present at the burial of the Confederate flag at Eagle Pass, Texas, July 4, 1865, in commemoration of which Col. A. W. Stayback, who was present also, composed a touching poem. From here Mr. Box went to California, via Monterey, Saltillo, Buena Vista, Durango and Mazatlan, Mexico, remaining only a short time, when he went to Jackson County, Ore. He resided here less than two years, and returned to Booneville, Mo. Here he lived over two years, and then moved to Benton County, Ark., where he was married August 19, 1879, to Mrs. Mollie E. (Comer) Neill, the daughter of John B. and Caroline (Estes) Comer, formerly of Gallatin, Daviess Co., Mo. Mr. Comer is yet living, but Mrs. Comer died in 1882. Mrs. Box is the mother of one child by her first husband, Arthur Neill, and three children by her second husband, Mr. Box. They are named as follows: Fred, Effa and Vard. Mr. Box is a Democrat politically, and his first presidential vote was cast for S. J. Tilden in 1876. Mr. Box is the owner of 180 acres of land and some good town property; he was justice of the peace for two years, and was also notary public, and postmaster for eleven years. He is a member of the K. of H. and American Protective League. He has traveled extensively in the United States, Old Mexico, Central America and South America. He has always taken an active part in local politics; is not a member of any church, but a strong believer in the bible, and holds to the faith and doctrines of the Missionary Baptists; he takes a great interest in schools and education, and the upbuilding of good society, and is a warm supporter and defender of the temperance cause, but above all the highest ambition of his life is to see his children grow up to be sober, religious and useful men and women.

Pinkney A. Bozarth, farmer, was born in Howard County, Mo., November 18, 1823, son of Jonathan and Cynthia (Gross) Bozarth. The father was born in Virginia, April 21, 1780; was a successful farmer, and at the age of nineteen married his first wife, Miss Nancy Alexander. They then moved to Christian County, Ky., and from there to Howard County, Mo., in 1818, where they purchased 400 acres of land. The father died in 1856. His second marriage was with Miss Gross, a native of Kentucky, born 1811. She was married in Missouri to Mr. Bozarth, and after his death she moved to Collins County, Texas, where she died in 1885. She was of Scotch descent, a member of the Christian Church, and an energetic, persevering woman. Their family consisted of six children: Lucinda, Pinkney A., Elnora, Jonathan, Benjamin and Elizabeth. Pinkney A. Bozarth received an ordinary education, and at the age of twenty-seven, married Miss Helen M. Terrell. He immigrated to California in 1850, followed mining for one year and then returned, but in 1861 moved to Collins County, Texas, where he engaged in farming. In 1863 he volunteered in Col. Stone's regiment, Confederate army, Texas cavalry, and served through the war. He was in the battles of Mansfield, Pleasant Hill and Fort Donelson, also other battles. In 1866 Mr. Bozarth and family moved to Benton County, Ark., and here the wife died in 1871. She was born near Louisville, Ky., October 28, 1830, was a member of the Christian Church, and was the mother of these children: Jonathan R., Alice, Cornelia, Emma, William F., Willis L., Mollie A., Cynthia R. The members of this family now deceased are Alice, Cornelia, Emma and Cynthia. Mr. Bozarth took for his second wife Mrs. Polly A. Berry, a native of Wilson County, Tenn., born October 8, 1858, and was married in after years to Mr. Arnold Berry. One child, James Berry, was the result of that marriage. She moved to Benton County, Ark., February 15, 1873, and in May of the same year married Mr. Bozarth. Her parents, Redden and Polly (Farrington) Fields, were natives of Tennessee. [For further particulars of parents see sketch of John A. Fields.] Mr. Bozarth is a Democrat in politics, and is an excellent citizen of the county.

J. Wesley Breedlove, liveryman of Siloam Springs, Ark., was born in Miller County, Mo., July 20, 1866, being a son of Clay and Amelia (Reed) Breedlove. The former was born in Illinois, near St. Louis, Mo., January 8, 1834, and afterward moved to that city, where he was principally reared. He was married in Miller County, Mo., in 1855, and in 1874 located in the Choctaw Nation, where he still resides. During the late war he enlisted under Gen. Price in the Confederate service, but owing to being accidentally wounded in the hand in 1863, he was compelled to give up soldiering for a time. His grandfather came from Wales and settled in Virginia, where the father of Clay B. was born. The latter moved to Indiana, thence to Illinois, and afterward settled in Boone County, Ark., where he yet resides, at a very advanced age. The wife of Clay B. was born in Miller County, Mo., May 10, 1827, and died in the Choctaw Nation in May, 1885. Her father was born in Ireland, and after locating in the United States, in Pennsylvania, came to Miller County, Mo., and reared a large family of children. The following are the children born to Mr. Breedlove and wife: J. Wesley, Rachel (deceased), James H., William A., Robert T. and Sallie M. J. Wesley Breedlove was educated in Richland Institute, Pulaski County, Mo., and made his home with his father until he was twenty-two years of age, at which time he was married to Amanda Burness, a native of Illinois. She died in 1882, leaving three children: Edward Clay, Clara Eugenia, and William Newton (deceased). In 1883 Mr. Breedlove was married to Mrs. M. J. Steele, who was born in Montgomery County, Mo., January 30, 1853. By her first husband she became the mother of one child, Arthur L. Steele. She has three children by Mr. Breedlove: Inez A., Clara Alice (deceased) and Mary I. Mr. Breedlove went with his father to the Choctaw Nation in 1874, and there married both his wives. He followed the occupations of farming, stock-raising and teaching in the Nation, and in 1885 came to Arkansas and ran a hack line from Siloam Springs to Bentonville, and afterward engaged in the livery business, which he has made very successful. He has a fine stable, centrally located, and has done a good business financially. He is a Democrat in politics, but owing to his roving life has never had a chance to vote. He is a member of the board of alderman of Siloam Springs, and he and wife are members of the Christian Church.

James J. Britt was born in Carroll County, Tenn., February 12, 1837, son of James J. and Winneford (Hilliard) Britt. The father was born, reared and married in North Carolina, but afterward moved to Tennessee, where he died in 1836. He was a farmer and merchant. The mother was born near Knoxville, N. C., and died in 1867 in Texas. She had married again, and had moved to several different places. James J. Britt was the youngest of five children of his father's family that lived to be grown. He was partly reared in Carroll County, Tenn., and at the age of twelve moved to Washita County, Ark., and from there to Barry County, Mo., where he remained three years. From there he came to Benton County, Ark., in 1858, where he settled to farming, and has continued this occupation ever since except two years in Texas, just after the war closed. During the war he served in Company H, First Arkansas Cavalry, Confederate States Army, where he remained until 1863, when he was wounded at the Prairie Grove battle by a gunshot in the leg, which still causes him considerable trouble. Since the war Mr. Britt has devoted his time exclusively to farming. He was married, in 1857, to Miss Mary Ann Sager, a native of Benton County, Ark., and to them were born eleven children, eight now living: John F., James A., Sarah B., Willmina L., Eddie L., Albert and Addie (twins) and Ida A. Mr. Britt was justice of the peace of the township six years, and was a deputy sheriff of the county two years. He is a Democrat in politics; his wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is the owner of 200 acres of land, 120 under cultivation.

William F. Brooks, pharmacist, of Siloam Springs, Ark., is a North Carolinian, and was born in 1838. He left the paternal roof at the age of fourteen years, and went to Georgia, where he began fighting the battle of life for himself. He soon after went to Chattanooga, Tenn., and began working in a commission house, where he remained two years, and then began steamboating on the Tennessee River, afterward becoming pilot. He then spent about five years at home, and was married in Mississippi to Mary Jane Smith, who was born and reared in Knoxville, Tenn. After his marriage he went to Illinois, and there remained from 1857 to 1868. At the latter date he moved to Bentonville, Ark., where he has been engaged in various occupations, but the most of his attention has been given to the furniture business. Since about 1879 he has been a resident of Siloam Springs, and since 1886 has been engaged in the drug business. Mr. Brooks is a Democrat, a member of the I. O. O. F., and he and wife are members of the Baptist Church. His parents, Thomas F. and Mahala Brooks, were born in North Carolina, the former in 1785, and the latter about 1786, and died in 1885 and 1880, respectively. The father was a farmer and of Irish descent, his father being an Irishman who helped to fight for American independence. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks became the parents of fifteen children: George W., Isaac, Eliza (wife of Bluford Baxter), Lawrence, William F., Lucinda (the deceased wife of Peter Clark), Riley M., Margaret (wife of William Lavin), James N., Abner, Jane, Joel, Calvin, Richard W. and Amanda.

Amos A. Brown, a farmer of Benton County, Ark., was born on the 2d of February, 1820, and located on his present fine farm of 260 acres in 1852. He has lived a quiet, uneventful life, but has always taken a deep interest in matters pertaining to the welfare of the county in which he resides. He has 130 acres of land under cultivation, and is in a prosperous condition, financially. Mr. Brown votes the Democratic ticket, and his first vote for President, as far as he recollects, was for James K. Polk. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church. His parents, Alfred and Narcissus (Belk) Brown, were married in their native State, North Carolina, and immigrated to Tennessee in 1832, and from Tennessee to North Carolina in 1834. In 1851 they left North Carolina and arrived in Benton County in 1852. Their children were as follows: Elvira, Darling (deceased), James, Amos A., Arra A., Asoph (deceased), Alfred (deceased), Harriet, J. M. and John W. The paternal grandfather was an Englishman, and came to America at a very early day, locating in North Carolina.

Charles W. Brown, member of the firm of Smart & Brown, proprietors of the livery, feed and sale stable of Bentonville, was born in Warren County, Ohio, in 1847; son of William C. and Martha E. (McBay) Brown. The father was also born in Warren County, Ohio, in 1811, and was a farmer and stock dealer by occupation. He moved to Shelby County, Ohio, in 1861, and there died in 1874. The mother was born near Harrisburg, Penn., and died in 1873. They were the parents of seven children: Charles W.; Ellen, at home; Margaret, wife of Daniel Vandamark, of Shelby County, Ohio; Joseph, who was conductor on a train and was killed while coupling a car; Martha, a teacher in Sidney, Ohio; John, a railroad conductor, and Ida, a teacher by profession in Sidney, Ohio. Charles W. was reared on his father's farm, and in March, 1864, he enlisted in the Eighth Ohio Battery, Light Artillery, and was in service until the close of the war, being discharged at Cincinnati, Ohio. He served in Mississippi, and was on garrison duty. After the war Mr. Brown operated a threshing machine for fourteen years. In the spring of 1885 he went to Kinsley, Kas., and was engaged in a stock and ranch business. In 1886 he became a resident of Bentonville, Ark., and he and E. F. Henry speculated in real estate. They owned Clark's second addition, sold numerous lots, and met with good success. In June, 1887, Mr. Brown and L. P. Smart became partners in the livery and feed stable, and have since continued at this business. Mr. Brown brought the first full-blooded Norman horse to Benton County, and he and Mr. Henry brought the first Galloway cattle ever in the county.

John G. Brown, son of Joseph and Sarah (Green) Brown, was born January 21, 1848, in Watauga County, N. C. The father was also born in the same county, is now living, and is engaged in tilling the soil on the same farm that he first settled. During the late war he enlisted in Company D, First North Carolina Volunteer Cavalry, served through the entire war and participated in many battles—Petersburg, Willis Church, Manassas, Bull Run, Gettysburg, Richmond, Stony Creek, Bellefield and a number of others. He was captured near Petersburg three days before Lee's surrender, and imprisoned at Point Lookout, where he was kept for three months, and then paroled. Sarah (Green) Brown was also born in Watauga County, N. C., and by her marriage with Mr. Brown became the mother of seven children, four now living: C. E., Mrs. Harriet E. Clowson, Julia A. and John G. Those deceased were named Susanna, James and Mrs. Mary L. Yonce. The parents of these children are sixty-four and sixty years of age, respectively. John G. Brown received a common-school education before the breaking out of the war, and after that eventful period. At the age of nineteen he left the home of his youth, turned his face westward, and finally settled in Northern Missouri, where he remained for fourteen years. He married Amelia E. Watson, daughter of Abner and Mary (Emmons) Watson, of Chariton County, Mo. This union resulted in the birth of three children: Rosa A., Joseph Abner and James O. Mr. Brown left Missouri and moved to his old home in North Carolina, where he remained for about two years. He then moved to Bentonville, Ark., where he worked at the carpenter's trade, and after a two years' residence in that city, moved to his present farm, where he has since lived. Like his father, Mr. Brown enlisted in the Confederate army, Company D, First North Carolina Volunteer Cavalry, and served a part of the last year. He took part in some skirmishes, but no actual battles. He was wounded, and was disabled for about a year. Mrs. Brown is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

Lorenzo D. Brown is a well-to-do farmer of Benton County, Ark., and was born in Alabama in the year 1842. He is a son of S. P. and Grace A. (Muldeo) Brown, the former of whom was born in the "Palmetto State," and was a planter by occupation. He moved from his native State to Alabama at a very early day, and from there to Texas in 1859, settling in Collins County, where he remained seven years. He then returned to Alabama, where he died in 1878. Lorenzo D. Brown was educated in the common schools of Alabama, and remained with his parents until he reached manhood. At the breaking out of the war of 1861 he joined the Confederate service, enlisting in Company D, Sixth Texas Cavalry, and after serving one and a half years returned home, and soon after re-enlisted in Company I, Second Texas Partisan Rangers, commanded by Capt. White, and served until the close of the war. While in Louisiana he was taken prisoner, but soon after succeeded in effecting his escape, and returned to his command. He received his discharge at Hempstead, Tex., and returned to his home in Collins County, that State, and resumed farming. In 1884 he came to Benton County, Ark., and purchased his present farm, which consists of 120 acres of very fair land. He was married in 1864 to Miss Mary J. Carson, of Titus County, Tex., and by her has a family of seven children: Horace P., Frank C., Albert L., Lora V., Gracie, Robert and Corrie. Mrs. Brown is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Thomas Gilbert Brown, a prominent farmer, stock raiser and fruit grower of Benton County, Ark., was born in Wayne County, N. Y., June 30, 1827, and is a son of Jesse and Sally (Taylor) Brown. The father was a farmer, born on Long Island in 1804, and afterward became a well-to-do farmer, stock raiser and saw-mill owner of York State. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and died in Fulton County, Ind., in 1846. His father, Thomas Brown, was a farmer and a native of France, being a schoolmate of the Marquis de La Fayette, of Revolutionary fame. Sally (Taylor) Brown was born in New York in 1806, a daughter of Jacob Taylor, and a Methodist in her religious views. Thomas Gilbert Brown, her son, was taken by his parents to Indiana at the age of thirteen years, where he received his education and grew to manhood. He was married in 1849 to Nancy Jane Lewis, who was born in Indiana in 1831, and died in that State in 1855. Two children were born to this union: Sarah Alice, wife of William Fuller, and Leander, residing in Cherokee City. Mr. Brown was married to his second wife, Nancy M. Elliott, in 1855, and by her became the father of eight children: Rebecca A. (wife of A. N. Cherry), Jay W., Ida Belle (wife of B. Evans), Amy Dell (wife of John Ingalls), Ruth Jane, Ulysses Grant, Lillian and John E. In 1858 Mr. Brown went to Minnesota, where he resided until 1860, and then went to Washington County, Kas. While residing in this place, in 1862, the Indians made a raid on his stock, and took all that he had. He then returned to Indiana, but only remained a short time, when he went to Nebraska, taking up the first homestead claim in Jones County. They were troubled a great deal by the Indians at first, and Leander, the eldest son, was often posted as sentry on the top of their house, to watch for their approach. Mr. Brown made his home in Nebraska for twelve years, and then located in Benton County, Ark., where he has since resided. He has a good farm of fifty-five acres, all under cultivation, and an orchard of over 2,000 trees. He is a man who commands the respect and esteem of all who know him, and he and family worship in the Congregational Church. While in New York Mr. Brown's father resided about a mile and a half from the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith, and assisted him in digging up the plates from which the Book of Mormon is supposed to have been written.

Daniel Lanning Bruner, a well-to-do farmer and stock raiser of Benton County, Ark., was born in Monroe County, Ind., August 1, 1841, and is a son of Elias and Matilda (Williams) Bruner, and grandson of Jacob Bruner. The latter was born in Germany, and was a hatter by trade, but also owned and managed a farm. Elias Bruner was born in Shenandoah County, Va., in 1797, and, like his father, was a farmer and hatter by occupation. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and died in Benton County, Ark., April 10, 1871. His wife was born in Tennessee in 1807, and died in Benton County, Ark., October 25, 1874. Daniel Lanning Bruner was taken to Cumberland County, Ill., at the age of nine years, and the next year was removed to Cole County. He was taken to Texas in 1853, and was there reared to manhood. All the schooling he received was obtained while he was a small boy in Indiana and Illinois, reading and writing being the extent of his scholastic attainments. Since that time he has improved his education very much by private study, and he is an extensive and thoughtful reader. He located in Benton County, Ark., in 1868, and was here married two years later to Miss Penelope Litteral, who was born in Tennessee in October, 1843, a daughter of James Litteral, a farmer. In March, 1862, Mr. Bruner enlisted in the Confederate army, in Company I, Fifteenth Texas Volunteer Infantry, and served until the cessation of hostilities. He was in a number of hotly contested battles, but was never wounded. He was sergeant of his company, and after the war returned home, broken down in health from hardships and exposure. By industry and good management he is now the owner of a good farm of 120 acres. He is a Master Mason, and he and family worship in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His children were as follows: Mary Ellen, James B., Lucinda E., Walter Lee, Cora Edna, Reumira and Daniel Clinton; the latter of whom died September 18, 1888.

John H. and James P. Burns, grocery merchants of Bentonville, Ark., were born in Bedford County, Tenn., in 1830 and 1838, respectively. They are the sons of Thomas P. and Mary Ann (Knott) Burns, and the grandsons of John Burns, who was a native of Ireland, coming to the United States when a young man; was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and drew a pension for services rendered. He located in North Carolina, but afterward located in Bedford County, Tenn., where he died about 1836. Thomas P. Burns was born in the State of North Carolina in 1793, and was of Irish descent. He died in 1838. Mary Ann (Knott) Burns was born in Bedford County, Tenn., and died in 1870 at the age of sixty-three. She was the mother of five children, three of whom are now living: William, who resides in Bell County, Tex., engaged in farming; John H. and James P. The father of these children died when they were quite small, and, after his death, the mother continued to keep house, and keep her children together on the farm. In 1860 she and her three children moved to Benton County, Ark., purchased a farm five miles southwest of the county seat, and here John H. and James P. remained with their mother until her death. They followed farming until 1881, when they established a grocery store in Bentonville, and this they have since continued. They carry a first-class stock of goods, and are men of good business ability, are strictly honest, and are good citizens. In 1871 John H. married Miss Mary Elizabeth Simpson, a native of Alabama, born in 1838, and the daughter of James Simpson. Mrs. Burns died in 1875, and in 1877 he married Miss Harriet E. Campbell, who was born in Logan County, Ky., and who is the daughter of James M. Campbell. James P. married, in 1878, Miss Sarah Emaline Jackson, daughter of Haley Jackson. They have five children: Mary E., Margaret G., Edna A., James H. and Ida. In politics the brothers are both Democrats. They are both Masons, and both are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which John H. is steward and James P. trustee. In 1862 the brothers enlisted in Company F, Confederate army, under Capt. Miser. John H. was in the battle of Helena, Jenkins' Ferry, and was captured and retained about twenty days. He was discharged at Washington, Ark., after the surrender. James P. was in the battle of Prairie Grove, and was afterward transferred to the commissary department, and was there from August, 1862, until the close of the war. He was wounded quite severely in the battle of Prairie Grove.

J. Van Butler, editor and proprietor of The Locomotive at Siloam Springs, is a native of Gordon County, Ga., born January 22, 1866, son of James F. and Mary F. S. (Watts) Butler, and grandson of Absalom Butler, who was born in South Carolina, was of English parentage, and was a relative of Gov. P. Butler, of the last named State. James F. Butler was born in Pendleton District, S. C., November, 1821, but grew to manhood in Gordon County, Ga., where he married and where he lived until 1868, when he engaged in merchandising at Fairmount, Ga., and followed this occupation at that place for ten years. At the last mentioned date he moved to Benton County and located where he now lives, six miles east of Siloam Springs, where he is exclusively engaged in agricultural pursuits. He is the owner of 160 acres of land, ninety under cultivation. His wife, Mrs. Mary F. S. (Watts) Butler, was born in Rabun County, Ga., March 20, 1826, was reared there, and is still living. Their son, J. Van Butler, has acquired his education, outside of six months' schooling, by private personal study. He remained at home until twenty years of age (1886), and then entered the Corner Stone office, where he remained but a short time. Then he and a brother purchased a printing office at Springdale, and he did the mechanical work of that paper, The Locomotive, which was issued from December 25, 1886, and was continued until May, 1887. They then sold out and removed to Siloam Springs, where they established this paper August 26, 1887, which is independent in politics. Mr. Butler is a member of the Protective League, and is financial secretary of the lodge at this place.

LeRoy B. Camden was born in Coffee County, Tenn., in 1836, and is a son of LeRoy S. and Odelia (Payne) Camden, who were born in Rockbridge County, Va., and Georgia, in 1799 and 1808, respectively. John Camden, the grandfather of our subject, was born and reared in Virginia. In 1811 he moved to Tennessee and purchased a large tract of land near Hillsboro. He held the office of justice of the peace for over thirty years, and was one of the early pioneers of Coffee County. His son, LeRoy S., was married in Tennessee, and in 1846 moved to Lawrence County, Mo., where he purchased 320 acres of land, and died in 1877. He was captain of the Mustering Guards in Coffee County for five years. His wife died in 1888. LeRoy B. Camden is the sixth of her ten children, and was reared to manhood on a farm in Lawrence County. April 14, 1861, he was married to Miss Dorinda Bennett, who was born in Pulaski County, Mo., in 1842, and by her became the father of nine children: Hattie, wife of G. L. Alexander; LeRoy T., Richard, John, Sarah (deceased), Mary, Andrew, Eva and Effie. Mrs. Camden is a daughter of Richard Bennett, who is the oldest man in Benton County, having attained his one hundred and seventh year. Mr. Camden resided in Lawrence County until 1875, with the exception of about three years, and then removed to Cook County, Tex., and a year later came to Benton County, Ark., and speculated in cattle for three years. In 1878 he purchased 130 acres of land in the county, which he has since increased to 180 acres. In 1885 he erected a large two-story frame dwelling house at a cost of $1,200. He is a Democrat in his political views, and his first presidential vote was cast for Breckinridge in 1860.

Rev. Peter Carnahan, who resides one mile east of Bentonville, Ark., is a native of Washington County, Ark., born in 1838 at Cane Hill. He is a son of Samuel and Mary (Pyeatt) Carnahan and grandson of Rev. John Carnahan, who was a South Carolinian, a Cumberland Presbyterian minister and an immigrant to Tennessee in 1800. Eleven years later he moved to Arkansas Post, and a year later went to Pulaski County. He was the first Protestant minister in the State of Arkansas. His son, Samuel, was born in South Carolina in 1794, and made his home with his father until 1827, when he moved to Cane Hill, Ark., where he passed the remainder of his days. During the time he was living at Crystal Hill his father moved back to Tennessee, but after Samuel moved to Cane Hill his father made his home with him. Samuel Carnahan died in 1867. He was the owner of 500 acres of land at the time of his death. His wife was of French descent, born in South Carolina in 1797, and died in 1879. She was a daughter of Jacob Pyeatt, and became the mother of twelve children, nine of whom are living, Peter Carnahan, our subject, being the eleventh child. He was reared on his father's farm, and was attending the Cane Hill College when the war broke out, and he immediately espoused the cause of the Confederacy, serving as third lieutenant of Capt. Buchanan's company. In 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Thirty-fourth Arkansas Regiment of Infantry, and was elected second lieutenant of the same, and after the battle of Prairie Grove was promoted to adjutant, holding the latter position until the close of the war. He participated in the battles of Oak Hill, Prairie Grove and Jenkins' Ferry. After the war he returned home and farmed on the old homestead until 1870. He was ordained a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in 1866, and was given charge of a church at Pleasant Hill and one at Cincinnati, Ark. In 1870 he was called to Bentonville to take charge of the church at that point, and was pastor of the same for fourteen years. During this time he also had charge of the Mt. Vernon congregation, on Pea Ridge, which charge he still retains. In 1884 the Bentonville congregation was divided, and Rev. Carnahan took charge of the new congregation, known as Wood's congregation, the church being about two miles east of Bentonville. In June, 1862, Mr. Carnahan was married to Martha J., daughter of Rev. John Buchanan, one of the pioneer Cumberland Presbyterian ministers of Washington County, Ark., and by her became the father of six children: Stella (wife of D. C. Lewis), Otho, Edgar, John Hurley, Harry Pyeatt and Earl. He has a good farm of ninety-four acres, and is a Democrat and an Ancient member of the Masonic fraternity. He is noted for his many Christian virtues, and the fact that he has been eighteen years the pastor of the same two congregations speaks volumes in his praise.

I. J. Cawood, of the grocery firm of Cawood & Son, at Rogers, Ark., was born in Tennessee in 1861, and is a son of W. H. and R. J. (Sharp) Cawood, who were born in Tennessee in 1835 and 1839, respectively. I. J. Cawood is the second of their six children, and was reared and married in his native State, his wife's maiden name being Esther Sharp. In 1881 he and wife moved to Kansas, and here his parents also came a short time after. At the end of one year they came to Arkansas and located in Benton County, where they purchased land and followed agricultural pursuits for about seven years, after which they engaged in the grocery business at Rogers. They are doing a good business, and their trade is increasing rapidly. The Cawood family own an excellent farm of 120 acres in Benton County. I. J. Cawood and wife are the parents of three children: Charley P., Jesse and Otto. Mr. Cawood is a young man of fine business qualifications, and in his political views is a Republican. He belongs to the I. O. O. F. and A. F. & A. M. fraternities.

Hon. David Chandler is one of the old and highly esteemed citizens of Benton County, Ark. He was born in Burke (now McDowd) County, N. C., October 3, 1804, and there grew to manhood. He was educated in the common schools, and received a supplemental education in a college at Morgantown. In 1846 he immigrated to Bloomfield, Ark., and began tilling the soil, entering 320 acres of land. In August, 1846, he was elected county surveyor, and in 1850 was elected to the State Legislature, was re-elected in 1872, and was in the famous Brooks and Baxter call session of 1874. He has been a notary public for twelve years, and holds that office at the present time. He was married to Eliza Fagan, a daughter of Col. John Fagan, who was a soldier in the War of 1812. She was born December 4, 1812, and died in Arkansas in 1871. Three sons and two daughters blessed their union: J. Elizabeth, wife of Dr. J. H. Neagle, residing in Paris, Tex., is the only one from home. Mr. Chandler has the confidence and esteem of all who know him, and although nearly eighty-four years of age is in excellent health, both bodily and mentally. March 28, 1878, he was married to his second wife, Mrs. M. A. (Martin) Pearson, who was born and grew to womanhood in Monroe County, Tenn. Her first husband was William Pearson, who died in Cedar County, Mo., in 1866. Mrs. Chandler is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and her husband belongs to the Masonic and I. O. O. F. fraternities. His parents, John and Elizabeth (Oustatt) Chandler, were born in Randolph and Burke Counties, N. C., respectively, and died in their native State, the former December 21, 1839, in his "seventies."

Francis M. Clanton is one of the prominent and prosperous young farmers and a blacksmith of Benton County, Ark., and was born in 1859, being a son of Ed and Nancy Clanton. The father was a farmer, and was highly esteemed as a man and citizen; he died in 1861. His wife is still living, and is now sixty-two years old. Francis M. Clanton was reared and educated in Benton County, Ark., and after attaining manhood was united in marriage to Miss Delilah A. Roller, their union being blessed in the birth of five children: Jacob E., Sophronia, Mary, Ada and Ella. Mr. Clanton is a strong supporter of Christianity, and formerly belonged to the Missionary Baptist, but is now an advocate of Bible holiness, believing and teaching that all who are born again are members of the church of God, and this membership being retained by obedience is sufficient to give an abundant entrance into the kingdom of heaven.

William R. Clark, farmer and dealer in fresh meats, of Bentonville, Ark., was born in that city in 1846, and is the son of James W. and Jane M. (Dickson) Clark. James W. Clark was born in Gilles County, Tenn., in 1825; was of Scotch descent, and a saddle and harness maker by trade. In 1842 he located in Benton County, Ark., and commenced working at his trade in Bentonville, establishing the first business of the kind in town. He carried this on until his death, which occurred in 1879. He was married about 1844, and soon after commenced keeping hotel. In 1849 he erected a hotel known as Clark Hotel, and is yet known by that name, and operated this up to the time of his death. Gen. Sigel made this hotel his headquarters previous to and during the fight of Pea Ridge. Mr. Clark was an honest man, and a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years. James W. Clark donated six acres of land for the public school buildings of Bentonville, and upon this they are now standing. He was very charitable in all his acts. His wife, who is yet living, was born in Bedford County, Tenn., in 1828, and is the daughter of Maj. John B. Dickson. She is the mother of nine children, six now living: William R., Pierce, Charles T., Oscar P., Carson E. and Belle (wife of Joseph Peel). William R. was educated in Bentonville, and after reaching his majority commenced gardening, raising small fruit and vegetables. He was at Eureka Springs two years. He afterward turned his attention to farming, and followed this until 1884, when he commenced the butchering business. He continued this occupation until May, 1884, when he sold out. Mr. Clark now expects to return to raising small fruits and vegetables again. He is the owner of ten acres adjoining Bentonville, also seventy acres a short distance from Bentonville, and eighty acres near Royar. He was in the army two years (Confederate States Army) and was in Capt. C. C. Waters' company. He was in the fights at Fayetteville, Cabin Creek and Prairie Grove. In 1866 he married Miss Martha Elzey, daughter of Benjamin Elzey, and a native of Benton County, Ark., born in 1848. They have eight children: Albert M., Arthur, Mabel, Robert, Bessie, Minnie E., Charles and William. Mr. Clark is a Democrat in politics, was marshal of Bentonville several years and deputy sheriff of Benton County four years. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dr. Joseph T. Clegg, physician, of Siloam Springs, Ark., was born in Jefferson County, in the same State, on the 21st of February, 1850, and is of English descent; both of his grandfathers were English, and were soldiers in the Revolutionary War. His father, Thomas W. Clegg, was born in North Carolina May 19, 1803, and was there reared and educated. He was married to Rebecca Lasater, a daughter of William Lasater, of North Carolina, and in 1848 removed to Jefferson County, Ark., where he died in 1877. His wife died in 1872. She was the mother of seven children: Josiah Q., Bennett L., James B. and John L. were all Confederate soldiers, and the three elder died during the war, Bennett L., being killed at the battle of Murfreesboro; Cornelia B. P. (Stanfield) is deceased; Catherine E. is wife of William C. Cleveland. Dr. Joseph T. Clegg was educated in the common schools and also by private tutors, and remained on the farm with his parents until he entered the medical department of the University of Nashville in 1871, and was graduated in 1873. He located at Red Bluff, Ark., where he practiced medicine for four years, and then came to Siloam Springs, Ark., where he has since been a successful practitioner. He took a post-graduate course in the College for Medical Practitioners, at St. Louis, Mo., in 1884, and also the post-graduate course in the Medical College Hospital, of New York City, in 1888. He is a member of the drug firm of R. P. Peques & Co. He is a member of the State Medical Society of Arkansas, and of the Benton County Medical Society. The Doctor was married, in 1875, to Ida Daugherty, of Jefferson County, Ark., who died in 1879, leaving two children: Moses D. and Ida Neill. In 1882 Dr. Clegg married his second wife, Ada B. Fagan, a daughter of Maj. J. W. Fagan. She was born in Benton County in 1858, and is the mother of two children: Chester B. and Ethel E. (deceased). The Doctor is a Democrat in his political views, and cast his first vote for Tilden for the presidency. He is a Mason.

Thomas Clifton, who is one of the enterprising citizens of Eldorado Township, was born in Scott County, Ill., December 9, 1853, and is the son of John and Nancy (Clifton) Clifton. The grandparents Clifton on both sides were natives of Delaware. John Clifton was also born in Delaware, and grew to manhood in that State. His parents dying while he was still quite young, a guardian was appointed, who gave him very meager advantages for an education. When leaving his old home he first went to Ohio, and from that State soon after to Indiana, and subsequently going from that State to Illinois. Later he moved to Kansas, where he remained for about twenty years, but afterward came to Benton County, Ark., and here died in 1885. Nancy (Clifton) Clifton, was born in Delaware, and was a cousin of Mr. Clifton. To them were born eleven children, eight now living: Mary, Julia A., John W., Isabel, Nancy, Benonia, Sarah and Thomas. Those deceased were named James, Ellen and Charles. Thomas Clifton, subject of this sketch, remained with his father until the latter's death, taking care of both parents in their old age. When a boy he received but a common-school education, and continued to work on the farm until his marriage, which occurred in 1874, with Miss Eliza Jackson, daughter of Abel and Martha Jackson, and a native of Illinois. To this union were born five children, four now living: John Franklin, William Andrew, Charles Thomas and Nancy Jane. The one deceased was named Benonia. After his marriage Mr. Clifton continued to live with his parents, and moved with them to Arkansas. The mother died in Kansas, and the father married his second wife in that State, and moved with her to Arkansas, where she now lives. The father died on the farm his son has since occupied. Thomas Clifton is now the owner of 120 acres of land, eighty under cultivation. He is a strong Republican in his political views; never has voted any other ticket. He is a strong advocate of the public school system, doing what his circumstances would permit in that direction, and he and Mrs. Clifton are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Rev. Wyatt Coffelt, minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and also farmer and stock raiser of Benton County, Ark., was born in Knox County, Ky., February 3, 1812, and resided in his native State until he was fifteen years of age, when he was taken to Monroe County, Tenn., by his parents, Jacob and Susanna (Wyatt) Coffelt, who were born in Greenbrier County, Va., in 1782 and 1786, respectively. Jacob Coffelt was a son of Philip Coffelt, who was of German birth, and served under Col. Washington in the French and Indian War at Braddock's defeat. He also served through the Revolutionary War. His wife, Ellen (Ryan) Coffelt, was captured by the Shawnee Indians during the French and Indian War, and after eleven weeks' captivity succeeded in effecting her escape. She was born in Ireland, and came with her parents to America at the age of five years. Jacob Coffelt was a farmer, and died in 1827, and his widow in 1864. They were members of the Baptist Church. The mother's father, Samuel Wyatt, also served in the French and Indian War and the Revolutionary War. Rev. Wyatt Coffelt was reared, educated and married in Monroe County, Tenn., and there learned the saddler's trade. His wife's maiden name was Jane Sligar, a daughter of Adam and Catherine (Brown) Sligar. This wife died January 20, 1887, having borne fourteen children, six of whom are living, and September 11, 1887, he married his second wife, Mrs. Louisa C. Sooter. His children were as follows: Louisa J., wife of N. C. Curry; Nancy A., the deceased wife of J. C. Anderson; Nicy A., wife of E. A. Torbuss; Thomas W., who was waylaid, murdered and robbed by some cut-throats in Texas; Enas J., James A., Theo. A. and Robert Lee; four died in infancy, and one, a son, died at the age of fourteen years. Mr. Coffelt worked at his trade for twenty-two years, and in 1850 moved to Missouri, and there resided until 1854, when he became a missionary among the Cherokee and Creek Indians, with whom he labored for eight years. In 1860 he moved his family to Benton County, Ark., but he remained in the Indian Territory until the fall of 1861, when they took refuge in the South until the close of the war, and then returned to Benton County. He began life with very small means, and met with many reverses, but is now in comfortable circumstances financially. He has an exceptionally fine orchard, and ships his fruit to all parts of the United States. His fruit took the first premium of $50 and the second premium of $15 at Springdale, Ark., and again took the first premium, $25, this fall, 1888, at Rogers, Ark.

Judge Samuel A. Cordell, county and probate judge of Benton County, Ark., is a native of Cedar County, Iowa, born November 3, 1854; son of Jacob A. and Margaretta (Singrey) Cordell. The father was born near Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Penn., December 2, 1817, was of German descent, and a carpenter by trade. He was married in his native State, and here resided until his wife's death in 1849. He then moved to Morrow County, Ohio, where he married Margaretta Singrey in 1854, moved to Cedar County, Iowa, where the subject of this sketch was born. The following year he moved to Noble County, Ind., and in 1860 to Andrew County, Mo., and in 1864 moved to Nodaway County, Mo., where he resided until 1871, when he moved to Benton County, Ark., and in June, 1888, went to Los Angeles, Cal., where he now resides. The mother was born August 12, 1828, in Morrow County, Ohio, and was of Swiss origin. She died September 30, 1882. Their family consisted of six children, four now living. Judge Samuel A. Cordell received his education in the district schools of Benton County, was reared on a farm, and there remained until twenty-three years of age. He then engaged in teaching, and followed the teacher's profession for nine terms, all in Benton County. During his teaching he took up the study of law, his preceptor being Hon. Samuel W. Peel, now a member of Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of Arkansas. October, 1879, Judge Cordell was admitted to the bar, and immediately entered upon his practice at Eureka Springs. At the end of five months he returned to Benton County, and located at Rogers. July 22, 1880, Judge Cordell married Miss Rosa Spencer, who was a native of the State of Ohio. She died January 18, 1882, and November 4, 1883, the Judge married Miss Alice King, nee Sikes, daughter of B. F. Sikes, and a native of Bedford County, Tenn. In 1886 Judge Cordell moved to Bentonville, where he has since resided. In 1886 he was elected county and probate judge of Benton County, and re-elected in 1888. He was city attorney of Eureka a short time, and was also city attorney of Rogers one year. He is a Democrat in politics, casting his first presidential vote for S. J. Tilden, in 1876, and he and Mrs. Cordell are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he being one of the stewards of the same.

James T. Craig, retired merchant, Bentonville, Ark., was born in Ray County, Tenn., December 22, 1818, and is one of the oldest and most respected citizens of the county. He is the son of Samuel and Jane (Henderson) Craig, natives of Pennsylvania and North Carolina, respectively, the former born in 1781 and the latter in 1790. They were married in North Carolina, whither the father had immigrated when a young man, and after marriage they moved to Ray County, Tenn. Here the mother died in 1827. The father moved to Cane Hill, Washington Co., Ark., in 1848, and there died two years later. He followed the occupation of a farmer, and was also a teacher by profession. He was the father of only two children who lived to be grown—James T. the only one now living. Samuel Craig's father was a native of Scotland, and after coming to the United States settled in Pennsylvania. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary War. James T. Craig was only eight years old when his mother died, and at that age was taken by one of the neighbors, with whom he lived for a few years, and did what work a small boy could do on the farm. At the age of fifteen he began working at the tailor's trade in Pikesville, Tenn., where he remained one year. He then worked in a store for some time, and in 1838 went to Lynchburg, Ala., where he resumed clerking. He worked for James Lyle, and in a letter of commendation written by the latter, dated Lynchburgh, DeKalb Co., Ala., February 11, 1838, and which is now in the possession of James T. Craig, are the following words: "With the bearer, James T. Craig, I have been acquainted with more than twelve months, the greater part of which time he has done business in my store. As a young man of honest principle, virtuous, and business habits and amiable disposition, he is surpassed by none and equalled by few. I therefore confidently commend him as a salesman and clerk to any who wish to employ a person in the above line of business. [Signed] James Lyle." Immediately after the above was written Mr. Craig went to Fort Smith, Ark., and clerked there for one year, but his permanent location was at Fort Gibson, where he acted as salesman for a year. The following year he purchased a stock of goods and began merchandising on his own responsibility. In 1846 he married Miss Samantha Reagan, who was born in Tennessee in 1827, and who died in 1848. The same year Mr. Craig moved his stock of goods to Cane Hill, Ark. In April, 1850, he disposed of his goods, and with the determination of obtaining his share of the hidden wealth in California, turned his face westward, and after a long, perilous journey over the vast plains that stretched between, reached that State. He remained in the mining regions from August until May of the following year, and not meeting with very good success he returned via the Isthmus, and resumed his former business in Cincinnati, Ark. June 12, 1851, he married Miss Elizabeth A. Russell, a native of Ray County, Tenn., born August 20, 1830. To them were born three children: Charles R., Edward A. and George M. Charles R. was born in 1854, and is in the real estate business at Bentonville; is also engaged in the mercantile establishment of Craig & Sons. March 27, 1876, he married Miss Lottie Redding, on the anniversary of her twentieth birthday, and to them have been born five children: James R., Carrie M., Eddie M., Ethel and an infant daughter. Edward A. Craig was born in Bentonville, Ark., in 1860, and is a member of the firm of James T. Craig & Sons. January 14, 1884, he married Miss Wincie McDaniel, who bore him two children: Bessie and John. George M. was born at Cane Hill, Ark., in 1862, and is also a member of the above mentioned firm. September 14, 1886, he married Miss Jennie A. Taliaferro, and is the father of one child, Annie B. In February, 1852, James T. Craig became a resident of Bentonville, Ark., and engaged in merchandising, continuing the same until the breaking out of the late war. He then returned to Cane Hill and engaged in farming, which occupation he continued until 1871, when he again returned to Bentonville and resumed merchandising. In 1882 he turned his business over to his sons. Mr. Craig is now seventy years of age, and lives a quiet, retired life. During his active life he lived and acted the characteristics set forth by his employer, James Lyle, in his commendation. Mr. Craig is the oldest merchant in Bentonville, and he has met with good success. He erected the first two-story business houses ever built in Bentonville. He is Democratic in his political views, and he and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

James E. Crane. The Crane family was first represented in the United States by three brothers, who came from England and settled in New England, the great-grandfather of our subject being one of the brothers. The grandfather of James E. Crane was Elihu Crane, who was born in Massachusetts February 8, 1763, and was a soldier in the Revolutionary War. He moved with his family to Erie County, Penn., at an early day, being one of the first settlers of that region. His son, Elihu Crane, the father of James E., was born in 1791, at Stockbridge, Mass., and when only four years of age was taken with his parents to Erie County, Penn. He was a soldier in the War of 1812 and 1814. He assisted his father in tilling the soil, and January 31, 1827, was married to Nancy Carlin, who was of Irish descent, born in Crawford County, Penn., September 5, 1806. She died in 1886 and he in 1875. The following were their children: James E., Wealthy (wife of J. J. Ticknor), Adonijah, Abiather, Nancy (wife of George N. Sawdy), John (deceased) and Joel. James E. Crane was born in Erie County, Penn., January 14, 1829, and was educated at an academy at Albion, Penn. He followed various occupations, but was principally engaged in farming. He was married in Lockport, Erie Co, Penn., December 29, 1852, to Emily Leach, a native of Pennsylvania, born April 19, 1835, and their union has been blessed in the birth of ten children: Ella L., wife of V. D. Billiang; Wealthy, wife of Walter Robley; George, deceased; Mary I., wife of Henry Robley; Ulysses G., James L., Emily J., John C., Clara L. and Milo T. In 1862 Mr. Crane enlisted in the Union army, and was commanded at various times by Burnside, Hooker and Meade, and served as sergeant for one year. He resided in Pennsylvania until 1876, when he and family moved to Kansas, where he tilled the soil until 1887, and then came to Siloam Springs, Ark. He cast his first presidential vote for Gen. Scott, and in his political views is a Republican.

William J. Curry, M. D., was born in Shelby County, Ill., January 30, 1851, and is a son of John W. and Catherine (Bennett) Curry, both of whom were born in Tennessee. The father was reared to manhood in his native State, and then removed to Illinois with his parents, where he married Miss Bennett, and by her became the father of eight children: William J. and George living, and Lafayette, Mary E., James R., Pierce, Annie and Ella deceased. The father is still living in Illinois, and is engaged in farming and stock raising. His wife died in April, 1874. Dr. William J. Curry was educated at Decatur, Ill., and at the Louisville Medical College, from which institution he was graduated in 1875. In 1877 he came to Benton County, Ark., and the following year was married to Emma Neal, who was born in Tennessee, and came to Arkansas, when quite young, with her parents. George, Ethel, John, Eulala and Donnie are their children. The Doctor is a Republican in politics, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity. He owns considerable property in the town of Lowell, and is deeply interested in all enterprises calculated to benefit his county. He has arisen to prominence in his profession, and is one of the first physicians of the county.

S. M. Dailey, editor and proprietor of Benton County Journal, of Bentonville, was born in Franklin County, Ind., in 1834, son of James and Mary A. (Miller) Dailey. The father was born in New Jersey in 1787; was of Irish descent, and a farmer by occupation. He was married in his native State, and about 1828 immigrated to Franklin County, Ind., where he passed the remainder of his life. He died in 1849. The mother was born in New Jersey in 1791, and was of German extraction. She died in 1841. Of the ten children born to her marriage, S. M. Dailey was the youngest. He was educated in Bluffton, Ind., and at the age of seventeen began teaching, which occupation he followed for several years in Wells, Adams and Allen Counties, teaching in all thirteen terms. He met with good success, and was school examiner for four years. In 1859 he was elected recorder of Wells County, served four years, and in 1867 he was elected auditor of the same county, and held the position until 1871. Mr. Dailey was residing in Bluffton all this time, and was a member of the city council one year. For several years Mr. Dailey followed merchandising in Bluffton, Ind., and then moved to Arkansas City, Kas. In September, of the same year, he became a citizen of Bentonville, and here engaged in the grain and produce business, which he continued for one year. He then purchased the Benton County Journal, and has since been proprietor and editor. In 1867 he married Miss Lucinda Merriman, a native of Wayne County, Ohio, born in 1839, and to them have been born eight children, five now living: Mrs. Mary E. Fulton, Lewis M., Laura A., Forrest W. and Emma J. In politics Mr. Dailey has been a life-long Democrat, casting his first presidential vote for James Buchanan, in 1856. Mr. Dailey is a man held in high esteem by all who know him, and edits a newspaper full of valuable thoughts and sentiments. The Journal is one of the ablest edited papers of Benton County, and has a circulation of 1,400, being the largest in the county. Mr. Dailey deals out straight Democratic doctrine, and wavers neither to the right or to the left from what he believes to be right. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., being a member of Grand Lodge and Grand Encampment. He has devoted much study to this great and growing benevolent order, has been a hard working member, ever ready to fill any station where he can be of most benefit to the order. He is at present District Deputy Grand Master of his lodge, and Grand Marshal of the Grand Encampment of Arkansas.

James B. Dameron, editor and proprietor of the Arkansas Herald, at Siloam Springs, was born in Chariton County, Mo., August 10, 1861, to the matrimonial union of James and Mary A. (Moore) Dameron. James Dameron is the son of Jesse Dameron, and was born in Madison County, Ky., in 1817. He moved with his parents to Chariton County, Mo., in 1835, and two years later participated in the Seminole War. In 1839 he returned to Chariton County, Mo., and in 1841 chose for his life's companion, Miss Mary A. Moore, who was born in Chariton County, in 1823. This union was blessed by the birth of eleven children, who are named as follows: Missouri (deceased), Gazella (wife of J. K. Robinson), Sarah (widow of Hiram Shipp), John, Susan (wife of Richard Ford), Jennie (wife of John Wilkinson), Frank, Mollie, James B., Lida E. and Nannie. The parents are now living in Siloam Springs, and are respected citizens. Their son, James B., moved with his parents to Cherokee County, Kas., in 1874, and went with them to Washington County, Ark., in 1876, where he attended the State University at Fayetteville. He came to Hico, Benton Co., Ark., in 1878, and after remaining here one year went to Colorado, and was in that State three years. He then returned to Siloam Springs, Benton County, engaged in the Herald office in 1882, and took charge as editor and proprietor in 1884. May 2, 1888, he married Miss May Jarrett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Jarrett, former an early settler and prominent farmer of Cherokee County, Kas. Politically Mr. Dameron is a Democrat, and his paper advocates the principles of that party. He is a member of the K. of H. and American Protection League; he and his wife are members of the Missionary Baptist Church.

Andrew Baker Davis, a farmer and stock raiser of Benton County, Ark., and a native of Nashville, Tenn., was born on the 14th of January, 1838, and is a son of Elijah and Rebecca (Fletcher) Davis, and grandson of Eli Davis. The latter was born in the "Old Dominion," and was an eminent educator of that State, and also of Tennessee, whither he had moved at an early day. His death occurred in the State of his adoption. His son Elijah was born in Hancock County, Tenn., May 14, 1807, and received his education under the able instruction of his father. He was an eminent mathematician, and his name became well known in the colleges and educated communities of the United States. He attained a very high degree of excellence as a teacher, and followed his profession at different times in Virginia, Tennessee, Indiana, Missouri and Arkansas. He was always a strong anti-slavery man, a Whig in politics, a firm believer in the teachings of the Bible, and temperate and consistent in his habits. In fact, he may be said to belong to the great army of self-made men for which America is famous. He became a resident of Arkansas in 1841, and for many years was one of the progressive, energetic and prominent citizens and educators of Benton County. Many of the leading citizens of Benton, Washington and adjoining counties tell with pride of having been under his instruction. His death occurred on the 19th of October, 1884. He was a consistent member of the Baptist Church, and was of Welsh descent. His wife was born in Hancock County, Tenn., in 1814, and died in Montague County, Tex., in 1867. She was a member of an old American family and the daughter of James Fletcher. Andrew Baker Davis, whose name heads this sketch, grew to manhood in Washington and Madison Counties, Ark., and received an excellent education under his father's instruction. His youthful days were spent in farming and stock raising, and he has made that his chief calling through life. At the early age of nineteen years he was married to Miss Evaline Hock, who was born in Madison County, Ark., March 25, 1837, a daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Homsley) Hock, who were originally from Tennessee, and of German and Welsh descent, and by her became the father of twelve children, ten of whom are living: James O., a lawyer of Johnson County, Tex.; William J., a stockman of Washington Territory; John C., a farmer residing in the Cherokee Nation; Abraham Lincoln, residing in Benton County; Cleopatra Anne Bolyn, Mary Elizabeth, Martha Albertine, Rebecca Druscilla, Ben Frank and Sydney Emmet. At the breaking out of the war Mr. Davis enlisted in the Eighteenth Regiment Arkansas Volunteers, United States Army, and served until the cessation of hostilities. He escaped without receiving any wounds, but was captured by the enemy at Cherokee City; was soon after paroled and sent back to Barry County, Mo., with about twenty of his comrades. He soon after went to Montague County, Tex., where his only brother, Charles O. Davis, had raised a company of 100 men, and had with great difficulty made his way to the Union army, and afterward served as chief of scouts in Gen. Blount's army. Charles O. Davis was a lawyer by profession, and died in Montague County, Tex., in 1867. Andrew B. Davis returned to Madison County, Ark., after the war, and has since lived in that and Benton Counties. His labors through life have met with a fair degree of success, and he is now the owner of a good farm and a pleasant and comfortable home. He has been enabled to educate his children, and is himself a man of good education and sound judgment. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is one of the few men who had the courage to assert his principles, living as he did in a disloyal section.

Goldsmith Chandler Davis, a prominent nurseryman and fruit grower of Osage Township, Benton Co., Ark., was born in the "Hoosier" State in 1844, and is a son of Benjamin F. and Ruth J. (Chandler) Davis, who are of Welsh and Irish-English descent, respectively. The father was born in Ohio in 1820, and was married in his native State. After residing alternately in Ohio and Indiana until 1853 he moved to St. Paul, Minn., where he was engaged in merchandising one year. The following eleven years he kept hotel in Scott County, and was also engaged in farming and running a lime kiln, supplying the city of St. Paul with its lime for several years. In 1867 he became a citizen of Bentonville, Ark., where he kept a hotel, and was also postmaster for about eight years. In 1878 he immigrated to Los Angeles County, Cal., and has since been engaged in raising oranges, grapes and small fruits. His wife was born in Ohio in 1830, and is a descendant of Oliver Goldsmith, the poet. She is the mother of five children: Goldsmith C.; Phoebe, wife of R. C.

Brown; Rose A., Nannie and Benjamin F. Goldsmith C. was educated in the public schools of Minnesota, and came to Arkansas with his parents. His father owned a farm of eighty acres near Bentonville, and the mother in the spring of 1869 planted a pint of apple seeds, which Goldsmith C. grafted in the spring of 1870. He gradually increased his stock until the cold winter of 1880-81, when all his trees were killed. He immediately set to work with renewed energy, and purchased eighty acres of land where his house now stands, and, without paying a dollar down, began setting out trees. He now has the largest nursery in the county, if not in the State, and is the owner of 640 acres of good land. His orchard consists of 20,000 trees, and his nursery stock comprises 1,000,000 trees from one to four years old. He is doing a highly satisfactory business, and his trees are shipped to nearly every State in the Union. In 1875 he was married to Miss Sallie West, a daughter of A. A. West, of Carroll County, Ark. She was born in Alabama in 1836, and is the mother of five children: Betsey Trotwood, Benjamin Franklin, Catherine, Lou Duskey and John Chandler.

Dr. William R. Davis, of Bentonville, Ark., was born in Montgomery County, Ky., in 1832, and is the son of Col. Josiah Davis and Patsy Chandler (Smith) Davis, and the grandson of James Davis, who was a soldier of the Revolutionary War. Col. Josiah Davis was born in Fayette County, Ky., in 1797, and was of Irish-Welsh extraction. His grandfather immigrated to the United States from Ireland with a flail upon his shoulder, and hired to a Welshman in Maryland to thresh his wheat, fell in love with his daughter and married her. Col. Josiah Davis was a colonel in the Home Militia, and had three older brothers in the War of 1812, two of whom were killed in running the gauntlet at the battle of River Raisin. The Colonel was a farmer and politician. He was a member of the State Legislature two terms, and was one of the influential and prominent men of his locality. He was a man of eminent ability, and a warm personal friend of Henry Clay. He died of pneumonia in 1847. His wife was of English extraction, and was born in Fayette County, Ky., in 1803. She died in 1862. She was the mother of twelve children, six sons and six daughters, four of whom are now living. Dr. W. R. Davis was the sixth child born to his parents. He received his literary education at country schools, finishing up at Sylvan Academy, near Lexington, Ky., and at the age of twenty years commenced the study of medicine, his preceptor being Dr. John A. Hannah, of Mt. Sterling, Ky. In 1852 he entered the Ohio Medical College, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and during the winter of 1853-54 attended a partial course at Louisville Medical College, graduating in the spring of 1855 at Transylvania Medical College, Lexington, Ky., and at once began the practice of his profession in the county of Clarke, afterward removing to Lewisport, Hancock Co., Ky., where he commanded a leading practice for ten years, during which period, in the year 1858, he was married to Miss Harriet A. Echols, of Wheeling, Va., who was born in 1837. Three children were born to this union before the death of his wife, which occurred in 1864. Only one is now living, Samuel E. Davis, attorney at law in Bentonville. In 1866 Dr. Davis, then a widower, removed to North Middleton, Bourbon Co., Ky., and in 1868 he married Miss Mary F. Seamands, who was born in Bourbon County in 1843, and who has since borne him seven children, to wit: Mary A., Preston S., Josiah, William R., Winfield C., Patsy C. and Eleanor A., all of whom are living. In 1876 Dr. Davis received a diploma from Louisville Medical College, and in same year commenced business in Winfield, Cowley Co., Kas., where for nine years he continued to enjoy a large and lucrative practice, acting a part of the time as local surgeon for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad; was a member of the Southern Kansas Medical Society; was for one year vice-president of same, and also member of the Kansas State Medical Association. He spent a year with his family at Vinita, Indian Territory, during which period he was local surgeon for the Missouri Pacific and M., K. & T. Railroads. In 1886 he became a citizen of Bentonville, Ark. Dr. Davis is a Democrat in politics, is stockholder and director in the People's Bank, also director and stockholder in the Bentonville Evaporating and Canning Company. Dr. Davis has always commanded a large practice as well as the confidence and esteem of his acquaintances, and is a man of public spirit and progressive ideas. He has been one of the leading men in making Bentonville what she now is, having aided largely in securing enterprises of value and worth to the town, and has in conjunction with Mr. Dunn laid off and platted a forty-acre addition, known as Dunn & Davis' addition. During the short time he has been here he has erected a number of houses, and now owns a large number of lots in the city. He is agent for the Jarvis-Conklin Mortgage Trust Company, Kansas City, Mo. Dr. Davis is a member of the Christian Church, a Mason, and belongs to the I. O. U. W.; also, before moving west, was a member of district and State medical societies in his native State, Kentucky.

William B. Deming, real estate dealer and speculator of Bentonville, was born in Harrison County, Ohio, September 21, 1849, son of Lot and Frances E. (Urkuhart) Deming, and grandson of George Deming, who was a native of Weathersfield, Conn., and at an early date moved to Harrison County, Ohio. Lot Deming was born in Harrison County, Ohio, in 1823, and soon after his marriage moved to Tuscarawae County, Ohio, where he followed school-teaching for many years, and afterward devoted his time to farming. In the spring of 1870 he moved to Dickinson County, Kas., and in October, 1883, removed to Bentonville, where he now resides. His wife, Frances E. (Urkuhart) Deming, was born in Harrison County, Ohio, in 1828, and is of Scotch descent. Her grandmother lived to be one hundred years old. Mrs. Deming is now sixty years old and has not a gray hair in her head. She is the mother of the following named children: James W., William B., Newton A., Johnston G. (deceased), M. Edwin, George and Anna (twins) and Mollie. William B. was educated in the public schools of his native State and county. He remained at home until twenty years of age and worked on the farm. In 1869 he went to Dickinson County, Kan., and settled on a government tract of eighty acres, where he followed farming. In 1875 he married Miss Jennie Hart, who was a native of Stark County, Ill., born 1847, and who became the mother of two children: Earl and Daisy. Mr. Deming followed farming in Kansas until 1883, when he moved to Bentonville, Ark., and bought 152 acres of land adjoining the town. By December of the same year he had laid off 120 lots, known as Deming's Addition. He made a second addition of lots in April, 1887, known as Deming's Second Addition. In July, 1888, he donated two acres for the erection of a school building, which illustrates his benevolent spirit and enterprise. He has been dealing in real estate outside of his own land for a part of four years. September, 1887, the Arkansas Tobacco Company was organized in Bentonville, and Mr. Deming is a stockholder and president of the company. He is a thorough advocate of temperance and sobriety, and while a resident of Kansas took an active part in prohibition and local politics. He is rather independent in his political views, but inclines somewhat to Republican principles. Mr. Deming has a fine residence, and is one of the substantial citizens of the county. He is a member of the K. P., and a charter member in Bentonville. He is a regular attendant at the Christian Church, of which his wife is a member.

Ezekiel John Alcorn Dickson, one of Benton County's (Ark.) oldest and most highly esteemed citizens, was born in Rutherford County, Tenn., March 21, 1818, and is of Scotch-Irish descent. He is a son of Ezekiel Dickson, who was born in Lincoln County, N. C., in 1782, and in 1802 was married to Mary McKissick, and the following year moved to Tennessee, where he resided until the spring of 1836, when he located in Benton County, Ark., and in 1841 settled on the farm now owned by his son, Ezekiel J. A. Dickson. He died on the 14th of May, 1858. His wife was born in 1780, also in Lincoln County, N. C. She was a daughter of Daniel McKissick, a Revolutionary soldier, who was for many years clerk of Lincoln County, N. C. He died in 1818 in Bedford County, Tenn. Mrs. Dickson died June 2, 1853, having borne nine children, two of whom are living: Ezekiel J. A. and Mary E., widow of William R. Ogden. The paternal grandfather of our subject was Gen. Joseph Dickson, who was a native of Pennsylvania, born about 1750. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and died in 1825 in Rutherford County, Tenn. Ezekiel J. A. Dickson was reared on a farm, and in 1835 left his native State and immigrated to Arkansas with his uncle, Joseph McKissick, and located on a farm about eight miles west of Bentonville. November 26, 1840, he was married to Sophia Jane Morrison, who was born in Bedford County, Tenn., in 1820, and a daughter of Andrew and Jane (Robinson) Morrison, and their union was blessed in the birth of seven children: Isabella Emily, widow of R. P. Lynn; James Milton, who died in 1862 at the age of eighteen years; Margaret Adaline, wife of Dr. E. P. Hamsard; Caledonia Wilson, wife of T. J. Vaughn; Nannie Eliza, wife of John W. Williams; Mary Harris, wife of J. M. Wier, and Robert A., who died in 1880 at the age of twenty-five years. Mr. Dickson located on his present farm in 1847.

He owns 770 acres at the present time, but at one time owned 990 acres. He is one of the oldest citizens of Benton County, Ark., having been a resident of the same for fifty-three years, and in politics has always been a firm believer and supporter of Democratic principles. He was school commissioner of Benton County for eight years, and was justice of the peace for six years. He is a Royal Arch Mason, and he and wife have long been members of the Presbyterian Church.

J. Alvin Dickson, farmer and nurseryman, three miles southeast of Bentonville, is a native of Benton County, Ark., born in 1845, and is the son of James A. and Mary A. (Wood) Dickson, and grandson of Maj. John B. Dickson, who immigrated to Madison County, Ark., about 1830, and two years later moved to Benton County, of the same State; he was circuit clerk, ex-officio recorder of Benton County, and a member of the State Legislature. He was in the War of 1812, was in the battle of New Orleans, and was shot in the leg. He was one of the first settlers of Benton County. About 1851 he moved to the Lone Star State, and there died in 1879 at the age of eighty-four years. His son, James A., was born in Bedford County, Tenn., in 1819, and was but a boy when his parents moved to Benton County. June, 1844, he married Miss Mary A. Woods, who was born in Marshall County, Tenn., in 1820, and who was the daughter of Samuel Woods. She is the mother of five children: J. Alvin; Sarah, wife of James Black; Charlotta E.; Belle, wife of Frank Kindley, and Dwight. After marriage Mr. Dickson located four miles southeast of Bentonville, and in 1846 moved to Osage Springs, and from there to Bentonville in 1849. Here he followed merchandising until 1866, when he moved three and a half miles southeast of Bentonville, and there he now resides. J. Alvin Dickson was educated in Bentonville, and served two years in the late Rebellion. He was in Company G, Second Arkansas Cavalry, and was in the fight at Marks' Mill, Jenkins' Mill, Pine Bluff, and in numerous other skirmishes. After the war he was in a drug store in Bentonville, Ark., and in 1877 he married Miss Lillie Woolsey, daughter of Henry B. Woolsey, and a native of Benton County, Ark., born in 1860. This union was blessed by the birth of five children: Eva, Mettie, Jewell, Gertrude and an infant son. Mr. Dickson is the owner of 200 acres of land, on which he located directly after his marriage. In 1881 he became a partner with his father-in-law in the nursery business. He is a Democrat in politics, and he and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Joseph S. Dickson, farmer, of Bentonville, was born three-fourths of a mile from where he now lives, in Benton County, Ark., June 20, 1839, son of Joseph and Mary (Hare) Dickson, and grandson of Robert Dickson, who was a native of Lincoln County, N. C., born in 1772. Robert moved to Rutherford County, Tenn., about 1826, from there to Carroll County, W. Tenn., 1831, and later to Northwest Arkansas, where he entered land and resided where Bentonville now stands. He was not very well pleased with the country, and accordingly the following year returned to Carroll County, Tenn., but in 1835 again came to Arkansas, and here passed his last days, dying in 1848. He was one of the first white men to make a permanent settlement in Northwest Arkansas. He lived in Benton County several years before the county was organized, and even before the State was admitted, the entire country being then in its infancy. Robert Dickson and Esther Moore were married March 23, 1796, and their children were Joseph, born February 9, 1797; Margaret, born December 15, 1799; Ephraim, born January 5, 1802; Isabella, born March 22, 1804; Robert, born March 22, 1807; Elizabeth, born June 6, 1809; Polly, born September 2, 1811; John W., born November 3, 1813; Ezekiel K., born August 9, 1816; Sally S., born January 15, 1819; Martha M., born November 15, 1821. Joseph was born, as above related, February 9, 1797, and was brought by his parents to Rutherford County, Tenn., when a mere boy, and moved with them to Carroll County, Tenn., in 1826, and to Arkansas with them in 1831. He settled near his father, and owned a portion of the land where Bentonville now stands, or the first addition of the town. He was one of the active spirits who assisted in the organization of the county, and was one of the first settlers. May 30, 1821, he married Mary Hare, who was born in North Carolina April 8, 1805, and died in 1867. She was the mother of eleven children, as follows: Frances Ann, born March 6, 1822; Margaret, born September 28, 1823; Martha, born September 6, 1825; Sarah Priscilla, born February 8, 1828; Mary Jane, born September 1, 1829; Robert B., born January 2, 1832; Nancy, born October 6, 1834; John E., born February 3, 1837; Joseph, born June 20, 1839; Ephraim H., born January 28, 1843; William G., born May 28, 1845. Of this family the following named have died: Margaret, in 1824; Sarah Priscilla, in 1828; Frances Ann, 1844; Joseph, October 2, 1845; Mary Jane, October 23, 1846; Martha, June 13, 1861; William G., November 25, 1862; Robert B., July 26, 1863; Mary, March 11, 1867. Frances Ann's funeral text was Thess. IV., 13, 14; Joseph's funeral text was I. Cor. XV., 55, 56, 57; Mary Jane's funeral text was II. Cor. IV., 17, by Rev. B. H. Pierson; Mary Dickson's and Martha Maxwell's, Robert and William G. Dickson's funeral texts were Phil. I., 21, by Rev. S. H. Buchanan. Joseph S. attained his growth on a farm, and August, 1862, he enlisted in Capt. Jefferson's company, Arkansas Cavalry, and in three weeks was transferred to Company F, Thirty-fourth Regiment Arkansas Infantry. He was in the fight at Saline, Little Rock, Helena, and surrendered at Fort Smith June, 1865. November 7, 1868, he married Miss Sarah C. Pickens, a native of Tennessee, born September 9, 1846, and this union resulted in the birth of the following named children: William A., born March 31, 1870; Myrtie E., born November 8, 1872; Charlie C., born December 8, 1874; Pearl B., born June 13, 1877; Eva L., born October 22, 1878; Alva E., born July 2, 1882. Of this family there have died: Pearl B., at the age of seven months; Myrtie E., January 1, 1884. Funerals preached by the Revs. Peter Carnahan and F. T. Charlton. Mrs. Sarah C. Dickson died April 10, 1884, and in July of the same year Mr. Dickson married Miss Nancy A. Gould, daughter of John and Jane Gould, who were born in 1800 and 1809, respectively. Both were natives of Tennessee, and moved to Benton County, Ark., in 1859, where both are now living. They have been married sixty years. Mr. Dickson is the owner of 160 acres of land, and also has a general store at Brightwater. He has succeeded well in his business, and is an honest, enterprising citizen. He is a Democrat in politics, and he and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Capt. John A. Dienst is a well-to-do farmer, residing near Siloam Springs, Ark. His birth occurred in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, November 24, 1824, and he was there educated and reared to manhood. He is one of six children born to John P. and Mary E. (Keller) Dienst, who were born in Westphalia, Germany, April 27, 1786, and September 26, 1790, respectively. The father was educated in the schools of the "Fatherland," and was reared to manhood on a farm. He was married in 1817, and immigrated to America in 1819, settling near York, Penn. He resided there six months, and then located in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, where he died in 1846. His wife died in 1850. The following are their children: Mary E. (wife of John Heter), Anna (deceased), Sarah (deceased), John A., Benjamin and Lydia (deceased). John A. was married in 1847 to Anna E. Oehler, who was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, February 19, 1828, and came to America with her parents when she was three years old, settling in Ohio. She and Mr. Dienst became the parents of seven children: Rufus and Louis C. (deceased), Henry, and Eugene, Ira, Laura and Oliver (deceased). In 1853 Mr. Dienst moved to the present site of Leavenworth City, Kas., but in 1854 moved to Benton County, Ark., and in 1862 enlisted in the Federal army, Company F, First Arkansas Cavalry, under the command of Col. Harrison, and participated in the engagements at Fayetteville, Enterprise, Mo., East Mount, Ark., and others. In August, 1865, he returned home. He located his family in Washington County after the war, and there he continued to reside until 1881, when he located at Siloam Springs, and in September, 1887, moved to his farm near town. He supports the principles of the Republican party, and belongs to the Masonic fraternity. He and wife are members of the Moravian Church.

Jacob S. Dobkins, son of Hugh and Hannah (Neely) Dobkins, was born in Arkansas May 1, 1843. The father was born in Virginia, but immigrated to Tennessee when young, and, although receiving a limited education, he was a man of more than ordinary ability. He was quite a successful farmer, and after coming to Arkansas was the owner of 320 acres of land. Hannah (Neely) Dobkins, the mother, was born in Tennessee, and here married Mr. Dobkins, by whom she had eight children, six now living: Mrs. Sarah J. Wakefield, Mrs. Margaret A. Newell, Robert, Mrs. Nancy McPhail, Mrs. Melvina Tucker and Jacob S. The two deceased were named James and Alexander. Shortly after his marriage Mr. Dobkins moved to Missouri, where he made his first start in life, and where he often worked hard all day for a peck of meal, which he carried home on his shoulder after night. He remained in Missouri for about ten years, rented land, and then moved to Arkansas, where he rented land for one year. He then went to California, making the trip overland, and was away from home eighteen months, being engaged in mining the greater part of the time. After returning to Arkansas he purchased the farm that he had rented, and where he spent the greater part of his life, selling out a short time before his death, and moving to Cherokee City. He here died in 1882. The mother died three years later. The paternal grandfather of our subject was of English descent, and the maternal grandparents were both of Irish extraction. Jacob S. Dobkins received a fair common-school education, and remained with his parents until twenty-seven years of age. He enlisted in Company H, Fifth Texas Partisan Rangers, Confederate army, and served for two years. During that time he was almost exclusively on frontier duty in the Choctaw and Cherokee Nations, was in many skirmishes, but no actual battle. After the war Mr. Dobkins went to California, where he remained six months, when he returned home and resumed work on the farm. In 1869 he married Miss Nancy McPhail, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth McPhail, the father of Scottish descent and a native of Kentucky, and the mother a native of Tennessee. Grandfather McPhail was born in the highlands of Scotland, and the grandmother was of English descent. To Mr. and Mrs. Dobkins were born four children, all now living: Kate, Hugh, James and Maud. After his marriage Mr. Dobkins purchased his present farm, where he has since lived, and where he now has 103 acres. He has a good home, and is surrounded by every comfort. In 1886 Mr. Dobkins was elected justice of the peace, and he and Mrs. Dobkins are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Masonic lodge, and is Democratic in politics, casting his first vote for McClellan and his last for Grover Cleveland.

Matthew N. Donaldson, liveryman, of Siloam Springs, Ark., was born in East Tennessee, March 13, 1844, and was reared in Illinois, whither his parents had moved in 1857. He attended the common country schools, and in August, 1865, united his fortunes with those of Eliza Marlowe, who was born and reared in Illinois, her birth occurring in 1849. Six children blessed their union: Missouri C. (wife of R. L. Allen), Martha L. (wife of Wilson Weaver), Alexander B. (deceased), Mary K., Minnie C. and Eliza Myrtle. After his marriage Mr. Donaldson moved to what is now known as Cherokee County, Kas., and, with the exception of two years spent in Missouri, resided here until 1880, at which time he came to Siloam Springs, and at the end of two years went into the livery business. He has an excellent stable in a good location, and well supplied with horses and carriages. He is prospering financially, and besides this property is the owner of the Mount Olive House, a boarding-house, which is located just above Twin Springs. He is a Democrat, and has been a member of the I. O. O. F. since 1865, having filled all the important offices connected with the lodge. He is also a member of the K. of H. His parents, Lorenzo Dow and Margaret A. (Newman) Donaldson, were born in Tennessee in 1806 and 1811, respectively. The father was reared on a farm sixteen miles from Knoxville, and was a farmer and stock dealer the greater portion of his life. After residing in Indiana a few years he returned to Tennessee, and in 1857 located in Washington County, Ill., and in 1868 went to Cherokee County, Kas., and there died October 25, 1886. He was a cousin of Andrew Jackson's wife, and a son of William Donaldson, who was an Irishman, and a graduate of a college in Northern Ireland. He immigrated to America before the War of 1812, and assisted in that struggle, being with Gen. Jackson at New Orleans. Our subject's mother died on the 8th of January, 1887. She and husband were the parents of eleven children: Catherine (killed by a cyclone in Southern Illinois in 1860), William, David (deceased), Jesse D., Elizabeth (wife of George W. Mathews), Lorenzo L., Matthew N., Martha Jane (deceased), Margaret Ann (wife of James Brown), Eliza (wife of Philip Keelerman), and Sophronia N. (deceased).

Charles Dorkens is a native of the "Old North State," born in 1822, and is a son of Benjamin H. and Fannie (Mack) Dorkens, the former of whom was born in Virginia, and removed with his parents to North Carolina at a very early day, where he met and was united in marriage to Miss ———. He followed the occupation of farming all his life, and died in 1853 at a good old age. Charles Dorkens was educated in his native State, and assisted his father on the farm until he attained manhood. In 1856 he concluded to seek his fortune in the West, and immigrated to Benton County, Ark., and located on a farm near Garfield, but in 1873 moved to Texas, and remained in that State for six years. He then returned to Arkansas, where he has since resided, purchasing his present home of eighty acres in 1879. He was married in 1853 to Miss Callie Sabine, of Benton County, Ark., and their union has resulted in the birth of three children: Jennie S., John W. and Thomas P. Mr. and Mrs. Dorkens are members of the Baptist Church. In 1864 he joined the Confederate army, enlisting in Maj. Brown's battalion of cavalry, and served until peace was declared. He was in a number of engagements, and after receiving his discharge returned home, and has since been engaged in the peaceful pursuit of farming.

J. W. Duckworth is a member of the real estate, loan and insurance company of Duckworth & Bixler, of Rogers, Ark. Mr. Duckworth was born in Benton County, Ark., in 1850, and is a son of J. P. and Nancy (Alexander) Duckworth, who were born in Missouri and Kentucky, respectively. They are at present residing in Rogers, and eight of their nine children are living. Their son, J. W., was reared and educated in his native State, and after reaching a suitable age spent some time in pedagoguing. He took an irregular course in the Springdale Academy, and then went to Jackson, Tenn., where he took a course in Greek and the mental and moral sciences. Owing to ill health he concluded to travel for some time, and in his wanderings visited many of the principal points of interest, and the large cities of the United States. His health finally returned, and in 1877 he settled down in Rogers, Ark., and engaged in his present business. He is one of the stockholders in the canning and packing factory at Rogers, and is one of the enterprising and public-spirited citizens of the county. In 1875 he was united in marriage with Miss Arizona Sikes, who was born in Benton County in 1858, and is the mother of two children, Charley R. and Siddle. Mr. and Mrs. Duckworth are members of the Baptist Church; he is a Democrat, and a member of the A. F. & A. M.

Hon. J. Dunagin, a minister of the Missionary Baptist Church, of Benton County, Ark., was born in Georgia in 1825, and is a son of Hiram and Mary (Rush) Dunagin, both of whom were Georgians, born in 1800 and 1808, respectively. The father died in Missouri in 1844, while on the way to Arkansas, and his widow came on to this State with her family, and after living in Benton County for about six years she went to Texas, where she died in 1882. Hon. J. Dunagin is the third of her eleven children, and until nineteen years of age he was a resident of Georgia. At that time he came to Arkansas with his mother, and, as he was the oldest of the family, the duty of caring for his mother and brothers and sisters fell mainly on his shoulders. He was of a very studious turn of mind, and, although the educational advantages of that day were of the very poorest kind and his labors quite heavy, he succeeded in obtaining a practical education. On the 4th of July, 1847, he was united in marriage to Miss Susan Caveness, a native of Tennessee, whose parents came to Arkansas while it was still a territory. She was born in 1830, and became the mother of nine children: Sarah (wife of Thomas Stokes), Rebecca (wife of J. Tuck), John R., Amanda (wife of F. M. Seamster), Minerva (wife of Dr. J. W. Underwood), Mary T. (wife of Thomas Threet), W. D., Mattie and Robert. Mr. Dunagin became a member of the church the year before he was married, and soon after began preaching, being ordained in 1849. He has been actively engaged in ministerial work up to the present time, with the exception of two years, which were spent in trying to regain his failing health. He is now the regular pastor at Rogers and Pleasant Hill Churches. He is still a devoted student, and spends much of his time in his library. He was a member of the State Legislature for nine years, and was a member of that body when the question of secession came up, and strenuously opposed that measure, and is a Democrat. He owns a good farm on the watershed of the Ozark Mountains.

J. R. Dunagin, merchant at Avoca, Ark., was born in Benton County in 1852, and is a son of Rev. J. Dunagin, also of Benton County. He was reared on a farm, and after attending the common schools finished his education in the Arkansas State University. He then returned home, and after teaching the "young idea" for about three months, gave up that calling and engaged in mercantile pursuits as a clerk for Dunagin & Mitchell, at Rogers. After a time he came to Avoca and engaged in the grocery business in partnership with F. M. Seamster, but after a short time purchased Mr. Seamster's interest, and is now the sole proprietor. Besides his stock of groceries, he carries a large line of boots and shoes, and is doing a thriving business. He began his business career with a small capital, but has built up a good trade, and has largely increased his stock of goods. He is a staunch supporter of Democratic principles, and is a member of the Baptist Church. In 1873 his marriage with Miss Sarah J. Stokes was consummated, and their union has resulted in the birth of two children: Albert and Annie. Mrs. Dunagin was born in Tennessee in 1849.

Benjamin F. Dunn, member of the firm of B. F. Dunn & Co., of Bentonville, Ark., and real estate agent, is a native of Giles County, Va., born in 1841, son of Martin and Mary (Pine) Dunn. Martin Dunn was born in Virginia in 1793, was of Irish origin and a farmer by occupation. In 1846 he immigrated to Buchanan County, Mo., where he died one year later. Mary (Pine) Dunn was born in Virginia in 1795 and died in 1848. They were the parents of ten children, Benjamin F. being the only one now living. He was the youngest, and only six years old when his father died, and seven when his mother died. At the age of ten he was taken by B. A. Dickson, with whom he lived until he was twenty-one years of age. He received a limited education in the district schools, and at the breaking out of the war he enlisted in Company A, First Missouri Cavalry, Confederate army, and was in the battles of Carthage, Wilson Creek, Dry Wood, Lexington, Champion Hill and siege of Vicksburg. In October, 1862, he was captured at home and held a prisoner at St. Louis until February of the next year, when he was exchanged. He was afterward captured at Vicksburg and taken to Indianapolis, where he was retained eleven months. He was then discharged and returned home. He was slightly wounded three different times. In 1865 he went to Richardson County, Neb., and there remained until 1870, when he became a citizen of Benton County, Ark., and began clerking in a store in the western part of the county. In 1872 he began teaching, and followed this profession for one term. In January, 1873, he was appointed deputy sheriff, and served three years. In the same year he married Miss Mary J. Smith, who was born in Benton County, Ark., in 1845, and who is the daughter of H. C. Smith. To this union were born two children, Mary Benpie and Elijah Frank, twins. In 1876 Mr. Dunn was elected treasurer of Benton County, and re-elected in 1878. In 1880 he was elected clerk of the circuit court and ex-officio recorder. He was re-elected in 1883, and in 1884 was again elected to the same position. He was in office continuously for ten years, and filled the official position with credit and ability. He is a life-long Democrat in politics; is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of the I. O. O. F., and he and wife are members of the Christian Church. Mr. Dunn is secretary of the Benton County Emigration Bureau, and is a stockholder in the People's Bank at Bentonville.

Hiram A. Elam is the son of James and Marinda (Sharp) Elam, and grandson of Louallen and Polly (Eans) Elam, and great-grandson of Richard Elam. The latter emigrated from Scotland to the United States with his two brothers, John A. and Samuel, and is supposed to have settled in Virginia. Louallen Elam was born in Campbell County, Va., in 1780, and in 1817 immigrated to Butler County, Ky., thence to Clark County, Ill., in 1825. Here Louallen Elam died in 1835. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. His wife was born in Amelia County, Va., in 1783 and died in 1850. The following are their children who are living: James, Susan, Elizabeth, Alfred, Nancy and William. James Elam was eight years old when his parents moved to Kentucky, and sixteen years of age when they located in Illinois. He was born in Campbell County, Va., February 25, 1809, and in 1832 was married to Miss Sharp, a daughter of Levi and Margaret (Coffee) Sharp, who were natives of North Carolina. Mrs. Elam was born in that State in 1811, and at the age of three years was taken by her parents to Clark County, Ill., where she afterward met and married Mr. Elam. Seven of their children lived to be grown: Mary J., wife of J. Y. Black; John, Alfred M., Louisa, wife of H. T. Cork; Hiram A. and Margaret, widow of John F. Owen. Henry died in 1887 at the age of fifty years. Mr. Elam resided in the State of Illinois until 1866, when he located in Benton County, Ark., where he has since resided. He is one of the oldest citizens of the county, and he and wife have celebrated their golden wedding. He is a Republican in politics, and was a Whig previous to the war. He has been successful in all his business transactions, and has accumulated a comfortable competency. He is highly esteemed and commands the respect of all. Hiram A. Elam was married, April 6, 1879, to Miss Palestine M. Baxley, a native of Benton County, born in 1860. She is the mother of six children: Era Earl, James E., Myrtie, Marinda, Etta and Lou Allen. Mr. Elam cast his first presidential vote for Grant, and is a Republican in politics. He was born in Clark County, Ill., October 1, 1848, and was educated in the common schools of his native State, and also received two years' instruction at a college located in Marshall, Ill. From 1868 to 1870 he was deputy sheriff of his county, and was at one time United States Marshal. In 1870 he was clerk of the board of registration. He owns an excellent farm of eighty acres, on which is a spring which affords the clearest and coldest of water. It bursts forth from the ground a convenient distance from his residence and supplies water to a number of neighboring farms.

Hon. Samuel N. Elliott, ex-county judge of Benton County, is a resident of Bentonville, and a native of Rutherford County, Tenn., born where the battle of Stone River was fought, December 22, 1823. He is the son of James and Adaline (Bowman) Elliott, the former a native of Orange County, N. C., born in 1796, of Quaker descent, and a mill-wright, farmer, general mechanic, etc., by trade. He was a genius, and a successful business man. At the age of fourteen he left his native State and went to Rutherford County, Tenn., where he married and where passed the remainder of his life. He died in 1841. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was at the battle of New Orleans. His wife, Adaline Bowman, was born in North Carolina in 1802, and died in Murfreesboro, Tenn., in 1885. Her father, Samuel Bowman, was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, as was also several of her uncles. She was the mother of nine children, Hon. Samuel N. Elliott being the second child. He was educated in the country schools, at Clinton College in Smith County, Tenn., one year, and was three years at the Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky., graduating from the law department of the last named institution in the spring of 1845. In 1848 he married Miss Jane K. Brack, a native of Trumbull County, Ohio, born in 1825. Six children were born to this marriage: Charles D., superintendent of three silver mines in New Mexico; Harry W., in New Mexico, and the owner of silver mines, attorney at law and a very successful business man; David J., in California; Clarissa H., deceased; Adaline B., wife of J. B. Woods, of Benton County, Ark., and Pearl, a graduate of Dr. Price's school, at Nashville, Tenn. After his marriage Judge Elliott went to Seguin, Gaudalup Co., Tex., where he resided until the war broke out, and practiced law with success, Gov. Ireland being his opponent in many a law case. In February, 1862, Judge Elliott enlisted in Company K, Eighth Regiment Texas Infantry, and was elected third lieutenant. He was in the bombardment of Corpus Christi, Fort Esperanza and other skirmishes, remaining in service until the close of hostilities. He was judge advocate of court martial at Sabine Pass for three months, and surrendered at Pelican Spit in May, 1865. In 1866 he was in the North, and for and during the years 1867 and 1868 he was in Bryan, Tex. In May, 1869, he became a resident of Bentonville, Ark., and resumed the practice of law. He was justice of the peace for several years, and in 1876 he was elected county judge, which position he held for eight years. When he first entered the office the county was $18,000 in debt, and at the end of six years Judge Elliott had paid the entire principal and interest, leaving the county out of debt, for which act the people of Benton County will hold him in grateful remembrance. In 1882 Judge Elliott went to California, purchased an orange grove, and at the end of nine months traded it for a farm near Fayetteville, Washington Co., Ark. Before the war he was an old line Whig, and in 1861 was a candidate for a seat in secession of Texas convention, but was defeated by Gov. Ireland. He is a Democrat politically, and in religion is an independent free thinker. Mrs. Elliott is a member of the old school Presbyterian Church.

James Enterkine, analytic chemist and druggist, of Springtown, Ark., was born in Glasgow, Scotland, on the 1st of May, 1864, and was reared and educated in his native land. He attended the Jaynefield British Government Academy, taking a classical course, and graduated from that institution. At the age of seventeen years he entered the Bellevue Hospital, where he studied chemistry and pharmacy under Prof. Noble, the great chemist of Glasgow, and completed his course at the end of two years. On June 6, 1883, he sailed for the United States, and went almost directly to Eureka, Kas., where he has an uncle by the name of Joseph Enterkine. He had an interest in a drug store at that place until 1886, and during the winter of that year and 1887 and 1887-88, he took two courses in the National Institute of Pharmacy on Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill. He came to Springtown, Ark., in February, 1888, and engaged in the drug business in partnership with Dr. N. Sewell, and is the junior member of that firm. Mr. Enterkine has had to make his own way in the world, and has been exceptionally successful in accumulating property. He is now worth about $4,000, all of which he has made by his own energy and good management, and, as he is a young man, his future prospects are very bright. His parents are John and Ellen (Smilie) Enterkine, both of whom were born and reared in Scotland. The father was a woolen manufacturer and designer, and was connected with the firm of Lord Napier & Co., woolen manufacturers, of Glasgow, Scotland. The father died in July, 1888, the mother October 14, 1888.

Stephen Thomas Fair, the subject of this sketch, a farmer and teacher residing near Center Point Church House, near the "McKisick Spring," in Benton County, Ark., is the second son of Ellis and Nancy H. Fair, was born in Sullivan County, East Tenn., in the year 1836, and came to Arkansas in the year 1859. His father, Ellis Fair, was born at Cheraw, S. C., in the year 1805, and there received an education common to those of that time and place. He immigrated from there to East Tennessee, and in the year 1832 was married to Miss Nancy Hamilton Easley, daughter of Stephen and Hannah Easley, of Sullivan County, E. Tenn., and to them were born nine children, to wit: Mary Ann, Harvey Cummins, Stephen Thomas, Edwin Franklin, John Dickson, George Fanning, Joseph Asbery, Sarah Edna, and Nathan Easley. Two of these children, to wit, Harvey Cummins and John Dickson, died in childhood, and one of them, viz., Mary Ann, who became consort of Mr. W. C. Sellars, of Benton County, Ark., died in the year 1871, leaving an infant son, Robert Lee, who in a few months also died, and its remains were interred by those of its mother in Bethel Cemetery, on Spavinaw. During the Mexican War the father of these children volunteered, but his company was not called into service. In the year 1859 these parents, in order to secure good homes for their children, sold out in Tennessee, and with their family immigrated to Benton County, Ark., bought lands and were prospering at the breaking out of the Civil War, in which, though opposed to the war, the five sons, before its close, became members of the army of "The Lost Cause," the father, mother and daughters remaining on the farm and managing to raise and retain enough of its products to support and clothe themselves, notwithstanding they were frequently robbed of everything that could be carried away by lawless bands of plunderers, who made it their primary object to scour the country for individual booty. On the 7th day of May, 1864, the father, on returning from his labor, was met by an enraged posse of "Pin Indians," and, notwithstanding his age and inoffensive life, was by them cruelly murdered. The mother and her two daughters, assisted by the good women of the neighborhood, managed to make a rude coffin and to bury his remains in the yard near the residence, where it rested till after the close of the cruel war, when it was disinterred and suitably re-interred in Bethel Cemetery, the Rev. Martin Thornsberry conducting the funeral services from the text: "Be ye, also, ready." This funeral was largely attended, and it is believed by all who are acquainted with Mr. Fair that at the last day, on the resurrection morning, his remains will, at the sounding of the first trumpet, come forth to life immortal. Edwin F., the third son, married Miss Sarah Jaue, daughter of Dr. Samuel and Mrs. Mahala Martin; is a successful farmer and a Methodist class leader; resides in Scott County, Ark., and has ten children, to wit: John, George, Maud, Lewis, Albert, Samuel, Nancy, Ellis, Ann and —. George F. married Miss Martha Elizabeth Beard, of Yell County, Ark., is an itinerant minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and resides at Sipe Springs, Comanche County, Tex. The names of their children are Nancy R., Mary E., Emma B., Ellis N., Floyd and Ennis Lee. Joseph A. married Miss Martha Ann Russell, of Benton County, Ark.; is a successful farmer and a local minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; resides in Benton County, Ark.; has nine children, to wit: Elija Ellis, Harvey Dickson, Lovic Pierce, Joseph Clark, Sarah Altha, Commodore Vanderbilt, Wiley Cicero, Hugh Lancing and Oma Pear. Sarah E. married Mr. Wiley C. Sitton, of Georgia, and resides in Benton County, Ark. They have no children. The mother, Nancy H. Fair, now seventy-six years of age, lives with this, her youngest, daughter. Mr. Sitton is a successful farmer, and is now serving his second term as justice of the peace of Decatur Township. Nathan E., the youngest son, married Miss Amanda Hamilton, of Yell County, Ark., is a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and teacher in Belleville Academy, Yell County, Ark. They have five children, to wit: Laura, Loula, Minnie, Grace and Pearl. Stephen T. was educated in the common schools of Sullivan County and at Jefferson Academy, in Blountville, E. Tenn. After leaving the Academy he taught several terms in the public schools of his native county, and then came to Benton County, Ark., where he resumed the business of teaching, in which he continued till in the summer of 1861, when he joined the Fourteenth Arkansas Regiment, Confederate States Army, in which he served, first as teamster, second as commissary-sergeant, third as forage master, fourth as wagon-master, and after the battle of Pea Ridge, fifth as hospital steward, until, overcome by fatigue and exposure, he was left by his command at the point of death, near Little Rock, Ark. After partly regaining his health, he returned to his home in Benton, where he remained about two months, and then joined General Stand-watie's Indian command, under Maj. Joel Bryant. In this command he served, first as company clerk, second as quartermaster-sergeant, and third as adjutant of Col. William Penn Adair's Second Cherokee Regiment, Confederate States Army. He was in the battles of Sherley Ford, Newtonia, Fort Wayne, Honey Springs, Mazzard Prairie and a number of other minor engagements. At the time of the surrender of the Confederate States army his command was at Boggy Depot, I. T., from which place he went to Northwest Texas, where he remained about a year, and then returned to Benton County and resumed the business of teaching. On the 22d day of March, 1868, at Center Point Church, Benton County, Ark., in the presence of a large congregation, he was united in the bonds of matrimony with Miss Agnes Julia Ann Womack, the Rev. Martin Thornsberry officiating. Mrs. Fair is the daughter of Mr. Richard and Mrs. Matilda Lee Womack, who moved from Wilson County, Tenn., in the year 1855. She was born in Wilson County, Tenn., in 1851. There have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fair ten children, to wit: first, William Wallace, who died in infancy; second, Mary Ann; third, an infant son, deceased, without name; fourth, Ellis Hamilton; fifth, Richard Lee; sixth, Martha Edna; seventh, Stephen Thomas; eighth, Cora Ethel; ninth, Emma Vivian; tenth, Edwin Claudia. Mr. Fair still follows teaching in the public schools of the county, holds a first grade certificate, and when not employed as teacher works upon and manages his farm. He is secretary of the Benton County Sunday-school Association, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, member of Bentonville Lodge No. 56, A. F. & A. M., justice of the peace of Osage Township, in which capacity he is now serving his fourth term; is Democratic in his political views, and is true to his honest convictions, but opposed to bigotry and ultraism in all things.

William R. Felker. Among the prominent and highly esteemed citizens of Benton County, Ark., may be mentioned Mr. Felker, who is proprietor of the Bank of Rogers, Ark. His birth occurred in Barry County, Mo., in 1855, and he is a son of Stephen and Eliza (Dougherty) Felker, who were native Tennesseans, and farmers by occupation, and are now residents of Barry County. William R. Felker spent the healthy, happy and busy life of the farmer's boy, and received his early education in the common schools of Barry County. In 1874 he began life for himself by clerking in a store in Barry County, and being a young man of energy and honesty, he soon purchased a half interest in the store. He remained in the mercantile business in Washburn, Mo., until 1881, and then sold out. After traveling in the West for some time, he returned home and located in Barton County, Mo., where he loaned money and speculated in various kinds of merchandise for about two years. In 1883 he became a resident of Rogers, Ark., where he engaged in the banking business, in which he has been quite successful.

Dr. James W. Fergus may be mentioned as one of the prosperous and successful physicians of Benton County, Ark. He was born in Miami County, Ohio, October 29, 1852, and is a son of Samuel and Malissa J. (Woodward) Fergus, who were natives, respectively, of Ohio and Illinois. The father is of Scotch descent, a farmer by occupation, and was a soldier in the Union army during the late war. He now resides in Ashland, Ore. From 1860 until 1866, they resided in Iowa, and at the latter date moved to Jasper County, Mo. Their son, James W., was reared and received his education, first attending the common schools, and then the high-school at Peirce City, Mo. He received his medical education in the Joplin Medical College, at Joplin, Mo., graduating from that institution as an M. D. in March, 1883. He first began practicing at Bloomington, Benton Co., Ark., and in 1879 removed to Elm Springs, and the same year located in Robinson, Ark., where he has since resided. He has a large and increasing practice, and consequently is doing well financially. In the latter part of 1878 he was married to Elmira Smith, born in Newton County, Mo., in 1854, a daughter of Howell Smith, a prominent Methodist minister, born in Tennessee, and their union was blessed in the birth of five children: Elbert, James, Franklin, Carrie and William. Dr. Fergus is a Master Mason, and he and wife attend the Methodist Church.

John A. Fields was born in Wilson County, Tenn., September 29, 1833, son of Redden and Polly (Farrington) Fields, grandson of David and Mary (Jarmon) Fields, and grandson of John and Easter (Charlin) Farrington. The father, Redden Fields, was born in Wilson County, Tenn., June 8, 1803, and was a farmer by occupation. At the age of twenty-three he married Miss Polly Farrington, and afterward moved to Benton County, Ark. (1857). A year later he moved to Hickory County, Mo., and in 1862 he went to Southern Iowa, where he practiced as veterinary surgeon. In 1866 he moved to Illinois, and from there in 1873 to Henry County, Tenn., where he still continued working at his profession. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and a Democrat in politics. His wife was also born in Wilson County, Tenn., in 1804, and died October 29, 1849. They were the parents of six children: Amanda M., Paralee, David C., John A., Polly A. and Joel H. The paternal grandparents of our subject were both natives of North Carolina, and both born in the year 1768. They died in 1828 and 1842, respectively. The maternal grandparents were natives of South Carolina, and both were born in the year 1771, and the maternal grandfather died in the year 1861. John A. Fields, subject of this sketch, received a fair education in Wilson County, Tenn., and in 1853 moved to Benton County, Ark., where he engaged in the stock business and farming. At the breaking out of the war he joined Gen. Standwatie's command, Arkansas Cavalry, but in 1862 joined Col. Thompson's regiment, Second Arkansas Cavalry, and was made lieutenant of the same, remaining in service until the close of the war. He was at the battles of Neosho, Fayetteville, Ft. Gibson and many other battles. In 1867 he married Miss Mary L. Smith, daughter of William and Mary (Townsend) Smith, natives of Tennessee and Vermont, born in 1818 and 1816, respectively. Mrs. Fields was born in Bradley County, Tenn., December 7, 1848, and by her marriage became the mother of three children: Charles L., Mary E. and Bessie L. Mr. Fields is a Democrat in politics, as were also his father and grandfather; is the owner of 280 acres of land, and he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dr. James R. Floyd was born near Alexandria, Smith Co., Tenn., September 20, 1860, and is a son of John W. and Eliza J. (Snodgrass) Floyd, who were also natives of Tennessee. The father was a merchant until the beginning of the war, when he enlisted in the Confederate army and served until the close of the war, when he came to Arkansas and engaged in farming. Our subject's paternal grandfather was William Floyd, and his maternal grandfather was James Snodgrass. Both his parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Dr. James R. Floyd was educated in the Bentonville high-school, and took a special course, preparatory to the study of medicine, in the Arkansas State University at Fayetteville, Ark. In 1885-86 he attended the Memphis Hospital Medical College, and was graduated from that institution in 1887. The following article is quoted from the Mississippi Valley Medical Monthly: "To J. R. Floyd, of Bentonville, Ark., fell the honor of valedictorian, and the class certainly felt proud of their choice while hearing his valedictory. In phraseology and manner of delivery rare excellence was displayed." Dr. Floyd practiced for a short time with Dr. Hurley, of Bentonville, and then located at Bloomfield, where he has been successfully engaged in practicing his profession for over a year. He is a young man of ability and energy, and has bright prospects for future success.

John H. Ford is one of the oldest native residents and farmers of Benton County, Ark., and was born in 1835. His early educational advantages were exceedingly limited, owing to the fact that there were no schools in the county until he was almost grown, and he then picked up what education he could. In 1853 he lost his father, and he was compelled to work very hard in order to support his mother and her younger children. In 1862 he enlisted in the Federal army, in Company F, Seventy-second Arkansas Regiment, and after serving eleven months went to Springfield, Mo., where he remained until the close of the war. He was in a number of battles and skirmishes, but was so fortunate as to escape without being wounded. He has been engaged in farming all his life, and is now the owner of 240 acres of land, a portion of which he inherited from his father and the rest he had homesteaded. This is one of the most desirable farms in the county, and is under fine cultivation. In 1859 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Lee, who is a native of Benton County, and by her became the father of ten children, eight of whom are living: James A., Mary A., wife of G. W. Reddenck; Polly, wife of T. L. Howell; John W., Delilah, Lee, Joe and Tom. Mr. Ford is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in his political views supports the principles of the Republican party. His father, Richard Ford, was born in North Carolina, and was a farmer by occupation. He came to Arkansas in 1834, the country abounding in wild game of all kinds at that time. It was a common occurrence to shoot a deer near the door or a wild turkey in a tree in the yard. Panthers and bears were also numerous, and as there were very few settlements at that time, but little attention was given to farming, the most of the settler's time being spent in hunting. The father was one of the first grand jurors of Benton County, and died in 1853. His wife's maiden name was Isabella Logan.
